"Under the laws of this state the 'Attorney General' is as much the representative of the state of Florida in the Supreme Court, as the king's Attorney General is his representative in the Court of King's Bench; indeed, more so, as in the Court of King's Bench there are for certain causes representatives of the king other than the Attorney General, while here it is his sole duty to 'appear in and attend to, in behalf of the state, all suits or prosecutions, civil or criminal, or in equity, in which the state may be a party, or in any wise interested, in the Supreme Court of this state.' Acts 1845, c. 2. The office of 'attorney general' is in many respects judicial in its character and he is clothed with a considerable discretion." State ex rel. Moodie v. Bryan, 39 South. 929, 947, 50 Fla. 293.

ATTORNEY IN FACT

An "attorney in fact" is defined as a private or special attorney, appointed for some particular or definite purpose not connected with a proceeding at law; hence the very definition excludes the idea that he is authorized to represent his principal in proceedings in court. Harkins v. Murphy & Bolanz, 112 S. W. 136, 137, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 568.

ATTORNEY'S FEES

See Reasonable Attorney's Fee.

As damages, see Damage—Damages.

As necessities, see Necessaries.

As part of recovery, see Recover—Recovery.

As support, see Support (Of Person).

Enforcement of as special proceeding, see Special Proceeding.

See, also, Counsel Fee.

Costs are awarded by each court in the proceeding before it, and are legal fees allowed by law computable from the record, whereas attorney's fees are extrinsic to the record, not to be found from it, but dependent on facts dehors the record. State ex rel. Citizens Nat. Bank v. Graham, 69 S. E. 301, 303, 68 W. Va. 1.

ATTORNEY'S LIEN

An "attorney's lien" is simply the right to hold or retain in the attorney's possession the money or property of the client until his proper charges have been adjusted and paid. It requires no equitable proceeding for its establishment. Sweeley v. Selman, 98 N. W. 571, 123 Iowa, 183 (citing Foss v. Cobler, 75 N. W. 516, 105 Iowa, 728; In re Wilson, 12 Fed. 235).

"Attorney's liens" are divided into two classes, "possessory" and "charging." The first exists at common law, and extends to all property in the possession of the attorney with respect to which he renders services to the owner. The lien is divested, as in other cases of similar liens, upon the surrender of possession of the property to the owner. The other class, the "charging" lien, is a statutory creation, and was unknown to the common law. It extends to all money or property of the client, including judgments, with reference to which the attorney's services were rendered, and is perfected when notice thereof is given the debtor. Prior to the adoption of the Revised Law of 1905, this lien did not extend to the cause of action, but only to judgments recovered or money paid, or agreed to be paid, as a result of the attorney's services. Northup v. Hayward, 113 N. W. 701, 702, 102 Minn. 307, 12 Ann. Cas. 341.

An attorney has a "lien" for compensation of professional services and for disbursements upon the property received by him on his client's behalf in the course of his employment. In re Bender's Will, 97 N. Y. Supp. 171, 176, 111 App. Div. 23.

A claim of an attorney founded on a contract providing that, if he would give information to defendant on which defendant could successfully prosecute a suit, defendant would pay a specified percentage of the recovery, and based on the fact that defendant, through another attorney, successfully prosecuted a suit on the information given, is not an "attorney's lien" within Judiciary Law (Consol. Laws, c. 30) § 475, giving the attorney, appearing for a party, a lien on his client's cause of action, but the claim is on a contract of sale of information. Holmes v. Bell, 124 N. Y. Supp. 301, 306, 139 App. Div. 455.

ATTORNEY TO THE BOARD

A resolution of a board of chosen freeholders appointing a lawyer as "attorney to the board" does not place him in an office or position which is within the protection of the veteran acts. Rowe v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Hudson County, 88 Atl. 818, 61 N. J. Law, 120.

ATTORNMENT

See, also, Attorn.

An agreement between a purchaser of land, who had no right of possession under the contract, and a tenant, that the latter should continue in possession as his tenant upon terms arranged between them, without evidence of the consent of the vendor to deliver possession, does not constitute an "attornment." Kurtz v. Cummings, 24 Pa. 35, 37.

"Attornment," at common law, was the acknowledgment by a tenant of a new landlord on the alienation of land and an agreement to become the tenant of the purchaser. It could take place only when the land was alienated after the execution of the lease, so that prior to St. 32 Hen. VIII, c. 34, the assignee of the reversion could not sue on a covenant in the lease, though the covenant ran with the land, unless the tenant had attorned to the assignee. Attornment, however, is not necessary to enable a grantee of the mortgaged premises to maintain actions against tenants in New York under Real Property Law, § 223, authorizing the grantee of leased real property, or of a reversion, or of any rent thereof, etc., to enforce the same remedies as are allowed to his grantor or lessor. Commonwealth Mortgage Co. v. De Waltoff, 119 N. Y. Supp. 781, 782, 135 App. Div. 33.

ATTRACTIVE APPLIANCE

A wagon constructed with the bed below the axles, for the purpose of carrying stone, was not an "appliance" peculiarly "attractive" to children, so as to require the owner to exercise greater care with reference to the use thereof than placing it in charge of a careful driver. Foster-Herbert Cut Stone Co. v. Pugh, 91 S. W. 199, 202, 115 Tenn. 683, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 804, 112 Am. St. Rep. 881.

ATTRACTIVE NUISANCE

An "attractive nuisance" is one which has an especial attraction for children by reason of their childish instincts. Franks v. Southern Cotton Oil Co., 58 S. E. 960, 961, 78 S. C. 10, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 468.

To render the owner of a dangerous article attractive to children liable for injuries to children caused by his failure to guard it, the article must be so located as to attract children from a street or public place where they may be expected to be, and if the children can only find it by trespassing on his premises, he is not liable. McDermott v. Burke, 100 N. E. 168, 170, 256 Ill. 401.

The term "attractive nuisance" has been applied to anything which may naturally be expected to allure young children upon private premises. It is not the duty of an occupier of land to exercise care to make it safe for infant children who come upon it without invitation but merely by sufferance. Wheeling & L. E. R. Co. v. Harvey, 83 N. E. 68, 71, 77 Ohio St. 235, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1136, 122 Am. St. Rep. 503, 11 Ann. Cas. 981.

A pond remote from any street or highway upon which a minor had a right to be or travel upon is not an attractive nuisance within the doctrine of allurements. Hanna v. Iowa Cent. Ry. Co., 129 Ill. App. 134, 137.

"Assuming that she was a trespasser, and that the timber pile was rightfully in its position, the contention is that there can be no liability except upon the extreme theory of the doctrine of 'attractive nuisances' as laid down in the line of cases generally known as 'Turntable Cases.' These cases are referred to in the case of Kilx v. Nieman, 68 Wis. 271, 32 N. W. 223, 60 Am. Rep. 854, as 'a class of cases which hold the proprietor liable for injuries resulting to children from dangerous machinery left unguarded and so exposed as to be calculated to attract their interference with it;' but they are not expressly approved or disapproved in that case, and, in fact, the question has never been directly considered and passed upon by this court, though the reasoning of the case cited would seem rather opposed to the doctrine than otherwise. The doctrine in these cases seems to be that by creating or leaving on one's premises a dangerous machine or thing which is especially calculated to attract children to play therewith one impliedly invites children on his premises, and is guilty of negligence, if he does not take precaution to protect such children from injury. Thompson, Neg. §§ 945-1024. This doctrine has been debated in many cases and in many courts with the result that there are many authorities supporting the doctrine in its broadest application, while many repudiate it entirely, and others give it qualified recognition, and practically limit it to railroad turntables." Busse v. Rogers, 98 N. W. 219, 221, 120 Wis. 443, 64 L. R. A. 183.

AUCTION

A sale of mortgaged chattels at auction is a sale to the highest bidder, its object a fair price, and its means competition; and any agreement to stifle competition is a fraud, and the act of the mortgagor in trying to induce persons not to bid, stating that it was a sham sale, is improper. Henderson-Snyder Co. v. Polk, 62 S. E. 904, 905, 149 N. C. 104.

"A 'sale at auction,' is a sale to the highest bidder, its object a fair price, its means competition. Any agreement to stifle competition is a fraud upon the principles upon which the sale is founded." Davis v. Keen, 55 S. E. 359, 362, 142 N. C. 496 (citing Smith v. Greenlee, 13 N. C. 126, 18 Am. Dec. 564).

Though an auction is defined as a sale by consecutive bidding intended to reach the highest price of the article by exciting competition for it, property may be sold at public auction to the highest bidder and for the maximum possible amount, though a like public auction under other conditions and at other times might bring many times more, and consequently a much higher maximum possible amount. Pike v. State Board of Land Com'rs, 113 Pac. 447, 454, 19 Idaho, 268, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1344; State v. Hoover, 113 Pac. 455, 19 Idaho, 299 (quoting 1 Words and Phrases, p. 637).

AUDIT

See False Auditing and Paying of Claims; Power to Audit, Adjust and Settle.

"To 'audit' is to hear, to examine an account, and in its broader sense it includes its adjustment or allowance, disallowance or rejection." People ex rel. McCabe v. Matthies 72 N. E. 103, 104, 179 N. Y. 242 (quoting and adopting definition in People ex rel. Myers v. Barnes, 114 N. Y. 317, 323, 2 N. E. 609, 610; People v. Board of Apportionment and Audit, 52 N. Y. 224, 227). For the same or substantially similar definitions, see People ex rel. Andrus v. Board of Sup'rs of Saratoga County, 94 N. Y. Supp. 1012, 1013, 106 App. Div. 381; People ex rel. Ramsdale v. Board of Sup'rs of Orleans County, 38 N. Y. Supp. 890, 16 Misc. Rep. 213, 214.

To "audit" is to hear and examine an account and includes its adjustment, allowance or disallowance at some definite sum. A report of auditors that they have allowed a certain claim at a sum not to exceed a specified amount is not sufficient to constitute an "audit." Stemmler v. Mayor, etc., of City of New York, 72 N. E. 581, 583, 179 N. Y. 473.

To "audit," as used in Code, § 4,600, authorizing the county board to audit the claims of justices of the peace and constables, for fees, means to hear or examine the account or claim, and implies the power to adjust or allow or reject, or otherwise decide, according to the nature of the claim. McGuire v. Iowa County, 111 N. W. 34, 36, 133 Iowa, 636.

While the word "audit" is sometimes restricted to a mere mathematical process, it generally includes investigation, the weighing of evidence, and deciding whether items should or should not be included in the account. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Pierce Engine Co., 123 N. W. 643, 644, 141 Wis. 103.

Hearing imported

"To 'audit' is to examine and adjust, as to audit and adjust accounts. Primarily it means a hearing; but not necessarily so." T. M. Sinclair & Co. v. National Surety Co., 107 N. W. 184, 188, 132 Iowa, 549.

The statute provides that the account of the county superintendent of health "shall be audited by the county board of health and by it certified to the board of county commissioners." The word "audit," as here used, has a technical meaning, which is to examine, to pass upon, and to adjust. To audit implies a hearing, and upon the hearing to adjust, or to allow or to reject, or otherwise decide according to the nature of the claim. From this definition of the word "audit," it would appear from the language of the statute that it was the duty of the county board of health to pass upon and allow or reject, or modify and adjust, this claim, and afterwards to certify it to the board of county commissioners for payment as other claims against the county are paid. Cooke v. Board of Com'rs of Custer County, 73 Pac. 270, 272, 13 Okl. 11 (citing Territory v. Grant, 21 Pac. 693, 3 Wyo. 241).

Judicial discretion implied

The meaning of the phrase "to audit," when applied to claims against towns, cities, or counties, means to hear, to examine an account, and, in its broader sense, includes its adjustment or allowance, disallowance, or rejection; and the verb, "audit," as so used, means simply to examine, to adjust, and clearly implies the exercise of judicial discretion. Where a city officer presents his accounts to a board having power to audit them, and fails to charge himself with moneys received, of which failure the board has no knowledge, its audit of his account is not binding upon the city in favor of such officer or his sureties as to the amounts not accounted for by him. City of Syracuse v. Roscoe, 123 N. Y. Supp. 403, 408, 66 Misc. Rep. 317.

AUDITA QUERELA

The common-law writ is one by which a proceeding may be had by a judgment defendant in the court wherein the record lies to review the judgment on account of some matter occurring after judgment discharging its obligation. Smith v. Young, 117 S. W. 628, 634, 136 Mo. App. 65.

"The 'writ of audita querela' does not lie, where the party complaining has had a legal opportunity of defense, and has neglected it. This writ is a regular suit in equity, to which the parties may plead and take issue on the merits, and cannot, therefore, be sued against the United States." United States v. One Trunk containing Fourteen Pieces of Embroidery, 155 Fed. 651, 652 (citing Avery v. United States, 79 U. S. [12 Wall.] 304, 20 L. Ed. 405).

AUDITOR

See Assistant Auditor.

An "auditor" appointed by a court is not the "court," but an officer of the court. An auditor is improperly appointed in a proceeding under a statute requiring that "all hearings shall be in open court." McArthur Bros. Co. v. Commonwealth, 83 N. E. 334, 335, 197 Mass. 137.

The word "auditor" does not ex vi termini import one clothed with judicial power or function. It fairly implies that the officer is one who mainly exercises or performs a ministerial duty. Sloan v. State, 8 N. W. 393, 398, 51 Wis. 623, 636 (dissenting opinion).

An auditor is an officer of the court, whose duty is to present to the court in intelligent form the various contentions of parties and his rulings and conclusions thereon. Hale v. Owensby, 66 S. E. 781, 782, 133 Ga. 631.

Const. art. 4, § 1, creates the office of State Auditor, and declares that he shall perform such duties as are prescribed by the Constitution or by law. Article 10, § 15, makes him a member of the State Board of Equalization, prescribing certain duties of the board, and Rev. St. 1908, §§ 6203, 6204, prescribe duties to be performed by him; the latter section requiring that he shall also perform all such other duties as may be prescribed by law. Held, that the use of the word "Auditor" in the Constitution did not limit the duties that could be imposed on him by legislative act to such as are generally performed by such an officer, and that the Legislature had power by Laws 1902, p. 73, imposing a corporation license tax, to require that such tax be paid to the Auditor, and that he pay the same into the state treasury within 30 days after receipt thereof. American Bonding Co. of Baltimore v. People, 127 Pac. 941, 942, 53 Colo. 512.

Controller synonymous

Under the constitutional provision that "county officers shall consist of . . . auditors or controllers," the duties and powers of "auditors" and "controllers" are substantially the same, and under an act requiring county auditors to approve the compensation of the county treasurer as fixed by the county commissioner, where a controller is substituted for the county auditor the compensation should be approved by him. Scranton v. Lackawanna County, 63 Atl. 968, 969, 214

Pa. 509 (citing Taggart v. Commonwealth ex rel. Attorney General, 102 Pa. 854).

As court

See Court (Of Justice).

AUDITOR'S CLERK

Ky. St. 1903, § 4258, authorizes the auditor of public accounts to appoint revenue agents, whose term of office shall be four years. Section 4259 requires revenue agents to take the oath required of other officers, and to execute a bond to the commonwealth. The duties of such agents are prescribed by law, and in many matters they may act independently of the auditor, as in assessing omitted property under section 4241. Held, that a revenue agent, though an appointee of the auditor, is an officer of the commonwealth, holding for a fixed term, and is not subject to removal by the auditor under section 140 of the statutes, authorizing the auditor to remove the "auditor's clerk." Hager v. Lucas, 86 S. W. 552, 553, 120 Ky. 307.

AUDITORIUM

An "auditorium" is "a hall of audience. In a church, theater, public hall or the like, the space allotted to the hearers or audience." If the primary object of a building is to provide a place for public meeting, the building itself may properly be designated an "auditorium" although other portions of it are devoted to other uses than that of an auditorium in the strict sense of that term. City and County of Denver v. Hallett, 83 Pac. 1066, 1071, 34 Colo. 393 (quoting and adopting definition in Cent. Dict.).

AUG

In passing on an indictment alleging the date of an offense as a certain day in "Aug." in a certain year, the court said: "It occurred in 1884. Therefore we hold that the abbreviation Aug. for August is so well understood that it would not authorize the quashal of the indictment." Purdy v. State, 97 S. W. 480, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 318.

AUGMENT—AUGMENTATION

The term "increase" is the synonym of "augment." Mathew v. Wabash R. Co., 78 S. W. 271, 272, 115 Mo. App. 468.

In construing an early act giving land bounties to colonists, the court said: "The words of the article are, 'It appertains to the government to augment the quantity indicated, etc., according to the family, industry, and activity of the colonists.' Now, what are we to understand by 'augmentation'? Is it an original concession of some certain quantity, or an increase allowed in addition to a quantity already given? Lexicographers define augment to mean 'an enlargement by addition; to enlarge in size; to swell.'

Webster. And so I understand it." Harlan v. Haynie, 9 Tex. 459 (quoted in Groesbeck v. Golden [Tex.] 7 S. W. 362, 364).

AUTHENTIC

AUTHENTIC ACT

A deed of gift under private signature, attested by two witnesses and acknowledged by the donor before a notary public in another state, is not such an authentic act as will evidence a donation of immovables; Civ. Code, art. 2234, providing that such an act must show on its face that it was passed before a notary or other officer authorized to execute such functions and two competent witnesses. Baker v. Baker, 52 South. 115, 117, 125 La. 969.

AUTHENTICATE—AUTHENTICATION

According to Webster's Dictionary, to "authenticate" means to "render authentic; to give authority to, by the proof, attestation, or formalities required by law, or sufficient to entitle to credit." Under Kirby's Dig. §§ 1194–1199, requiring appeals granted by the lower court to be perfected within 90 days by filing an authenticated copy of the record in the Supreme Court, and permitting appeals to be granted by the clerk of the Supreme Court at any time within one year after the rendition of the judgment sought to be reviewed, the clerk of the Supreme Court can only grant an appeal when an authenticated copy of the record is presented to him within the year. Damon v. Hammonds, 84 S. W. 796, 73 Ark. 608.

A statute provided that it should be unlawful to sell any patent right until a duly "authenticated copy" of the patent had been filed. It was held that by "authenticated copy" was meant such official attestation as would render the copy admissible in evidence. Mayfield v. Prosser, 32 N. E. 1129, 133 Ind. 699.

The authentication of the evidence in a bill of exceptions in a criminal case is the signature of the judge; the certificate of the official stenographer being merely for the information of the parties and the judge in settling the bill. Richardson v. State, 89 Pac. 1027, 1034, 15 Wyo. 465, 12 Ann. Cas. 1048.

A copy of a judicial record of another state, not authenticated as required by the federal statute, or by Code Civ. Proc. Kan. § 371, which relates in terms to the proceedings of the courts of foreign countries, is not rendered admissible in evidence by being certified to in accordance with the requirements of section 372, Code Civ. Proc., which provides for the admission in evidence of copies of records required by law to be kept in any public office; such section having reference only to records kept under authority of the laws of this state or of the United States. Ayres v. Wm. Deering & Co., 90 Pac. 794, 795, 76 Kan. 149.

AUTHORITY—AUTHORIZE

See Affirmatively Authorized; Apparent Authority; Appointment or Authority; Color of Authority; Express Authority; Implied Authority; Lawful Authority; Lawfully Authorized; Legislative Authority; Ostensible Authority; Proper and Lawful Authority; Scope of Authority; Special Authority; Without Authority of Law.

Other governing authority, see Other.

"Authorized" means empowered. Bacon v. Davis, 98 Pac. 71, 76, 9 Cal. App. 83.

The primary meaning of the word "authorize" is to empower, to give a right to act. State v. Board of Com'rs of Franklin County, 114 Pac. 247, 248, 84 Kan. 404.

To "authorize" is to "clothe with authority" (Webster, Dict.); "to give legal power to" (Cent. Dict.). The word "authorized" in a state statute authorizing a corporation to construct, maintain, and operate a street railroad in a city as the common council thereof has authorized the corporation or shall authorize the corporation so to do, etc., means an additional grant of the right and power which the Legislature requires a corporation to obtain as a condition precedent to its use and occupation of the streets. This power of the city, in the absence of language in the statute excluding the authority and reserving its exercise to the state, necessarily includes the right to fix a time for which the streets may be used. Blair v. City of Chicago, 26 Sup. Ct. 427, 439, 201 U. S. 400, 50 L. Ed. 801.

Const. art. 1, § 22, provides that the operation of the laws shall never be suspended, except by authority of the legislative assembly. Held, that the word "authority," while meaning power to act, whether original or delegated, is usually used to express a derivative power, and the clause permits the operation of laws to be suspended by an officer or tribunal of the state; and hence Act Feb. 18, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 77) § 26, requiring railroads to furnish cars on demand by shippers, and authorizing the railroad commission to suspend the operation of the act, is constitutional. Martin v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co., 113 Pac. 16, 19, 58 Or. 198.

The term "authorize to be operated," as used in Laws 1875, c. 300, § 7, and Laws 1882, c. 410, § 1980, relating to the powers of the trustees of the New York and Brooklyn Bridge, providing that they should have power to operate and "authorize to be operated" a railroad or railroads over said bridge, is sufficient to imply and comprehend a contract to operate. Schintel v. Best, 92 N. Y. Supp. 754, 758, 48 Misc. Rep. 224.

Laws 1893, p. 20, c. 11, § 1, provides that action to recover land of which any person is possessed by actual, open, and notorious possession for seven years, having a connected title from any person authorized to sell land under an order or decree in any court of record, shall be brought within seven years. Plaintiffs, heirs of a mortgagor, sued to recover land sold to defendant on a mortgage foreclosure; plaintiffs not having been made parties thereto so as to affect their interests. Held, that a sale was "authorized" under the statute when it was directed by an order or decree valid on its face, and an order valid both against collateral and direct attack was not required to give color of title to an adverse possessor, and hence defendant's title, accompanied by the requisite possession, was sufficient. Schlarb v. Castaing, 97 Pac. 289, 290, 50 Wash. 331.

A sale of land described in a mortgage properly executed is not void because the assignee of the mortgage did not take possession before selling under a power in the mortgage which authorized, but did not require him to take possession; the word "authorized," as used in the term "authorized to foreclose or take possession and sell" not meaning that he must do both. Cromartie v. Weaver, 73 S. E. 504, 505, 137 Ga. 452.

Laws 1901, c. 411, authorizes county boards to place the clerk of the circuit court on a salary basis by resolution, and provides that such salary shall be full compensation for all services by the clerk as such, and requires him to pay to the county treasurer all fees, and other emoluments received by him. Naturalization Act, 59th Congress, June 29, 1906, c. 3592, § 13, 34 Stat. 600, authorizes clerks of circuit courts to charge certain fees in naturalization proceedings, one-half of which they are authorized by the act to retain, and the balance they are required to pay over to the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization. Held, that the words "authorized" and "permitted," as used in the Act of Congress, referred solely to the adjustment between the clerks and the Bureau of Immigration, and did not entitle clerks on a salary basis to hold any part of such fees as against the counties, but that such fees were earned in official capacity, and must be accounted for to the county treasurer. Barron County v. Beckwith, 124 N. W. 1030, 1032, 142 Wis. 519, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 810, 135 Am. St. Rep. 1079.

Laws 1907, pp. 411, 412, c. 576, § 1753-3, provides that a public service corporation shall not do any of the things conditionally prohibited, except on the authority of the railroad commission first obtained; the word "authority" not being used as suggestive of a delegation of power to determine what the corporation may do within its corporate powers, but of authority to determine whether the thing proposed to be done is within such powers. State ex rel. Minneapolis, St. P.

Act Cong. March 3, 1899, c. 425, § 10, 30 Stat. 1151, provides that the creation of any obstruction not affirmatively authorized by Congress to the navigable capacity of the waters of the United States is prohibited, except on plans recommended by the chief of engineers and authorized by the Secretary of War. Held, that the word "authorize" was used in such section in the sense or to approve of and formally sanction, and did not confer on the Secretary of War authority to grant original authorization for the construction of any work constituting an obstruction of the navigable waters of the United States. Hubbard v. Fort, 188 Fed. 987, 994.

"The word 'authorized,' as used in an instruction in regard to punitive damages, is criticised as being equivalent nearly to the word 'entitled,' which, it has been held, was error to use. Wabash, St. L. & P. Ry. Co. v. Rector, 104 Ill. 303. While it is not believed to be the best word to use, yet its use has never been condemned so far as we are aware. It was used in the case of Hodgson v. Millward (Pa.) 3 Grant Cas. 406, with apparent approval. See Sedgwick, Measure of Damages (6th Ed.) notes to p. 509." Mansur-Tebbetts Implement Co. v. Smith, 65 Ill. App. 319, 324.

Greater New York Charter (Laws 1901, c. 466) § 516, provides that all persons acting under authority of the city of New York shall have the right to use the ground under any street within the state for the introducing of water into the city. Held, that a private water company contracting with the city to deliver a certain amount of water at a stated place in the city where a part of the water conveyed to the main was used to fulfill its franchise duties to others was not acting under authority of the city within the meaning of the charter. Richards v. Citizens' Water Supply Co. of Newtown, 125 N. Y. Supp. 116, 127, 140 App. Div. 206.

Rev. St. c. 23, § 68, relating to ways, provides that when a way is changed in grade by a road commissioner or "person authorized," to the injury of an abutting owner, he may apply in writing to the municipal officers for an assessment of damages occasioned thereby to be paid by the town. Chapter 53, § 19, relating to street railroads, provides that such road shall be constructed and maintained in such manner and upon such grades as the municipal officers of the towns where they are located may direct, and when, in the judgment of such corporation, it shall be necessary to alter the grade of any road the alteration shall be made at the expense of the corporation in accordance with the directions of the municipal officers. Held, that the two sections should be construed together, and under Rev. St. c. 1, § 2, rules 2 and 14, by which the word "person" may include a corporation and singular words include plural, where a grade was established by municipal officers at the request of a railroad company, it must be deemed to have been done by a "person authorized" within the meaning of section 68, and though section 68 provides that the damages shall be assessed by the municipal officers to be paid by the town, and section 19, that the alterations shall be at the expense of the corporation, yet the word "expense" in section 19 will include the damages to landowners, which, if paid by the town, are a part of the expense of the alteration, and are recoverable by the town from the railroad corporation. Hurley v. Inhabitants of South Thomaston, 74 Atl. 734, 736, 105 Me. 301.

A lessor may, by posting or giving notice, as required by section 3509, Rev. Laws 1905, prevent mechanics' liens from attaching to his interest, although in the lease he has given the tenant permission to make the alterations for which the lien is claimed; the tenant having agreed to pay for the alterations and to restore the building to its former condition at the end of the term, the word "authorized" in such section meaning authorized by contract with or at the instance of the owner. Wallinder v. Weiss, 138 N. W. 417, 418, 119 Minn. 412.

As mandatory

The words "authorized and empowered" are usually words of permission merely, and generally have that sense when used in contracts and private affairs, but when used in statutes they are frequently mandatory and imperative. People ex rel. Hilliker v. Pierce, 119 N. Y. Supp. 21, 26, 64 Misc. Rep. 627 (quoting and adopting People v. Board of Supervisors of Otsego County, 51 N. Y. 401, 406).

Under the law of Maryland, as settled by decision, a legislative delegation of "power and authority" to a municipal corporation, to be exercised for the public benefit or protection, is not permissive merely, but imperative, and imposes a duty and obligation on the municipality for the nonexercise or negligent exercise of which, resulting in private injury, it is liable in damages. State of Maryland v. Miller, 194 Fed. 775, 781, 114 C. C. A. 495.

Where an order merely "authorizes" a commissioner of public streets to order the removal of produce and goods from the wharves and levees forty-eight hours after their discharge thereon, it has been held that the performance of that duty cannot be compelled by mandamus. State ex rel. Louisiana Const. Improvement Co. v. Fitzpatrick, 47 La. Ann. 1329, 1331, 17 South. 828.

The words "authorize and empower," in ordinary acceptance and in private transactions, are usually permissive; but, when these words are used in statutes, they are frequently imperative, and where the statute is concerning public interests, or promotive of justice, or to secure and maintain the individual rights of others, such words are well-nigh uniformly construed to be mandatory. As used in Laws 1903, c. 289, authorizing and empowering the commissioners of the county to issue certain bonds for the purpose of funding the floating indebtedness and refunding certain previous bonds, such words are imperative. Jones v. Madison County Com'rs, 50 S. E. 291, 295, 137 N. C. 579.

The words "authorize" or "may," as used in a statute, are sometimes construed as mandatory in effect, though permissive in form, as where a statute provides for the doing of some act required by justice or public duty; but, where they confer or recognize a discretionary power, a mandatory construction will not be given to them. Whitley v. State, 68 S. E. 716, 723, 134 Ga. 758.

Under an act providing that the commissioners of Lehigh county are hereby "authorized" to erect foot sidewalks, etc., the word "authorize" did not mean required. Lehigh County v. Hoffer, 9 Atl. 177, 179, 116 Pa. 119, 2 Am. St. Rep. 587.

On the trial of an action for personal injuries against a railway company, it was held that a charge that "failure to exercise ordinary care on the part of the person injured before the negligence complained of is apparent or should be reasonably apprehended would not preclude a recovery, but would 'authorize' a jury to diminish the damages in proportion to the fault of the person injured," did not properly present to the jury the imperative requirement of Civ. Code, 1895, § 2322, in reference to the diminution of the plaintiff's damages in such a case. Atlanta, K. & N. R. Co. v. Gardner, 49 S. E. 818, 821, 122 Ga. 82.

The word "authorized" in a will whereby testator devised the use of real estate to his son and wife during their lives to be sold at their death, and the proceeds divided among the son's children, and whereby the testator provided that, in case the son and his wife elected not to reside on the property or refused to pay taxes or make repairs thereon, the executor was "authorized" to sell the same and invest the proceeds for the benefit of the son and his wife for life, and after their death to divide the same among the son's children, did not vest in the executors any discretion as to whether or not a sale should be made, but the will contained a mandatory direction to the executor to sell the property on the refusal of the son and his wife to pay taxes and make repairs thereon. Ayers v. Courvoisier, 91 N. Y. Supp. 549, 550, 101 App. Div. 97.

The word "authorized," as used in an instruction directing the jury that, if they believe from the evidence that a witness has willfully testified falsely as to any material fact in the trial, they are "authorized" to disregard the whole of his testimony, is equivocal, and should not be used in such connection, because it may imply to the jury that they are required to do only what they are at liberty to do. State v. Dwire, 25 Mo. 553, 554.

Under Rev. St. § 2984, whereby "the Secretary of the Treasury is 'hereby authorized' * * * to abate or refund the amount of import duties paid or accruing" upon imported merchandise damaged or destroyed accidentally "while in custody of the officers of the customs," the secretary may not refuse to allow the refund arbitrarily or capriciously. Wallace, J., dissenting that he deemed the statute permissive, and not mandatory. The words "hereby authorized" are equivalent to "may." United States v. Cornell Steamboat Co., 137 Fed. 455, 461, 69 C. C. A. 603.

Scope of authority

"Authority" as used in regard to the servant in such expressions as "scope of authority," is used in the sense of (1) real or actual authority, express or naturally implied; (2) fictitious or imputed authority; or (3) apparent authority. Penas v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 127 N. W. 926, 933, 112 Minn. 203, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 627, 140 Am. St. Rep. 470.

The word "authority," as used in the rule that a master is only responsible for the acts of a servant within the scope of his authority, is not synonymous with "instructions," but often has a broader meaning. Weatherford, M. W. & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Crutcher (Tex.) 141 S. W. 137, 142.

"Authorized," as used in speaking of the liability of a master for the acts of his servants, does not mean authority expressly conferred, but whether the act was such as was incident to the performance of the duties intrusted to such servant by the master, even though in opposition to his express and positive orders. Steele v. May, 33 South. 30, 32, 135 Ala. 483 (quoting and adopting the definition in Wood, Mast. & Ser. § 307); Roberts v. Southern Ry. Co., 55 S. E. 509, 510, 143 N. C. 176 (quoting and adopting the definition in Wood, Mast. & Ser. §§ 288, 307); Sawyer v. Norfolk & S. R., 54 S. E. 793, 142 N. C. 1, 115 Am. St. Rep. 716, 9 Ann. Cas. 440.

In speaking of the master's liability for the acts of his servants, it has been said: "The simple test is whether they were acts within the scope of his employment; not whether they were done while prosecuting the master's business, but whether they were done by the servant in furtherance thereof, and were such as may fairly be said to have been authorized by him. By 'authorized' is not meant 'authority' expressly conferred, but whether the act was such as was incident to the performance of the duties intrusted to him by the master, even though in opposition to his express and positive orders." Wood on Master and Servant, § 307, quoted in Compher v. Missouri & Kansas Telephone Co., 106 S. W. 536, 537, 127 Mo. 553.

AUTHORITY EXERCISED UNDER THE UNITED STATES

An alleged error in refusing an application to remove a cause to the federal court does not involve the validity of an "authority exercised under the United States" so as to give the Supreme Court jurisdiction of the appeal; that ground of jurisdiction involving acts done by federal officers or agents by virtue of authority having its foundation in the federal laws. Kettelhake v. American Car & Foundry Co., 147 S. W. 479, 480, 243 Mo. 412.

The right of a fraternal order to the use to its corporate name, and the incidental right to use the distinctive words in such name to designate the order, and to use the appropriate insignia, emblems, etc., when invoked in virtue of the authority to incorporate conferred by the federal general incorporation act of May 5, 1870, 16 Stat. at L. 98, chap. 80, is claimed under an "authority exercised under the United States" within the meaning of Rev. St. U. S. § 709, Judicial Code (38 Stat. at L. 1156, c. 231) § 237, governing writs of error from the federal Supreme Court to state courts. Creswell v. Grand Lodge, K. P. of Georgia, 82 Sup. Ct. 822, 826, 225 U. S. 246, 56 L. Ed. 1074.

AUTHORITIES

See Corporate Authorities; Local Authorities.

A statute provided that in case of the death or disability of a collector, the duties and "authorities" vested in him should devolve on his deputy. It was held that the word "authorities" was broad enough to include the emoluments of the office. The court said: "The 'authorities' of the office are the powers and prerogatives with which the officer is clothed, connected with the discharge of his duties, including not only such powers as are necessary to enable him to discharge his duties properly, but the right and the power to demand and receive the emoluments attached by law to the office." Merriam v. Clinch, 6 Blatchf. 9, 17 Fed. Cas. 70.

AUTHORIZED AGENT

See Duly Authorized Agent.

A lumber company and its servants, while using a railroad company's track under an agreement authorizing such use for certain hours of the day, subject to the control of the railroad company's train orders, are the "authorized agents" of the railroad company, within Civ. Code 1902, § 2135, making a railroad corporation responsible in damages to any person whose property may be injured by fire communicated by its engines or originating on its right of way in consequence of the acts of any of its authorized agents or employes. Bellamy v. Conway, Coast & W. R. Co., 67 S. E. 545, 546, 85 S. C. 460.

AUTHORIZED BY LAW

The phrase "authorized by law," as used in a city charter, relating to power given to a common council to raise by taxation money for the contingent expenses of the city and for all other objects and purposes authorized by law, does not necessarily mean expressly authorized by statute. Penrose v. Ventnor City, 77 Atl. 1061, 1062, 80 N. J. Law, 547.

A State Treasurer, as obligee in a bond given by a bank, agreed with the bank to make it a depository of part of the surplus funds of the state as "authorized by law," and the bank agreed to accept and pay over the deposit on demand. Comp. Laws, § 1189, requires depositories of state money to give the State Treasurer ample security for all money deposited. A bond referred to the contracts and limited the penalty to $50,000, and limited the liability of the surety to such proportion of the total loss sustained as the penalty of the bond bore to the total penalties of all the bonds furnished by the bank. On insolvency of the bank there was over $600,000 deposited in the bank, and the state only had $200,000 security. The receiver had paid in dividends 60 per cent. on savings deposits, and 40 per cent. on commercial deposits. The state debt was in excess of the assets of the bank, and the state received dividends like an ordinary creditor. Held, that the words as "authorized by law" in the agreement between the bank and the treasurer referred only to the appointment of the depository, and did not mean that the bond was conditioned that the statute requiring ample security would be complied with, and hence the surety had no right to be subrogated to the state in the payment of dividends on the theory that the statute operated to limit the liability of the surety to such proportion of the whole debt which was fully secured. Neither, if the state had ample security for the full amount deposited, could the surety contend that its bond secured a particular deposit, to the rights of the state in which, it having paid, it was entitled to be subrogated, since, by the bond itself as to the proportion of the total deposit for which it would be liable, a different intention was shown. Zimmerman v. Chelsea Sav. Bank, 125 N. W. 424, 428, 161 Mich. 691.

The words "persons or courts," in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 5769, providing that bail may be taken by any of the "persons or courts" authorized by law to arrest and imprison offenders, do not include the clerk of the district court or his deputy, since the statute does not vest in them the power to arrest and imprison persons charged with criminal offenses. Territory v. Wood- ring, 82 Pac. 572, 573, 15 Okl. 203, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 843, 6 Ann. Cas. 950.

The words "persons or courts," in Code Gr. Proc. § 633 (Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 5769), providing that any of the "persons or courts authorized" by law to arrest and imprison offenders may take bail, include a judge of the district court, who has power to imprison persons charged with the commission of a criminal offense and who possesses the power of a committing magistrate. Territory v. Allen, 82 Pac. 574, 15 Okl. 417; Territory v. Reynolds, 82 Pac. 574, 15 Okl. 185, 186.

The "authority" given to the presiding officers of five local miners' unions by Gen. St. Kan. 1901, § 4176, to demand that the president of the state association of miners shall convene delegates to such association by special call to elect a successor to the state secretary of mining industries, does not make such presiding officers "persons authorized by statute" to sue within the meaning of Laws 1909, c. 182, § 27, and does not give them an interest sufficient to maintain an action in their own names to compel the issuance of such call by mandamus. Titus v. Sherwood, 106 Pac. 1070, 1071, 81 Kan. 870.

AUTHORIZED CAPITAL

There is a wide distinction between authorized capital stock of a corporation and actual capital stock. Authorized capital may never become actual capital, and actual capital is the amount of its authorized capital that has been bona fide subscribed for and paid. Stemple v. Bruin, 49 South. 151, 153, 57 Fla. 173.

AUTHORIZED PERSON

See, also, Authorized by Law.

Rev. St. c. 23, § 68, relating to ways, and Rev. St. c. 53, § 19, relating to street railroads, read as follows: "Sec. 68. When a way or street is raised or lowered by a road commissioner or person authorized, to the injury of an owner of adjoining land, he may, within a year, apply in writing to the municipal officers, and they shall view such way or street, and assess the damages, if any have been occasioned thereby, to be paid by the town and any person aggrieved by said assessment, may have them determined on complaint to the Supreme Judicial Court, in the manner prescribed in section 20 of this chapter. Said complaint shall be filed at the term of the Supreme Judicial Court, next to be held within the county where the land is situated, after sixty days from the date of assessment." "Sec. 19. Said railroad shall be constructed and maintained in such form and manner, and with such rails and upon such grades, as the municipal officers of the cities and towns where the same are located, may direct, and, whenever, in the judgment of such corporation, it shall be necessary to alter the grade of any city, town or county road, said alterations shall be made at the sole expense of said corporation, with the assent and in accordance with the directions of said municipal officers. The said corporation may, at any time, appeal from the decision of such municipal officers determining the form and manner of the construction and maintenance of its railroad and the kind of rail to be used, to the board of railroad commissioners who shall, upon notice, hear the parties and finally determine the questions raised by said appeal." It was held that these two sections are to be considered together as statutes in pari materia, and so construed that when the grade is established by the municipal officers at the request of the railroad company, by virtue of said section 19, it shall be deemed to have been done by a "person authorized," within the meaning of said section 68, and that, in such a case, all formal objections and verbal criticisms are obviated by the statutory rules of construction (Rev. St. c. 1, § 6, rules 14 and 2), under which the word "person" may include a corporation and words of the singular number include the plural. Hurley v. Inhabitants of South Thomaston, 74 Atl. 734, 736, 105 Me. 301.

AUTOMATIC—AUTOMATICALLY

See Coupling Automatically.

"Automatically," when applied to a mechanical device, means acting without the continued application of human agency; that is, not acting rationally, or volitionally. State v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ind.) 96 N. E. 340, 343.

The word "automatically" may properly be applied to a mechanism which is hand-actuated, as well as to mechanism which is actuated by other mechanism, where, when so actuated, the parts co-operate and perform their functions automatically. W. H. Coe Mfg. Co. v. American Roll Gold Leaf Co., 199 Fed. 435, 438.

AUTOMATIC COUPLERS

See Buckeye Automatic Coupler.

See, also, Coupling Automatically.

Automatic couplers which will both couple and can be uncoupled without the necessity of men going between the cars are what are meant by the provision of Act March 2, 1893, c. 196, § 2, 27 Stat. 531, prohibiting common carriers from using any car in moving interstate commerce not equipped with "couplers coupling automatically by impact, and which can be uncoupled without the necessity of men going between the ends of the cars." Johnson v. Southern Pac. Co., 25 Sup. Ct. 158-162, 196 U. S. 1, 49 L. Ed. 363.

AUTOMOBILE

A statute requiring the licensing of operators of "automobiles" and motor cycles, and defining them as all vehicles propelled by other than muscular power, except railroad and railway cars, and motor vehicles running only upon rails or tracks, and road rollers, includes a road locomotive or traction engine used to draw cars. Emerson Troy Granite Co. v. Pearson, 64 Atl. 582, 74 N. H. 22.

An ordinance taxing automobiles and other vehicles is not objectionable because not including auto trucks; the term "automobile" being sufficiently comprehensive to cover them. Kellaher v. City of Portland, 112 Pac. 1076, 1078, 57 Or. 575.

Mr. Huddy, in his Law of Automobiles (page 3), speaking of the machines which he calls "automobiles" or self-moving carriages, says the only definition he has been able to find of them is that in English's Law Dic. p. 78, which states that the term means all motor traction vehicles capable of being propelled on ordinary roads. Specifically, horseless carriages. An automobile is a carriage within the meaning of a covenant in a deed reserving a strip of land for a carriage land forever. Diocese of Trenton v. Toman, 70 Atl. 606, 610, 74 N. J. Eq. 702 (citing Baker v. Fall River, 187 Mass. 53, 72 N. E. 336; Commonwealth v. Hawkins, 14 Pa. Dist. Rep. 592).

An "automobile" is an ordinary vehicle of pleasure and business, and is not necessarily a dangerous device, being no more dangerous per se than a team of horses and a carriage, or a gun, sailboat, or motor launch. Cunningham v. Castle, 111 N. Y. Supp. 1057, 1061, 127 App. Div. 580.

AUTOPTIC PREFERENCE

The expression "autoptic preference" means "real evidence," or "demonstrative evidence"; the word "autoptic" being a good word, with pride of ancestry, though without hope of posterity, but the word "preference" is a glossological illegitimate, a neological love-child, of which a great law writer confesses himself to be the father. Morse v. State, 72 S. E. 534, 535, 10 Ga. App. 61.

AUTREFOIS CONVICT OR ACQUIT

"To entitle a defendant to the plea of autrefois convict, or acquit, it is necessary that the offense charged be the same in law and fact." People v. Kerrick, 77 Pac. 711, 712, 144 Cal. 46 (citing People v. Helbing, 61 Cal. 620).

The plea of "autrefois convict" is founded in the law that no one shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense; but the law does not consider that one has been put in jeopardy by a prosecution under an insufficient indictment, and it holds, moreover, that when his conviction is set aside, at his instance, on motion for a new trial or in arrest of judgment, he thereby waives any objection that he might otherwise urge against being tried again. State v. Foley, 38 South. 402, 403, 114 La. 412 (citing Const. art. 9; State v. Hornsby, 8 Rob. 583, 41 Am. Dec. 314; State v. Ritchie, 8 La. Ann. 715; State v. Foster, 7 La. Ann. 255; State v. Walters, 16 La. Ann. 400; State v. Cason, 20 La. Ann. 48; 12 Cyc. pp. 264, 265, 277, 278; McGinn v. State, 65 N. W. 46, 46 Neb. 427, 30 L. R. A. 450, 50 Am. St. Rep. 617).

"The 'plea of autrefois acquit' is of a mixed nature, and consists partly of matters of record and partly of matters of fact. The matter of record is the former indictment and acquittal. The matter of fact is the identity of person and offense. In all cases where the plea consists of matter of record and matter of fact, the issue made thereon is to the country; but this does not take from the court the right it possesses of determining exclusively what is of record and what is not." Watson v. State, 66 Atl. 635, 640, 105 Md. 650 (quoting and adopting the definition in Hite v. State, 9 Yerg. [Tenn.] 357).

AUXILIARY CHANNEL

Act May 29, 1889, § 7, provides that the trustees of a sanitary district shall have power to lay out one or more main channels for carrying off the drainage, together with such adjuncts and additions thereto as may be proper. Act May 14, 1903, enlarging the boundaries of the sanitary district of Chicago, gave the trustees power to provide for the additional territory by constructing one or more channels together with such adjuncts and additions thereto as may be necessary, and shall maintain the same proportion of dilution of sewage through such auxiliary channels. Held, that the words "adjuncts" and "additions" were used as synonymous with "auxiliary channel," and did not mean city sewers connecting with the sanitary district outlet so as to authorize the district authorities to take charge of the building of sewers of municipalities within the district. City of Chicago v. Green, 87 N. E. 417, 422, 238 Ill. 258.

AUXILIARY RECEIVER

An "auxiliary receiver" is "a custodian of the property within the state where he is appointed for the purpose of preserving the assets belonging to the party or corporation proceeded against within the state, in order that creditors may reach them without being compelled to go to a foreign jurisdiction to prove their claims." Frowert v. Blank, 54 Atl. 1000, 1002, 205 Pa. 299.

AVAILABLE COAL

"Available coal," within the meaning of a contract referring to certain unmined coal, includes coal under a creek and under a railroad, which could be mined by leaving proper supports at a greatly enhanced cost. In re Redstone Oil, Coal & Coke Co.'s Dissolution, 56 Atl. 355, 356, 207 Pa. 125.

AVAILABLE FUNDS

In a contract to pay a teacher the available funds from certain school lands for one year, the words "available funds for one year" meant the profits derivable from the capital during that time, whether it was actually received by the commissioners before the close of the year or not. Commissioners of Section 16 v. Criswell, 6 Ala. 565, 571.

AVAILABLE USE

The contemplated use of the property sought to be taken to constitute an element of damages must not only be available, but valuable, and an available use means a possible use, not a use contingent on the abandonment of the use of adjoining property engaged by another in the public service of the state, or on conditions remote, uncertain, and speculative. Grays Harbor Boom Co. v. Lowndsdale, 102 Pac. 1041, 1044, 54 Wash. 83.

An "avenue" is a passage; a way or an opening for entrance into a place; any opening or passage by which a thing is or may be introduced or approached; a roadway; a street; a broad street. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. v. Underwood, 86 S. W. 804, 805, 74 Ark. 610 (quoting and adopting the definitions in Cent. Dict., Webst. Dict., and A Thesaurus of the English Language).

"An examination of the authorities will show that the terms 'street,' 'avenue,' 'road,' 'public road,' 'county road,' etc., are used loosely and indiscriminately in legislation and judicial decisions relating to public highways and little reliance can be placed on the particular term used to describe any given way. Undoubtedly, the term 'street' or 'avenue' commonly applies to a public highway in a village, town, or city and the term 'road' to suburban highways, but there may be roads in a city or town and streets or avenues in the country." Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 3808, provides that any "county road" or part thereof, which remains unopened for public use for a space of five years after the order is made or authority granted for opening the same, shall be vacated and the authority for building is barred by the lapse of time. Held that, as boards of county commissioners have executive jurisdiction over all public highways within their respective counties and without the limits of incorporated cities and towns, such section was applicable to streets dedicated through platted land outside the limits of any incorporated city or town. Murphy v. King County, 88 Pac. 1115, 1116, 45 Wash. 587.

As used in Railroad Law, § 62, providing that the authorities of any village, town, or city within which a "street, avenue, or highway" crosses, or is crossed by a railroad at grade, may petition the public service commission for discontinuance of the grade crossing and the separation of travel, etc., the words "street, avenue, or highway" import ways of a public character only, and proceedings are authorized for the discontinuance of grade crossings only where a public street, avenue, or highway crosses a steam surface railroad at grade, and the railroad commissioners have no authority to charge a village with a part of the expense of eliminating crossings over streets or ways which were exclusively private. In re New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 98 N. E. 515, 516, 200 N. Y. 121 (modifying order Appeal of Village of Ossining, 121 N. Y. Supp. 524, 136 App. Div. 760).

See General Average; Particular Average.

The word "average," as used in an instrument forming a part of a marine policy providing that enumerated products were insured to pay particular average if amounting to a specified per cent., is merely a symbol adopted by custom and means nothing more than marine loss. Kuh v. British American Assur. Co., 112 N. Y. Supp. 410, 412, 59 Misc. Rep. 589.

"Average" is obtained by calculating the mean of several amounts, numbers, or quantities. See Standard Dictionary, verbo. "Average" is necessarily an intermediate amount, number, or quantity between two extremes. Act No. 170 of 1898, § 7, relating to the duty of tax assessors, provides that in assessing mercantile firms the true intent and purpose of this act shall be held to mean the placing of such value upon the stock in trade, all cash, whether borrowed or not, money at interest, open accounts, credits, etc., as will represent in their aggregate a "fair average" on the capital, both cash and credit, employed in the business of the party or parties to be assessed. It is held that there is no warrant for finding such average by adding up the receipts of merchandise during the year and dividing the total by 12, as such method would give the average of the monthly purchases rather than a fair average of the stock in trade employed in the business. Swift & Co. v. Board of Assessors, 38 South. 1006, 1007, 115 La. 321.

AVERAGE CAPITAL

"The amount of capital invested in a business ordinarily is the whole amount of money invested and used in carrying on that business. The 'average capital' of a grain dealer is defined by section 66, Revenue Law (Laws 1903, c. 73), to be the average amount which the total investment in the business of the grain dealer exceeds the tangible property which can be separately assessed at the time of assessment. The assessor, from the examination pointed out in the statute, must find what capital of the business there was, if any, from time to time during the tax year, not including in the computation the tangible property on hand and capable of assessment at the time of assessing, and the average or mean of the capital so found is to be assessed as property in addition to the tangible property." Central Granaries Co. v. Lancaster County, 113 N. W. 199, 200, 77 Neb. 819.

The "average capital" of grain dealers, mentioned in section 66 of the Revenue Law (Laws 1903, c. 73), is not the average of the total capital used in the business, but is the excess of such capital over the real estate and other tangible property which can be viewed by the assessor and "assessed separately." It is not average purchases, nor average sales, and cannot be found by adding together the amount of purchases or the amount of sales during the year and dividing the sum by an arbitrary divisor. It is the average of the amount of cash and all other property of every kind used in carrying on the business; and, if there is an excess of this average of capital over the amount of real estate and other tangible property that can be viewed by the assessor, then such excess is to be added for assessment. Central Granaries Co. v. Lancaster County, 113 N. W. 543, 544, 77 Neb. 327.

AVERTING DANGER

In passing on an instruction on the law of self-defense which told the jury that if they believed from the evidence that the defendant "believed, and had reasonable grounds for believing, he had no apparent and safe means of 'averting said danger' except by shooting said Nicholls, he is excusable on the ground of self-defense, and they should find him not guilty," the court said: "It is argued that the word 'averting' should not have been inserted in the instruction, that it is equivalent to the word 'escape' or 'escaping,' and that this court has heretofore decided that the word 'escape' should not be used in such cases, for the reason that it is liable to be understood as requiring the defendant to flee, retreat, or run away. Mr. Webster defines 'avert' as follows: 'To turn aside or away; as, "how can the danger be averted?" "To avert his ire."' It will thus be seen that the term used in the instruction could not fairly be understood as requiring the defendant to retreat or run away, and it is therefore unobjectionable; for it will be seen that, unless he had apparent and safe means of averting the danger, he was excusable for acting in his own self-defense. Barnes v. Commonwealth, 61 W. 733, 734, 110 Ky. 348.

AVOCATION

See Habitual Avocation.

The selling of liquors on Sunday has been held an "avocation." Voglesong v. State, 9 Ind. 112, 113.

AVOID

"Direction in a statute that collateral questions are to be 'avoided' indicates that they are not absolutely excluded from consideration." Moody v. Peirano, 88 Pac. 380, 382, 4 Cal. App. 411.

"In the self-defense instruction this language appeared: 'And there reasonably appeared to him no other safe means of avoiding impending danger.' If he could have averted or avoided the danger, it was his duty to do so, and it was eminently proper to put the expression quoted in the instruction. * * * The word 'averting' might have been used instead of avoiding, but it would have conveyed the same idea." Cook v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 72 S. W. 283, 284.

An affidavit averring that affiant on two occasions went to the residence of defendant to serve process on her, and was there informed that defendant was a trained nurse and was absent from home, engaged in pursuing her vocation, does not show that defendant was avoiding service of process, within Municipal Court Act, Laws 1902, p. 1500, c. 580, § 82, authorizing substituted service on a defendant avoiding service. New York Leasing Co. v. O'Brien, 110 N. Y. Supp. 1081, 1082.

AVOIDABLE

See Unavoidable.

AVOIDANCE

See Matter of Legal Avoidance.

A pleading by way of "avoidance" contemplates the introduction of new or special matter, which, admitting the premises of the opposite party, repels his conclusions. Porter v. American Tobacco Co., 125 N. Y. Supp. 710, 712, 140 App. Div. 871.

In Code Civ. Proc. § 516, giving the court discretionary power to order a reply to new matter set up by way of avoidance, "avoidance" is the introduction of new or special matter, which, admitting the premises of the opposite party, avoids or repels his conclusions. In an action for broker's commissions, an answer denying the allegations of the complaint, and alleging that plaintiff was employed by some other person, to defendant unknown, to obtain defendant's consent to the lease for procuring which plaintiff seeks compensation, and that plaintiff specially waived all claim to commissions under the contract alleged in the complaint, does not set up matter in "avoidance," within Code Civ. Proc. § 516, authorizing the court to order a reply where the defendant sets up new matter by way of avoidance. Fragner v. Fischel, 126 N. Y. Supp. 478, 479, 141 App. Div. 869.

AVOIRDUPOIS WEIGHT

The phrase "avoirdupois weight," as used in Pol. Code, § 3215, means 16 ounces in weight. Hale Bros. v. Milliken, 90 Pac. 365, 369, 5 Cal. App. 344.

AVOW

In an action of ejectment, where the defense was adverse possession, the trial court left it to the jury to say whether the agent of the plaintiff's testator entered upon the land with the "avowed" object of claiming it for his principal. Counsel objected to the word "avowed" in that it conveyed to the jury the meaning that an entry to survey off a part of the land was not sufficient unless accompanied with some verbal declaration that such was the effect intended. The appellate court said: "But they had just been instructed, in the language of Judge Gibson, that the effect of an entry depends on the intent of it expressed in words, or intimated by an act equally significant; that there must be an explicit declaration, or an act of notorious dominion; and can it be doubted they would understand from all this that the intention could be 'avowed' as well by deeds as by words? An entry to toll the statute must not be accidental, nor by invitation of him in possession, nor for any equivocal purpose whatever, but to regain a pedal possession of the land for purposes inconsistent with the title of the occupier. An entry to measure off eight acres for another would be such a purpose, and how could it be more distinctly 'avowed' than by the act itself? A jury of common intelligence could not fail, we think, to get the very law of entry from all that the court placed before them. We are not, then, to reverse the judgment on a mere suggestion that they may have misunderstood the word 'avowed.'" Hood v. Hood, 25 Pa. 417, 423.

AVOWRY

"At common law, and under the Revised Statutes, rules of pleading and practice peculiar to the action of replevin prevailed. When both parties claimed the goods, both were deemed actors or plaintiffs. Coan v. Bowles, 1 Show. 165, 169; Carth. 122; Anon. 2 Mod. 199; Small v. Bixley (N. Y.) 18 Wend. 514; Persse v. Watrous, 30 Conn. 139, 146; Wells, Rep. § 21. When the defendant admitted and justified the taking, he was said to 'avow.' 3 Bl. Comm. 149; Whart. Law Dict. and Abb. Law Dict., Avowry. An 'avowry' was in the nature of a declaration (7 Bac. Abr. [7th Ed.] 103, title Replevin and Avowry; Whart. Law Dict., Avowry) which required a reply from the plaintiff; and in default of one the defendant was entitled to a judgment." Kilburn v. Lowe (N. Y.) 37 Hun, 237, 240 (citing People v. New York Common Pleas [N. Y.] 2 Wend. 644).

"When property was distrained the remedy by the owner of the property taken was an action of replevin. 'Upon this action being brought, the distrainer, who is now the defendant, makes "avowry"; that is, he "avows" taking the distress in his own right, or the right of his wife, and sets forth the reason of it, as for rent arrears, damage done, or other cause; or else, if he justifies in another's right, as his bailiff, or servant, he is said to make cognizance; that is, he acknowledges the taking, but insists that such taking was legal, as he acted by the command of one who had a right to distrain; and on the truth and legal merits of this "avowry," or cognizance, the case is determined.'" Richardson v. Williamson, 24 Cal. 289, 302 (quoting 2 Black. Comm. 149).

AVULSION

"Avulsion" is a rapid change in the course or channel of a river and does not work any change in the boundary, which remains as it was in the center of the river, though no water may be flowing therein. James v. State, 72 S. E. 600, 602, 10 Ga. App. 13 (citing Missouri v. Nebraska, 25 Sup. Ct. 155, 196 U. S. 23, 49 L. Ed. 372); Stockley v. Cissna, 104 S. W. 792, 798, 119 Tenn. 135 (citing Missouri v. Nebraska, 25 Sup. Ct. 155, 157, 196 U. S. 23, 49 L. Ed. 372; Nebraska v. Iowa, 12 Sup. Ct. 396, 143 U. S. 359, 36 L. Ed. 186).

An "avulsion" arises where a stream forming a boundary suddenly abandons its old channel and seeks a new one. It has no effect on the boundary, leaving it in the center of the old channel. McBride v. Steinweden, 822, 823, 72 Kan. 508.

To constitute "avulsion" along the Missouri river bordering upon Kansas, the bank must be destroyed or removed suddenly, visibly, rapidly, violently, in substantial quantity, and in a manner unusual to that river. To constitute "avulsion," it is not essential that the land torn away be removed intact, so as to be capable of location or identification. Wood v. McAlpine, 118 Pac. 1060, 1062, 85 Kan. 657.

"The terms 'avulsion' on the one hand, and 'gradual and imperceptible accretion' on the other, are used by writers on alluvion to contradistinguish a sudden disruption of a piece of ground from one man's land to another's, which may be followed and identified from that increment which slowly or rapidly results from floods, but which is utterly beyond the power of identification." Benson v. Morrow, 61 Mo. 345, 352.

"The channels of the rivers and other streams and bodies of water may and do become changed and their physical location altered by the forces of nature operating upon their shores or banks. When the change is made insensibly, by gradual and imperceptible washing away of one shore and the formation in like manner upon the other shore, it is said to be 'by erosion and accretion.' When it is made suddenly and violently, and is visible and the effect certain, it is called 'avulsion.' Where the boundary lines between individuals, as well as states and nations, are marked by streams, and the location of the stream is altered by erosion and accretion it continues to be the boundary line; but, where the alteration occurs as the result of an avulsion, no change is made, but the limits of the private estates or national territory and jurisdiction remain as before." State v. Muncie Pulp Co., 104 S. W. 437, 451, 119 Tenn. 47.

Where land bordering on a body of water is lost by "erosion," which is the gradual and imperceptible wearing away of the land by the natural action of the elements, the state succeeds to the ownership thereof; where the land is added by "accretion," which is such a slow and gradual deposit of articles that its progress cannot be measured though its results may be discerned from time to time, the new land formed belongs to the owner of the upland to which it attaches; but where lost by "avulsion," which is the sudden or violent action of the elements, the effect and extent of which is perceptible while it is in progress, the boundaries do not change. In re City of Buffalo, 99 N. E. 850, 852, 206 N. Y. 319.

AWAITING TRIAL

A criminal case is not "awaiting trial" when the accused has only been bound over and is not confined in jail, but at large under a bond for his appearance. State v. Fleming, 126 N. W. 565, 566, 20 N. D. 105.

AWARD

Board of awards as court, see Court (Of Justice).

An "award" in law is a judgment or finding upon a disputed matter submitted for decision. People ex rel. Hallock v. Hennessey, 98 N. E. 516, 518, 205 N. Y. 301.

"An 'award' is the judgment of a tribunal selected by the parties to determine matters actually in variance between them—not merely to appraise and settle the price of property contracted for under the stipulation that this term of the contract was to be so ascertained." Omaha Water Co. v. City of Omaha, 162 Fed. 225, 234, 89 C. C. A. 205, 15 Ann. Cas. 498.

The term "award," used in the condition of a writ of error bond instead of judgment of the court, is sufficient; the legal effect being the same. Richards v. Griffin, 5 Ala. 196, 198.

An "award" made by two of three arbitrators is valid. Toledo S. S. Co. v. Zenith Transp. Co., 184 Fed. 391, 106 C. C. A. 501.

Where disputed matters have been submitted to arbitration, the "award" is the decree or judgment of the arbitrator. Mill-saps v. Estes, 50 S. E. 227, 228, 137 N. C. 535, 70 L. R. A. 170, 107 Am. St. Rep. 496.

An "award" is defined as "the judgment or decision of arbitrators or referees in a matter submitted to them." 1 Bouv. Law Dict. 205; 1 Words and Phrases, p. 656. The judgment of an arbitrator, as also the paper on which it is written, is called an "award." Rev. St. 1898, § 3223, provides that, when a submission is made an order of court, the arbitrators may be compelled to make an award which may be enforced as a judgment, and section 3227 declares that the award must be in writing, signed by the arbitrators, or a majority of them, and delivered to the parties; that, when the submission is made an order of court, the award must be filed with the clerk, and a note thereof made on the register. Held, that it is no part of the duty of arbitrators to file their award with the clerk; such filing being required by the parties only when the party filing the award desires it to have the effect of a judgment. Richards v. Smith, 91 Pac. 683, 685, 33 Utah, 8.

An "award" is a final judgment, both at law and in equity, and cannot be classed with contracts, sealed or unsealed. Olston v. Oregon Water Power & Ry. Co., 97 Pac. 538, 52 Or. 343, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 915.

In Comp. St. 1905, c. 77, art. 9, § 7, providing that the county commissioners shall designate the newspaper in which certain notices shall be published, the word "designate" means to point out or select, and when the board "awarded" the printing of a list to a certain paper it clearly pointed out or selected such paper to do the work, and, so long as it did that, whether it used one word or another, is immaterial in the eyes of the law. State ex rel. Cronin v. Cronin, 106 N. W. 986, 987, 75 Neb. 738.

Under the federal statutes as construed by the federal courts, a bond conditioned to pay such damages as may be "awarded" by reason of the issuance or continuance of an injunction is not breached so as to make the surety liable until the amount of damages is assessed, and the principal obligor has refused to pay such amount. Umbreit v. American Bonding Co. of Baltimore, 129 N. W. 789, 144 Wis. 611.

Premium distinguished

"In a 'wager' or 'bet' there must be two parties, and it is known before the chance or uncertain event upon which it is laid is accomplished who are the parties who must lose or win. In a 'premium' or 'award' there is but one party until the act, thing, or purpose for which it is offered has been accomplished. A 'premium' is an 'award,' or recompense for some act to be done. A 'wager' is a stake upon an uncertain event." The offering of a premium to a winner of a horse race is not a bet or wager within Code, § 4028, prohibiting the making of any bet or wager. Under Code, § 1109, authorizing the county agricultural societies to award premiums for the improvement of stock, a premium may be offered for the winner of a horse race. Deller v. Plymouth County Agricultural Society, 10 N. W. 872, 874, 57 Iowa, 481 (citing Alford v. Smith, 63 Ind. 58; Harris v. White, 81 N. Y. 532).

AWARD FOR COSTS

As judgment, see Judgment.

AWARE

"Aware," as applied to a motorman's duty to a traveler after becoming aware that the latter is in peril, means "informed." The requisite knowledge is of the fact that the party injured was in peril. Manifestly this condition (knowledge) to the duty (premitting wanton or willful misconduct, to be later considered) cannot arise out of a breach of duty to look out for persons, etc., in peril, whatever the place of injury. If the duty be to keep a diligent lookout, and the duty be merely negligently breached, the consequence is the opposite of knowledge, namely, want of knowledge, and attributable only to the failure to observe that course or conduct which would have probably led to knowledge. Annisston Electric & Gas Co. v. Rosen, 48 South. 798, 801, 159 Ala. 195, 133 Am. St. Rep. 32.

AWFUL

The unexpected jarring of a passenger car, variously described as "swift," "quite violent," "terrible," "awful," "very severe," and "unexpected," as the train was passing over a cross-over switch used during the repair of one of the railroad company's bridges, which resulted in a passenger, who was standing near the open door of a car, being thrown from the car and injured, did not constitute negligence on the part of the carrier. Foley v. Boston & M. R. R., 79 N. E. 765, 766, 193 Mass. 332, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1076.

The jerk or lurch of a train may have been "awful hard" or the "severest" a witness had ever experienced, and yet may have been not such an extraordinary or unusual jerk or lurch as to be attributable to unskillful handling of the engine or management of the train. Young v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 84 S. W. 175, 177.

The word "babord" is a French marine term meaning the port side. The Charles Tiberghien, 143 Fed. 676.

BACK

See Taken Back.

Revert back, see Revert.

BACK-FIRING

"Backing-firing," as applied to an engine, is an explosion of gas in either the exhaust or intake pipe. Templeman Bros. Lumber Co. v. Fairbanks, Morse & Co., 57 South. 309, 313, 129 La. 983.

BACK LINE

Where a grantor owned land located on the south side of a bayou and conveyed a portion of it by a description beginning at a point on the bayou and extending south a stated number of varas to a stake in the prairie on "back line," the grantees took to the south line of the grantor's land, though it was located at a greater distance from the bayou than indicated by the description. Morse's Heirs v. Williams (Tex.) 142 S. W. 1186, 1189.

BACK TAXES

Act March 15, 1906, art. 8, § 1, makes the sheriff by virtue of his office collector of state, county, and district taxes. Section 20 provides that the taxes shall be due March 1st, and, if not paid on November 1st, shall become delinquent, and a penalty of 6 per cent. be added. Under section 21 the sheriff is required within 15 days after delinquency to certify to the county clerk a list of all delinquent taxes. Under sections 22-27 the county clerk within 10 days thereafter must issue against each delinquent a tax warrant directed to the sheriff who is required to proceed thereunder as under an execution. Ky. St. 1909, § 4267, makes it the duty of the Auditor of Public Accounts to collect back taxes, etc., and gives him power to direct revenue agents to prosecute the collection of delinquent taxes. Held, that two distinct modes for the collection of taxes are provided, the duties of the revenue agents not being intended to conflict with the sheriff, on whom the duty of collecting the taxes is primarily placed, and the term "back taxes" in section 4267 refers to taxes on which the ordinary process of collection had been exhausted, and hence the revenue agent could not bring suit to collect a delinquent tax and penalties where the sheriff had levied his tax warrants, and a preliminary injunction restraining the collection had been issued and dissolved, the sheriff then having a right to collect the taxes, and the ordinary process in his hands not being exhausted. Commonwealth v. Louisville Water Co., 116 S. W. 712, 713, 132 Ky. 305.

BACK-UP SIGNAL

In railroad parlance there is a difference between a "back-up signal" and a "kick signal." "Back-up signal" means that the engineer shall back the train, while a "kick signal" means that the speed shall be sufficiently increased to throw the cut-off into the side track by the force of the increased momentum, without following the car into the switch with the rest of the train. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hill, 69 S. W. 136, 138, 95 Tex. 629.

BACTERIOLOGY

"Bacteriology" is the science which investigates bacteria and other microbes, especially their life history and agency in the production of disease. State ex rel. Scholl v. Duncan, 50 South. 265, 162 Ala. 196.

BAD

BAD BEHAVIOR

"Bad behavior" is conduct such as the law punishes. United States v. Hrasky, 88 N. E. 1031, 1033, 240 Ill. 560, 130 Am. St. Rep. 288, 16 Ann. Cas. 279.

BAD BLOOD

"Bad blood" which produces a cherished intention to deliberately kill is not to be confused with "hot blood" excited by a sudden and unexpected emergency with which the slayer, through no fault of his own, is unfortunately confronted. Jenkins v. State, 51 S. E. 598, 600, 123 Ga. 523.

BAD CONDUCT

A factory employe's persistent violation of a rule requiring employes to keep their street clothing in a dressing room maintained by the employer for that purpose, and away from the machinery at which the men were at work, constituted "bad conduct," within a provision of the employment contract, permitting discharge for neglect of work, "bad conduct," etc. Thomas v. Houston, Stanwood

& Gamble Co., 142 S. W. 214, 215, 146 Ky. 156, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 950, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 185.

BAD FAITH

"Good faith is the opposite of 'bad faith,' and bad faith and fraud are synonymous." State ex rel. Millice v. Petersen, 75 N. E. 602, 605, 36 Ind. App. 269 (quoting and adopting definition in Stark v. Starr, 1 Sawy. 15, 22 Fed. Cas. 1084).

In an action on an insurance policy, it was not error to charge that damages and attorney's fees could not be recovered unless the insurer had acted in bad faith; "bad faith" meaning a frivolous or unfounded refusal in law or in fact to comply with the policy, or to pay according to its terms and the conditions imposed by statute. American Ins. Co. v. Bailey & Musgrove, 65 S. E. 160, 6 Ga. App. 424.

Cobbeys Ann. St. 1907, § 9255, providing that, to constitute notice of an infirmity in an instrument, the person to whom negotiated must have actual knowledge thereof, or knowledge of such facts that his taking the instrument amounts to bad faith, does not change the rule that to constitute bad faith by the purchaser of a negotiable instrument, for value, before maturity, he must have acquired it with knowledge of an infirmity, or with a belief based on the circumstances known to him that there was a defense, or he must have acted dishonestly. Benton v. Sikyta, 122 N. W. 61, 62, 84 Neb. 808, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1057.

"Bad faith," as used in Civ. Code 1895, § 2140, making bad faith in the refusal to pay loss on a policy the basis for damages and attorney's fees, is any frivolous or unfounded refusal in law or in fact to comply with the requisition of the policy holder to pay according to the terms of his contract and the conditions imposed by the statute. Missouri State Life Ins. Co. v. Lovelace, 58 S. E. 93, 103, 1 Ga. App. 446 (quoting and adopting the definition in Cotton States Life Ins. Co. v. Edwards, 74 Ga. 231).

Gross negligence, on the part of one to whom a note is negotiated, in not making inquiry as to defects suggested by the facts known to him, is evidence from which "bad faith," as used in the negotiable instruments law (Sanborn's St. Supp. 1906, § 1676-26), may be inferred, but it does not of itself constitute bad faith as a matter of law. Kipp v. Smith, 118 N. W. 848, 850, 137 Wis. 234.

Defendant trust company loaned $125,000 to U. and K. to purchase the stock of a corporation, which amount was equal to one-half of its entire capital. This loan was made in consideration of an usurious rate of interest, and also an additional bonus, the trust company requiring a transfer of the stock as collateral, and also two representatives on the board of directors. When the debt matured, U., as president of the corporation, procured a larger loan from a bank for the corporation's benefit, and as a part of the proceeds received a cashier's check payable to the corporation, which he indorsed as its president and paid to the trust company in payment of its loan to himself and K. as individuals and for a surrender of the stock. Held, that the trust company was bound to inquire through its representatives on the board of directors of the corporation concerning U.'s actual or implied power to so use the corporation's assets, and since such inquiry would have disclosed no such authority, but would also have shown that such use of the corporation's property would render it insolvent, the trust company was not a bona fide purchaser either as against the corporation or its creditors, under Negotiable Instruments Law, Laws 1897, p. 732, c. 612, §§ 91, 94, 95, declaring bad faith to consist of notice of facts which, if unexplained, would show that the purchaser was taking property to which the payer had neither right nor title. Ward v. City Trust Co. of New York, 84 N. E. 585, 589, 192 N. Y. 61.

Where a bill is filed for the foreclosure of a mortgage, which was given to secure the payment of a note, which note provides for the payment of the interest quarter-annually, and the mortgage contains a provision to the effect that, upon default in the payment of any installment of interest, the whole amount of such note shall thereby become due and payable, and there is a positive allegation in the bill that, at the time of the purchase of the note by the complainant bank, which was prior to the maturity of the principal of the note, it had no knowledge that there had been any default in the payment of interest, or that there was any defense on the part of the mortgagor against the note and mortgage, the fact that no payments of interest were indorsed on note or accompanying mortgage did not make the note dishonored, and the complainant must be deemed a holder in due course of such note, under the provisions of section 2985 of the General Statutes of 1906, and its action in taking such note under such circumstances did not amount to bad faith, which is required by section 2989 of such General Statutes, wherefore a demurrer interposed to the bill upon such grounds is properly overruled. Taylor v. American Nat. Bank of Pensacola, Fla., 57 South. 678, 686, 68 Fla. 631.

BAGGAGE

See, also, Personal Luggage.

"Baggage" is whatever a passenger takes with him for his personal use or convenience, according to the habits or wants of the particular class to which he belongs, either for immediate use or for use at the end of his journey. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v.

Skinner, 113 S. W. 1019, 1020, 88 Ark. 189, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 850; Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Whitten, 119 S. W. 835, 836, 90 Ark. 462, 21 Ann. Cas. 726.

"Baggage" means those articles of personal convenience and adornment usually taken by a passenger on a journey or a visit, and suitable to his station in life and social standing. Robert v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 127 S. W. 925, 928, 148 Mo. App. 96.

The term "baggage" includes such articles of necessity or convenience as are usually carried by passengers for personal use, comfort, or protection during the continuance of a journey; and what constitutes baggage in a given case depends in some measure on its own circumstances. Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Johnson, 114 Pac. 850, 651, 50 Colo. 187, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 627.

Under Laws of the territory of Oklahoma as continued in force by schedule to the Constitution, § 2, "baggage" which a carrier must receive and transport without charge, except for excessive weight, means such articles as are intended for the use of passenger while traveling, or for his personal equipment. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Dickerson, 118 Pac. 140, 29 Okl. 386.

The "baggage" of a passenger is understood to consist of articles for personal use, such as wearing apparel and the like, which are intended to be used during the journey or immediately thereafter. It will be assumed, in the absence of an express agreement to the contrary, that in the checking thereof the carrier and passenger both contemplate and understand that the baggage is to be forwarded with the same expedition as that employed in the carriage of the passenger himself, so that it will be available for the intended use. Baggage is seldom, if ever, prepared for shipment as freight, and it would be a violation of contract duty for the carrier to forward it on freight trains. Griffith v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 90 S. W. 408, 409, 114 Mo. App. 591.

The term "baggage," within the rule determining a carrier's liability, includes whatever the passenger takes with him for his personal use and convenience, either with reference to the immediate necessities or the ultimate purposes of the journey. Whether or not certain articles are within the term "baggage" is to be determined from the character and length of the journey, its purposes and objects, the owner's station in life, and the habits and uses of the class of travelers to which he belongs. House v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. (S. D.) 138 N. W. 809, 812.

Under Public Service Commission Act, § 38, providing that every common carrier shall be liable for loss of property carried as baggage up to the full value, but that the value in excess of $150 shall be stated on delivery to the carrier, a provision in a railroad ticket that no risk was assumed on baggage except for wearing apparel, of $100 in value, referred to "baggage" which was checked, and not to luggage personally carried by the passenger and delivered temporarily to the carrier's servant. Hasbrouck v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 122 N. Y. Supp. 123, 126, 137 App. Div. 532.

Rev. St. 1899, § 1192, regulates the charges of railroads as common carriers of passengers, and provides that the charges shall be limited to compensation per mile for the transportation of any person with "ordinary baggage." Held, that the word "baggage" having been previously well defined to mean such articles of necessity, or personal convenience, as were usually carried by passengers for their personal use, and not merchandise or other valuable, though carried in the trunks of passengers, not destined for such use, but for other purposes, as for sale, and the like, the addition of the word "ordinary" did not limit the word "baggage" to wearing apparel and other articles ordinarily carried by a common traveler, but was used merely to recognize the well-established meaning of the word "baggage" as distinguished from "merchandise." Doerner v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 130 S. W. 62-64, 149 Mo. App. 170.

Laws 1907, c. 429, §§ 2, 38, under which express companies are common carriers and made liable for loss of property, apply only to the personal baggage of a traveler; but it is not necessary to the status as "baggage" that a passenger should be carried at the same time the baggage is transferred. Under Laws 1907, c. 429, which provides by section 2 that express companies are common carriers, and by section 38 that every common carrier shall be liable for all loss of property carried as baggage, a trunk delivered to a transfer company, which, upon the statement that it was the baggage of a passenger, assumed to carry it to a given address, is "baggage" for the loss of which the company is liable. Meister v. Woolverton, 125 N. Y. Supp. 439, 441, 140 App. Div. 926.

A female traveler's own clothing, and that of her children, including fancy work and miscellaneous ornaments, a savings bank and contents, and a sither key, all of which are carried in her trunk, constitute baggage, for the loss of which she is entitled to recover. She may also recover for the loss of a small amount of her husband's underwear, which was being carried in her trunk as a part of her baggage; it appearing that her husband was traveling with her. She cannot, however, recover for the loss of articles constituting household goods, which she was carrying in her trunk, though she and her husband were changing their residence by removal from one state to another; the carrier having no notice of the fact that such goods were being transported as baggage.

Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Baldwin, 81 S. W. 599-602, 113 Tenn. 205.

Express distinguished

Public Service Commissions Law, § 38, provides that every common carrier shall be liable for loss of property carried as baggage, up to the full value, regardless of the character thereof, but value in excess of $150 shall be stated on delivery to the carrier, who may make a reasonable charge for the assumption of liability in excess of $150, and for the carriage of baggage exceeding 150 pounds in weight on a single ticket. Held, that the word "baggage," as used in such section, meant property carried as an incident to transportation of the owner as a passenger, and that the section had no application to a transfer company, carrying a trunk from a railroad terminal to a designated point as express without carriage of the owner as a passenger; the term "baggage" being confined to trunks, etc., which the traveler carries with him on a journey. Morgan v. Woolverton, 96 N. E. 354, 203 N. Y. 52, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 640.

Jewelry

A woman's jewelry, and every article pertaining to her wardrobe that may be necessary or convenient to her traveling, is regarded in law as "baggage." Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Fales, 77 S. W. 234, 235, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 457.

The term "baggage" in so far as a female passenger is concerned, includes whatever property or articles of paraphernalia she chooses to carry on her journey, necessary to her use, enjoyment, or pleasure in traveling, and is therefore sufficiently broad to cover a diamond ring worn as a part of her wardrobe. Pullman Co. v. Vanderhoeven, 107 S. W. 147, 150, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 414.

Plaintiff, a passenger on defendant's railroad, carried in her card case in the bottom of a suit case, which was not checked, three rings, worth $1,500, for her personal wear at a reception she intended to attend at her destination, and which were adapted to her tastes, habits, and social standing. Held, that the suit case and contents were baggage, which is whatever the passenger takes with him for his personal use or convenience, according to the habits or wants of the particular class to which he belongs, either with reference to the immediate necessities or the ultimate purpose of the journey, and that the carrier, in the absence of any limitation by statute, regulation of the road, or inquiry as to value, was liable for the articles lost. Hasbrouck v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 95 N. E. 808, 813, 202 N. Y. 363, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 537, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1150.

While a passenger is entitled to carry with her and retain in her immediate custody as baggage a reasonable quantity of personal effects for her use, comfort, and adornment during the journey, according to her station in life, a carrier or sleeping-car company owes her no duty with respect to valuable jewelry carried by her in a hand bag for transportation merely, without any intention or purpose of using it during the journey; the jewelry under such circumstances not being regarded as baggage. Bacon v. Pullman Co., 159 Fed. 1, 3, 89 C. C. A. 1, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 578, 14 Ann. Cas. 516.

Merchandise and household articles

Merchandise as including, see Merchandise.

Household articles carried by a passenger consisting of a drawnwork centerpiece, a tablecloth, dollies, a bed spread, and pillow shams, as well as a photographer's camera carried for sale as merchandise, do not constitute baggage, but a woman passenger's shawls, handkerchiefs, collars, dresses, and undershirts are baggage. Mexican Cent. Ry. Co. v. De Rosear (Tex.) 109 S. W. 949, 950.

"Baggage" is whatever a passenger takes with him for his personal use or convenience, according to the habits or wants of the class to which he belongs, either with reference to the immediate necessities or to the ultimate purpose of his journey, but baggage does not include articles transported by the passenger to be used after the consummation of his journey; and a passenger who is moving from one location to another, to settle at the latter location and engage in permanent business, cannot include as baggage such articles as are only useful and necessary for the business. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Miller (Ark.) 145 S. W. 889, 890, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 634.

"Generally speaking, nothing is 'baggage' which a traveler is entitled to have transported by a carrier as an incident of the contract to carry him except articles of personal comfort, convenience, and ornament usually taken on journeys and visits. The term 'baggage' * * * does not, as a rule, include merchandise or furniture. To some extent, the question of whether in a given case a certain article was baggage will depend, not only on the condition in life of the traveler, but on the purpose of the journey." Hubbard v. Mobile & O. R. Co., 87 S. W. 52, 56, 112 Mo. App. 459.

Money

Money in a trunk not exceeding a reasonable sum for the personal expense of a traveler or guest is a part of his "baggage." Taylor v. Monnot, 11 N. Y. Super. Ct. 116, 119 (quoting and adopting definition in Orange County Bank v. Brown [N. Y.] 9 Wend. 119, 24 Am. Dec. 129).

"Baggage" means such goods and chattels as a passenger may see fit and proper to carry for his personal convenience, comfort, taste, pleasure, or protection, according to the wants or habits of the class to which he belongs, and with reference to the period of the transit, or the ultimate purpose of the journey. Broadly speaking, the term includes such articles as a passenger carries with him for his personal use and convenience on his journey and during his stay at the place to which he is going. In determining what is proper as "baggage," the purpose of the journey, the length of the journey, or of the proposed stay, and the business in which the person is engaged, are to be considered. It is not necessary that the articles should be used on the journey provided they are such as are reasonably necessary for the passenger either while in transit or temporarily staying at a particular place. Sufficient money for the purposes of a passenger's journey is personal baggage for the loss of which in transit the carrier is liable. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Lawrence, 95 S. W. 663, 664, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 318 (citing Lawson, Ballm. § 272; 4 Elliott Railroads, § 1647).

Plaintiff, a passenger, carried in her card case in the bottom of a suit case which was not checked $20 for use in emergency. Held, that the carrier was liable for the theft of the money as "baggage." Hasbrouck v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co., 95 N. E. 808, 813, 202 N. Y. 363, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 537, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1150; Id., 122 N. Y. Supp. 123, 137 App. Div. 532; Id., 118 N. Y. Supp. 735, 64 Misc. Rep. 478.

Salesman's samples and articles for sale

Samples of stationery which a passenger was engaged in selling did not constitute "baggage." Rossier v. Wabash R. Co., 91 S. W. 1018, 1019, 115 Mo. App. 515.

A traveling salesman's sample case, containing patterns and designs used in the business of soliciting orders, carried by him in the passenger coach, is ordinary baggage, within a notice of the carrier for the storage of baggage, and fixing charges for storage on each piece of baggage after remaining at the station for a specified time; and baggage, within the notice, is not limited to baggage coming from or destined to a baggage car, but applies to baggage in the possession of a passenger at the end of his destination, and left for storage until called for. Milwaukee Mirror & Art Glass Works v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. (Wis.) 134 N. W. 379, 381, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 383.

Ordinary "baggage" is, in general, such articles of necessity and convenience as are usually carried by passengers for personal use and comfort, or protection. The property must have the characteristics of personal effects, and be carried for the passenger's use. Manifestly this excludes merchandise, and by weight of authority it excludes all property carried for trade purposes, or designed and intended to be used in connection with such purposes. Thus, samples carried by a passenger in his trunk to be used in making sales of goods are not "baggage," and it is immaterial that they are necessary to the object of the passenger's journey. And there is no principle on which to distinguish between a case involving samples of the goods to be sold and one involving models or photographs intended to represent the goods to be sold. So under Code, § 2077, requiring a carrier to accept and carry the ordinary baggage of a passenger, a carrier was not liable for delay in the delivery of a sample case checked by a passenger as "baggage" and containing photographs of articles of furniture which the passenger was engaged in selling as a commercial traveler. McElroy v. Iowa Cent. Ry. Co., 110 N. W. 915, 916, 133 Iowa, 544.

"Articles carried by passenger for sale are not 'baggage.'" * * * It is, however, true that, if the carrier receives merchandise as 'personal baggage' knowing its true character, he will be liable as for baggage." Rossier v. Wabash R. Co., 91 S. W. 1018, 1019, 115 Mo. App. 515 (citing and adopting Spooner v. Hannibal & St. J. Ry. Co., 23 Mo. App. 408; Rider v. Wabash, St. L. & P. Ry. Co., 14 Mo. App. 529; Minter v. Pacific R. R., 41 Mo. 503, 97 Am. Dec. 288; Sherlock v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 85 Mo. App. 46).

Tools

Razors and other tools of a barber in his suit case constitute "baggage," for loss of which a carrier is liable. Grzywacz v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co., 184 N. Y. Supp. 209, 210, 74 Misc. Rep. 343.

The word "baggage," having been held to include a "rifle, revolver, two gold chains, two gold rings, and silver pencil case" belonging to a fashionable gentleman traveling for pleasure and amusement, by the same process of reasoning includes the tools of a carpenter when en route to a place where he expects to use them in the carrying out of a contract he had made to build a house. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Russell (Tex.) 97 S. W. 1090, 1091 (citing Braty v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 32 U. C. Q. B. 66).

Under customs duties law

Merchandise for sale is not "baggage," within the meaning of section 2799, Rev. St. relating to the "personal baggage * * * of persons who arrive in the United States," and hence a declaration of value is not required. Where merchandise for sale is imported in a trunk, separate from the remainder of a passenger's effects, no effort being made to conceal it among the passenger's personal effects or to have it treated as personal baggage, the passenger is under no obligation to declare it as baggage under section 2799, Rev. St. The provision in Customs Administrative Act June 10, 1890, c. 407, § 4, 26 Stat. 131, that "except in case of personal effects, no importation of any merchandise" shall be entered without invoice, is equivalent to an exception of articles not personal effects from the provision relative to the declaration of "baggage" in section 2799, Rev. St. Congress having prescribed two independent systems of formalities for the importation of personal effects and of merchandise not personal effects, each complete in itself, under section 2799, Rev. St., and Customs Administrative Act June 10, 1890, c. 407, § 4, 26 Stat. 131, respectively, it could not have been intended that both should be applicable to merchandise imported by a passenger arriving in the United States, but not attempted to be concealed by dressing it up as baggage. United States v. One Trunk, 175 Fed. 1012, 1015.

Precious stones carried loose in a pocket of a passenger arriving in the United States, though not "baggage" within the common-law definition of that term, are baggage within the meaning of section 2802, Rev. St.; and the passenger is bound to declare them in the same way as articles contained in his trunk. United States v. 218½ Carats Loose Emeralds, 153 Fed. 643, 646 (citing United States v. One Pearl Necklace, 111 Fed. 165, 49 C. C. A. 287, 56 L. R. A. 130; One Pearl Chain v. United States, 123 Fed. 374, 59 C. C. A. 499; United States v. Pearl Chain, 139 Fed. 517, 71 C. C. A. 500; United States v. Five Packages of Tapestry, 114 Fed. 496).

Held, that articles in the clothing are "baggage," within the meaning of section 2802, Rev. St., relating to the concealment of dutiable articles "found in the baggage of any person arriving within the United States," and that a package of precious stones found in the pocket of a passenger is forfeitable under said provision. Two Hundred and Eighteen and One-Half Carats Loose Emeralds v. United States, 154 Fed. 839, 840, 83 C. C. A. 475 (citing United States v. One Pearl Necklace, 111 Fed. 165, 49 C. C. A. 287, 56 L. R. A. 130; One Pearl Chain v. United States, 123 Fed. 374, 59 C. C. A. 499; United States v. Pearl Chain, 139 Fed. 517, 71 C. C. A. 500; United States v. Five Packages of Tapestry, 114 Fed. 496).

BAIL

See Admission to Bail; Common Bail; Special Bail.

"Bail" is defined as to set at liberty a person arrested or imprisoned on security being taken for his appearance. State v. Davis, 75 Pac. 857, 858, 27 Utah, 368 (citing Black, Law Dict.).

The word "bail," as a verb, means to deliver an arrested person to his sureties on their giving security for his appearance at a time and place designated to submit to the jurisdiction and judgment of the court, and in its substantive sense it may be defined as the sureties into whose custody the person is delivered, and who are considered as having control of his person. State v. Western Surety Co., 128 N. W. 173, 175, 26 S. D. 170.

Bail, technically considered, is the delivery of a person to the sureties on his bond, he being supposed to continue in their friendly custody instead of in jail, the sureties being regarded as bailees or custodians of their principal's person, and entitled, at any time before entry of forfeiture, to surrender the principal and exoneration, as expressly authorized by Code, §§ 5528, 5529. State v. Sandy, 116 N. W. 599, 600, 138 Iowa, 580.

"Bail" is a delivery or bailment of the person to his sureties, on their giving, together with himself, sufficient security for his appearance; he being supposed to continue in their friendly custody, instead of going to jail. This is the meaning of the word in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 5775, authorizing the sureties on a bond to cause the arrest of the principal at any time before they are finally discharged, and at the request of the bail the court, etc., shall recommit the party as arrested to the custody of the sheriff, etc. Territory ex rel. Thacker v. Conner, 87 Pac. 591, 594, 17 Okl. 135 (citing 4 Blackstone, 297).

The word "bail," in Code Cr. Proc. §§ 585-587, 589-592, providing that bail by sufficient sureties may be admitted on all arrests in criminal cases, that any party charged with a crime and admitted to bail may be arrested by his bail at any time, and providing for forfeiture of bail, etc., applies to the sureties only, and the obligation assumed by the sureties in a bail bond is the obligation contemplated by the Code of Criminal Procedure, and the obligation assumed by a surety in a bail bond who therein undertakes that the principal shall appear and answer to a criminal charge, is not affected by the fact that the principal also signed the bond, and an action on the bond for its breach may be brought against the surety alone. State v. Western Surety Co., 128 N. W. 173, 175, 26 S. D. 170.

As sureties

Comp. Laws, § 1036, provides that complainant and the witnesses on appeal in criminal cases in justice's court may be required to enter into recognizances to appear at the circuit court. Chapter 330, relating to examination of accused persons in cases not triable before justices of the peace, authorizes, in sections 11,856 and 11,857, the magistrate to bind by recognizance all material witnesses against the prisoner to appear and testify. Section 11,859 provides that all witnesses required to recognize shall, if they refuse, be committed to prison by the magistrate, to remain until compliance with the order, etc. Pub. Acts 1875, No. 177, provides, in section 1, as amended by Pub. Acts 1879, No. 141, that it shall not be necessary in any criminal case for any witness to give bail for his appearance unless required to do so by order of a judge of a court of record or a circuit court commissioner, and that all contravening laws are repealed. Held that, while the latter act deprived justices of the peace of authority over the subject of requiring bail, it did not deprive them of authority to require personal recognizances; the word "bail" importing suretyship—the securing of the witness' attendance through the medium of sureties for such attendance. Bates v. Kitchel, 125 N. W. 684, 686, 160 Mich. 402.

Code Cr. Proc. § 551, defines the "taking of bail" to be the acceptance by a competent court or magistrate of the undertaking of sufficient bail for the appearance of the defendant according to the terms of the undertaking or that the bail will pay to the people of the state a specified sum. People v. Torn, 97 N. Y. Supp. 523, 524, 110 App. Div. 676.

BAIL BOND

A "bail bond" is a statutory undertaking to pay money under certain conditions, and, to be enforceable, it must be taken in substantial compliance with the terms of the statute authorizing it, and if not so taken, it cannot be enforced as a common-law undertaking, and the sureties are entitled to stand on their contract according to its terms. Malheur County v. Carter, 98 Pac. 489, 493, 52 Or. 616.

Recognizance distinguished

A "bail bond" is an obligation under seal, given by the accused with one or more sureties and made payable to the proper officer with condition to be void on performance by the accused of such acts as he may legally be required to perform. It differs from a "recognizance" merely in the nature of the obligation created. It creates a new obligation, while the recognizance is an acknowledgment of record of an existing debt. State v. Dorr, 53 S. E. 120, 122, 59 W. Va. 188, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 402, 115 Am. St. Rep. 915, 8 Ann. Cas. 1016.

BAIL BY SUFFICIENT SURETIES

Under Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 5769, providing that "bail by sufficient sureties shall be admitted upon all arrests in criminal cases where the offense is not punishable by death," it is not necessary for the principal in a bail bond to qualify. Territory ex rel. Thacker v. Conner, 87 Pac. 591, 593, 17 Okl. 135 (citing Tillson v. State, 29 Kan. 457; Ingram v. State, 10 Kan. 630; People v. Hammond, 7 N. Y. Supp. 219, 54 Hun, 635).

BAILEE

See Larceny by Bailee.

Any carrier or other bailee, see Any Other.

Other bailee, see Other.

A "bailee" is one to whom personal property which is the subject of larceny is delivered under a contract of bailment. State v. Seeney (Del.) 59 Atl. 48, 49, 5 Pennewill, 142.

One who is intrusted with a check so that he may collect the proceeds is a "bailee." State v. Fraley (W. Va.) 76 S. E. 134, 136, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 498.

The word "bailee," used in its broad sense, includes every person to whom the possession of personal property is delivered by another; but, as used in Pen. Code 1895, § 191, which provides that any factor, commission merchant, warehousekeeper, etc., or any other bailee, who shall fraudulently convert anything of value intrusted to him, is guilty of a felony, it is necessary that the character of the relation be a more fiduciary one than that arising from a mere loan for the borrower's benefit. Rice v. State, 64 S. E. 575, 6 Ga. App. 160.

The term "bailee," in statutes defining larceny by a bailee, is used, not in its large, but in its limited, sense, as including simply those bailees who are authorized to keep, transfer, or deliver, and who receive the goods bona fide and then fraudulently convert, and, where it does not appear that a fiduciary duty is imposed upon the person to return the specific goods of which the alleged bailment is composed, there is no bailment under the statute. Settles v. State, 122 S. W. 500, 92 Ark. 202.

A "bailment," as contemplated by the statute, punishing embezzlement by a bailee, consists in the delivery of personal property which is the subject of larceny, by one to another, to be held or used by the latter as directed, under a contract, express or implied, that it shall be redelivered after the purpose of delivery has been fulfilled, or disposed of pursuant to the direction of the person delivering it; the one to whom the property is delivered being a "bailee." State v. Brewington (Del.) 78 Atl. 402, 404.

Alleging that a person received as a "bailee" certain money is sufficient to advise such a person that he came into the possession of the money of another, to be held for the other for some special purpose, which special purpose being accomplished, the money is to be returned or delivered over. An indictment charging embezzlement in violation of Kirby's Dig. § 1839, and alleging that accused, being a "bailee" of another, received money, etc., is sufficient to advise accused that he came into possession of the money to be held for a special purpose. Storms v. State, 98 S. W. 678, 680, 81 Ark. 25.

"The common-law duty of a 'bailee' with respect to the thing bailed is to exercise a reasonable degree of care and skill for its preservation, and he is not liable for loss or injury to the thing bailed, occurring from any unforeseen and unexpected causes not naturally to be expected, and which could not be guarded against by reasonable foresight."

* * * Blackstone states that a "bailee" who undertakes specially to keep the goods safely obligates himself to the ordinary diligence which the common-law demands (2 Bl. Comm. 452); otherwise, however, if the term of the contract is to do that absolutely which the law does not require to be done. Fairmont Coal Co. v. Jones & Adams Co., 134 Fed. 711, 713, 87 C. C. A. 265.

Kirby's Dig. § 1839, provides that if any carrier or other bailee shall embezzle or convert to his own use any money, etc., which shall have come to his possession, such bailee shall be deemed guilty of larceny, etc. Held, that the word "bailee" was not confined to bailees of the generic class, "carriers," but embraced all bailees; and hence a school director, who obtained by virtue of his office and converted money of the district by raising a warrant drawn to pay attorney's fees, was subject to indictment under such section. Compton v. State (Ark.) 143 S. W. 897, 903.

BAILEE FOR HIRE

Where plaintiff delivered to defendant a lot of carpet to be cleaned and stored until redelivered to plaintiff, for which service plaintiff was expected to pay, defendant was a "bailee for hire" and liable for the exercise of ordinary care. Bowen v. Isenberg Bros. Co. (Del.) 67 Atl. 152, 6 Pennewill, 230.

A safety deposit company which lets boxes in vaults, two keys being necessary for opening them, one of which is kept by the company, and the other given to the person renting a box, is a "bailee for hire" with respect to a deposit in a box and required to exercise the care of a prudent person to prevent access of unauthorized persons to the box; so that it not having explained the abstraction of a deposit while a depositor's key, which was found by an employé of the company, was lost, so as to show that it had used such care, it is liable therefor. Guaranty Trust Co. v. Diltz, 91 S. W. 596, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 26.

Where plaintiff left his huckster's wagon and merchandise therein in defendant's livery stable to be cared for during the night, having paid the usual price for such service in advance, defendant became a "bailee thereof for hire" and was bound to exercise such diligence as would be exercised by a person of ordinary prudence with reference to his own property, and if plaintiff's property was destroyed by fire, and could have been saved by ordinary diligence, defendant was liable. Weick v. Dougherty, 90 S. W. 966, 967, 139 Ky. 528, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 348.

BAILIFF

The crier and bailiff of a court are officers of the court, and bound to take notice of the orders of the court and "be ready to discharge their duties if required." Kelly v. United States, 41 Ct. Cl. 246, 250, 251.

BAILMENT

See Gratuitous Bailment; Involuntary Bailment.

See, also, Commodatum.

"A 'bailment' is the delivery of a thing in trust for some special object or purpose and on a contract, express or implied, to conform to the object or purpose of the trust." William R. Trigg & Co. v. Bucyrus Co., 51 S. E. 174, 176, 104 Va. 79 (quoting and adopting definition in Story, Bailm. § 2); Jenkins v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co., 59 S. E. 1120, 1122, 3 Ga. App. 381 (Civ. Code 1895, § 2894); In re Allen, 183 Fed. 172, 174; Armour & Co. v. Ross, 58 S. E. 941, 942, 78 S. C. 294; Bates v. Bigby, 51 S. E. 717, 718, 123 Ga. 727.

"'Bailment' is the delivery of goods for some purpose upon a contract, express or implied, that after the purpose has been fulfilled they shall be redelivered to the bailor or otherwise dealt with according to his directions or kept until he reclaims them." Walter A. Wood Mowing & Reaping Mach. Co. v. Vanstory, 171 Fed. 375, 378, 96 C. C. A. 331 (quoting and adopting 2 Blackstone's Commentaries, 451; Story, Bailm. [9th Ed.] par. 2).

The Penal Code defines "bailment" as a contract of borrowing or hire. "A bailment is a delivery of goods for some purpose on a contract, express or implied, that after the purpose has been fulfilled, they should be redelivered to the bailor, or afterwards dealt with according to his directions or kept until he reclaims them." Northcutt v. State, 131 S. W. 1128, 1129, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 259, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 822.

"Bailment" signifies a contract resulting from delivery of goods on a condition that they be restored to the bailor, according to his directions, as soon as the purposes for which they were bailed are answered. Walker v. Norfolk & W. Ry. Co., 67 S. E. 722, 723, 67 W. Va. 273.

A bailment is a delivery of personal property in trust. The character of the trust may be as broad as its duties require; yet, speaking generally, all deliveries of personal property to another in trust for a lawful purpose are bailments. Nicolette Lumber Co. v. People's Coal Co., 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 575, 577.

A "bailment" is the delivery of some personal property, the subject of larceny, by one person to another to be held according to the purpose or the object of the delivery and to be returned or delivered when that object is accomplished. State v. Seeney (Del.) 59 Atl. 48, 49, 5 Pennewill, 142 (citing Ketchum v. Corse, 31 Atl. 486, 65 Conn. 89).

A "bailment," as contemplated by the statute, punishing embezzlement by a bailee, consists in the delivery of personal property which is the subject of larceny, by one to another, to be held or used by the latter as directed, under a contract, express or implied, that it shall be redelivered after the purpose of delivery has been fulfilled, or disposed of pursuant to the direction of the person delivering it. State v. Brewington (Del.) 78 Atl. 402, 404.

In respect to the proposition that to constitute a "bailment" the parties must have intended that there should be a return or delivery of the identical thing, it is well settled in law, and the nature of some transactions is such, that the rule can only be sufficiently answered by returning other property of like value and kind. Knapp v. Knapp, 96 S. W. 295, 298, 118 Mo. App. 685.

Civ. Code 1895, § 2894, defines "bailment" to be a delivery of goods or property for the execution of a special object, beneficial either to the bailor or bailee or both, and upon a contract expressed or implied to carry out this object and dispose of the property in conformity with the purpose of the trust. The bailee is such an agent of the bailor as that he is required, not only to use the property for the special object only for which he was intrusted with it and in conformity with the purposes of the trust, but to act in good faith where the interests of his principal are concerned. Haines v. Chappell, 58 S. E. 220, 221, 1 Ga. App. 480.

A contract inter partes is not essential to a bailment; but it is the element of lawful possession, however created, and duty to account for the thing as the property of another, that creates the bailment. Burns v. State, 128 N. W. 987, 990, 145 Wis. 373, 140 Am. St. Rep. 1081.

To constitute a "bailment" there must be an actual delivery to and acceptance by the bailee so as to give him, for the time being, sole custody. Bertig v. Norman, 141 S. W. 201, 204, 101 Ark. 75.

An essential of a bailment is the delivery of property by the bailor to the bailee for a particular purpose, and without such a delivery there can be no bailment, and it is also requisite that title to the property shall remain in the bailor. Northcutt v. State, 131 S. W. 1128, 1129, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 259, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 822.

Animals

A transaction is a "bailment" if the owner of cattle delivers them to another to be fed under an express agreement that the only interest which the other person shall have in the cattle is what he may put on them. First Nat. Bank of Concordia v. McIntosh & Peters Live Stock & Commission Co., 84 Pac. 535, 537, 72 Kan. 608.

Under 19 Del. Laws, c. 782, which provides that any bailee of money or other property, the subject of larceny, who shall embezzle or fraudulently convert the same to his own use, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, a "bailment" consists in the delivery of some personal property, the subject of larceny, by one person to another, to be by him held and used according to the purpose for which it is delivered, upon an understanding, express or implied, that, after fulfillment of such purpose, it shall be returned to the bailor; and in a prosecution for the offense the state must prove that the defendant was in fact the bailee of the property which he is charged to have embezzled, and where a landlord, owing a cow, delivered it to his tenant to be kept on the farm, the tenant became a bailee as to the cow, and if the cow while on the farm gave birth to a calf, he became bailee as to the calf. State v. Lyons (Del.) 80 Atl. 976, 978.

A "bailment" is a "delivery of something of a personal nature by one party to another to be held according to the purpose or object of the delivery and to be returned or delivered over when that purpose is accomplished." A contract between a livery stable keeper and one who hires a horse and carriage from him is a "bailment," and the negligence of the bailee cannot be imputed to the livery stable keeper so as to prevent him from recovering for the death of the horse killed at a railroad crossing by the joint negligence of the bailee and the railroad company. Gibson v. Bessemer & L. E. R. Co., 75 Atl. 194, 195, 226 Pa. 198, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 859, 18 Ann. Cas. 535 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Bouv. Law Dict. [Rawle's Ed. 1897] p. 213).

Conditional sale distinguished

It is of the essence of a contract of "bailment" that the article bailed is to be returned in its own or some altered form to the bailor. A contract made and to be performed in Pennsylvania for the sale and delivery of showcases, by which the seller retains title until the price and all costs representing the same are paid, is a contract of conditional sale and not a bailment. In re G. & K. Trunk Co., 176 Fed. 1007, 1008, 1009 (quoting and adopting definition in Stephens v. Gifford, 20 Atl. 542, 137 Pa. 219, 21 Am. St. Rep. 868).

Bankrupts at the time of the filing of the petition against them had been for more than 30 days in possession of machinery which had been shipped to them under contracts, by which they agreed to pay for the same within one year from shipment, and which provided that a retention of the property after 30 days from date of shipment should constitute a trial and acceptance. Held, that such contracts constituted "conditional sales" and not "bailments" under the law of Pennsylvania, and the property, being subject to transfer by the purchasers or to seizure and sale by their creditors under such law, passed to their trustee in bankruptcy under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 70a(5), 30 Stat. 566. In re Burt, 155 Fed. 287, 268.

Machinery was delivered to a bankrupt under a contract which provided that he should pay certain varying sums at irregular intervals as rent for the same, and that on a final small payment he should be entitled to a bill of sale. There was no provision for the return of the machinery aside from one giving the privilege of retaking it on default in making any of the payments. Held, that under the law of Pennsylvania such contract was one of conditional sale, and not of bailment, and that the property was assets of the bankrupt estate. In re Tice, 139 Fed. 52, 54.

Under a contract called a lease, one of the parties agreed to hire from the other for a definite period a piano, and to pay as security for the contract a certain sum each month, and to return the piano at the end of the period in as good condition as reasonable use would permit; and it was agreed that upon the failure to pay any installment of rent, or upon the removal of the property from his residence, the security money should be retained as damages for the breach, and the owner should have the right to take possession of the piano without demand or notice. It was further agreed that, if the installments of rent were paid as they fell due, the party paying the same should, while the lease continued in force, have the right to purchase the piano at an agreed price, all sums paid as security or as rent to be deducted from that price. Held, a "conditional sale" and not a "bailment" for hire. Hamilton v. Hilands, 56 S. E. 929, 931, 144 N. C. 279, 12 Ann. Cas. 876 (citing Baldwin v. Van Wagner, 10 S. E. 716, 33 W. Va. 293; Kimball v. Post, 44 Wis. 471; Murch v. Wright, 46 Ill. 487, 95 Am. Dec. 455; Ott v. Sweatman, 31 Atl. 102, 166 Pa. 217; Puffer & Sons Mfg. Co. v. Lucas, 17 S. E. 174, 112 N. C. 377, 19 L. R. A. 682; Crinkley v. Edgerton, 18 S. E. 669, 118 N. C. 444; Clark v. Hill, 23 S. E. 91, 117 N. C. 11, 53 Am. St. Rep. 574; Barrington v. Skinner, 23 S. E. 90, 117 N. C. 47; Manufacturing Co. v. Gray, 28 S. E. 257, 121 N. C. 168; Thomas v. Cooksey, 41 S. E. 2, 130 N. C. 148; Wilcox v. Cherry, 31 S. E. 369, 123 N. C. 79; Hervey v. Rhode Island Locomotive Works, 93 U. S. 664, 23 L. Ed. 1003; Cottrell v. Merchants' & Mechanics' Bank, 15 S. E. 944, 89 Ga. 508).

Defendant executed a consignment receipt for a ring, reciting that it had been consigned on memorandum by prosecutor, to be returned on demand; that the same had not been sold, and that the title thereto did not pass; that all risks were assumed by the consignee; and that agreements not expressed in the writing were not part of the contract. At the same time defendant and prosecutor signed an alleged "deposit agreement," obligating defendant to deposit with prosecutor $30 on the execution of the agreement, and certain sums on specified dates thereafter, all of which should become prosecutor's absolute property, and that, when $175 had been deposited, prosecutor would deliver to defendant for his own use one diamond ring; that, if defendant made default, prosecutor might deliver articles as near like the article to be delivered, as possible, but reasonably worth the sums so deposited, and on delivery the agreement should be fulfilled. Held, that such agreements together constituted a conditional sale of the ring. People v. Gluck, 80 N. E. 1022, 1024, 188 N. Y. 167.

A contract between the furnisher of goods and the receiver that the latter may sell them at such price as he chooses, and that he will account for the goods sold at agreed prices, and will bear the expenses of insurance, freight, storage, and handling, and will hold the merchandise unsold subject to the order from furnisher, is an agreement for "bailment for sale," and not a conditional sale, and is unaffected by the statute rendering unrecorded contracts for conditional sales voidable by creditors and purchasers. In re Columbus Buggy Co., 143 Fed. 859, 861, 74 C. C. A. 611.

To constitute a "conditional sale" within the terms of Code, § 2905, requiring the recording of any written instrument evidencing a conditional sale, there must be a delivery of possession to the purchaser, with the intention of passing immediate ownership, subject only to the reservation of title to the seller as security for the purchase money. Defendant, a sheriff, levied an attachment on property in the hands of F., and sold it. Plaintiff, claiming to have been the owner, had a written agreement with F., reciting that plaintiff agreed to buy eight teams, the property in question; that the teams were to be used by F. in railroad grading; that plaintiff should receive at each pay day one-half of what the teams earned for the month at a certain rate per team, less the cost of keeping, etc.; that F. agreed to pay plaintiff one-half of the price of the teams before the completion of the grading, with interest, failing which plaintiff should receive compensation for the work done by the teams at the rate before mentioned; and that it was agreed that, in addition to the moneys paid plaintiff for the use of the teams, he should receive, on the completion of the work, one-half of the profits attributable to the use of the teams. Held, that F. was merely a "bailee" with a right of purchase, which, the evidence showed, had not been exercised; and hence the attachment could not be justified under Code, § 2905, requiring the recording of conditional sales in order to affect third persons. Donnelly v. Mitchell, 93 N. W. 369, 371, 119 Iowa, 432 (citing Wright v. Barnard, 56 N. W. 424, 89 Iowa, 168; Gaar, Scott & Co. v. Nichols, 88 N. W. 382, 115 Iowa, 223; Davis v. Giddings, 46 N. W. 425, 30 Neb. 209).

A contract providing that certain property should be held on consignment until sold by consignee with consignor's approval, that it should be invoiced to the consignee at a fixed price, and, while he could sell it at any price he saw fit, any overplus, after deducting expenses paid by him, should go to him as his compensation, and that the consignor could annul any sale and retake the property, and under which the consignee was not required to pay anything for the property, but was required merely to turn over certain of the proceeds of sales, the consignor having the right at any time to order the property returned, constituted a bailment for sale, and not a conditional sale, within Rev. St. 1909, § 2889, making conditional sales fraudulent as to creditors, unless acknowledged and recorded. Packard Piano Co. v. Williams, 151 S. W. 211, 212, 167 Mo. App. 515.

Where goods were delivered to A. before he became bankrupt, under a written agreement expressly providing that the property was delivered to him as a bailee on hire and that if default in payment of any of the rents for the use and hire of the goods, wares, and merchandise by the bailee were made, the bailor was authorized to repossess himself of the property, the transaction was a "bailment" and not a conditional sale. In re Angeny, 151 Fed. 959.

Debt distinguished

"If the goods delivered are to be returned though in a changed form, it is a 'bailment,' but, if the intention is that either money or goods are to be received in exchange for them, there is a transmutation of property, and the obligation created is a debt, and not a 'bailment,' a delivery of grain to another under an agreement that the identical grain or a similar kind or quality shall be returned from the common mass in which it is placed is a 'bailment.'" Savage v. Salem Mills Co., 85 Pac. 60, 76, 48 Or. 1, 10 Ann. Cas. 1065.

Deposit as security

A contract between a debtor and a creditor, whereby the debtor pledges collateral to secure the payment of his debt, is one of "bailment," and is of such class that the right to sell the security for the payment of the debt may be waived by an extension of the time without new consideration, and also by the conduct of the parties. Wyckoff, Church & Partridge v. Riverside Bank, 119 N. Y. Supp. 937, 939, 135 App. Div. 400.

Where a check is deposited in aid of a bond and to strengthen the security, the transaction is a bailment, and the application of a check to any other purpose than that for which it was deposited is a conversion on the part of the bailee, entitling the bailor to recover the check or the value thereof with interest. Haines v. Chappell, 58 S. E. 220, 221, 1 Ga. App. 480.

Loan distinguished

A general deposit in a bank creates the relation of debtor and creditor between the bank and the depositor, and, though called a deposit, it is a loan, and not a bailment. Pendleton v. Commonwealth, 65 S. E. 536, 538, 110 Va. 229.

Sale distinguished

A transaction is a "sale," as distinguished from a "bailment," when there is no obligation to return the specified article. In re Allen, 183 Fed. 172, 174.

An instrument in writing by which the manufacturer of certain passenger railroad cars leased them to a railroad company which had ordered them, but was unable to pay cash for them as agreed, at a specified rental per month, with the privilege to the lessee to purchase the cars, constitutes a "bailment," and not a sale. American Car & Foundry Co. v. Altoona & B. C. R. Co., 67 Atl. 838, 839, 218 Pa. 519 (citing Stiles v. Seaton, 49 Atl. 774, 200 Pa. 114; Lippincott v. Scott, 47 Atl. 1115, 198 Pa. 283, 82 Am. St. Rep. 801; Crist v. Kleber, 79 Pa. 290).

Plaintiff contracted to furnish certain pumping machinery, to be installed in the hull of a dredge being constructed by defendant. The contract provided that plaintiff should install the machinery at its own expense; that defendant should afford the facilities of its yards for such installation, and furnish men and material for that purpose at cost; that defendant should keep the machinery insured for the benefit of plaintiff; and that it should pay one-third of the price when the machinery was delivered, one-third when it was installed on board the dredge, and the balance on completion of the test by the party for whom the dredge was being constructed. Held, that on delivery of the machinery and payment of the first installment of the purchase price, there was a completed sale, and not a mere "bailment," of the machinery to defendant. William R. Trigg Co. v. Bucyrus Co., 51 S. E. 174, 176, 104 Va. 79.

A contract or lease of a certain number of sheep for a certain time, providing for payment of a certain amount of wool per head and a fixed increase per 100 head, stipulating for the payment of taxes and branding, and requiring their return at the expiration of the lease, unless it is renewed, is a "bailment" and not a sale. Wetzel v. Deseret Nat. Bank, 83 Pac. 570, 571, 30 Utah, 62.

Petitioners contracted with F. prior to his bankruptcy to ship certain goods to him to be sold for their account and to remain petitioners' property until sold. F. agreed to sell the goods at retail only, and to remit to petitioners each week the cost price of their goods sold during the previous week, and once each season to account and adjust the difference between sales and remittances. The contract also provided that if F. violated the contract, petitioners might take their goods back and hold F. for any loss they sustained, and that the stock should be fully insured against fire through petitioners, the cost to be paid by F. Held, that such contract constituted a valid "bailment" and not a sale as between petitioners and F., though not recorded, and, F. having failed to make the payments agreed on, petitioners were entitled to the goods or their proceeds as against F.'s trustee in bankruptcy. In re Fabian, 151 Fed. 949, 950.

Goods were billed by petitioners to a bankrupt at definite prices and on fixed terms of credit and discount; the bankrupt undertaking to settle or pay for them and to be responsible for the freight. He also agreed to give petitioners his exclusive trade and to render accounts for goods sold every six months. He was also required to hold separate and in trust all "goods unsold and all currency, open accounts, notes, liens, mortgages, or other values received for goods sold," and that, where goods were sold on credit, notes should be taken on blanks furnished by petitioners and made payable to their order; the bankrupt indorsing and guaranteeing them. Held, that the trust provision of the contract related merely to the manner of payment for the goods, and that the contract was one of "sale," and not of "bailment." In re Heckathorn, 144 Fed. 499, 501.

Complainant entered into a contract by which it agreed to furnish fertilizer to defendant to be paid for by him by a certain date at a stated price. The contract provided that the fertilizer should remain the property of complainant until sold by defendant, and that complainant should then become the owner of the proceeds, whether cash or notes, which should be held for its use and benefit until it should be fully paid. Held, that such contract was not one of "bailment" but of "sale," with an attempt to retain a lien upon the property sold, and that complainant could maintain an action at law thereon if valid to recover the price when due. Coweta Fertilizer Co. v. Brown, 163 Fed. 162, 165, 89 C. O. A. 612.

A contract for the reduction of ore between claimant and the T. Company, the bankrupt's predecessor, provided that the claimant should deliver ore to the T. Company for reduction on a schedule of treatment rates which included freight to the mill, that settlement for all ore shipped by claimant to the T. Company should be based on the latter's weights and samples, that, in case of disagreements as to assay values, the same should be submitted to certain arbitrators, and that payments for all gold ore delivered should be made by the T. Company promptly on agreement as to assay values, on a basis of $20 an ounce for gold, less treatment charges. On delivery of ore, each car was numbered and weighed, a test made to determine moisture, and samples taken and divided into three parts—one for the claimant, one for the T. Company, and a third for the umpire in case of dispute—after which the ore was mixed with ore shipped by others, and it was then impossible to identify claimant's ore. All risk of loss through theft or failure of the ore to come up to sample value was on the T. Company, and settlements were made by check of the latter in which it was treated as a debtor. Held, that the contract construed by the parties' method of business operated as a "sale" of ore delivered and not as a "bailment," so that claimant was not entitled to a preference in the distribution of the assets of the T. Company's bankrupt successor. Chisholm v. Eagle Ore Sampling Co., 144 Fed. 670, 671, 75 C. O. A. 472.

If the identical thing delivered is to be returned, it is a "bailment," and there is no transfer of title; but if the one to whom it is delivered may return another thing of the same kind, or an equivalent in the form of money, or otherwise, it will ordinarily constitute a sale, and effect a change of possession. Mining property, consisting of real estate and personal property, was leased by the owner to another for a term of years at a stipulated royalty, and it was agreed in the lease that at its expiration the personal property, which included some that would be consumed by use, should be returned by the lessee in kind or value, according to an invoice which had been made, at the option of the lessor. Held, that the transaction was in the nature of a sale of the personal property, and the title thereto passed to the lessee. Scott Mining & Smelting Co. v. Shultz, 73 Pac. 903, 904, 67 Kan. 605 (citing Carpenter v. Griffin [N. Y.] 9 Paige, 310, 37 Am. Dec. 396; Lafin & R. Powder Co. v. Burkhardt, 97 U. S. 110, 24 L. Ed. 973; Caldwell v. Hall, 60 Miss. 330, 44 Am. Rep. 410; Mallory v. Willis, 4 N. Y. 85; Hurd v. West [N. Y.] 7 Cow. 752; National Car & Locomotive Builder v. Cyclone Steam Snow Plow Co., 51 N. W. 657, 49 Minn. 125; Smith v. Smith's Estate, 51 N. W. 694, 91 Mich. 7; Barnes v. Morse, 38 Ill. App. 275; Herryford v. Davis, 102 U. S. 235, 26 L. Ed. 160, Jones, Bailm. § 74; Story, Bailm. § 47).

Whether a transaction by which goods are placed by one party in the hands of another to be sold is a "bailment" or a sale depends on its inherent character and purpose, and it is immaterial what name is given to it, or that it is an agreed condition that title shall not pass until payment is made. A bankrupt for a number of years had dealt in silk thread which she purchased from claimants. Having fallen behind in her payments, it was arranged that thereafter the goods should be "consigned" to her, and that the goods on hand should be invoiced and credited on her general indebtedness and charged to her on "consigned account." She was to report monthly the goods on hand and the amount sold, paying for the latter at the regular wholesale prices at which the goods were billed to her. It was further agreed that the goods should remain the property of claimants and subject to their order. No restriction was made on the manner of selling, or the prices to be charged by her, and she kept no separate account of receipts from the goods sold. Held, that as to her creditors the transaction was a sale, and that the goods on hand at the time of bankruptcy could not be reclaimed, whether they were on hand when the arrangement was made or received thereafter. In re Wells, 140 Fed. 752, 753.

A bankrupt was a dealer in agricultural implements and bought goods from a claimant. In the fall, out of season, he wrote for certain articles to be shown at a fair, and they were shipped, and billed to him as sold "subject to next spring's terms." In the spring, shortly before the bankruptcy, claimant made a demand for the goods, which was refused. Held, that there was nothing in the transaction to indicate a "bailment," rather than a sale, or to overcome the presumption of ownership arising from the bankrupt's possession, and that claimant was not entitled to recover the property from the trustee. That goods are billed to a party as though it was a sale, while not conclusive, is of more or less persuasive force. In re Wood, 140 Fed. 964.

See Basement Bakery.

The authorities of the city of Chicago have power to adopt an ordinance requiring bakeries to be licensed, defining a "bakery" as any place used for the purpose of mixing, compounding, or baking, for sale, or for purposes of a restaurant, bakery, or hotel, any bread, biscuits, etc., or any food product of which flour or meal is a principal ingredient, and providing for ventilation, light, and other sanitary requirements in such bakeries, under Cities and Villages Act, § 62, par. 50, authorizing cities to regulate the sale of meats, poultry, etc., and all other provisions, and to provide for place and manner of selling them, and paragraph 58, giving them power to provide for and regulate the inspection of meats, poultry, etc., and other provisions, the phrase "other provisions" including bakery products, covered by the ordinance, and the power to regulate including the power to license, and also, by paragraph 78, giving cities power to do all acts and make all regulations which may be necessary or expedient for the promotion of health or the suppression of disease. City of Chicago v. Drogasawacz, 99 N. E. 869, 870, 256 Ill. 34.

BALANCE

See Unpaid Balance.

A contract for the sale of a half interest in a barber shop by W. to H. provided that "it is understood and agreed that H. is to pay $1,912.50 for a one-half interest in barber shop, including all fixtures and everything pertaining to the same now contained in shop, and including lease. Said H. is to advance on debts such sum as may be necessary, and balance to be paid in regular course of business as the same may be necessary." Held, that the total amount that H. was to pay was $1,912.50; the word "balance" referring to the purchase price as named in the agreement and not to the subsisting debts of the seller over and above the $1,912.50. Halverson v. Walker, 112 Pac. 804, 805, 38 Utah, 264.

A gift of testator's real and personal property to his wife "to her own private use forever" and after her death the "balance" to his and her relatives, in equal shares, is a gift to the wife in fee simple; the word "use" implying more than a mere usufruct, and the word "balance" meaning what remains or is left over. Brohm v. Berner (N. J.) 77 Atl. 517.

Testator directed that the residue of his estate, after deducting $5,000 for his widow, should be divided into three equal shares, one of which was to go to his daughter H., or her issue, and, in case she died subsequently to testator's death without lawful issue, then her shares should revert to the estate, to be distributed as the balance of his estate. Held, that H. took a life estate only in the share of the estate bequeathed to her, the words "balance of my estate," being used in the sense of the rest or residue of testator's estate, so that on the death of H. after the death of testator, and without issue, but leaving a surviving husband, her share passed to testator's other daughters as a part of the residue of his estate under the trust created of their shares, and the husband took no interest therein. In re Thompson's Estate, 85 Atl. 104, 105, 237 Pa. 165.

Of unexpired term

In a provision of a city charter that the common council should appoint a person, in case a vacancy occurred in any elective office, to fill the vacancy for the balance of the unexpired term, the words "for the balance of the unexpired term" clearly indicate that the intention of the Legislature was that at the time of filling a vacancy some part of the term must have expired; and hence, where a person elected to office died before his term commenced, the vacancy could not be filled until after the commencement of the term. Palmer v. Stublely, 108 N. Y. Supp. 500, 501, 57 Misc. Rep. 480.

BALANCE AND RESIDUE

The words "balance and residue of my estate of every kind" included the reversionary interest in the real estate, and carried the fee subject to the life estate. Foll v. Newsome, 50 S. E. 597, 600, 138 N. C. 115, 3 Ann. Cas. 417.

BALANCE REMAINING

A contract between the heirs and another provided that it should purchase the lands of the estate and after a sale and the satisfaction of certain incumbrances the surplus should be divided in a specified manner. It was then agreed that a certain heir had a one-eleventh interest in the estate above the interest of any other heir, and that after such one-eleventh interest should be taken out he had an undivided one-fifth in the "balance remaining." Held, that the contract did not give title to one-eleventh of the land to such heir and one-fifth of the surplus, but the one-eleventh should be taken from the surplus. Howard v. Brown, 95 S. W. 195, 196, 197 Mo. 52.

BALE

In an action to recover the price of a "bale of cotton," it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the contract was made in the light of the commercial usage that a bale of cotton weighs 500 pounds. Watson v. Hazlehurst & McAllister, 56 S. E. 459, 460, 127 Ga. 298 (citing Stewart & Son v. Cook, 45 S. E. 398, 118 Ga. 541).

BALLOT

See By Ballot; Distinguished Ballot; Election by Ballot; Official Ballot; Secrecy of the Ballot; Separate Ballot; Void Ballot; Voting by Ballot; Written Ballot.

A "ballot" is a paper to express intent, and where its language is plain it must be so taken. Stanton v. O'Kane, 47 S. E. 245, 246, 55 W. Va. 601.

"The word 'ballot' runs back as far as to ancient Greece, and was derived from the Greek word βαλλω (ballo), to throw, and was originally applied to the casting of balls, shells, pebbles, or beans into a box, as the means of deciding, or voting, in both legislative and judicial bodies. It was not always secret, as it is said that the Grecian assemblies and courts were held in the daytime in public places, and the voters were separate from the popular audience only by a cordon of ropes, and when the voters went up and deposited their ballots it was known how they voted." Ex parte Owens, 42 South. 676, 678, 148 Ala. 402, 121 Am. St. Rep. 67, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 888.

A "ballot" is a printed or written expression of the voter's choice upon some material capable of receiving and reasonably retaining it, prepared or adopted by each individual voter and passing by the act of voting from his exclusive control to that of the election officers, to be by them accepted as the expression of his choice. State ex rel. Karlinger v. Board of Deputy State Sup'rs of Elections, 89 N. E. 33-35, 80 Ohio St. 471, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 188.

The paper called a "ballot" must not disclose for what or for whom it is voted except by the name of the person voted for and the office on the face thereof. If it has any mark or device on the outside and visible or apparent to common or casual observation that discloses for what or for whom it is voted, it is not a ballot. This is the strict meaning of a constitutional "ballot." State ex rel. Briesen v. Barden, 46 N. W. 899, 900, 77 Wis. 601, 10 L. R. A. 155.

A blank piece of paper, having on it no words or marks of any kind whereby the meaning and intent of the person who deposited it may be ascertained, is not a "ballot," and hence such paper cannot be considered in summing up the total vote, a majority of which a candidate must receive in order to be elected; for a ballot is a form of expression for a candidate to be voted for. Murdoch v. Strange, 57 Atl. 628, 629, 99 Md. 80, 3 Ann. Cas. 66.

Under P. L. N. J. 1898, p. 264, § 52, providing that where a question is to be submitted at any election the question shall be printed on the official "ballot," section 85, exempting boroughs from its provisions, and P. L. 1900, pp. 303, 304, amending section 52 by omitting the word "official" before the word "ballot" and prescribing the manner of presenting such question on the ballot, the "ballot" referred to in the amendment is the official ballot, and boroughs are exempted from its provisions. Fletcher v. Collingswood (N. J.) 59 Atl. 90, 91.

Laws 1905, c. 267, providing for and authorizing under certain conditions and restrictions the use of voting machines at elections, does not contravene the provision of the Constitution that all elections shall be by ballot. If by the use of the machine the main purpose of the Constitution can be effectuated, if the elector may cast his ballot in secret with the assurance that it will be counted as cast, there can be no sound reason why it should be dismissed as an innovation upon the letter of the law. It is of no material consequence that each elector is not supplied with a separate ballot, so long as he may register his choice secretly upon an official record in the charge of and under the control of public officers, whose sworn duty it is to observe the requirements of the law respecting the conduct of the election, which includes the preservation and report of the result of the ballot. Elwell v. Comstock, 109 N. W. 693, 700, 99 Minn. 261, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 621, 9 Ann. Cas. 270.

Lexicographers seem not agreed upon the derivation of the word "ballot." It has been said that it was adopted from the French language, without change of meaning; that it comes from the Greek word meaning to throw. In common speech, the word "ballot," is used to mean the ball or ticket used in voting; the act of voting; the result of voting. It seems clear, however, that from the earliest times voting by ballot has been a term used to contradistinguish open, viva voce, or public voting and secret voting. Const. art. 7, § 2, requiring all votes, except for township officers, to be given by ballot, merely declares the policy of the state to assure to the elector a secret, as distinguished from an open vote, and does not permanently establish a particular mode of voting, and is not infringed by Pub. Acts 1903, p. 383, No. 234, amending Comp. Laws 1897, §§ 3750-3758, authorizing the use of voting machines, and requiring all voting by machine to be by a secret vote. City of Detroit v. Board of Inspectors of Election for Fourth Election District of Second Ward of City of Detroit, 102 N. W. 1029, 1031, 139 Mich. 548, 69 L. R. A. 184, 111 Am. St. Rep. 430, 5 Ann. Cas. 861 (quoting definition in State v. Shaw, 9 S. C. 94, 138; 2 Cyc. p. 245; Bouv. Law Dict. [Rawle's Rev.] tit. Ballots).

The word "ballot" indicates a small ball which as is commonly known is used in social clubs and other societies to determine whether a candidate for membership will be admitted; the names of the candidates being announced before the balloting, and one or more black balls generally defeating elections. Wirth v. Fehlberg, 76 Atl. 438, 440, 30 R. I. 536.

"The term 'ballot' primarily signified a little ball. As used in the statutes providing for the election of public officers, or officers of a corporation, when required to be elected by ballot, it means a paper so prepared by printing or writing thereon as to show the voter's choice." In re P. B. Mathiason

Mfg. Co., 99 S. W. 502, 504, 122 Mo. App. 437 (quoting and adopting definition in State ex rel. Runge v. Anderson, 76 N. W. 482, 100 Wis. loc. cit. 530, 42 L. R. A. 239; State v. Timothy, 49 S. W. 499, 147 Mo. loc. cit. 535).

A "ballot" originally consisted in a little ball, bean, or grain of corn, a coin or any other small article which could be concealed in the hand so that others might not know how the voter cast his ballot. Later, a slip or piece of paper was substituted for the ballot, on which were printed, or written, the names of the candidates to be voted for, and out of this latter method grew our present elaborate Australian system. It cannot be said that the word "ballot" is restricted in meaning to a slip, or sheet of paper, or parchment. Hence, Laws 1903, p. 178, provided for the use of voting machines which shall enable each voter to vote a straight party ticket, or to vote a ticket selected in part from the nominees, from any or all parties, as he may desire, must be sustained as to its constitutionality. The provisions of Gross' St. 1871-72, c. 37, entitled "Elections," providing for ballot boxes, for voting by ballot printed or written on plain paper, etc., do not constitute a contemporaneous construction by the Legislature of the word "ballot" in Const. 1870, art. 7, § 2, declaring that all votes shall be by "ballot," and do not limit the meaning of the word to a written or printed ballot. Lynch v. Malley, 74 N. E. 723, 724, 215 Ill. 574, 2 Ann. Cas. 837.

Vote distinguished

"Ballot" and "vote," though sometimes used synonymously, are not synonymous, and a "ballot" is the instrument by which a voter expresses his choice between candidates, or in respect to propositions; while his "vote" is the choice or election as expressed by his ballot. Clary v. Hurst, 138 S. W. 566, 569, 104 Tex. 423 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, pp. 7358, 7359).

The term "votes," in Const. art. 17, § 6, requiring a majority of the votes at a special election for the relocation of a county seat, is not the equivalent of "ballots," and distinguished, illegal, and blank ballots will not be considered in making up the aggregate number on which such majority is to be computed. Town of Eufaula v. Gibson, 98 Pac. 577, 578, 22 Okl. 507.

A "vote" is the registration, in accordance with law, of the preference or choice of an elector on a given subject. A voter, as distinguished from an elector, is an elector who actually votes. A ballot, as distinguished from a vote, is the sheet of paper on which the voter expresses his choice of candidate, or for or against a proposition, or both. State v. Blaisdell, 119 N. W. 360, 363, 18 N. D. 31.

"While the term 'ballot' and 'vote' are sometimes confused, and while they may sometimes be used synonymously, the 'ballot' is in fact the instrument by which the voter expresses his choice between two candidates or two propositions, and his 'vote' is his choice or election between the two, as expressed by his 'ballot,' and when his 'ballot' makes no choice between any two candidates, or on any question, then he casts no 'vote' for either of these candidates or on the question. 'Those ballots' are not 'votes.' " "The official 'ballot,' so called, is not complete when furnished to the elector as he enters the booth to prepare his 'ballot.' It is a mere form for a 'ballot.' When marked and prepared by a voter so as to show his choice at the election, then, and not until then, does it become his constitutional 'ballot.'" State v. Custer, 66 Atl. 306, 308, 28 R. I. 222 (quoting and adopting definition in Davis v. Brown, 34 S. E. 839, 841, 46 W. Va. 716, 723; State ex rel. Runge v. Anderson, 76 N. W. 482, 484, 100 Wis. 523, 530, 42 L. R. A. 239).

Under St. 1912, c. 559, pt. 3, § 1, revising the charter of the city of Salem, which provided that the act should be submitted to the registered voters at the state election in 1912, for a vote primarily on the question whether the present charter should be repealed, and secondarily on the question whether, if it was repealed, the new charter should be plan 1 or plan 2, and that if, on a "majority of the ballots cast," the votes should be for a repeal, the plan receiving the largest number of votes cast should be adopted as the city charter, the ballot on which the questions were printed contained, besides the names of a large number of candidates for state and national offices, questions upon the adoption of constitutional amendments, and the total number of ballots cast was 6,906, of which, on the question of repealing the charter 1,676 were blank, 2,240 were against repeal, and 3,050 were for repeal. Held that, in view of the legislative policy to make an acceptance of a city charter turn upon the affirmative votes of a majority of those voting on the question, the word "ballots" was synonymous with "votes," and that only the ballots carrying votes on the question of repeal were to be counted, and hence that, as there was a "majority of the ballots cast" in favor of repeal, the old charter was repealed, and the plan receiving the larger number of votes was adopted as the new charter. Cashman v. Entwistle, 100 N. E. 58, 59, 213 Mass. 153; State v. Miller (Ohio) 99 N. E. 1078, 1081.

BALLOT BOX

A "ballot box" is a receptacle provided by the officers of an election for receiving the ballots, which box must be kept secured until the election is finished. Clary v. Hurst, 138 S. W. 566, 570, 104 Tex. 423 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 681).

BALSAMS ADVANCED IN VALUE OR CONDITION

Balsam in gelatin capsules cannot be considered simply as balsam and classified as "balsams * * * advanced in value or condition," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 20, 30 Stat. 152, because nothing whatever has been done to the balsam itself. United States v. Lehn & Fink, 172 Fed. 171, 172.

BAMBOO

Bamboo dyers' sticks, rounded at the ends and smoothed off at the joints, are covered by the enumeration of bamboo in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 700, 30 Stat. 202, rather than by the provision for wood, unmanufactured, in section 1, Schedule D, par. 193, 30 Stat. 167. BANISHMENT

"In Black's Law Dictionary 'banishment' is defined as a punishment inflicted upon criminals by compelling them to quit a city, place, or country for a specified period of time, or for life. It is inflicted principally on political offenders; 'transportation' being the word used to express a similar punishment of ordinary criminals." United States v. Ju Toy, 25 Sup. Ct. 644, 649, 198 U. S. 253, 49 L. Ed. 1040.

BANK

See Coal Bank.

The word "bank" is defined in standard dictionaries as "the face of a coal vein in process of being mined"; "the surface immediately about the mouth of a mine"; also, "to form or lie in banks." Chapman v. Mill Creek Coal & Coke Co., 46 S. E. 262, 263, 54 W. Va. 193.

"The receiving of deposits to be kept and returned on demand is the generally acknowledged feature of every bank, whether incorporated or unincorporated, whether its profits are obtained and business success accomplished." A bank cannot, by naming itself as a brokerage concern, conduct the banking business and receive deposits, the same as a bank, without being in fact subject to the statute regulating banking. Individuals are not prohibited from engaging in, but are permitted to conduct, banking business. State v. Leland, 98 N. W. 92, 93, 91 Minn. 321.

Sess. Laws 1907, p. 519, c. 225, § 6, defining the term "bank," as used in that act, to mean every corporation domestic or foreign, except national banks and foreign banks not authorized to receive deposits, transacting a banking business in the state, makes it apparent, by including foreign banks transacting business in the state in the definition of the term "bank," that the term "branch bank" defined in the same section means a branch established in a town or city other than that in which the principal office is located, and refers to branches of domestic banking corporations only, and not to branches of foreign banking corporations. State ex rel. Flumerfelt v. Engle, 96 Pac. 1045, 1046, 60 Wash. 207.

BANK (Of Stream)

"The 'banks of a river' or stream are understood to be that which contains it in its ordinary state of high water." Minor's Heirs v. City of New Orleans, 38 South. 999, 1003, 115 La. 301; Ensley Development Co. v. Powell, 40 South. 137, 139, 147 Ala. 300.

The bank of a river is that line or ridge of earth which contains the river, holding the natural direction of its course, and if at any time, either from rains or other cause, the river has overflowed for a time that line, it does not by such overflow change its banks within the rule fixing high-water mark as a boundary between a riparian owner and the public. Sun Dial Ranch v. May Land Co., 119 Pac. 758, 762, 61 Or. 205.

"A river is a running stream of water, pent in on either side by banks, shores, or walls." "A fresh water river, like a tidal river, is composed of the alveus, or bed, and the water; but it has banks, instead of shores. The banks are the elevations of land which confine the waters in their natural channel, when they rise the highest and do not overflow the banks; and in that condition of the water the banks, and the soil which is permanently submerged, form the bed of the river." State v. Faudre, 46 S. E. 269, 270, 54 W. Va. 122, 63 L. R. A. 877, 102 Am. St. Rep. 927, 1 Ann. Cas. 104 (quoting Gould, Waters).

The "bank" is "any steep acclivity as one rising from a river, a lake, or the sea" (quoting Cent. Dict.). The shore of a stream is in law a space between ordinary or high-water mark and low-water mark, etc. City of Peoria v. Central Nat. Bank, 79 N. E. 296, 299, 224 Ill. 43, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 687.

Where deeds conveying land abutting on a highway along the high-water line, described the boundary as the "sea or highway," "beach and highway," "bank and highway," the grantee might adopt the boundary most favorable to him. The words "beach" and "bank" might be construed to mean the beach between high and low-water mark. Merwin v. Backer, 68 Atl. 373, 376, 80 Conn. 338.

BANK ACCOUNT

Where a bank, to which the bankrupt was largely indebted on the day the bankrupt became insolvent, closed its account and credited the balance, including a deposit just made, on the bankrupt's indebtedness to it, such deposit amounted to a payment pro tanto of the loan, and not a deposit to the bankrupt's account, since a bank account contemplates the right of the depositor to draw against it. Ernst v. Mechanics' & Metals' Nat. Bank of New York, 200 Fed. 295, 298; Id., 201 Fed. 664, 120 C. C. A. 92.

A bank check is a contract in writing, by the execution and delivery of which the drawer contracts with the payee that the bank will, on presentation, pay to him or his order the amount designated, and is not a mere request upon a third person to pay, and in a suit by the payee thereon it is not necessary to allege the consideration for which the check was given or set forth any further showing than that plaintiff was named as payee, and that the check had been presented for payment, and payment refused. Byrd Printing Co. v. Whitaker Paper Co., 70 S. E. 798, 800, 185 Ga. 865, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 182.

BANK DEPOSIT

In the first clause of his will, a testator provided for the payment of his debts, funeral expenses, and expenses of settling his estate, and for the erection of suitable grave-stones. In the second to the tenth clauses, inclusive, he bequeathed certain legacies. The eleventh clause provided for the specific gift of capital stock of a bank. The twelfth provided that, should there remain in the hands of his executor any money from the proceeds of his bank deposits after payment of all sums above required to be paid, he should pay over and divide it in equal shares to certain children. The thirteenth gave the remainder of his estate, both real and personal, to children of a brother in equal shares. Held, that he intended that the bank deposits should be the primary fund from which all debts, legacies, funeral charges, and expenses of settling his estate should be paid, and that cash found in his residence after his death, collections made thereafter, and dividends on the bank stock referred to, were not included in the term "bank deposits," but passed under the thirteenth clause of the will, as did also the household furniture, and that the bequest contained in the twelfth clause was of so much of the bank deposits as, thus construed, should remain after such payments were made. In re Appleby (R. I.) 73 Atl. 30.

Under an agreement by a seller to extend credit to a buyer if he would give a bankable note as security, a bankable note is one receivable as cash by a bank, and a note that banks will not buy is not bankable, regardless of the bank's reasons for refusing to buy, or the high character of the paper. Pasha v. Bohart, 122 Pac. 284, 288, 45 Mont. 76, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1250.

BANKER

See Individual Banker; Private Banker.

A "banker" is one who traffics in money, receives and remits money, negotiates bills of exchange, receives money in trust, to be drawn again, or its equivalent, as the owner has occasion to use it. State v. Cramer, 119 Pac. 30, 36, 20 Idaho, 639.

A "banker" is one who traffics in money, receives and remits money, negotiates bills of exchange, receives money in trust, to be drawn again, or its equivalent as the owner has occasion to use it; and a man holding himself out as a "banker" gives public proclamation that he has money and property readily convertible into money in his possession and subject to his control, and for that reason he may be safely trusted. Under Code 1906, § 1160, imposing punishment on the president, manager, cashier, teller, or other employé or agent of a bank receiving a deposit, knowing or having good reason to believe the establishment to be in an insolvent condition, without informing the depositor of the condition, there may be a conviction of a director; the bank having been kept open by the director with knowledge of its status, though he did not actually receive the deposit. State v. Mitchell, 51 South. 4, 7, 96 Miss. 259, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1072, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 309 (quoting and adopting definition in Baker v. State, 12 N. W. 16, 54 Wis. 376).

War Revenue Act June 13, 1898, c. 448, § 2, 30 Stat. 448, provided that bankers using a capital not exceeding $25,000 should pay a tax of $50 and $2 additional for every $1,000 in excess of $25,000, and that, in estimating, the capital surplus should be included. The section also declares that every person, firm, etc., having a place where credits are opened by the deposit or collection of money or currency, subject to be paid or remitted on draft, check, or order, or where money is advanced or loaned on stocks, bonds, bullion, bills of exchange, or promissory notes, or where stocks, bonds, bullion, bills of exchange, or promissory notes are received for discount or sale, shall be a "banker" within the act. Held, that it was only the capital surplus used in the banking business that was subject to tax, and hence the undivided profits of a trust company, invested in bonds and stocks, were not subject to taxation, though the corporation was engaged in some of the activities of a bank, and the profits so invested were available to make good losses in the corporation's enterprises and to increase its credit. Central Trust Co. of New York v. Treat, 171 Fed. 301, 302; Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Same, 171 Fed. 302.

BANKER'S CHECK

A "banker's check," as popularly understood, is a check, draft, or other order for payment of money, drawn by an authorized officer of a bank upon either his own bank or some other bank in which funds of his bank are deposited. Holland v. Mutual Fertilizer Co., 70 S. E. 151, 152, 8 Ga. App. 714.

BANKING

"Banking" in its most enlarged sense includes the business of receiving deposits, paying checks, lending money, dealing in bills of exchange, etc., besides that of issuing paper money. Weed v. Bergh, 124 N. W. 664, 668, 141 Wis. 569, 25 L. R. A. 1217 (citing Boone, Bank. § 3).

The "banking business," as defined by laws and customs, consists, among other things, in making loans of money on collateral security. Earle v. American Sugar Refining Co., 71 Atl. 391, 395, 74 N. J. Eq. 751.

The business of banking is defined to consist in discounting and negotiating promissory notes, drafts, bills of exchange, and other evidences of debt, receiving deposits, buying and selling exchange, coin, or bullion, lending money on personal security, and obtaining, issuing, and circulating notes; and to these specified powers and those necessary to the exercise of the powers expressed, the bank must confine its operations, and acts of officers not embraced in the terms of the law are not binding upon the corporation. Commercial Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 80 S. W. 601, 603, 97 Tex. 536, 104 Am. St. Rep. 879.

Any person engaged in the business carried on by banks of deposit or of discount or of circulation is doing a banking business, although but one of these functions is exercised. Under Laws 1909, c. 285, § 2024-781, declaring the receiving of money on deposit as a regular business by a person or corporation to be a banking business, whether the deposit is made subject to check or is evidenced by a certificate of deposit, passbook, note, receipt, or other writing, a department store which received deposits up to a certain amount, issued passbooks, paid interest on the amounts deposited, and paid the principal, with interest thereon, on demand, in money or goods at the election of the depositor, was engaged in the banking business, and subject to the laws regulating it. MacLaren v. State, 124 N. W. 667, 668, 141 Wis. 577, 135 Am. St. Rep. 55, 18 Ann. Cas. 826.

A national bank is acting within the scope of its power, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5133, to exercise "all such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry on banking," where it accepts an assignment of a judgment for collection, and agrees to hold the proceeds subject to the order of the assignor; and, if its attorney, after collecting the money, improperly pays it over to a corporation which claimed that the cause of action had been transferred to it prior to the rendition of the judgment, the bank may sue in its own name conformably to the local law, to recover from such attorney the proceeds of the judgment. Miller v. King, 32 Sup. Ct. 243, 223 U. S. 505, 56 L. Ed. 528.

"The 'business of banking,' as defined by law and custom, consists of the issuing of notes payable on demand, intended to circulate as money where the banks are banks of issue, in receiving deposits payable on demand, in discounting commercial paper, making loans of money on collateral security, buying and selling bills of exchange, negotiating loans, and dealing in negotiable securities issued by the government, state and national, and municipal and other corporations." A vendor of a bank who agrees to quit the banking business and not to start another bank in the same town violates the agreement and engages in the business of banking where he subscribed to stock in a new bank started in the same town and actually participates as assistant cashier in the business of such bank. Merica v. Burget, 75 N. E. 1083, 1086, 36 Ind. App. 453 (quoting and adopting definition First Nat. Bank of Richmond v. Turner, 57 N. E. 110, 112, 154 Ind. 456, 460).

BANKING COMPANY

The term "banking company," as used in the banking law denouncing the receipt of deposits after insolvency, refers to the individual partners composing a firm doing a banking business. An indictment for violating the statute must allege the names of the persons composing the partnership; the condition of insolvency referred to in the statute as applied to a partnership bank being referable to the insolvency of the individual partners, which must be alleged and proved. State v. Krasner, 83 N. E. 498, 499, 170 Ind. 43.

BANKING GAME

Other banking game, see Other.

A "banking game" of chance is one in which the banker or exhibitor is interested in the result of the play. Tully v. State, 114 S. W. 920, 921, 88 Ark. 411.

A faro game is a banking game. State v. Behan, 37 South. 714, 716, 113 La. 754.

Under the express terms of the statute, "monte" being a banking game and playing at it a crime, an instruction that it is as a matter of law a banking game is not error. Pruitt v. State, 109 S. W. 171, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 316; Chancellor v. State, 107 S. W. 823, 824, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 464; Arredondo v. State, 124 S. W. 930, 931, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 145.

A slot machine wherein a fund is placed and constantly kept against which players play and to which their losses are added and from which their earnings are taken, the machine being what is known as a percentage game, and the chances being unequal in favor of the machine, is a "banking game" of chance within Laws 1907, c. 64, § 1. Territory v. Jones, 99 Pac. 338, 341, 14 N. M. 579, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 239, 20 Ann. Cas. 128.

A slot machine which pays money to a player who wins out of all the deposits of the previous players, and which plays against any and all players who choose, and which has the greater number of chances of winning, is essentially a "banking game" within a statute making it an offense to keep for exhibit a gaming table commonly called A B C or E O tables, faro bank, or keno table, or table of like kinds under any denomination. State v. Gaughan, 48 S. E. 210, 211, 55 W. Va. 692.

A banking game is a game of one against the many. A game of dice, in which one persons sits behind the table and takes all the bets of the persons playing on the outside, the dice being thrown by the parties alternately, is a "banking game," punishable under Pen. Code 1895, art. 388, providing that any person who shall bet at any gaming table or bank shall be punished. Faucett v. State, 79 S. W. 548, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 113.

Where the players in a game of craps or other gambling game bet against each other and settle with each other, the game is not a banking game, but, where a person posing as the proprietor or responsible party stands ready, by himself or through another, to take all bets, and, receiving all that is lost by the other players, pays all that is won by them, or all that is won save a percentage which he retains, the game is a banking game. Whether, however, the conditions first mentioned or those last mentioned exist in a particular case is a question of fact, which, in a criminal prosecution for keeping a banking game, this court has no power to review. State v. Rabb, 57 South. 1008, 1010, 130 La. 370.

Banker or exhibitor

Kirby's Dig. § 1732, making it an offense to set up, keep, or exhibit any gaming table or gambling device, etc., applies only to banking games, and that the owner of a table or other device plays in a game with others and furnishes the chips does not make him a "banker or exhibitor" within the statute. Tully v. State, 114 S. W. 920, 921, 88 Ark. 411.

BANKING INSTITUTION

The words "banking institution," as used in a statute declaring guilty of larceny every officers of any "banking institution" who shall receive deposits after he has knowledge that the bank is insolvent, have been construed to mean an incorporated bank. In re Wisner, 92 Pac. 958, 959, 36 Mont. 298.

Laws 1903, c. 79, § 2, relating to bank inspection, provides that, where reference is made to banks, bankers, or banking in the act, the same shall be construed as applying to any corporation, association, firm, or individual engaged in such business; and section 26 declares that every officer, agent, or clerk of any banking institution within the title, who subscribes or makes any false statement or enters or subscribes or exhibits any false paper, etc., shall be subject to imprisonment, etc. Held that the expression any "banking institution" as employed in section 26 embraced a private bank or banker. State v. Struble, 104 N. W. 465, 466, 19 S. D. 646.

BANKRUPT

A "bankrupt" is one who, by his acts and conduct, affords evidence of his inability to pay, or his intention to avoid payment of, his debts; and within Bankr. Act (Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 546) § 3, defining acts of bankruptcy, a person guilty of any of such acts is a bankrupt. Continental Building & Loan Ass'n v. Superior Court of State of California in and for City and County of San Francisco, Department No. 1, 126 Pac. 476, 477, 163 Cal. 579.

The term "bankrupt," defined by Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 544, includes a person against whom an involuntary petition or an application to set a composition aside or to revoke a discharge has been filed, or who has filed a voluntary petition or has become a bankrupt, and does not include officers of a corporation declared a bankrupt. United States v. Lake, 129 Fed. 499, 502.

Bankrupt Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 8, 30 Stat. 549, provides that insanity of a bankrupt shall not abate the proceedings; and section 1 (30 Stat. 544) declares that the word "bankrupt" shall include a person against whom an involuntary petition has been filed. Held that, if an alleged bankrupt committed an act of bankruptcy while sane, and by reason of such act the bankruptcy court obtained jurisdiction, it could continue the proceedings notwithstanding the bankrupt's subsequent insanity, but that if the bankrupt was insane when the alleged acts of bankruptcy were committed an adjudication of bankruptcy against him was improper. In re Kehler, 159 Fed. 55, 58, 86 C. C. A. 245.

An alleged bankrupt for whose property a receiver has been appointed in involuntary proceedings pending a hearing on the petition is a "bankrupt" whose estate is in process of administration under this act," within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 21a, 30 Stat. 552. In re Fletcher, 151 Fed. 81, 82.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, subd. 4, 30 Stat. 544, defines a "bankrupt" as a person against whom an involuntary petition has been filed, and subdivision 10 defines the terms "date of bankruptcy," "time of bankruptcy," or "commencement of proceedings," or "bankruptcy," with reference to time, to mean the date when the petition is filed. Section 8 declares that the death of a bankrupt shall not abate the proceedings. Held, that the death of a bankrupt after the filing of an involuntary petition against him, though prior to service, does not abate the proceedings. Shute v. Patterson, 147 Fed. 509, 510, 78 C. C. A. 75 (citing In re Walker, 3 Morrell, Bankr. Cas. 69; In re Easy, 4 Morrell, Bankr. Cas. 281; In re Hicks, 107 Fed. 910; Scheuer v. Smith & Montgomery Book & Stationery Co., 112 Fed. 407, 50 C. C. A. 312).

"A 'proceeding in bankruptcy' is a proceeding in equity, and the rules and practice in equity prevail in its conduct as far as they are consonant with the speedy administration of justice which it prescribes." In re Broadway Savings Trust Co., 152 Fed. 152, 153, 81 C. C. A. 58 (citing Lockman v. Lang, 132 Fed. 1, 6, 65 C. C. A. 621, 626; Files v. Brown, 124 Fed. 183, 142, 59 C. C. A. 403, 412; Nelson v. Eaton, 66 Fed. 376, 378, 13 C. C. A. 523, 525; Davis v. Davis, 62 Miss. 818; Fisher v. Simon, 67 Fed. 387, 14 C. C. A. 443; French v. Hay, 89 U. S. [22 Wall.] 238, 246, 22 L. Ed. 799; Blythe v. Hinckley, 84 Fed. 228, 242).

"A 'bankruptcy proceeding' cannot be said to be an ordinary civil suit. It is sui generis, and it is far-reaching and drastic in its effects. Whether accompanied by actual seizure of the bankrupt's property or not, it places an embargo on his right to dispose of his property and of his business generally." An action for malicious prosecution will lie for the institution and prosecution of a proceeding in bankruptcy without probable cause and with a malicious intent, although not accompanied by any actual seizure of the alleged bankrupt's property. Wilkinson v. Goodfellow-Brooks Shoe Co., 141 Fed. 218, 219, 220.

A "proceeding in bankruptcy," within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 25, 30 Stat. 544, providing for appeals in bankruptcy proceedings from courts of bankruptcy to the Circuit Courts of Appeals to review judgments allowing or rejecting a debt or claim of $500 or more, is instituted by presenting to the trustee in bankruptcy a claim upon notes of the bankrupt in excess of that amount, joined with the statement that the claimant had security upon the estate which it was his purpose to maintain, and upon which he was entitled to priority in the distribution of the assets, although the trustee makes no objection to the amount found due upon the notes and only seeks by his appeal to contest further the right to security. Coder v. Arts, 29 Sup. Ct. 436, 442, 213 U. S. 223, 53 L. Ed. 772, 16 Ann. Cas. 1008.

A decision of a controversy in bankruptcy involving the validity of a claim to a lien on the bankrupt's property is a proceeding in bankruptcy within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 24b, 30 Stat. 553, and reviewable on petition to revise. In re Lee, 182 Fed. 579, 581, 105 C. C. A. 117.

A suit in equity, commenced by a trustee in bankruptcy in a District Court against an adverse claimant of property to litigate the title thereto under authority of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, § 67c, c. 541, 30 Stat. 564, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, 32 Stat. 800, is not a proceeding in bankruptcy, but an independent suit, and a decree or order therein is not subject to revision by the Circuit Court of Appeals under section 24b of the act (30 Stat. 553), although the District Court is also the court of bankruptcy administering the estate, and an injunction is also asked to restrain the defendant from prosecuting an action of replevin for the property in a state court. Doroshov v. Ott, 134 Fed. 740, 743, 67 C. C. A. 644.

False testimony given by a bankrupt on his examination in respect to his ownership of, or interest in, property conveyed to his wife some years before the bankruptcy proceedings constitutes the making of a false oath in relation to a "proceeding in bankruptcy," within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 29b, 30 Stat. 554, subjecting him to punishment if the testimony was knowingly and fraudulently false. In re Conroy, 134 Fed. 764, 765.

An action by a trustee to recover property from a third party, alleged to have been transferred by the bankrupt prior to the bankruptcy as a preference, is not a "proceeding in bankruptcy," within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 23a, 30 Stat. 552. In re Walsh Bros., 163 Fed. 352, 353.

A petition by a trustee in bankruptcy to a court of bankruptcy for a summary order on a receiver of a state court to deliver property to the petitioner is a proceeding in bankruptcy, and the order made thereon is reviewable by the Circuit Court of Appeals in matter of law on a petition to revise under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 24b, 30 Stat. 553. In re Hecox, 164 Fed. 823-825, 90 C. C. A. 627.

When an adverse claimant voluntarily comes into a court of bankruptcy and claims property in the possession of the trustee, wherever situated, or asserts a lien thereon and seeks to have it established, enforced, or protected, the proceeding becomes a "proceeding in bankruptcy" in the course of collecting the estate, reducing the same to money, and distributing the same, and a "controversy" in relation to the estate within the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court, under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 2, subd. 7, 30 Stat. 546, giving such court jurisdiction of proceedings to cause the estates of bankrupts to be collected, reduced to money, and distributed, and to determine controversies in relation thereto, except as otherwise provided. In re MacDougall, 175 Fed. 400, 405.

A "proceeding in bankruptcy" is not a criminal case, although it may disclose acts of criminality. It is simply the procedure for the collection and distribution among creditors of the bankrupt's estate so that an admission by a bankrupt, though constituting a confession of criminality, is nevertheless competent in such proceedings to show the liability of his estate for moneys in his hands because of the disposition he has made of them. Smith v. Township of Au Gres, 150 Fed. 257, 264, 80 C. C. A. 145, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 876.

The distinction between "proceedings in bankruptcy," reviewable by petition for review, as authorized by Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 24b, 30 Stat. 553, and "controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings" reviewable by appeal, as authorized by section 24a, is that the former refers to and includes administrative orders and decrees in the ordinary course of the administration of a bankrupt's estate between the filing of the petition and the final settlement thereof, while the latter refers to and includes those independent or plenary suits which concern the bankrupt's estate and arise by intervention or otherwise between the trustees representing the estate and claimants representing some right or interest adverse to the bankrupt or his general creditors; the remedies afforded by the two subsections being mutually exclusive. Where a bankrupt's trustee instituted proceedings to set aside certain conveyances of real estate alleged to have been made to defraud the bankrupt's creditors, and also to vacate the lien of a mortgage thereon as against the mortgagee, who was no party to the bankruptcy proceedings and was not a creditor of the estate, but a stranger thereto, asserting rights paramount to and independent of those of the estate, the controversy, so far as it related to such lien, was not a "proceeding in bankruptcy," reviewable by petition for review, as authorized by Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c.

541, § 24b, 30 Stat. 553, but was instead a "controversy arising in bankruptcy proceedings," reviewable only as provided by section 24a. Barnes v. Pampel, 192 Fed. 525, 527, 113 C. C. A. 81.

Proceedings by a court of bankruptcy upon a petition filed by a trustee for an order to sell real estate and also to bring in third persons asserting liens thereon for the purpose of determining their rights as incidental to such sale are "proceedings in bankruptcy" and are reviewable by the Circuit Court of Appeals on petition for revision under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 24b, 30 Stat. 552. In re McMahon, 147 Fed. 684, 689, 77 C. C. A. 668.

The term "proceedings in bankruptcy," as used in a bankruptcy act, broadly speaking, covers questions between the alleged bankrupt and his creditors as such, commencing with a petition for adjudication, ending with the discharge and including matters of administration generally, such as appointments of receivers and trustees, sales, exemptions, allowances, and the like, to be disposed of summarily, all of which naturally occur in the settlement of the estate. Judgments or orders of a district or circuit court entered in controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings, as distinguished from those entered in bankruptcy proceedings proper, are reviewable by the Circuit Courts of Appeals only by appeal or writ of error under their general appellate jurisdiction as provided in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 54, § 25a, 30 Stat. 553. In re Mueller, 135 Fed. 711, 713, 68 C. C. A. 349 (quoting and adopting In re Friend, 134 Fed. 778, 67 C. C. A. 500).

An order establishing as a lien against the bankrupt estate a claim, the validity of which as a general claim the trustee does not contest, is not reviewable by a circuit court of appeals, in the exercise of its power under the bankrupt act of July 1, 1898, 30 Stat. at L. 553, chap. 541, § 24b, to superintend and revise in matter of law the proceedings of inferior courts of bankruptcy, since this revisory proceeding is not intended as a substitute for the appeal which would lie under § 25a, giving appellate jurisdiction to the circuit courts of appeals in bankruptcy proceedings. In re Loving, 32 Sup. Ct. 446, 448, 224 U. S. 183, 56 L. Ed. 725.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 24a, 30 Stat. 553, confers on the appellate federal courts jurisdiction of "controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings," and section 24b declares that the Circuit Courts of Appeal shall have jurisdiction in equity to superintend and revise in matter of law the "proceedings of the several inferior courts of bankruptcy" within their jurisdiction. Held, that "controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings" appealable under section 24a embrace questions between the trustee representing the bankrupt and his creditors, on the one side, and adverse claimants, on the other, not directly affecting the administrative orders and judgments ordinarily known as "proceedings in bankruptcy," which are confined to questions arising between the bankrupt and his creditors and are the very subject of such administrative orders and judgments, from the petition for adjudication to the discharge, including intermediate administrative steps, and such controversies as arise between the parties to the bankruptcy proceedings as are involved in the allowing of claims and fixing their priorities, sales, allowances, and other matters which are disposed of summarily, and hence the term "controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings" does not include an order dismissing a petition for the revocation of the bankrupt's discharge. Thompson v. Maury, 174 Fed. 611, 614, 98 C. C. A. 457.

"Proceedings in bankruptcy" reviewable on petition, as authorized by Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 24, 30 Stat. 553, include all questions arising in the administration of the bankrupt's estate, such as the appointment of receivers and trustees, orders requiring the bankrupt to surrender property of the estate, orders requiring the bankrupt's voluntary assignee to surrender property of the estate, orders giving priority to the claims of a creditor, and directing a set-off of mutual debts, and orders confirming compositions. Morehouse v. Pacific Hardware & Steel Co., 177 Fed. 337, 339, 100 C. C. A. 647.

Under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 544, providing that the United States Circuit Court shall have jurisdiction of all controversies at law and in equity as distinguished from "proceedings in bankruptcy," between trustees as such, and adverse claimants, concerning the property acquired or claimed by the trustees, etc., the term "proceedings in bankruptcy" embraces controversy arising in bankruptcy proceedings as well as bankruptcy proceedings proper and sets them both over against plenary suits between trustees and adverse claimants touching rights or property not in the custody of the court. Thomas v. Woods, 173 Fed. 585, 588, 97 C. C. A. 535, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1180, 19 Ann. Cas. 1080.

The hearing in a proceeding in the District Court exercising jurisdiction as a bankrupt court between the trustee in bankruptcy and a prior assignee to determine the right to the property of the estate in the custody of the court or its proceeds was a hearing under a "proceeding in bankruptcy" within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 24b, 30 Stat. 553, so that any order made therein was reviewable only on a petition to revise and not by appeal. O'Dell v. Boyden, 150 Fed. 781, 787, 80 C. C. A. 897, 10 Ann. Cas. 239.

As proceeding in rem

While an adjudication of bankruptcy in an involuntary proceeding is a judgment in rem in the sense that it determines the status of the bankrupt, the ordinary proceedings taken in a bankruptcy proceeding are not proceedings in rem and do not bind persons who are not parties thereto. *Whitney v. BANQUETTE

To "banquette a street" can have no other meaning than to construct along the side of it such a sidewalk as is required by the city ordinances; that is, a sidewalk up to grade. Redersheimer v. Bruning, 36 South. 990, 991, 113 La. 343.

San Jose city ordinance July 1, 1908, is entitled "An ordinance establishing the limits within which retail and wholesale licenses and transfers thereof will be granted," and provides that no license for any bar, barroom or saloon, or other public drinking place should be granted, etc. Held, that the word "bar" was used, according to its commonly accepted definition, to mean a room or place where intoxicating liquors were sold, and that the ordinance was therefore not objectionable because the body thereof did not in terms mention intoxicating liquors. Richter v. Lightston, 118 Pac. 790, 791, 161 Cal. 200, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1028.

BAR IRON

"Bar iron" means the finished product of pig iron. Imported muck bars, produced by converting pig iron into wrought iron in the puddling furnace, and then rolling the wrought iron through a set of rolls, from which it comes in the form known as "muck bars," are within the meaning of "bar iron," as used in Tariff Act, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 123, 30 Stat. 159. Moorhead Bro. & Co. v. United States, 127 Fed. 779, 780.

The words "bar iron," as used in an order for "1,000 net pounds of bar iron," were shown by the evidence to refer to a certain base size; bar iron being made in various sizes, and there being a difference in the cost of making iron above the base size. Moran Bolt & Nut Mfg. Co. v. St. Louis Car Co., 109 S. W. 47, 53, 210 Mo. 715.

BARROOM

its within which retail and wholesale licenses and transfers thereof will be granted," and provides that no license for any bar, barroom or saloon, or other public drinking place should be granted, etc. Held, that the word "barroom" was used, according to its commonly accepted definition, to mean a room or place where intoxicating liquors were sold, and that the ordinance was therefore not objectionable because the body thereof did not in terms mention intoxicating liquors. Richter v. Lightston, 118 Pac. 790, 791, 161 Cal. 260, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1028.

An incorporated social club maintained in the club quarters containing parlors, bedrooms, dining rooms, etc., a room where liquors were furnished to members and non-resident guests. Slips were signed by the member showing the character of the liquors furnished and the cost thereof, and these slips were turned in by the employé in charge of the room to the club's bookkeeper, and were charged to the accounts of the member, and were paid by him. The liquors were purchased by the club at wholesale, and were furnished to the members and nonresident guests at the prices usually charged by retail dealers. Held, that the transaction was a sale within an ordinance prohibiting any person from selling or disposing of liquors without obtaining a license, and authorizing a person desiring to keep a barroom to apply for a license, etc.; a "barroom" being a room in which liquors are kept with the intention to furnish them to be drunk on the premises. City of Spokane v. Baughman, 103 Pac. 14, 17, 54 Wash. 315.

The words "barrooms and other places" in Ky. St. 1903, § 2565, providing that all "barrooms and other places" where intoxicating liquors are sold shall be closed on any election day, include any room where intoxicating liquors are sold, and a liquor dealer cannot keep a saloon open if in the same room he runs some other business, and where he runs a drug store or a family grocery he must not keep them in the same room with the saloon if he wishes to keep them open every day. A liquor dealer had a store in which he had drugs, groceries, etc. Back of the room was a place where he kept and sold liquor and hardware. There was a partition a certain distance from the front, and back of this partition was the saloon part of the business. The liquor dealer was guilty of violating the statute if he opened his place of business by opening the front and back doors and the door in the partition on an election day, though there was no proof that he sold or offered to sell any liquor. Mallon v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 98 S. W. 315, 316.

BARGAIN

See Complete Bargain; Grant, Bargain, and Sell.

A "bargain" is an agreement or a stipulation such as an agreement for the sale of property or a contract by which one party binds himself to transfer property for a consideration; and hence an answer setting up that a bargain for the sale of land was not evidenced by any memorandum in writing is equivalent to an allegation that a contract for the sale of land was not evidenced by a memorandum in writing. Koenig v. Dohm, 70 N. E. 1061, 1064, 209 Ill. 468 (citing Webster's Dict.).

To "bargain," as used in written authority to brokers to bargain and sell in the owner's name, implies negotiation over the terms of an agreement. Golden v. Claudel, 118 Pac. 77, 78, 85 Kan. 465.

BARGAIN AND SALE

"A deed of 'bargain and sale' is a real contract whereby a person bargains and sells his land to another for a pecuniary consideration, in consequence of which a use arises to the bargainee, and the statute of uses immediately transfers the legal estate and actual possession to the cestui que use without any entry or other act on his part, a kind of real contract whereby the bargainer, for some pecuniary consideration, contracts to convey the land to the bargainee, and the statute of uses completes the purchase." Lewis v. Yates, 59 S. E. 1073, 1082, 62 W. Va. 575 (quoting and adopting 5 Cyc. p. 616).

The words "bargain and sale" import a sale which vests the property in the buyer. A contract for the sale of hotel furniture by the successors of the buyer holding under a conditional sale, providing that grantors did thereby "grant, bargain, sell, and convey" all their interests in the furniture, imported a sale of the property and not merely the interest of the sellers therein. Bevan v. Muir, 101 Pac. 485, 488, 53 Wash. 54, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 588.

A conveyance of land containing a covenant of general warranty sealed and acknowledged and reciting a valuable consideration may constitute a deed of "bargain and sale," though it does not contain granting words. Such a deed will pass title to the land under the statute of uses (Code 1906, § 3033, Code 1899, c. 71, § 14). The form of deed given in chapter 72 of the above act was not designed to abolish other modes of conveyance but was remedial only, intending to make the word "grant" pass real estate which it could not do before the adoption of the Code of 1899. Such conveyance is not a future one but is an executed transfer of title. According to 2 Blackstone's Comm. 339, a bargain and sale of lands is a species of conveyance, introduced by the statute of uses, and is a kind of real contract whereby the bargainer, for some pecuniary consideration, bargains and sells (that is, contracts to convey) to the bargainee and by such bargain becomes a trustee for, or seised to the use of, the bargainee, and the statute of uses completes the purchase; the bargain vesting the use and the statute vesting the possession. According to 13 Cyc. 524, "any writing that sufficiently identifies the party, describes the land, acknowledges a sale in fee of the vendor's right for a valuable consideration, and is signed and sealed by the grantor and duly attested is held to be a good deed of bargain and sale." (See, also, 13 Cyc. 601, 602). According to 2 Lomax Dig. p. 129, "a bargain and sale to uses is a contract by which a person conveys his lands to another for a pecuniary consideration, in consequence of which a use arises to the bargainee; and St. 27, Hen. VIII, immediately transfers the legal estate and possession to the bargainee, without any entry or other act on his part; or in Virginia, in consequence of the pecuniary consideration paid for the land, a use is raised to him who paid it, which constitutes him a bargainee, and then, because he is a bargainee, the act of assembly transfers to him the possession of the bargainer. The proper and technical words of this conveyance are 'bargain and sell'; but any other words that would have been sufficient to raise a use upon valuable consideration before the statute are now sufficient to constitute a good bargain and sale; but proper words of limitation must be inserted." (See, also, Devlin, Deeds, §§ 22, 23). Where the instrument is executory and contemplates a future conveyance, it is not a deed of bargain and sale, unless a future conveyance is not necessary and the words of the instrument are sufficient to pass the estate. Many executory contracts operate as deeds of bargain and sale under the statute of uses and do not require any further conveyance, and many useless suits for specific performance are brought. Waldron v. Pigeon Coal Co., 56 S. E. 492, 493, 61 W. Va. 280 (citing Uhl v. Ohio River R. Co., 41 S. E. 340, 51 W. Va. 106, 114; McDougal v. Musgrave, 33 S. E. 281, 46 W. Va. 509; *Lindsey v. BARGE

The word "boat," when used in its ordinary sense, means any water craft, while a "barge" is a flat-bottomed freight boat or lighter for harbors and inland waters. In an action by a servant for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by stepping upon a defective portion of a "barge," evidence that the injury occurred because defendant stepped upon a defective portion of a "boat" was not at variance, although the tow, which plaintiff was engaged in assisting to make up at the time he was injured, consisted of crafts some of which were technically known as "boats" and others as "barges." Monongahela River Consol. Coal & Coke Co. v. Hardsaw (Ind.) 77 N. E. 363-365; Monongahela River Consol. Coal & Coke Co. v. Hardsaw (Ind.) 79 N. E. 1062, 1064.

BARN

A "barn," when conveyed or reserved by name, may include a shed connected with it and other privileges. Baker v. Bessey, 73 Me. 472, 478, 40 Am. Rep. 377 (citing Cunningham v. Webb, 69 Me. 92).

A "barn" is defined as a covered building designed for the storage of grain, hay, flax, or other farm produce. In America, barns also usually contain stabling for horses and cattle. The word "corncrib," as used in a statute providing that "any person who willfully sets fire to or burns * * * any cornerrib or corn pen containing corn, or any barn * * * is guilty of arson in the second degree," means a building or structure in its entirety and not a room or apartment in a building or structure. Therefore an indictment charging the burning of a cornerrib is not sustained by proof that the building destroyed was a barn in which one room was partitioned off as a cornerrib. Jackson v. State, 40 South. 979, 980, 145 Ala. 54 (quoting and adopting definition in Century Dictionary and Webster's International Dictionary).

A "barn" signifies a place greatly different from a wharf or warehouse and does not, within any ordinarily accepted meaning of the word, indicate a place where the business of "storing the goods of others for hire" is conducted. McReynolds v. People, 82 N. E. 945, 950, 230 Ill. 623.

BARREL

It appeared that salted herring are dealt in by the barrel, that in wholesale trade a "barrel" means 200 pounds of net fish, that it is usual to deliver 228 pounds of fish as taken from the hold of a vessel, in accordance with a long-standing custom to allow for salt, scale, and dirt, and that at no time does this extra 28 pounds enter into the marketable weight of the merchandise. Held that, in assessing duty on the weight of such fish under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 260, 30 Stat. 171, a like allowance should be made. Lincoln, Willey & Co. v. United States, 178 Fed. 599, 601.

BARRISTER

In England the legal practitioners are divided into two classes, denominated solicitors or attorneys and "barristers," and their respective duties and functions are well defined. It is only "barristers" and not attorneys that at common law could not recover for professional services, and it is not and never has been the common law in England or in this state that an attorney could not so recover. In this case the plaintiff described himself as an attorney and counselor at law, indicating that in Missouri, as in this state, the distinction between an attorney and counselor at law no longer obtains. Spencer

Proof that accused furnished prosecutor a quart of whisky under an agreement that he was to return other whisky shows a "barter or exchange" within the statute prohibiting the sale, barter, or exchange of intoxicating liquor, though prosecutor testified that defendant lent him the whisky. Clark v. State, 52 South. 893, 894, 167 Ala. 101, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 517.

Plaintiff and his brother were both retail dealers in oleomargarine, and had paid the tax for the first six months of 1910. Plaintiff, having purchased a wholesale shipment of oleomargarine, which had not arrived, borrowed from his brother a package of the same material which the brother had obtained from the same wholesale dealer from whom plaintiff's supply had been ordered. A few days thereafter, plaintiff's shipment arrived, and he returned to his brother the precise amount borrowed of the same product and brand. Held, that such transaction constituted a barter, and not a sale, and did not subject plaintiff to the tax imposed on wholesale dealers in oleomargarine. Ewers v. Weaver, 182 Fed. 713, 714.

BASE

See At the Base.

Webster defines "base" as that on which something is supported, as the base of a column, the base of a mountain; i. e., at the foot of the column, at the foot of the mountain. The phrase "at the 'base'" in a deed conveying timber above a certain size at the base when cut at any time within 15 years meant at the ground, though it was customary in that vicinity to cut timber 2 feet above the ground. *Banks v. BASE FEE

See, also, Determinable Fee; Qualified Fee.

An "estate in fee" may not be an estate in fee simple properly speaking, which is a pure inheritance, free from any and every qualification or condition. Estates in fee are not thus restricted in their nature. Every estate which may pass to heirs general by descent and continue forever is a fee; the owner having the entire property in himself. Such an estate may be a pure fee simple, or it may be a "base fee." The latter is an estate which may continue forever and is liable to be determined, without the aid of a conveyance, by some act or event circumscribing its continuance or extent, though the object on which it rests for perpetuity may be transitory or perishable; yet such an estate is deemed a fee, because, as is said, it has a possibility of enduring forever. A limitation to a man and his heirs, so long as A. shall have heirs of his body, or to a man and his heirs, tenants of the manor of Dale, or till the marriage of B, or so long as St. Paul's church shall stand, or a tree shall stand, are a few of the many instances given in the books of this species of fee. The material difference between a fee simple and other fees is "that the former estate will, the latter may, continue forever." Waldron v. Gianini (N. Y.) 6 Hill, 601, 604, 605 (citing 4 Kent's Com. [5th Ed.] 5, 9; 2 Bl. Comm. 104, 106, 109; 1 Cruise's Dig. 68, §§ 42-86; 1 Preston, Estates, 429-431); Moss Point Lumber Co. v. Harrison County, 42 South. 290, 314, 89 Miss. 448 (citing Anderson's Law Dict.; 2 Bl. Comm. 109).

Ed. died in 1798, having by his last will and testament devised a farm to his son M., his heirs and assigns forever, and another farm to his son J. in like manner. The will contained this clause: "It is my will, and I do order and appoint, that if either of my sons should depart this life without lawful issue, his share or part shall go to the survivor." In 1801 the sheriff sold all the estate which M. then had in his share by virtue of a fl. fa. against him; and J. died in 1813, leaving M. surviving. Held, that the estate devised to M. was a "base," qualified, or determinable fee, which became a fee simple on the death of J., and belonged to W. Waldron v. Gianini (N. Y.) 6 Hill, 601, 604, 605 (citing 4 Kent's Com. [5th Ed.] 5, 9; 2 Bl. Comm. 104, 106, 109; 1 Cruise's Dig. 68, §§ 42-86; 1 Preston, Estates, 429-431).

"Whenever a fee is so qualified as to be made to determine, or liable to be determined, at the happening of some contingent event or act, the fee is said to be 'base.' There are four classes of such fees, viz., fee upon condition, fee upon limitation, a conditional limitation, and a fee conditional at common law." Testator first devised to his wife and her heirs one half of all his property to hold, use, and manage during her life, remainder to testator's son, if he survived her. Testator then devised to the son and his heirs the other half of the property to have, hold, use, and manage in his discretion "during his natural life," and in case the wife survived the son at his death the property so devised to him should belong to her. Held that, under Rev. St. 1879, § 4008, requiring all courts concerned in the execution of wills to have due regard to the directions of the will and the true intent of the testator, the will should be construed as giving to the widow and son each a freehold estate for the life of the one who might first die, with cross-determinable fees in remainder; the one to be enlarged into a fee simple in the survivor. Tebow v. Dougherty, 103 S. W. 985, 988, 205 Mo. 315 (quoting and adopting the definition in Tiedeman, Real Prop. p. 28, §§ 44, 271).

A "base fee" is such a one as hath a qualification subjoined thereto and which must be determined whenever the qualification annexed to it is at an end (quoting and adopting the definition in 2 Black, Com. 109). A deed which in consideration of a sum paid by A. and K., a committee of a certain church society "or their successors to that office for the time being," conveyed "unto the said A. and K." a certain tract "to have and to hold the aforegranted premises to the said A. and K. and to their successors in office to their use and behoof forever," conveyed a fee simple and not a base or qualified fee which would terminate when the church society ceased to exist. Hamlin v. Particular Baptist Meeting House, 69 Atl. 315, 317, 103 Me. 343.

Under a patent to the Choctaw Nation by which it conveyed and granted certain lands to said nation in fee simple to them and their descendants to inure to them while they shall exist as a nation and live on it, liable to no transfer or alienation except to the United States or with their consent, the estate conveyed is a "base fee." Dukes v. McKenna, 69 S. W. 832, 834, 4 Ind. T. 156.

A "base fee" is distinguished from a life estate in that such fee may last forever in case the first taker dies leaving a child or children entitled to take under the will but is liable to be terminated by the death of such first taker without leaving a child or children, while a life estate terminates absolutely on the death of the life tenant. Ahlfield v. Curtis, 82 N. E. 276, 277, 229 Ill. 139.

BASE PROPERTY

At common law a dog was declared to be "base property." Columbus R. Co. v. Woolfolk, 58 S. E. 152, 153, 128 Ga. 631, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1136, 119 Am. St. Rep. 404.

BASED

BASED ON REASON

There is not much difference between the expressions "reasonable" and "based on reason," so that an instruction that by the term "reasonable doubt" was meant an actual substantial doubt based on a reason arising either from the evidence or want of evidence and sufficient to cause an ordinarily prudent person to hesitate and refuse to act in the most important affairs of life was not prejudicial to an accused. Turley v. State, 104 N. W. 984, 988, 74 Neb. 471.

BASED UPON THE ACTUAL EARNINGS

A statute provided that the price which a city should pay for a gas or electric plant purchased from a private owner should be its fair market value for the purposes of its use, including as an element of value the earning capacity of such plant "based upon the actual earnings" being derived from such use at the time the city voted to establish the plant and including the market value of any other locations or similar rights acquired by the owners of the plant, with the intention of using them in connection with such plant, less the amount of any incumbrances. Held, that the phrase "based upon the actual earnings" did not mean that the earning capacity of the plant purchased should be appraised solely on the basis of its actual earnings, as other conditions could be considered, such as the fact that the productive power of the plant might have been strained to an extent at the time of the purchase which could not be maintained, and the fact that there might be defects in the plant which would have to be corrected; the real criterion in determining the value being the amount of net profits then derived and which would be derived from the use of the plant. Norwich Gas & Electric Co. v. City of Norwich, 57 Atl. 746, 751, 76 Conn. 565.

BASEMENT

Tenement House Act (Laws 1901, p. 910, c. 384) § 91, subd. 7, declares "a 'basement' is a story partly but not more than one-half below the level of the curb." People ex rel.

Cohen v. Butler, 109 N. Y. Supp. 900, 904, 125 App. Div. 384.

The question being whether the lowest inhabited floor of a tenement house should count as a "story," and this depending on whether it was a "basement" more than five feet above the "grade," and assuming that "grade" is synonymous with "curb level" as used in the statute, but the word "curb level" being susceptible of two meanings one of which would result in the lowest floor being counted as a story and the other would not, it was incumbent on the plaintiff to show facts which would require the application of the former meaning. Board of Tenement House Supervision of New Jersey v. Schlechter, 83 Atl. 783, 784, 83 N. J. Law, 88.

BASEMENT ADJOINING THE CORNER

A subtenant could not sustain his right to hold a "corner basement" under a lease covering the "basement adjoining the corner," where there was ample evidence that there was a basement other than the one occupied by the tenant answering such description in the absence of a reformation of the lease or acts of the landlord after the making of such lease recognizing the identity of the basements; the expressions not being apparently synonymous. *Kasower v. BASTARD

See, also, Illegitimate Child; Lawful Issue.

Under the common law a child not conceived or born in lawful wedlock was denominated filius nullius—a bastard. Rohwer v. District Court of First Judicial Dist. (Utah) 125 Pac. 671, 674.

"A child of a married woman, begotten by one who is not the husband of the mother, is a 'bastard.'" McLoud v. State, 50 S. E. 145, 146, 122 Ga. 393.

The word "bastard," in our language, both in its legal signification and in its literary use, has a well-defined meaning. Webster defines it as follows: "A natural child; a child begotten and born out of wedlock." Now, in order that the child be begotten and born out of wedlock, it follows that the mother is an unmarried woman. In law the word is defined as follows: "A child whose parents were not married to each other at the time of its birth." Campion v. Lattimer, 97 N. W. 290, 291, 70 Neb. 245.

Since a bastard at common law was filius nullius, he was therefore kin of nobody, and had no ancestor from whom any inheritable blood could be derived. Truelove v. Truelove, 86 N. E. 1018, 1020, 88 N. E. 510, 172 Ind. 441, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 220, 139 Am. St. Rep. 404.

In Rev. St. § 5614, providing that, when an unmarried woman who has been delivered or is pregnant with a bastard child makes complaint thereof in writing under oath before any justice of the peace charging a person with being the father of the child, the justice shall issue his warrant for the arrest of the person so charged, the common-law definition of the word "bastard," namely, one that is begotten and born out of lawful matrimony, must be given in the statute. Powell v. State, ex rel. Fowler, 95 N. E. 660, 661, 84 Ohio St. 165, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 255.

The phrase "bastard son of a bitch," addressed by decedent to accused, "was intended as an insulting remark to" accused, "but evidently not a reflection or intended reflection upon his mother." *Hayman v. Child of Slaves

The child of a woman slave by a white man is a bastard, and cannot inherit the succession of the mother opened in Louisiana since Acts 1894, No. 54, prohibiting marriage between white persons and persons of color. Succession of Davis, 52 South. 266, 268, 126 La. 178.

BASTARDY PROCEEDING

A bastardy proceeding is a civil action for the enforcement of a police regulation, so far as it is necessary for the purpose of securing an allowance to the woman, and to relieve the county from the burden of supporting the child. State v. Currie, 76 S. E. 694, 695, 161 N. C. 275.

A "bastardy proceeding" is neither a civil nor criminal action, strictly speaking, but is a mere statutory proceeding designed primarily to enable the injured female to recover, of the person who, in the eyes of the law, has committed a grievous injury to her, compensation therefor. Meyer v. Meyer, 102 N. W. 62, 55, 123 Wis. 538.

"Bastardy proceedings" are so far of a criminal nature that a person who is within the state only for the purpose of putting in special bail in an action in which he was arrested under a capias is not privileged from arrest on a charge of bastardy. Cady v. St. Clair Circuit Judge, 102 N. W. 1025, 139 Mich. 618.

A "bastardy proceeding" is civil and not criminal in its nature, and is intended merely for the enforcement of a police regulation. State v. Addington, 57 S. E. 398, 399, 143 N. C. 683, 11 Ann. Cas. 814 (citing State v. Liles, 47 S. E. 750, 134 N. C. 735).

A "bastardy proceeding" held a civil suit under a statute providing that no person shall be excluded from being a witness in any "civil suit" by reason of his interest. Murray v. Joyce, 44 Me. 342, 348 (citing Wilbur v. Crane, 30 Mass. [13 Pick.] 284).

BATCH MIXERS

Among concrete mixing machines, "batch mixers" are to be distinguished from "continuous mixers." The latter are long cylindrical devices which receive materials and discharge them when mixed as a continuous operation. They were said to be less effective than batch mixers in mixing the material and to be subject to other objections. *Ransome Concrete Machinery Co. v. Pen. Code 1895, § 96, defines a "battery" to be the unlawful beating of another. Haris v. State, 60 S. E. 127, 3 Ga. App. 457.

A battery is the actual infliction of an injury. State v. Dyer (Del.) 58 Atl. 947, 948, 5 Pennewill, 88.

A "battery" is the application to a person of attempted force and violence. Stark v. Epler, 117 Pac. 276, 278, 59 Or. 262.

"Battery" is the actual accomplishment of an unlawful attempt with violence to do an injury to the person of another. State v. Brittingham (Del.) 80 Atl. 242, 243.

"Battery" is the unlawful beating of another whether it be done with malice or without malice but in anger. A provocation which merely substitutes into the offense the element of anger for that of malice does not alter the nature of the crime but the element of unlawfulness which in battery is the only necessary element remains. Cole v. State, 59 S. E. 24, 26, 2 Ga. App. 734.

Under the statute defining a "battery" to be any "willful or unlawful" use of force or violence upon the person of another, an instruction that a "battery" is any unlawful or willful use of force or violence upon the person of another was erroneous for using the disjunctive between "willful and unlawful"; it being necessary that the force be both willful "and" unlawful. State v. Magill, 122 N. W. 330, 331, 19 N. D. 131, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 666.

A "battery" was not committed unless the act alleged to constitute it was committed against the will of the injured party. Ross v. State, 93 Pac. 299, 301, 16 Wyo. 285 (citing 2 Bish. New Crim. Law, §§ 23, 28, 70).

Assault distinguished

See Assault.

Assault included

Every "battery" implies an assault, because there can be no "battery" without an assault, but there may be an assault without any "battery." The jury may convict of an assault under an indictment for assault and battery but may not convict of assault and battery with no evidence of battery. Montgomery v. State, 37 South. 835, 836, 85 Miss. 330 (quoting and adopting 1 Whart. Crim. Law [10th Ed.] § 640).

Force

To constitute a "battery" there must be an actual touching of the person assaulted, however slight. State v. Cruikshank, 100 N. W. 697, 699, 13 N. D. 337.

Intent

"Battery" is the carrying out of an intent to assault by actual infliction of the injury. Luther v. State, 98 N. E. 640, 641, 177 Ind. 619.

A "battery" is any violence to the person of another with intent to injure, and, if unjustified, it is unlawful. Cox v. State, 130 S. W. 989, 99 Ark. 90.

BAWDYHOUSE

Keeper of bawdyhouse, see Keeper.

By Acts 1907, c. 132, a "bawdyhouse" is defined to be one kept for prostitution, or where prostitutes are permitted to resort or reside for the purpose of plying their vocation. Mosher v. State, 136 S. W. 467, 468, 62 Tex. Cr. R. 42.

Intercourse of defendant with another cannot be relied on for a conviction for keeping a "bawdyhouse," defined by the statute as one kept for prostitution, or where prostitutes are permitted to resort or reside for purpose of plying their vocation; this contemplating that there must be other women resorting to or residing at the place. Riley v. State, 125 S. W. 582, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 176.

A "bawdyhouse" is a house kept for the purpose of prostitution; that is, for men and women to have unlawful, illicit sexual intercourse together therein. The statute uses the words "bawdyhouse or brothel, or house of assignation." A "bawdyhouse" is a house of ill fame. An "assignation house" is a house resorted to for purposes of prostitution, and is synonymous with "bawdyhouse" or "brothel." State v. Keithley, 127 S. W. 406, 408, 142 Mo. App. 417.

As house of ill fame

A "bawdyhouse" is a house of ill fame, kept for the resort and commerce of lewd people of both sexes. A meeting place and opportunity for the commission of sexual offenses. These facts and the presence there of lewd men and women are all the facts necessary to stigmatize the place as a bawdyhouse; acts of sexual misconduct being presumed and need not be proved. State v. Price, 92 S. W. 174, 175, 115 Mo. App. 656.

BAY

The place in question was a long strip of beach which curved somewhat inward from a certain head and mountain, so that a straight line drawn from the shore at the head to the shore at the mountain would be about two nautical miles and include a comparatively narrow strip of water, and the subtending chord of the arc so made is not more than three nautical miles in length but is several times the length of the bisecting radius between the chord and circumference. Held, that the area of water so circumscribed was a "bay" within a statute prohibiting the taking of certain kinds of fish in bays, etc., where the distance from opposite shores of the same at any point is not more than three nautical miles in width; any part of the sea bounded on three sides by land and upon the fourth side by a line not more than three nautical miles in length which touches both opposite shores coming within the statute. State v. Murray, 24 Atl. 789, 84 Me. 135.

BAY HORSE

See Dark Bay.

The term "bay," as applied to the description of the color of horses, appear, according to the lexicographers, to have reference to "reddish brown." Stickney v. Dunaway & Lambert, 53 South. 770, 771, 169 Ala. 464.

BAY RUM

"Bay rum" is a fragrant spirit, obtained by distilling the leaves of the pimenta acris with rum, or by mixing the volatile oil procured from the leaves by distillation with alcohol, water, and acetic ether. It is also defined as an aromatic liquid obtained by distilling the leaves with the bayberry, or by mixing various oils, as the oils of myrica, of orange peel, and of pimenta, with alcohol. Under the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals, it must be held that it is neither a "distilled spirit," as that term is defined by Rev. St. U. S. § 3248, nor a "product of distillation," within section 3254, providing for internal revenue taxation of products of distillation as distilled spirits. Roche v. Jordan, 175 Fed. 234, 236.

BAY WINDOW

As building, see Buildings.

BAYOU

"Bayou" means an offshoot of a river, an outlet of a lake, a small river, or creek. In the Southern United States, the outlet of a lake or one of the several outlets of a river through its delta, a sluggish water course; and hence an indictment alleging that defendant placed and maintained a seine net in a bayou sufficiently alleged that the net was placed in the waters of the state. Richardson v. State, 91 S. W. 758, 759, 77 Ark. 321 (quoting and adopting the definition in Webster's Dict. and Cent. Dict.).

Parol evidence is admissible to show that the word "bayou," as used in a contract of sale, meant a variety of beans known as bayous. Gardiner v. McDonogh, 81 Pac. 964, 966, 147 Cal. 313.

BAZAAR

The word "bazaar" is indiscriminately applied to shops, singly or in groups, where goods are displayed for sale, to fairs or sales for the benefit of churches or charities, and to other places fitted up for the sale of goods. It cannot be the subject of a trade-name in which any one can acquire an exclusive proprietary right. Ball v. Broadway Bazaar, 87 N. E. 674, 194 N. Y. 429.

BE—BEING

See Have Been; Life or Lives in Being; May Be; Not Being.

The word "being" is equivalent to which is. State ex rel. Porter v. Ritchie, 91 Pac. 24, 27, 32 Utah, 381.

"Be," as used in a statute providing that no person shall be an alderman in a city of the fourth class unless he is a resident of the ward from which he is elected, is not used in the restricted narrow meaning of become; such statute not only forbidding a person to become an alderman unless he is eligible under the section but forbidding him to be one (that is, to remain one if he becomes disqualified). State ex rel. Johnston v. Donworth, 105 S. W. 1055, 127 Mo. App. 377.

The verb "to be" means to exist as well as to become. The former meaning signifies continuance in a present state, the latter a future entry into a different condition. The agreement of the parties that the excess of the plaintiff's advances "shall be secured by the guaranty of the defendants" is as consistent with the meaning that from the date of the contract it shall exist or stand secured by that guaranty as it is within the meaning that it shall subsequently become secured. Guaranty Trust Co. of New York v. Koehler, 195 Fed. 669, 679, 115 C. C. A. 475.

A clause avoiding an insurance if "with the knowledge of insured foreclosure proceedings 'be' commenced," and similar clauses, have been construed as "directed to the fact of knowledge on the part of the insured of the commencement of foreclosure proceedings and not to the time he may obtain such knowledge; the reasonable construction to be given to the clause is that whenever he shall have knowledge of the proceedings, and not before, and shall fail to obtain the consent of the insurer thereto, the policy shall be avoided." The majority of the court is in full accord with such construction. Parker, J., dissenting, with whom Hocker, J., concurs, says that clearly the words "relate to the time of commencement of the foreclosure proceedings and not to the fact of commencement." Kelly Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 47 South. 742, 750, 56 Fla. 456, 16 Ann. Cas. 654 (quoting and adopting Schroeder v. Imperial Ins. Co., 63 Pac. 1074, 132 Cal. 18, 84 Am. St. Rep. 17).

The words "that there 'be' and hereby is granted," contained in the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company by the act of July 2, 1864 (13 Stat. 365, 367), imported a transfer of present title not a promise to transfer one in the future. Northern Lumber Co. v. O'Brien, 27 Sup. Ct. 249, 250, 204 U. S. 190, 51 L. Ed. 438.

BE GOVERNED

An agreement by a member of a beneficial association that he should "be governed" by all rules, laws, and regulations of the association then in force or that might be thereafter enacted bore reference to such laws as were then in force or future laws as might be provided tending to regulate his conduct as a member and the internal affairs of the association, and a further agreement that his contract should "be controlled" by all laws, rules, and regulations then in force or that might be thereafter enacted bore reference only to such present and future laws as were in aid and in furtherance of the essential elements of indemnity, vouchsafed in his contract, and did not authorize a subsequent by-law reducing the amount of recovery in case of suicide. Lewine v. Supreme Lodge, Knights of Pythias of the World, 99 S. W. 821, 825, 122 Mo. App. 547.

BE IN FORCE

A policy of life insurance and the application on which the same was issued provided that it should not "take effect or be in force" until delivered to the applicant in person during his lifetime and while in good health. The expression "take effect or be in force" merely intended to distinguish between policies which have not been delivered and those which have been delivered. Austin v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n, 132 Fed. 555, 559.

BE NO DEFENSE

The term "it shall be no defense," as used in Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 7896, which provides that, in all suits upon policies of insurance on life heretofore issued by any company doing business in this state to a citizen of this state, it shall be no defense that the insured committed suicide, unless it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the court or the jury trying the cause that the insured contemplated suicide at the time he made his application for the policy, is grammatically the equivalent of "it shall not be a defense" and means that the given fact of suicide shall not bar an action on the policy and does not affect a provision of the policy that in case of suicide the beneficiary shall receive a specified sum, less than the face of the policy. Whitfield v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 125 Fed. 269, 270.

BE PAID

A testamentary direction that one-fourth of the principal of the residue shall "be paid" to certain children or descendants of a child was applicable exclusively to personality. Robinson v. Robinson, 72 Atl. 883, 885, 105 Me. 68, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 675, 134 Am. St. Rep. 587.

BE RESPONSIBLE FOR

A treasurer of a corporation, merely empowered by the by-laws to "have charge of and be responsible for" the securities of the corporation, has no authority to change the registration and sell certain of its bonds without special authority. Jennie Clarkson

Home for Children v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 87 N. Y. Supp. 348, 353, 92 App. Div. 491.

BEING INSOLVENT

"Being insolvent" refers to the status or condition of insolvency. In re Douglas Coal & Coke Co., 131 Fed. 769, 773.

BEING PERFORMED

The words "has been and is being performed," as used in a petition in an action by a railroad company on a contract binding defendant to pay to it a specified sum on condition that it shall establish and maintain a station at a designated place, which recites that the condition of the contract has been and is "being performed," refer to the performance of the condition of constructing a depot at the designated place and to the maintenance of the depot at that point. Piper v. Choctaw Northern Townsite & Improvement Co., 85 Pac. 965, 966, 16 Okl. 436.

BEING REINED

"Being reined," when referring to the driving of mules, may mean more than the manner in which they were driven. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. of Texas v. Dixon (Tex.) 91 S. W. 627, 628.

BEING TRANSPORTED

A passenger is "being transported" from the time of the beginning of the journey until its termination. Fremont, E. & M. V. R. Co. v. Hagblad, 106 N. W. 1041, 1042, 72 Neb. 773, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 254, 9 Ann. Cas. 1096.

BEING UNDERSTOOD

The words, "it being understood," in the ordinary use of that phrase, have the same force and effect as the words "it is agreed." Lind v. United States, 44 Ct. Cl. 558, 567.

BEING UPON FARMS

Comp. Laws 1897, c. 195, providing for the organization of mutual insurance companies, authorizes them to insure farm property, buildings, and their contents, farm implements, livestock, wagons, etc., "being upon farms, as farm property." Held, that a policy covering farm products, farm implements, carriages, and livestock on premises, did not cover the fixtures and utensils of a slaughterhouse which were not part of a farm. Geraghty v. Washtenaw Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 108 N. W. 1102, 1103, 145 Mich. 635.

BEING WITHIN

See Lying or Being Within.

BEACH

See Public Beach.

The words "beach" or "ocean front," as used in Act April 6, 1889 (Laws 1889, p. 206), authorizing cities on the ocean to lay out streets, drives, and walks on the beach or ocean fronts, include the entire beach covered by ocean tides within the limits of the city. State v. Wright, 23 Atl. 116, 118, 54 N. J. Law, 130.

As land between high and low water mark

"The term 'beach' is used sometimes for the shore between high and low water mark and sometimes for a strip of land lying next to and above such shore." Dawson v. Town of Orange, 61 Atl. 101, 109, 78 Conn. 96.

The word "beach" is of doubtful meaning when used as a boundary, as it means in one case the sea side and in another case the land side of the "beach." The meaning to be attached to the word when used in a deed must depend upon the instrument in which it occurs, taken as a whole, and upon surrounding circumstances. It does not include the space between high and low water mark, if the word is used in its technical sense. Haskell v. Friend, 81 N. E. 962, 963, 196 Mass. 198 (citing Storer v. Freeman, 6 Mass. 435, 4 Am. Dec. 155).

The margin of the bed of a river which lies between high and low water mark is called the "beach" or "shore," which is actually a part of the bed of the river, and, when the river is at its full flow, whether caused by the tide or by the natural increase of waters, by rains, floods, and the like, filling its natural bed to its highest reach of flow, it marks its high-water, while its lessened range of flow by summer heats shows its low-water, mark. Sun Dial Ranch v. May Land Co., 119 Pac. 758, 762, 61 Or. 205.

An ancient patent to an individual bounded the land on the south with the "main sea or ocean to low-water mark," and on the west with the inlet which makes the bay between Jamaica and a neck of land, together with ponds, beaches, etc. Held, that the grant was to low-water mark; the word "beach," in describing the thing granted, meaning tide way, though it may be used, for purposes of boundary, to describe the shore above high-water mark. Rockaway Park Improvement Co. v. City of New York, 124 N. Y. Supp. 1096, 1104, 140 App. Div. 160.

A conveyance which makes the "upper edge of the beach" a boundary, and which expressly provides that "no part of the beach is hereby conveyed," conveys only to the line of mean high-water mark, and does not include the "beach," which, in its usual signification in grants of land bounded on tidal waters, means the space between ordinary high and low water mark, or the space over which the tide usually ebbs and flows; and the fact that the shore above high-water mark is covered by the heavy spring tides does not make it a part of the "beach," within the meaning of that word in the conveyance. Castor v. Smith, 98 N. E. 81, 211 Mass. 473.

An ordinance prohibiting the removal of stone, sand, or earth from the beach, or from the water within 300 feet of high-water mark along a navigable lake between the northern and southern city limits, does not assume to prohibit interference above high-water mark, but prevents such removal from the beach, or from the water within 300 feet of high-water mark along the shore of the lake; the word "beach" being synonymous with "shore," and meaning that portion of the shore or lake between ordinary high and low water mark. C. Beck Co. v. City of Milwaukee, 120 N. W. 293, 296, 139 Wis. 340, 131 Am. St. Rep. 1061; Damman v. Same, 120 N. W. 298, 139 Wis. 356.

Where deeds conveying land abutting on a highway along the high-water line, described the boundary as the "sea or highway," "beach and highway," "bank and highway," the grantee might adopt the boundary most favorable to him. The words "beach" and "bank" might be construed to mean the beach between high and low-water mark. Merwin v. Backer, 68 Atl. 373-376, 80 Conn. 338.

BEADS

See Loose Beads; Pearl Beads.

The word "beads," as used in the Tariff Act, must be given the meaning applied to it commercially. They have been defined to be little perforated balls to be strung on a thread and worn as an ornament. The trade meaning of the word does not differ from the dictionary meaning. Opal beads and rondelles are not beads within the classification of the Tariff Act. United States v. American Gem & Pearl Co., 142 Fed. 283, 284.

"From an early day up to and including the Act of 1883 beads had separate classification, and were dutiable at a higher rate than precious stones or imitations of them. Precious stones set and unset; imitations of them set and unset, and compositions of glass or paste when not set, were separately mentioned, and bore a different rate of duty from beads, and were not confounded with beads by resemblances, indeed not always by identity of material." "As early as 1858 the Treasury Department decided that genuine pearls, when imported strung on a thread to be used as beads for necklaces without further manufacture, were dutiable as beads. And later jet and coral necklaces were classed as beads and bead ornaments. Also glass balls and oval pieces of onyx, and pieces of glass or paste capable of being strung, were held to be beads against a claim of being imitations of precious stones." "It may be that in construing a tariff act it is the essential nature of the article, not the purpose of the importer, which determines its classification; but if color may be regarded to bring the article to the resemblance of a precious stone its other conditions may be regarded to bring it to the character of a bead—a manufacture of glass, a mere hat or dress trimming, or an ornament for embroidery." United States v. Morrison, 21 Sup. Ct. 195, 197, 179 U. S. 456, 462, 45 L. Ed. 275.

"Beads" are not to be included within the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 408, 30 Stat. 189, for beads "not threaded or strung," because they are strung only temporarily. Henry E. Frankenberg Co. v. United States, 146 Fed. 63, 64, 76 C. C. A. 514.

BEADS OF ALL KINDS

The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, Schedule N, § 1, par. 408, 30 Stat. 189, for "beads of all kinds, not threaded or strung," does not include beads strung or threaded temporarily. Henry E. Frankenberg Co. v. United States, 144 Fed. 704, 706; Id., 146 Fed. 63, 76 C. C. A. 514.

Pierced imitation pearls are dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 408, 30 Stat. 189, relating to "beads of all kinds, not threaded or strung," rather than under paragraph 435 (30 Stat. 192), as imitations of precious stones. United States v. Weinberg, 139 Fed. 1006.

In construing the provisions in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, para. 408, 435, 30 Stat. 189, 192, for "beads of all kinds," and "precious stones," respectively, held, that pierced opal balls about one-fourth of an inch in diameter and pierced rock-crystal rondelles, or small, flat, faceted disks, are dutiable under the latter provision rather than the former; these articles not being commercially known as beads. Held, also, as to the rock-crystal articles, that they are dutiable under said latter provision rather than as manufactures of rock crystal under paragraph 115, Schedule B, § 1, of said act (30 Stat. 159). United States v. American Gem & Pearl Co., 142 Fed. 283, 284.

The provision in paragraph 408, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, 30 Stat. 189, for "beads of all kinds not threaded or strung," was intended to exclude only beads permanently metal beads intended for the manufacture of fabrics and other articles, and is held to include metal beads intended for the manufacture of purses, threaded or strung temporarily for the purposes of transportation and sale only, on cheap, weak cotton threads, and arranged in bunches. United States v. Buettner, 133 Fed. 163, 164, 66 C. C. A. 289.

BEAGLE HOUND

A "beagle hound," which is a breed of dogs trained to hunt rabbits only, does not come within a statute prohibiting the owners of dogs of a breed commonly used for hunting deer, moose, or caribou from permitting them to run at large in forests inhabited by such animals. State v. Zonetti, 67 Atl. 817, 818, 80 Vt. 348.

BEAMS

See I Beams.

The "beams" of a ship are the timbers extending across the vessel to support the deck and to keep the sides of the vessel in shape. W. S. Keyser & Co. v. Duit, 150 Fed. 328, 80 C. C. A. 212 (citing Patterson's Nautical Ency. verbo "Beam").

BEAR

The words "bear arms" in the Constitution refer to their military use and not to wearing them about the person as a part of the dress. Ex parte Thomas, 97 Pac. 260, 262, 21 Okl. 770, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1007, 17 Ann. Cas. 566.

On a trial for unlawfully carrying a pistol, where the evidence merely showed that two witnesses saw accused put a pistol in a pan, and did not see where he got it but only saw it while it was in his hand, it was error to give the general charge against accused since "carry" in Acts 1909, p. 258, § 2, is synonymous with "bear," and it was for the jury to say whether accused carried the pistol in the sense of bearing arms. Nichols v. State, 58 South. 681, 682, 4 Ala. App. 115.

Section 4 of the Bill of Rights, which provides that "the people have the right to 'bear' arms for their defense and security," is a limitation on legislative power to enact laws prohibiting the bearing of arms in the militia or any other military organization provided for by law but is not a limitation on legislative power to enact laws prohibiting and punishing the promiscuous carrying of arms or other deadly weapons. City of Salina v. Blaksley, 83 Pac. 619, 620, 72 Kan. 230, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 168, 115 Am. St. Rep. 196.

Within the Constitution of the state (article 1, § 1, par. 22), providing that the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed, but the General Assembly shall have power to prescribe the manner in which arms shall be borne, and within the Constitution of the United States, providing that, a well-regulated militia being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed, "the word 'arms' evidently means the arms of a militia man, the weapons ordinarily used in battle, to wit, guns of every kind, swords, bayonets, horseman's pistols, etc. The very words 'bear arms' had then and now have a technical meaning. The 'arms-bearing' part of a people were its men fit for service on the field of battle. That country was 'armed' that had an army ready for fight. The call 'to arms' was a call to put on the habiliments of battle, and I greatly doubt if in any good author of those days a use of the word 'arms,' when applied to a people, can be found which includes pocket pistols, dirks, sword canes, tooth picks, bowie knives, and a host of other relics of a past barbarism, or inventions of modern savagery of like character." The act of the General Assembly, approved Aug. 12, 1910 (Laws 1910, p. 134), entitled "An act to prohibit any person from having or carrying a revolver without first having obtained a license from the ordinary of the county of said state, in which the party resides, and to provide how said license may be obtained and a penalty prescribed for a violation of the same and for other purposes," is not void because in violation of article 1, § 1, par. 22, of the Constitution of the state, or in violation of article 8, § 2, of the Constitution of the United States. Strickland v. State, 72 S. E. 260, 264, 137 Ga. 1, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 115, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 323 (quoting and adopting definition in Hill v. State, 53 Ga. 472).

BEAR DOWN

Statement by section foreman to the men when they were starting the hand car in the evening to "bear down" meant to go in a hurry. Brooks v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 71 S. W. 507.

BEARER

The "bearer" is the person in possession of a bill or note which is payable to bearer. Steinhilper v. Basnight, 60 S. E. 220, 221, 153 N. C. 293 (quoting and adopting the definition in Mayers v. McRimmon, 53 S. E. 447, 448, 140 N. C. 648, 111 Am. St. Rep. 879).

A county warrant payable to "A, B, or bearer" is legally equivalent to one payable simply to "bearer," and under the Judiciary Act of March 3, 1887, the assignee thereof may sue thereon in a federal court without reference to the citizenship of A. B. If the other requisite jurisdictional facts appear. Thompson v. Searcy County, 57 Fed. 1030, 1036, 6 C. C. A. 674.

BEAT

A letter known as a "beat" is one addressed to a person not to be found in the district of the letter carrier in the common understanding of postal employes. Goode v. United States, 16 Sup. Ct. 136, 137, 159 U. S. 663, 40 L. Ed. 297.

"To 'beat' is not necessarily to whip, to injure, or to hurt, but includes any unlawful imposition of the hands or arms." Lowry v. State, 69 S. E. 34, 8 Ga. App. 379.

A witness, in testifying as to the accused's character, was asked whether accused was "reputed to have committed grand larceny and to have 'beaten' the case." It was held that this question did not imply that he escaped from conviction by corrupt method, since the word "beat" is sometimes used in the sense of winning. People v. Callahan, 130 N. Y. Supp. 1041, 1042, 78 Misc. Rep. 455.

BEAVER STRIPS

"Beaver strips" are in the form of rectangular strips or bands of various sizes, consisting of rabbit fur and woolen cloth, used in the making of hats, the fur being the component material of chief value, and are dutiable as a manufacture of fur. Herrmann v. United States, 145 Fed. 843; Herrmann v. Same, 141 Fed. 486.

BECAUSE OF

The words "because of," in an instruction authorizing recovery for suffering sustained because of injury, is equivalent to the word "caused." Merrill v. Los Angeles Gas & Electric Co., 111 Pac. 534, 538, 158 Cal. 499, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 559, 139 Am. St. Rep. 134.

BECOME

See May Become.

"Become" means to pass from one state to another, to enter into some condition by a change from another condition, or by receiving new or additional properties or qualities. A by-law of a fraternal insurance society, which provides that, if any member heretofore or hereafter adopted shall "become" intemperate in the use of drugs, the benefit certificate held by such member shall by such acts become and be absolutely null as to benefits, and all payments made thereon shall be thereby forfeited, does not apply to the case of a member who, prior to the enactment of such by-law, had become intemperate in the use of drugs and continued so thereafter. Taylor v. Modern Woodmen of America, 83 Pac. 1099, 1101, 72 Kan. 443, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 283.

BECOME DUE

Gen. St. 1906, § 541, provides that all taxes shall be due and payable on or after the first Monday of November of each year, and makes the duty of the collector to collect by levy and sale taxes unpaid on the first Monday in April. A contract required a company to pay all taxes on land for certain years, and provided that, if it should for three months after taxes become due and payable fail to pay such taxes, all rights should immediately cease as to all tracts of land on which it had failed to pay such taxes. Held, that a forfeiture would not be incurred by a delay to pay the taxes until the March succeeding the first Monday of November; the word "become" meaning "be." McCaskill v. Union Naval Stores Co., 52 South. 961, 963, 59 Fla. 571.

Rev. Laws 1902, c. 141, §§ 26-28, authorize a creditor of an estate to recover his claim from the heirs or legatees under certain circumstances, but not in cases covered by section 13, which provides that a creditor, whose cause of action does not accrue within two years from the giving of the administration bond, may present his claim to the probate court before the estate has been fully administered, and if found to be justly due, or liable to "become due," the court shall order assets to be retained to satisfy the claim. A resident stockholder of an insolvent Minnesota corporation had been judicially determined, before his death, to be liable for the debts of the corporation to the amount of the face value of his stock, which liability, under the Minnesota statutes, might be collected by one or more assessments, as required, dependent on the solvency, etc., of other stockholders. Held, that this was a liability which might "become due," within section 13, and might therefore have been presented to the probate court, and hence the receiver could not maintain an action to collect any part thereof against the heirs of the stockholder and legatees of his widow. Converse v. Nichols, 89 N. E. 135, 137, 202 Mass. 270.

BECOME UNSAFE

The words "become unsafe" in Laws 1890, c. 568, § 10, as amended by Laws 1895, c. 606, providing that "if any highway or bridge shall at any time be damaged or destroyed by the elements or otherwise, or become unsafe, the commissioner of highways of the town may cause the same to be immediately repaired or rebuilt, if consented to by the town board," when considered in connection with the preceding section of the statute, which provides that, in case the highway commissioner shall determine that the sum of $500 will be insufficient he may cause a vote to be taken at an annual or special town meeting authorizing such additional sum to be raised as he shall deem necessary, not exceeding a specified per cent. on the taxable property, etc., must be restricted to the evident intent of the section, and the words do not give the commissioner power to rebuild with the consent of the town board, whether the unsafe condition arises from natural wear and decay or from destruction and impairment by the elements, and the commissioner has authority under the statute to rebuild a bridge on consent of the town board only in case it is destroyed or becomes unsafe through some extraordinary means. Livingston v. Stafford, 91 N. Y. Supp. 172, 173, 89 App. Div. 108.

BED

See Coal Bed; Confined to Bed; Highest Above Bed of River; River Bed; Road-bed.

Of mineral

A "bed" has been defined as being synonymous with vein, and, where a deed conveyed all of a certain coal bed, the word was held synonymous with coal vein and passed to the grantees the entire bed or vein of coal. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Gleason, 159 Fed. 383, 385, 86 C. C. A. 383.

As a geological term, "bed" is synonymous with "vein" or "stratum"; but the term "coal bed" may be used to mean "quarry." Hoysradt v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 151 Fed. 321, 326, 331.

BED AND COHABIT

An indictment for fornication and adultery denounced by Revisal 1905, § 3350, in the language of the statute that defendants, a man and woman, "not being married to each other," did unlawfully "bed and cohabit together," but omitting the words "lewdly and lasciviously," is sufficient; the words "bed and cohabit" expressing the charge of illicit intercourse. State v. Britt, 63 S. E. 1056, 1057, 150 N. C. 811.

BEER

See Lager Beer; Near Beer; Stock Beer; Strong Beer.

"The primary meaning of the word 'beer' is a malt and fermented liquor containing more or less alcohol." Webster's Dict.; Cent. Dict.; Black, Intoxicating Liquors. "There is a secondary sense in which the word 'beer' is used to describe certain non-alcohol beverages, as root or persimmon beer; but, when so used, it is generally preceded by a word descriptive of the kind of beer referred to, as persimmon beer, root beer, and the like. When the word 'beer' is used alone, without the descriptive word, it is generally, almost universally, taken as referring to the malt liquor sold under that name." Williams v. State, 77 S. W. 597, 598, 72 Ark. 19 (quoting Black, Intoxicating Liquors).

"Beer" is an alcoholic liquor made from any farinaceous grain, but generally from barley, which is first malted and ground, and its fermentable substance extracted by hot water; a fermented extract of the roots or products of various plants, as ginger, spruce, molasses, beet, etc. People ex rel. Land v. O'Reilly, 114 N. Y. Supp. 258, 261, 129 App. Div. 522.

Code, § 2382, prohibits the sale of intoxicating liquor, including alcohol, ale, wine, beer, and malt liquor except as otherwise provided. Held, that the word "beer," as so used, meant a fermented liquor made from malted grain, and that since the term was used in the alternative with malt liquor a manufacturer could not bring a malt liquor within the class of liquors not prohibited by the statute by giving it a name other than that of beer, nor by so adding a qualifying descriptive term to the word "beer" used in the name, and that any liquor manufactured from a malted grain by a process involving fermentation, no matter how slight, and irrespective of the amount of alcohol actually contained therein, was within the statutory prohibition. Sawyer v. Botti, 124 N. W. 787, 788, 147 Iowa, 453, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1007.

Cider is not "beer" or any mixture thereof. Donithan v. Commonwealth, 64 S. E. 1050, 109 Va. 845.

A Japanese alcoholic beverage made from rice by processes similar to those in making beer, which resembles still wine in its percentage of alcohol, which in quality is only remotely similar to beer, is not sufficiently similar to warrant its classification as such, under Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule H, par. 297, 30 Stat. 174. Nishimura v. United States, 131 Fed. 650, 651.

As intoxicating liquor

"The word 'beer,' without restriction or qualification, denotes an intoxicating malt liquor and is within the meaning of the words 'intoxicating liquor' as used throughout the statute." Feddern v. State, 113 N. W. 127, 129, 79 Neb. 651.

"Beer" is defined as a beverage made from various formulas containing different degrees of alcoholic strength. Under the decisions of the Texas courts, "beer" is not an intoxicant; and evidence of a sale of beer is not proof of the sale of an intoxicant, in the absence of further description of the beer sold or of evidence as to its intoxicating character. Potts v. State (Tex.) 89 S. W. 836.

A charge of unlawfully selling intoxicating liquor is sustained by proof of sale of "beer," without any further description or testimony that it was intoxicating. State v. Carmody, 91 Pac. 446, 447, 50 Or. 1, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 828.

When the word "beer" is used without restriction, it denotes an intoxicating malt liquor, and being included by the constitutional provision among intoxicating liquors, one unlawfully handling it has the burden of showing that it is not intoxicating if he so claims. Rochester Brewing Co. v. State, 109 Pac. 298, 26 Okl. 309; Antonelli v. State, 107 Pac. 951, 958, 3 Okl. Cr. 580; Id., 107 Pac. 953, 3 Okl. Cr. 585; Petitti v. Same, 107 Pac. 954, 955, 3 Okl. Cr. 587.

The word "beer," as used in an indictment for the illegal sale of liquor, means, in the common acceptance, a fermented liquor. The Missouri Statute (Rev. St. 1899, § 3016) regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors defines intoxicating liquors to mean "fermented, vinous, or spirituous liquors, or any composition of which fermented, vinous, or spirituous liquors is a part." State v. Watts, 74 S. W. 377, 101 Mo. App. 658.

In a prosecution for unlawfully giving intoxicating liquor to a minor, evidence that the minor was in accused's saloon, that he had a bottle in his hand, and drank therefrom a liquor that smelled like beer, is sufficient to authorize instructions that the minor was given intoxicating liquor, as the word "beer," when employed in connection with sales in a place where intoxicating liquors are usually sold, means an intoxicating drink. Hall v. People, 134 Ill. App. 559, 560.

Unnecessary allegations in an information are material, and must be proved as alleged, if they are descriptive of the identity of what is essential; so, under an information charging accused with unlawfully selling "distilled, fermented, and intoxicating liquor, to wit, one bottle of beer," the state must prove that the liquor sold came within the generic term "beer," the word "beer" including any liquor made from any malted grain, but commonly from barley malt, with hops, etc., and having different names, according to its strength or quality, such as ale, porter, etc. In a prosecution for selling intoxicating liquor in violation of the local option law (Laws 1887, p. 179), the allegation under a videlicet of the particular kind of liquor sold, as "intoxicating liquor, to wit, one bottle of beer," will excuse strict proof of the specific kind of liquor sold, unless the word "beer" is descriptive of the offense; Rev. St. 1909, § 7239, applicable to local option elections, requiring them to be held "to determine whether or not spirituous or intoxicating liquors shall be sold within the limits of such city," without specifying any particular kind of liquor. State v. Burk, 131 S. W. 883, 885, 151 Mo. App. 188.

"* * * The preponderance of authority is to the effect that when the word 'beer' is used, without any restriction or qualification, it denotes intoxicating malt liquor; that when occurring in an indictment or complaint or in the evidence, it is presumed to include only that species of beverages; and that, being taken in this sense, it will be sufficient, unless it is shown by evidence that the particular liquor was described as nonalcoholic." A charge of unlawfully selling intoxicating liquor is sustained by proof of sale of "beer," without any further description or testimony that it was intoxicating. State v. Carmody, 91 Pac. 446, 447, 50 Or. 1, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 828 (quoting and adopting definition in Black, Intoxicating Liquor, § 17).

Judicial notice of intoxicating character

The court will take judicial notice of the fact that beer is a malt liquor. Lamble v. State, 44 South. 51, 53, 151 Ala. 86.

And that it contains sufficient alcohol to produce intoxication. State ex rel. Lyon v. City Club, 65 S. E. 730, 731, 83 S. C. 509; State v. Mitchell, 114 S. W. 1113, 134 Mo. App. 540; Vines v. State, 116 Pac. 1013, 1016, 19 Wyo. 255; Moreno v. State, 143 S. W. 156.

As malt liquor

See Malt Liquor.

As spirituous liquor

Where a person, prosecuted for illegal sale of liquor, was charged with selling "vinous and spirituous liquors," instead of alcoholic or intoxicating liquors, as was permissible, a conviction could not be sustained by proof of the sale of "beer," which, as commonly prepared, is a malt liquor. Smith v. State, 49 South. 113, 94 Miss. 255.

BEER GARDEN

A complaint charging the employment of an infant to work in a "beer garden" charges an offense under the statute prohibiting the employment of an infant to work in a place where intoxicating liquors are sold; a beer garden being such a place within the statute, since its words must be construed in the plain, ordinary meaning. State v. Hall, 123 N. W. 251, 252, 141 Wis. 80.

BEFORE

See At or Before; Die Before; On or Before.

The word "before," as ordinarily used in a note containing the on or before privilege, is inserted for the purpose of giving the payor the privilege of paying the note at any time before the date named on which payment must be made. Henry v. Lovenberg (Tex.) 128 S. W. 675, 676.

Where a patent license required a second payment of $5,000 royalty to be made on January 20, 1909, unless defendant had given and the licensor had received notice of cancellation of the contract before that date, a telegram sent by defendant to the licensor on January 20, 1909, at 12:32 p. m., was neither sent nor received "before" the date specified, and was therefore no defense to an action for the second payment. Quereau v. Computing Scale Co. of Dayton, Ohio, 133 N. Y. Supp. 501, 503, 148 App. Div. 860.

It is not a material alteration of an order for goods made subject to countermand "by" a certain time to write the word "before" over the word "by"; the legal effect of the instrument not being changed. Express Pub. Co. v. Aldine Press, 17 Atl. 608, 609, 128 Pa. 347.

Before assessment of any tax

Gen. Laws 1896, c. 46, § 6, provides that "before assessing and tax" the assessors shall give notice of the time and place of their meeting, requiring taxpayers to file a true account of all ratable estate, specifying the value at such time as the assessors may prescribe. Section 7 declares that whoever neglects to bring in such account, if overtaxed, shall have no remedy. By sections 1 to 4 the electors of a town are authorized, not only to levy a tax, but to order the time when such tax shall be assessed and paid; the assessors being required to assess and apportion the same "at the time ordered by the town." The only remedy for overtaxation is provided by Gen. Laws 1896, c. 46, and Court and Practice Act 1905, §§ 1099, 1100, providing for the filing of an account and for appeal to the superior court; the hearing on the appeal being on the account so filed, the issues being defined by section 17 to be whether the taxpayer has willfully concealed or omitted property from his account or has not placed a fair value thereon, etc. Held that the words "before assessing any tax," in section 6, c. 46, referred to the completed assessment; and hence a notice requiring taxpayers to present their accounts for assessment between two dates prior to that specified in the notice on which the assessors would meet for the purpose of assessing the tax, and as to which the ownership of the property for the purpose of taxation was to be determined, was void. Matteson v. Warwick & Coventry Water Co., 68 Atl. 577, 578, 28 R. I. 570.

Before notice of any transfer

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1909, providing that, where a claim or demand can be transferred, the transfer thereof passes an interest which the transferee may enforce, subject to any defense or counterclaim existing against the transferor "before notice of the transfer," the words quoted do not mean that a claim may be offset if it were acquired after the assignment and before notice of it, unless such claim were due at the time of the assignment or transfer. Michigan Savings Bank v. Millar, 96 N. Y. Supp. 568, 570, 110 App. Div. 670 (citing Fera v. Wickham, 31 N. E. 1023, 135 N. Y. 223, 17 L. R. A. 456; Martin v. Kunzmüller, 37 N. Y. 396; Hamilton v. Piza, 39 N. Y. Supp. 773, 6 App. Div. 598).

Before physicians of her own sex

Code Civ. Proc. § 873, providing that, in an action for personal injuries, the court in granting an order for examination of plaintiff before trial may, on application of defendant, direct that plaintiff submit to a physical examination by physicians to be designated by the court, and that, if plaintiff be a female, she shall be entitled to have such examination "before" physicians of her own sex, means the examination of a female plaintiff shall be by, and not merely in the presence of, physicians of her own sex. Potter v. Village of Hammondsport, 98 N. Y. Supp. 186, 187, 112 App. Div. 91.

Before removal

A provision in a bill of lading that the shipowner shall not be liable "for any damage to any goods, * * * notice of which is not given before the removal of the goods," construed to mean "before removal" from the ship's custody and control, is lawful and valid; and a shipper under such a bill, seeking to recover for damage to cargo, must show a compliance with its terms. The Permana, 185 Fed. 896, 397, 107 C. C. A. 416.

BEFORE OR AFTER

The statute allowing amendments "before or after judgment" means at any time. Knight, Yancey & Co. v. Aetna Cotton Mills, 61 S. E. 396, 397, 80 S. C. 213.

Before the time

Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 8709, requiring service of citation on an alleged incompetent person 14 days "before the time" fixed to hear an application for the appointment of a guardian, in computing the time the day of hearing should be included and the day of service excluded, and hence citation is properly served on the 4th day of a month for a hearing on the 17th. In re Miller's Estate (Mich.) 139 N. W. 17, 18.

Before trial

Under Rev. Code, § 183, subds. 1, 4, providing that a judgment of nonsuit may be entered by plaintiff at any time "before trial," where a trial has been entered, a motion by plaintiff for nonsuit is but an offer to abandon, and must be denied; the phrase "before trial" meaning before the commencement of the trial. Empire Ranch & Cattle Co. v. Herrick, 124 Pac. 748, 749, 22 Colo. App. 394.

BEGET

See Heirs Lawfully Begotten.

The word "beget" means to procreate, to produce, and, as used in a deed to one only for her natural life and to the heirs of her body begotten, it means the child or children begotten immediately upon and of her body. Ault v. Hillyard, 115 N. W. 1060, 1061, 188 Iowa, 239.

BEGIN

Beginning of transit

The "beginning of the transit" is the point of time when an article is committed to a carrier for transportation or started on its ultimate passage. General Oil Co. v. Crain, 28 Sup. Ct. 475, 481, 209 U. S. 211, 52 L. Ed. 754.

Beginning of trial

The calling of the case for trial and the drawing of a juror is the "beginning of the trial," within Code Cr. Proc. § 292, permitting accused, before trial begun, to file an affidavit of prejudice of the presiding judge. State v. Johnson, 124 N. W. 847, 848, 24 S. D. 590.

BEGUN

A prosecution is "begun" when an information is filed before a magistrate and a warrant is issued for defendant's immediate arrest. State v. Disbrow, 106 N. W. 263, 266, 130 Iowa, 19, 8 Ann. Cas. 190.

The provision of section 28 of the Immigration Act of March 3, 1903, c. 1012, 32 Stat. 1220, that "nothing contained in this act shall affect any prosecution or other proceeding, criminal or civil, 'begun' under any existing act or any acts hereby amended, but such prosecution and other proceedings, criminal or civil, shall proceed as if this act had not been passed," is not limited in its application to prosecutions or proceedings which had been "begun" before the passage of the act but applies to those thereafter begun under the old law, based on acts committed before its repeal or amendment. The word "begun" as here employed is not the preterit of begin, expressing that verb in its past tense; it is the past participle, performing solely the function of a connective—the verbal adjective—qualifying any prosecutions in mind, pending or future; its sole purpose being to show that such prosecution is one under the act of 1875. It was not the purpose of Congress in the employment of the word "begun," in the connection here used, to provide that there should be no prosecutions under the old statute unless they had been already begun. Congress presumably, was looking to the future, as well as to the past. It meant that in the matter of importations of this character there should be no interim of noncriminality. The amendatory statute only enlarged and tightened the preceding statute. No prosecutions could be based on the amendatory statute for acts done prior to its enactment; what Congress meant in the section preserving the right to prosecute under the statute was that no prosecutions begun under that statute, whether they were then pending or should thereafter be brought, should lapse by reason of this effort to enlarge and tighten the hold of the government upon this class of importations. It is to carry out this purpose that the word "begun" is employed, merely as a connective to identify a prosecution pending or to be brought, with the statute under which it is brought. Lang v.

United States, 133 Fed. 201, 204, 66 C. C. A. 255.

The provision of an act providing that nothing therein "shall affect any prosecution or other proceeding * * * 'begun' under any existing act hereby amended * * * and such proceeding shall proceed as if this act had not been passed" is not limited in its application to prosecution or proceedings which had been "begun" before the passage of the act but applies to those thereafter begun under the old law based on acts committed before its repeal or amendment. United States v. Standard Oil Co., 148 Fed. 719, 724 (quoting and adopting definition in Lang v. United States, 133 Fed. 201, 66 C. C. A. 255).

"Behavior," as used in Consolidation Act (Laws 1882, c. 410) § 1458, making it disorderly conduct to use any threatening, abusive, or insulting behavior, etc., means demeanor or deportment, and refers to action in the presence of others. "Belief" is that conviction which follows from the consideration of facts or evidence, while a "thought" may be no more than a mere conceit or fancy. Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. v. O'Neal, 52 South. 953, 955, 169 Ala. 83.

Judgment synonyms

As used in a stipulation of facts stating that in the judgment of the respondents the bridge in question was not a practical bridge, the word "judgment" was used as synonymous with "belief." State ex rel. Ellis v. Switzer, 112 N. W. 297, 300, 79 Neb. 78.

BELIEVE

See Good Faith Believe; Good Reason to Believe; Ground to Believe; I Believe; Reasonable Ground to Believe. Reasonable cause to believe, see Reasonable Cause.

The words "to the satisfaction of the jury" used in an instruction are equivalent to find or "believe." Terre Haute Traction & Light Co. v. Payne, 89 N. E. 413, 417, 45 Ind. App. 132.

"Believe" is nearly synonymous with rely and means to accept as true on the confidence of others. Spencer v. Hersam, 77 Pac. 418, 31 Mont. 120 (citing the Standard and Century Dicts.).

Men oftentimes express their honest convictions by the indefinite term "believe so." Strong v. State, 109 S. W. 536, 537, 85 Ark. 536, 14 Ann. Cas. 229.

A request to charge that defendant waived fraud if he gave the note in suit after he "believed" he had been defrauded does not present the question of the entertainment of a settled conviction by defendant that he had been defrauded, but to raise such question the request should have used the word "knew" instead of "believed." Smith v. McDonald, 102 N. W. 738, 739, 139 Mich. 225.

BELL

The term "bell" used in a patent for a graphophone means the amplifying horn used in sound-reproducing machinery. Victor Talking Mach Co. v. Duplex Phonograph Co., 182 Fed. 822, 823, 105 C. C. A. 254.

BELLIED OUT

A shuttle guard which is so swollen from the face of the handrail or reed cap as to allow the shuttle to leave its proper course is "bellied out." Chambers v. Wampanoag Mills, 75 N. E. 1093, 1094, 189 Mass. 529.

BELLIGERENTS

Rebels who have declared their independence, cast off their allegiance to the regular government, and organize armies and commence hostilities are "belligerents." La Rue v. Kansas Mut. Life Ins. Co., 75 Pac. 494, 496, 68 Kan. 539.

BELONG—BELONGING

See Property Alleged to Belong to Estate; Property Belonging to Estate in Bankruptcy.

"Belong to" means to be in the power of or at the disposal of. In re Hitchin's Estate, 89 N. Y. Supp. 472, 476, 48 Misc. Rep. 485.

"Belonging" is that which belongs to one, pertains to one; hence, goods or effects. Dimmick v. United States, 135 Fed. 257, 265, 70 C. C. A. 141 (quoting Webster's Dict.).

One elected on a regular party ticket "belongs" to that party within the purview of Laws 1898, c. 849, § 19, providing that members of the county board of supervisors belonging to the principal political parties shall designate a newspaper to publish the session laws. Norris v. Wyoming County Times, 82 N. Y. Supp. 823, 825, 88 App. Div. 525.

Under the constitutional guaranty of trial by jury, every court possesses, by virtue of its establishment, the power to provide itself with a jury, and such power "belongs" to the court in the most vital and integral sense and is not merely "attached" to the court as something extra to its ordinary functions, although the distinction between duties which "belong" to and which are "attached" to an office is artificial and unsubstantial. Under Laws 1907, p. 374, c. 232, requiring the judge of the district court in certain counties to perform the duties of jury commissioner, and authorizing him to appoint a jury clerk, the duties described belong to or fall within the scope of the office of judge of the district court. Moore v. Nation, 103 Pac. 107, 112, 80 Kan. 672, 684, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1115, 18 Ann. Cas. 397.

"The phrase 'belonging to' is defined by Webster thus, 'To be a part of,' in which sense it is frequently used, especially in conveyances of property." The words "belonging to" in Rev. St. 1895, art. 1884, providing that if there be a business belonging to the estate, and the disposition thereof is not especially directed by will, and it is not required to be sold to pay debts, it shall be the duty of the executor or administrator to carry on the business or to rent it, as shall appear to him to be most for the interest of the estate, "are used to express the relation of the business to be continued to the estate to be administered; that is, the business must be such as implies property which is a part of the estate to be administered by the executor or administrator." Altgelt v. Alamo Nat. Bank, 83 S. W. 6, 10, 98 Tex. 252 (citing Martin v. Cope, 28 N. Y. 180; Pender v. Pender, 18 Wkly. Rep. 309).

As expression of ownership

"Belonging" is synonymous with "owned by." In re Assessment of Property of Northwestern University, 69 N. E. 75, 77, 206 Ill. 64.

"Belonging to" is a sufficient allegation of ownership in an indictment for embezzlement. Strobhar v. State, 47 South. 4, 6, 55 Fla. 167.

Property owned by a private individual and used by him directly and exclusively for educational purposes is exempt from taxation, under Code 1906, § 4251, par. "d," as property "belonging to" a college or institution for the education of youth; the statute making no distinction between natural and artificial persons. City of Jackson v. Preston, 47 South. 547, 549, 93 Miss. 366, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 164.

The word "belonging," as used in Bennett Medical College Charter, § 8, exempting all property belonging to said corporation, means "to be the property of," and denotes title or ownership. People ex rel. v. Bennett Medical College, 94 N. E. 110, 111, 248 Ill. 608, 140 Am. St. Rep. 237.

Where testator's will after legacies to other relatives provided that "all the balance of my belongings to 'belong' to my wife," the words "belongings" and "belong" were used in the same sense, as importing full ownership. Lee v. Moore's Ex'r (Ky.) 93 S. W. 911.

Under Comp. Laws 1907, §§ 2829, 2830, providing that a homestead shall be "the absolute property of" the surviving spouse and minor children, or of the minor children if there is no surviving spouse, and that the homestead and exempt personalty "shall belong to" the surviving spouse and minor children, or where there are no minor children to the surviving spouse, or where there is no surviving spouse to the minor children, and that if the surviving spouse again marries, or when all the minor children arrive at full age, the homestead may be partitioned, a homestead set apart to the surviving spouse and minor children, or where there are no minor children to the surviving spouse, or where there is no surviving spouse to the minor children, becomes the absolute property of the person, or persons, to whom it is set apart, and it belongs to him or them, subject to incumbrances, and the other heirs of the intestate, and who had arrived at full age at the time of his death, or at the time of setting the homestead apart, have no interest in the homestead; the word, "belong" expressing ownership. Christiansen v. Robinson, 99 Pac. 458, 459, 35 Utah, 67.

Where a testator in his will directs that certain property, after the death or remarriage of his widow, "shall go to and belong to" other relatives, the words "go to and belong to" are not equivalent to pay and divide. On the marriage or death of the widow, the property "goes" (that is, moves, passes, proceeds) and belongs to (that is, comes under the physical power of and is at the disposal of) those persons to whom the legal title was transferred at his death. Thus the language used correctly describes the progress of the tangible property from the possession of the testator to that of the beneficiary, and has nothing of the meaning of "paying and dividing." In re Hitchins' Estate, 89 N. Y. Supp. 472, 476, 48 Misc. Rep. 485.

Code 1860, art. 45, §§ 1, 2, providing that the property "belonging" to a married woman should be held by her for her separate use with power to devise, and if she died intestate without issue her husband should have a life estate in her property and that her personal property should vest in him absolutely. Held, that a vested fee-simple estate in remainder, title to which was in a married woman, was real property "belonging" to her notwithstanding an intervening tenancy which deferred her actual possession thereof. Snyder v. Jones, 59 Atl. 118, 120, 99 Md. 693.

Belong to town

The phrase "town to which he belongs," within Rev. St. c. 18, § 51, providing for the furnishing of nurses, etc., to a quarantined person at the charge of the town to which he belongs, means the town in which he has his pauper settlement. Inhabitants of Eden v. Inhabitants of Southwest Harbor, 81 Atl. 1003, 1006, 108 Me. 489.

The words "the town to which he belongs," in Rev. St. 1883, c. 14, § 1, relating to the care of a diseased person at his expense if able, otherwise at that of the town to which he belongs, mean the town in which he has his pauper settlement. Inhabitants of Machias v. Wesley, 58 Atl. 240, 241, 99 Me. 17.

Belong to the owner

Code Civ. Proc. § 1200, providing that on the contractor abandoning the work the portion of the contract price applicable to the liens of others shall be fixed by deducting, from the value of the work and materials done and furnished, including materials on the ground which shall belong to the owner, the payments then due and paid, etc., refers to a case where the owner has made and recorded a valid contract with a contractor who abandons the building in an unfinished condition, and contemplates its completion by the owner, whose liability to lien claimants is limited by his contract with the contractor, but does not define the contractual relation between the contractor and his subcontractors, until the latter have brought themselves within the lien law; the words "belong to the owner" not meaning materials which have never been sold and delivered to the contractor for use in the construction of the building, but which in fact belong to some other person. Steiger Terra Cotta & Pottery Works v. City of Sonoma, 100 Pac. 714, 715, 9 Cal. App. 698.

Where a public improvement contract provided for termination at the election of the United States on the contractor's default, in which event the Secretary of the Interior might take possession of all materials "belonging" to the contractor delivered on the ground and might use the same to complete the work, rock excavated by certain subcontractors and placed in position convenient to a crusher plant to be crushed, though material placed or "delivered" within the contract, was nevertheless not the property of the contractor, and hence was not subject to appropriation by the government on terminating the contract. Tinker & Scott v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 169 Fed. 211, 215.

Belonging to or appertaining to office

The phrase "belonging or appertaining to the office," within Comp. Laws, § 11361, making the mutilation of records belonging or appertaining to the office of a township an offense, includes a statement of personal property for taxation given to the supervisors in accordance with section 3843, though there was an intention to amend the statement by substituting another therefor which was not carried out. People v. Jewell, 101 N. W. 835, 138 Mich. 620.

Belonging to and due

Where a garnishee answered that it had a certain sum of money in its possession "belonging to and due" defendant, the officer's return was properly made in conformity to Rev. St. 1899, § 388, subd. 4, providing that "where goods and chattels, money or evidences of debt are to be attached the officer shall take the same," etc., and not to subdivision 5 relating to the attachment of credits. Hefner v. Rice, 108 S. W. 590, 129 Mo. App. 667.

Belonging to the navy

An infant not eligible to enlistment in the navy, but who enters therein without the consent of his parents or guardian, is not a person "belonging to the navy," within the meaning of the federal statute, providing for the punishment of offenses committed by persons belonging to the navy. Ex parte Lisk, 145 Fed. 860, 863.

Belonging to state

Property belonging to state, see Property of the State.

The words "belonging to," in Hartford City Charter, § 132, providing that the city in making assessments for benefits may assess benefits on the real estate "belonging to" the state situated within the city, and specially benefited, etc., import beneficial ownership, but contain no implication that land on which the state has a mortgage for the benefit of the school fund may be assessed for benefits. State v. Kilburn, 69 Atl. 1028, 1029, 81 Conn. 9, 129 Am. St. Rep. 205.

BELONGINGS

By giving all the balance of his "belongings" to his wife, testator meant to give all the remainder of his property to her; the words "belong" and "belongings" having been used several times in the will. Lee v. Moore's Ex'r (Ky.) 93 S. W. 911.

A will bequeathed sums of money to various persons, including testatrix's sister and heir at law, but made no disposition of the residue of the estate after paying the amounts therein named and the debts, nor of testatrix's household furniture, clothes, and personal belongings. A codicil bequeathed to two of the legatees in the original will "all my belongings, furniture, and clothes included." Held that, by the term "belongings," testatrix did not mean money, but meant her ornaments, books, pictures, besides her furniture and clothes, which she had not disposed of by the original will. In re Koch's Estate, 96 Pac. 100, 101, 8 Cal. App. 90.

See Court Below.

BELT

See Maritime Belt.

The object of a coil clasp patented was declared to be to provide a simple and efficient clasp for mail bags, boots and shoes, gloves, trunks, valises and traveling bags, grain bags, corsets, belts, and for similar uses, and the inventor stated that the coils could, after being fastened, be pressed into various shapes, such as oval, oblong, etc. Held, that the term "belts," as used in the declared purpose of the patent, included all belts, such as machinery belts, etc., and was not confined to ladies' belts; that being its most doubtful use. Diamond Drill & Machine Co. v. Kelly Bros., 120 Fed. 282, 283.

BELT DRIVE

A "sprocket chain drive" is the equivalent of a "belt drive" as a means for propelling railway motor velocipedes. Sheffield Car Co. v. Buda Foundry & Mfg. Co., 177 Fed. 713, 715.

BELT LACER

A "belt lacer" in a factory is one whose duty the evidence showed was to look after the belting and keep it in running order. Lang v. Kansas City Bolt & Nut Co., 110 S. W. 614, 131 Mo. App. 146.

BELT RAILROAD

As common carrier, see Common Carrier.

A "belt railroad" is one which furnishes convenient means of transfer from one through line of railroad to another or others, and also furnishes opportunity for the location of manufacturing establishments needing railway facilities and making it convenient for them to exist in the neighborhood of such cities without bordering on such through lines of railway. Sometimes such "belt railroads" are constructed and maintained by independent corporations wholly distinct as to ownership from the through lines connected therewith. Toledo, St. L. & W. R. Co. v. Bond, 72 N. E. 647, 650, 35 Ind. App. 142.

BELT SHIFTERS

See Proper Belt Shifter.

BELTING

An "emery belt" does not come within the term "belting," as employed in the statute requiring the guarding of all vats, pans, saws, planers, cogs, gearing, belting, shafting, and set screws, and "machinery of every description." La Porte Carriage Co. v. Sulender, 75 N. E. 277, 281, 165 Ind. 290.

A machine consisting of rollers and knives, revolving at a high speed and set immediately below an opening in the floor, for the purpose of mixing sawdust, clay, and dirt thrown into the opening, is not a "belting" within a statute requiring all belting, cogs, gearing, etc., in manufacturing establishments to be guarded. National Fire Proofing Co. v. Roper, 77 N. E. 370, 371, 38 Ind. App. 600.

Belting, shafting, and gearing

A sprocket wheel and chain are within St. 1898, § 1636j, requiring all belting, shafting, and gearing, so located as to be dangerous to employes in the discharge of their duties, to be securely guarded or fenced. Under St. 1898, § 1636j, requiring all belting, shafting, and gearing, so located as to be dangerous to employes in the discharge of their duties, to be securely guarded or fenced, findings that an unguarded sprocket wheel causing injury was so located as to be dangerous to employes in the discharge of their duties, and that plaintiff was injured by it without contributory negligence in discharging his duty, are sufficient to make a case against the defendant. Schweikert v. John R. Davis Lumber Co., 130 N. W. 508, 509, 145 Wis. 632.

BENCH

The word "bench," as used in connection with a furnace in a window glass factory, is described as meaning the bottom or floor of the furnace, which is made of ground fire clay mixed with water and tamped until firm. Wilkinson Co-Operative Glass Co. v. Dickinson, 73 N. E. 957, 958, 35 Ind. App. 230.

BENCH DOCKET

The court or bench docket is not a record of the court in which its official entries are kept, but is merely a docket for the convenience of the court, and the notes of the judge are not the record entries to be incorporated in a transcript for the appeal of the case, and in determining what the record discloses the entries on such docket may not be considered. Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Johnson, 98 N. E. 683, 686, 49 Ind. App. 126.

BENCH METHOD

The term "bench method," as used in connection with the excavation of a bank of clay, means the removal of the top in such a way as to create a terrace or slope from the top down. Relly v. Troy Brick Co., 94 N. Y. Supp. 576, 578, 47 Misc. Rep. 530.

BENEFICIAL

In a will giving all testator's property to certain persons, and then providing that, if there should be a surplus, it should be paid to the named beneficiaries pro rata, the term "beneficiaries" is limited to those who survive the testator; "beneficial" being defined as receiving, or entitled to have or receive, advantage, use, or benefit. In re Jones' Estate, 134 N. Y. Supp. 859, 863, 75 Misc. Rep. 47.

An irrigation act was attacked for uncertainty in the description of those portions of the state to which it was made to apply, the alleged insufficient description being as follows: "Those portions of the state of Texas in which, by reason of insufficient rainfall, or by reason of irregularity of the rainfall, irrigation is beneficial for agricultural purposes." The appellate court, in passing on this objection, held that the act was not void for uncertainty, basing this holding on the holding of the court in the case of McGhee Irrigation Ditch Co. v. Hudson, 22 S. W. 398, 85 Tex. 587, 590, in which case it was held that a similar irrigation act, which described the portions of the state to which it applied "as those in which, by reason of insufficient rainfall, irrigation is necessary for agricultural purposes," was not void for uncertainty. The only difference in the description in that act and the act under consideration is in the use of the word "necessary," instead of the word "beneficial"; and the court held this difference immaterial. Borden v. Trespalacios Rice & Irrigation Co. (Tex.) 82 S. W. 461, 465.

BENEFICIAL ASSOCIATION

See Fraternal Association.
As charity, see Charity.

The great underlying purpose of a "beneficial association" is not to indemnify or secure against loss but to accumulate a fund from the contribution of its members for beneficial or protective purposes to be used in their own aid or relief in the misfortune of sickness, injury, or death, thus distinguishing such associations from insurance companies. Brenizer v. Supreme Council, Royal Arcanum, 53 S. E. 835, 839, 141 N. C. 409, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 235 (quoting and adopting definition in Commonwealth v. Equitable Ben. Ass'n, 18 Atl. 1112, 137 Pa. 412).

BENEFICIAL CONSIDERATION

"A distinction must be made between a 'beneficial consideration,' which is a mere inducement to enter into the suretyship contract, and a beneficial participation in the main contract. It is the latter only which takes the case out of the statute of frauds.

The promisor may receive a money consideration for his promise or he may be induced to make the contract for other valuable considerations beneficial to him, yet it will be void if not in writing; but if the performance of the main contract, to which his suretyship is collateral, is a benefit to him, a verbal promise in guaranty is sufficient." Rowell v. Smith, 102 N. W. 1, 6, 123 Wis. 510, 3 Ann. Cas. 773 (quoting and adopting definition in Stearns' Law of Suretyship, § 89).

BENEFICIAL INTEREST

See, also, Beneficially Interested.

A "beneficial interest," when considered as a designation of the character of an estate, is such an interest as a devisee takes solely for his own use or benefit and not as a mere holder of the title for the use of another. People v. McCormick, 70 N. E. 350, 352, 208 Ill. 437, 64 L. R. A. 775 (citing In re Seaman's Estate, 41 N. E. 401, 147 N. Y. 69).

Where a lease recited that the guaranty of the rent by a brewing company was in consideration of a covenant between all parties that no beer save that of the guarantor should be sold on the premises during the term, and that it was agreed that the lease should not be assigned, or the premises used for any purpose but a saloon, without the guarantor's consent, it had a "beneficial interest" in the lease, and it could not be surrendered without its consent. St. Louis Brewing Ass'n v. Kaltenbach, 84 S. W. 151, 153, 108 Mo. App. 637.

"The expression 'beneficial use' or 'beneficial ownership or interest' in property is quite frequent in the law and means, in this connection, such a right to its enjoyment as exists where the legal title is in one person and the right to such beneficial use or interest is in another, and where such right is recognized by law, and can be enforced by the courts, at the suit of such owner or of some one in his behalf. And one is also said to have the beneficial ownership of land who has done everything to entitle him to a patent from the government, and who therefore has the legal right to such patent, and all that remains to be done is for the proper officer to issue it." Montana Catholic Missions v. Missoula County, 26 Sup. Ct. 197, 200, 200 U. S. 118, 50 L. Ed. 398 (citing Wisconsin C. R. Co. v. Price County, 10 Sup. Ct. 341, 133 U. S. 496, 33 L. Ed. 687; Central P. R. Co. v. Nevada, 16 Sup. Ct. 885, 162 U. S. 512, 40 L. Ed. 1057).

BENEFICIAL LEGACY

Under Rev. Laws, c. 185, § 3, which provides that a beneficial devise or legacy to a subscribing witness shall be void, unless there are three other competent subscribing witnesses to such will, a legacy to one of the three witnesses to a codicil of all money left by testatrix to another legatee, after the death of that legatee and the payment of her funeral expenses, etc., is a "beneficial legacy," and void. Under Rev. Laws, c. 135, § 3, a legacy of money to one of three subscribing witnesses to a codicil, to be "held in trust by my executors, the income to be paid her as they think best for her support, the principal not to be used unless necessary," is a "beneficial legacy," and void. Lougee v. Wilkie, 95 N. E. 221, 209 Mass. 184.

BENEFICIAL POWER

Under 1 Rev. St. (1st Ed.) pt. 2, c. 1, tit. 2, § 79, declaring a general or special power beneficial, where no person other than grantee has by the terms of its creation any interest in its execution, a power reserved to the settlor of a trust of appointment of remainders by will among her children is not a general beneficial power, but a power in trust, and cannot be released. Newton v. Hunt, 112 N. Y. Supp. 573, 576, 59 Misc. Rep. 633.

BENEFICIAL USE

"The expression 'beneficial use' or 'beneficial ownership or interest' in property is quite frequent in the law and means, in this connection, such a right to its enjoyment as exists where the legal title is in one person and the right to such beneficial use or interest is in another, and where such right is recognized by law, and can be enforced by the courts, at the suit of such owner or of some one in his behalf. And one is also said to have the beneficial ownership of land who has done everything to entitle him to a patent from the government, and who therefore has the legal right to such patent, and all that remains to be done is for the proper officer to issue it." Montana Catholic Missions v. Missoula County, 26 Sup. Ct. 197, 200, 200 U. S. 118, 50 L. Ed. 398 (citing Wisconsin C. R. Co. v. Price County, 10 Sup. Ct. 341, 133 U. S. 496, 33 L. Ed. 687; Central P. R. Co. v. Nevada, 16 Sup. Ct. 885, 162 U. S. 512, 40 L. Ed. 1057).

Complainant owned several hundred acres of land, which it improved at great expense for a summer resort. On the lands is Cascade Cañon through which a small, precipitous stream flows. The seepage from the flow of the stream and the mist and spray from its falls produces a luxuriant and exceptionally beautiful growth of vegetation on the floor and sides of the cañon, thus rendering the cañon and the stream with its falls flowing through it rare in beauty and the chief attraction of the resort, and they were so advertised by complainant. Held, that such use of the cañon and the stream and its falls therein constituted a "beneficial use" and operated as an appropriation of the waters in said stream within the requirements of Const. Colo. art. 16, § 6, conferring the right to divert the unappropriated waters of any natural stream to beneficial uses, and that said waters could not thereafter be impounded above the cañon and falls and piped away by defendant and used to generate electricity for sale as a commodity. Cascade Town Co. v. Empire Water & Power Co., 181 Fed. 1011, 1016.

BENEFICIALLY ENTITLED

Testator devised the residue of his estate to a son, as trustee, to be managed for 20 years, with directions that from the net income the annuity of a specified sum should be paid to testator's three children, and provided for the disposition of the income in case any of the children died during the period, and for the distribution of the residue at the end of the period, and for the contingency of each of the children dying prior to the expiration of that period without issue surviving the period. Under Hurd's Rev. St. 1901, c. 120, § 366, imposing a tax on the transfer of property by will where one becomes "beneficially entitled in possession or expectation to any property or income thereof," the residuary estate could not be taxed until the expiration of the 20-year period; for until that time it could not be known who would be beneficially interested therein. People v. McCormick, 70 N. E. 350, 352, 208 Ill. 437, 64 L. R. A. 775.

BENEFICIALLY INTERESTED

See, also, Beneficial Interest.

A city is the party beneficially interested in mandamus to compel its treasurer to deposit the money in his hands belonging to the city, in a bank designated by an ordinance of the city from which it would receive interest on the money so deposited within Comp. Laws 1897, § 2762, providing that mandamus shall issue on the information of the party beneficially interested. Territory v. Matson, 113 Pac. 816, 818, 16 N. M. 135.

Where the relator in a mandamus proceeding is a resident and taxpayer of a school district, the board of trustees of which have removed the schoolhouse site contrary to law because without a vote of the electors, so that children are required to go three and one-half miles further to school, and are likely to be deprived of school benefits, because of the danger in crossing a river, etc., he is a "party beneficially interested," within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. 1896, § 1962, providing that a writ of mandamus must be issued upon affidavit on the application of the party beneficially interested. State ex rel. Bean v. Lyons, 96 Pac. 922, 928, 37 Mont. 354.

Under Rev. Codes 1905, § 7811, requiring an application for a writ of certiorari to be made by the party beneficially interested, a citizen and taxpayer of territory sought to be included in a city by extension of its limits is a party beneficially interested, and certiorari to review such proceedings was properly brought in the name of the state on the relation of such taxpayer. State ex rel. Johnson v. Clark, 131 N. W. 715, 720, 21 N. D. 517.

The plaintiff is a citizen of Weir, the owner of a home there, and the head of a family. He is a coal miner by trade and the superintendent of several coal mines in his vicinity. He desires and intends to attend the school of mines and metallurgy created by chapter 30, Laws of 1911, and educate himself in the branches of learning required to be taught there, having already taken a considerable portion of the courses of study provided for, and he has a son whom he desires and intends to educate at the school. Held, he is entitled to maintain an action of mandamus in his own name to compel the establishment of the school under section 715 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that the writ of mandamus may issue on the information of "the party beneficially interested." Young v. Regents of University of Kansas, 124 Pac. 150, 152, 87 Kan. 239.

The phrase "party beneficially interested," in a statute giving the party "beneficially interested" the right to bring mandamus to compel the canvass of votes cast at an election, will not receive a close construction but must be applied liberally to promote the ends of justice. Under Code, § 2448, providing that in cities of more than 5,000 inhabitants intoxicants may be sold with the consent of a majority of the voters but in towns of less population 80 per cent. of the voters must assent, and sections 2450 and 2453 providing that the sufficiency of the voters' consent may be questioned by any citizen, and requiring the county auditor to keep for the inspection of any citizen all papers required, individual citizens of a city may enjoin the retaining of names on the census roll fraudulently placed there to show more than 5,000 inhabitants, thus permitting saloons to operate on a consent of a bare majority of the voters; and, in a suit to correct a census enumeration of a city fraudulently padded to show a population of more than 5,000, the census enumerator is a proper and necessary party defendant and liable for costs. Semones v. Needles, 114 N. W. 904, 906, 137 Iowa, 177, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1156, 15 App. Cas. 1012 (quoting in support of definition State ex rel. Byers v. Bailey, 7 Iowa, 390).

Under Rem. & Bal. Code, § 1028, providing that a writ of prohibition shall issue in proper cases on the application of a person "beneficially interested," a taxpayer without other interest may not obtain a writ of prohibition to restrain the summoning and impaneling of a grand jury for error in drawing the same. State ex rel. Hanna v. Main, 113 Pac. 632, 633, 62 Wash. 242, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 255.

Civ. Code 1901, par. 3794, provides that quo warranto may be brought by the district attorney on the verified complaint of any person against any person who usurps any public franchise. Civ. Code 1901, par. 307-1, provides that mandamus shall issue on the application of the party beneficially interested. Held, that as any person may lay the complaint before the district attorney upon which it may become his duty to bring quo warranto, if he unlawfully refuses to act, the person complaining is the person "beneficially interested" in the subject-matter of a writ of mandamus to compel his appropriate action, and hence entitled to the writ. Duffield v. Ashurst, 100 Pac. 820, 822, 12 Ariz. 360.

Personal Property Law provides that, upon the written consent of all the persons beneficially interested in a trust in personal property, the creator of the trust may revoke it. Section 11 provides that the same rule which regulates future estates in land is applicable to future estates in personal property. Real Property Law, §§ 35, 36, provide that an estate in which the right of possession is postponed to a future time is an estate in expectancy, and that all expectant estates except such as are enumerated in this article are abolished, and expectant estates are divided into future estates and reversions. Section 59 provides that an expectant estate is descendible, devisable, and alienable in the same manner as an estate in possession. A trust deed provided that the settlor should receive the income from the trust fund for life, and, if he left surviving a wife and children, the fund should be divided equally between them, but that, if the settlor died without wife or children or issue of children surviving, the income should be paid to the settlor's mother and brother during her life and upon her death the whole to the brother, or, if either the mother or brother died before the death of the settlor, the income should be paid to the survivor during life, and upon termination of the trust the trustee should pay over the principal fund to such persons as at said time might be the settlor's next of kin on his father's side. Held, that a brother and nephew of the settlor's deceased father were not "beneficially interested" in the estate within the meaning of section 23, as their interest was not devisable, descendible, or alienable, and hence the settlor could revoke the trust without their consent. Robinson v. New York Life Ins. & Trust Co., 133 N. Y. Supp. 257, 266, 75 Misc. Rep. 361.

BENEFICIARY

See Lawful Beneficiary; Principal Beneficiary.

A "beneficiary" is defined as one who receives a benefit or advantage: a person to whom a policy of insurance effected is payable. State v. Willett, 86 N. E. 68, 71, 171 Ind. 296, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 197 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 750).

Any person who derives any advantage from another's beneficence may be styled a "beneficiary," with equal propriety as one for whose benefit his trust is created. Nicols v. Board of Police Pension Fund Com'rs, 82 Pac. 557, 558, 1 Cal. App. 494.

A remainderman is a beneficiary, within Real Property Law, Laws 1896, p. 574, c. 547, § 91, providing that a substitute trustee shall not be appointed till the beneficiaries of the trust are brought into court by notice. In re Earnshaw, 112 N. Y. Supp. 197, 199.

The term "beneficiary," as used in insurance, means such person as should stand in the capacity of the beneficiary according to the established course of the insurance business of the company with its policy holders when the policy becomes payable. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Hooppel, 74 Atl. 467-469, 76 N. J. Eq. 94.

The word "beneficiary" does not appear to be recognized by lexicographers as having the precise meaning usually given it when employed in actions to recover damages by wrongful death, but to designate the person beneficially interested in a trust, being so defined by statute in some states, and the word is also used to designate a person to whom a policy of insurance is payable. Phoenix Ry. Co. v. Landis, 108 Pac. 247, 248, 13 Ariz. 80 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 750).

Where the by-laws of a police benefit association, as they stood at the time decedent became a member, gave his sister, whom he had designated as beneficiary, no right as against the association on his death within 18 months after becoming a member, but in the meantime the by-laws were amended by a provision that, if a member in good standing for 1 month or over were killed in the discharge of his duty, his "beneficiary" might receive the benefits, but that no one should receive such benefits excepting the wife, child, father, or mother of the member, and on the death of the member 11 months after joining the association the association paid the benefit into court, his sister was not entitled to the benefit as against his widow; the term "beneficiary," as used in the amendment, including not only the beneficiary designated by the member, but also a beneficiary specified in the by-laws. Boyle v. Fitzgerald, 131 N. Y. Supp. 469, 471, 146 App. Div. 668.

The word "beneficiary" appropriately designates an assignee of a life insurance policy as well as what is ordinarily termed the beneficiary; any person, whether as assignee or otherwise, who is entitled to take under a policy of life insurance being in a broad sense a beneficiary, though a mere beneficiary is not an assignee. Stoll v. Mutual

Ben. Life Ins. Co., 92 N. W. 227, 279, 115 Wis. 558.

In a will giving all testator's property to certain persons, and then providing that, if there should be a surplus, it should be paid to the named beneficiaries pro rata, the term "beneficiaries" is limited to those who survive the testator; "beneficial" being defined as receiving, or entitled to have or receive, advantage, use, or benefit. In re Jones' Estate, 134 N. Y. Supp. 859, 862, 863, 75 Misc. Rep. 47.

BENEFICIARY CERTIFICATE

A "beneficiary certificate" of a fraternal association is a contract of insurance subject to the same rules of interpretation as other contracts. Bornstein v. District Grand Lodge No. 4, Independent Order B' Nai B'rith, 84 Pac. 271, 272, 2 Cal. App. 624.

The word "benefit," as used in the definition of valuable consideration to the effect that it may consist of a "benefit" to the promisor, means that the promisor has in return for his promise acquired some legal right to which he would not otherwise have been entitled. Harness v. McKee-Brown Lumber Co., 89 Pac. 1020, 1022, 17 Okl. 624 (quoting Page, Contracts, vol. 1, par. 274).

"Benefited" means enhanced in value. Williams, Belser & Co. v. Rowell, 78 Pac. 725, 726, 145 Cal. 259.

Where an owner of land granted a right of way to a railroad company with the understanding and intention that the company would perform switching services for two furnaces located on the land, a switching contract between the owner's lessee and the railroad was for the benefit of the owner, within the rule that a contract may be enforced by one for whose benefit it is made. Baird v. Erie R. Co., 132 N. Y. Supp. 971, 978, 148 App. Div. 452.

Where a will offered for probate is contested, the "benefit" derived therefrom inures to the successful claimants, which is the benefit contemplated by the rule making the expenses payable out of the estate as a bene-

"Ordinarily when we speak of 'benefits' to us, we mean and refer to what is advantageous to us, whatever promotes our prosperity, or enhances the value of our property, or property rights, or rights as citizens, as contradistinguished from what is injurious." The term "benefits" within a statute providing that foreign corporations failing to comply with certain requirements shall not be entitled to the "benefits" of the corporation laws of the state does not include the right to sue. A. Booth & Co. v. Weigand, 83 Pac. 734, 740, 30 Utah, 135, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 693.

Where a mortgage payable to a corporation was assigned as collateral security to the first indorser of notes of the corporation, he being financially responsible, a president of the corporation as second indorser, having received no part of the funds derived from the notes, was not a "person benefited" by the assignment within the bankruptcy law (Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 60b, 30 Stat. 562) so as to render him liable for the amount or value of the mortgage. Page v. Moore, 179 Fed. 988, 989.

A transfer of property by an insolvent debtor by means of which a note given by him and a surety was paid, and the purchaser, who had obligated himself to indemnify the surety against loss thereon, was released from his liability, was one by which such purchaser was "benefited" within the meaning of Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 60b, 30 Stat. 562, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 13, 32 Stat. 800, and, where the other elements of a voidable preference were present, the property or its value is recoverable by the debtor's trustee in bankruptcy. Huntington v. Baskerville, 192 Fed. 813, 816, 113 C. C. A. 137.

Of separate property

A rental contract of a farm constituting the separate property of a married woman, which gives to the lessee the use of the farm for his own benefit for a year in consideration of a stipulated rental in money, is not a contract for the benefit of the separate property of the wife within Rev. St. 1895, art. 2970, authorizing a wife to incur debts for the benefit of her separate property, and she is not bound thereby. Taylor v. Thomas (Tex.) 145 S. W. 1061.

BENEFIT CERTIFICATE HOLDER

A "benefit certificate holder" of a fraternal insurance society is one who has been initiated and has also received a benefit certificate. Tracy v. Supreme Court of Honor, 93 N. W. 702, 704, 4 Neb. (Unof.) 189.

BENEFIT FROM PUBLIC IMPROVEMENT

"Benefits" flowing from a public improvement are both general and special; general benefits consisting in increase in the value of land common to the community in general, and special benefits consisting of that increase in the value of land caused immediately by the construction of the improvement. Beveridge v. Lewis, 70 Pac. 1083, 1085, 137 Cal. 619, 59 L. R. A. 581, 92 Am. St. Rep. 188.

The rule that the cost of a municipal improvement, if assessed against abutting property, must be assessed in proportion to the amount of "benefits" accruing to the property owners only requires that there should be some rule of apportionment of the whole charge, having reference to the benefit received by the respective owners, and not that no owner should be charged in excess of actual benefits received. Harton v. Town of Avondale, 41 South. 934, 937, 147 Ala. 458 (citing Mayor and Aldermen of City of Birmingham v. Klein, 7 South. 386, 89 Ala. 461, 8 L. R. A. 369; City Council of Montgomery v. Moore, 37 South. 294, 140 Ala. 650).

An original assessment roll in proceedings by drainage commissioners to levy an assessment for paying for a ditch contained a column headed "benefits," one headed "damages," and a third headed "total benefits," and the column headed "damages" was blank so far as the property of an objector to the assessment was concerned. Held, that it would be presumed that an entry in the column headed "benefits" showed benefits in excess of damages. Commissioners of Fountain Head Drainage Dist. v. Wright, 81 N. E. 849, 850, 228 Ill. 208 (citing Lovell v. Sny Island Levee Drainage Dist., 32 N. E. 600, 159 Ill. 188; Huston v. Clark, 112 Ill. 344).

BENEVOLENCE

"Benevolence" is an act of kindness or charity. In re Graves' Estate, 89 N. E. 672, 673, 242 Ill. 23, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 283, 134 Am. St. Rep. 302, 17 Ann. Cas. 137.

"Benevolence" includes all acts or gifts prompted by good will or kind feelings and may be entirely independent of any thought or intention of charity. The recipient or beneficiary may be well-to-do and not in need of charity. The word "benevolent," as used in a bequest in trust for charitable and benevolent institutions in a city, is coupled with the word "charity," and the institutions intended as beneficiaries must be both charitable and benevolent, and the word "benevolent" means charitable. People v. Powers, 41 N. E. 432, 433, 147 N. Y. 104, 35 L. R. A. 502.

"Benevolence" is the doing of a kind or helpful action toward another under no obligation except an ethical one; it includes all gifts prompted by good will or kind feeling toward the recipient, whether an object of charity or not. A benevolent society does not include a society organized for mutual benefit and advantage of its members, and not merely from motives of charity, or with the desire or the design of doing good to others, which is the very essence of "benevolence." State v. Dunn, 46 S. E. 949, 950, 134 N. C. 663 (citing and adopting Black's Law Dict.).

BENEVOLENT

"Benevolent" means having a disposition to do good; possessing or manifesting love to mankind and a desire to promote their prosperity and happiness; disposed to give to good objects; kind; charitable. State v. Dunn, 46 S. E. 949, 950, 134 N. C. 663 (citing and adopting Webster's Dict.; State ex rel. Attorney General v. Critchett, 32 N. W. 787, 37 Minn. 13; Foster v. Moulton, 29 N. W. 155, 35 Minn. 458; Gorman v. Russell, 14 Cal. 531).

Laws 1907, c. 408, § 2, exempts from taxation all that part of any building, together with the ground on which it stands, belonging to any benevolent or charitable corporation or organization, situated under any lodgeroom, etc., used by such corporation, or the compartments, etc., used as appurtenants to such lodge, when such part of the building is leased for legitimate purposes, and the net rents or earnings are applied exclusively to benevolent or charitable purposes. Held, that a part of the rents of a building owned by a subordinate lodge of Odd Fellows which was applied to paying for the property was profits, so that the rents were not applied exclusively to "benevolent and charitable" purposes so as to exempt the property from taxation. Summuduwoot Lodge No. 3, I. O. O. F., v. Spaeth, 106 Pac. 1077, 1078, 81 Kan. 894.

Charitable distinguished

"Benevolent" is wider than "charitable" in its legal signification. A trust for benevolent and charitable objects, as the trustee may select, is void as being indefinite and vague. Hegeman's Ex'rs v. Roome, 62 Atl. 392, 393, 70 N. J. Eq. 562.

"Benevolent" includes objects and purposes that are not charities. Van Syckel v. Johnson, 70 Atl. 657, 658, 80 N. J. Eq. 117.

Comp. Laws, §§ 8258-8263, as originally enacted, was entitled "An act to provide for the incorporation of benevolent societies," and authorized a corporation to provide for the relief of distressed members, the visitation of the sick, etc., and such other "benevolent and worthy purposes" and objects as affect the members of the corporation, and gave the corporation power to receive and enjoy property, and to sell, mortgage, and dispose of the same, provided that the proceeds arising from all estate and investments should be devoted exclusively to the benevolent purposes and objects of the corporation. Held, that the word "benevolent" has a much broader significance than the word "charity," and includes things which are in no sense charities, and refers to the kind intention of the donor rather than the condition of the donee, meaning in its broader sense liberality and generosity, though its meaning may be circumscribed by the circumstances, and, as used in the statutes, it denotes acts tending to relieve misfortune and confer a benefit on a needy member, though he may not be an actual object of charity, so that a conveyance by the society to all of its members was not a disposition for "benevolent purposes," and hence was beyond the powers of the society. German Corp. of Negaunee v. Negaunee German Aid Society, 138 N. W. 343, 345, 172 Mich. 650 (quoting 1 Words and Phrases, pp. 753-756).

Charitable synonymous

The words "benevolent" and "charitable" are nearly synonymous in meaning, and as frequently used are entirely so, especially when applied to purposes or institutions. Kansas Masonic Home v. Board of Com'rs of Sedgwick County, 106 Pac. 1082, 1086, 81 Kan. 859, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 702.

"Charity" is defined as "benevolence." Any act of kindness or benevolence and "charitable" is defined as pertaining to or characterized by charity, benevolence, or kindness. In re Graves' Estate, 89 N. E. 672, 673, 242 Ill. 23, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 283, 134 Am. St. Rep. 302, 17 Ann. Cas. 137.

"Charity" is a gift to promote the welfare of others in need, and "charitable," as used in constitutional and statutory provisions relating to exemptions from taxation, means intended for charity, and "benevolent," as used therein, is entirely synonymous with "charitable." Mason v. Zimmerman, 106 Pac. 1005, 1008, 81 Kan. 799.

Where testatrix authorized her executors to divide the estate among such religious, charitable, and benevolent purposes as they might think best, the use of the word "benevolent," in connection with the words "charitable and religious," did not render the trust so indefinite that it became inoperative. Though the word "benevolent" covers a wide field, its essential and substantial meaning is familiar and easily grasped. It is little, if any, more indefinite than the word "charitable," and in many cases it has been held to have been synonymous with "charitable." In re Dulles' Estate, 67 Atl. 49, 50, 218 Pa. 162, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1177.

In a bequest to be divided among such benevolent charitable and religious institutions and associations as might be selected by the testator's executors, the word "benevolent" should be construed synonymous with "charitable," and a bequest was therefore not void for uncertainty. In re Murphy's Estate, 39 Atl. 70, 71, 184 Pa. 310, 63 Am. St. Rep. 802.

BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION

A cemetery corporation, selling lots to members of the public generally, is not a charitable or benevolent corporation within St. 1909, c. 490, pt. 1, § 5, cl. 3, exempting from taxation the property of "benevolent" and "charitable" institutions. Town of Milford v. Commissioners of Worcester County, 100 N. E. 60, 61, 213 Mass. 162.

Rev. St. 1909, § 7109, requires a benevolent association to be a corporation, society, or voluntary association, organized and conducted for the sole benefit of its members and their beneficiaries and not for profit, to have a lodge system with ritualistic form of work, and a representative form of government, making provision for payment of benefits for death to be derived from assessments collected from its members. Held, that the question whether an insurer was a benevolent association within the meaning of the statute was to be determined in part from the certificate of incorporation and in part from facts showing that its business was conducted in the manner prescribed by statute for benevolent associations, and if an association did not have a lodge system or ritualistic form of work and did not pay benefits entirely from assessments, it would not be a benevolent association within the statute. Thompson v. Royal Neighbors of America, 133 S. W. 146, 149, 154 Mo. App. 109.

A Young Men's Christian Association was incorporated for "the improvement of the spiritual, mental, social and physical condition of young men," with a membership made up of active members with the exclusive right to vote and hold office, of associate members enjoying all other privileges, and limited members, not permitted to use the gymnasium and other means of amusement, together with sustaining members, and unlimited members, who paid certain fees annually for privileges; there being no religious test applied to associate members. The association work included services in different school houses and churches at its own expense, educational classes, charging a small fee; but never conducted at a profit, classes in rowing, swimming, etc.; and it also maintained a reading room open to the public, and held meetings for social purposes, public receptions, etc. It depended for support mainly upon subscriptions, derived no profit from its work, had no capital stock, and no paid officers, except a secretary. Held, that the association was a benevolent or charitable corporation, within St. 1909, c. 490, pt. 1, § 5, cl. 3, and that funds held in trust for it were exempt from taxation. Little v. City of Newburyport, 96 N. E. 1032, 1033, 210 Mass. 414, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 425.

An association formed to extend aid to sick members and to defray burial expenses of their dead from funds accumulated from initiation fees and monthly dues is not a benevolent or religious society, within a code provision relating to misdemeanors of treasurers of such societies. State v. Dunn, 46 S. E. 949, 134 N. C. 663.

BENT

A contrivance used to place the top of a rock crusher into position and consisting of two upright pieces and a crosspiece some ten feet long connecting the two uprights is a "bent." Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. Jones, 92 S. W. 244, 246, 77 Ark. 367, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 837, 7 Ann. Cas. 430.

BEQUEATH

See Give and Bequeath; Give, Devise and Bequeath.

Devise synonymous

"Bequeath" is synonymous with "devise" when used with reference to a gift of real estate. Gannon v. Albright, 81 S. W. 1162, 1163, 183 Mo. 238, 67 L. R. A. 97, 105 Am. St. Rep. 471.

The word "bequeath," when expressly applied to real estate, is equivalent to the word "devise"; words of inheritance being made unnecessary by 3 Gen. St. 1895, p. 3763, § 35. Centenary Fund & Preachers' Aid Soc. of New Jersey Annual Conference of Methodist Episcopal Church v. Lake, 66 Am. 601, 72 N. J. Eq. 808.

While the word "devise" is the appropriate term to pass title to real estate, and "bequeath" the term applicable to gifts of personal property, a strict adherence to technical words is not necessary to give effect to a testator's intent, and the fact that the word "devise" is not used does not prevent the title to real estate passing by the use of the word "bequeath." Mills v. Tompkins, 97 N. Y. Supp. 9, 10, 110 App. Div. 212.

In a strictly modern legal sense, the word "bequeath" is the appropriate term for making a gift by will of personalty, and the word "devise" for a gift of realty; but as it is evident that the testator used the former words in their popular sense, and as applicable alike to a gift by will of property of any kind, they cannot be limited to gifts of personality. In re Zien's Estate, 134 N. W. 498, 500, 117 Minn. 178.

Although the word "devise" properly and technically applies only to real estate, and "bequeath" only to personal property, they have been made interchangeable by Ky. St. 1903, § 467. Roberts v. Chenoweth (Ky.) 112 S. W. 625, 627.

Where circumstances indicated that a sale of testator's property would be necessary and the entire will showed that he probably contemplated that there should be a sale, a provision that he did "give," "devise," and "bequeath" to his two sons each $500 and $500 to three daughters, who should share equally of his estate both real and personal with the two sons, the word "devise" was not used in its technical or legal sense but as synonymous with "give" and "bequeath." Schwinger v. Anthes, 101 N. W. 335, 336, 72 Neb. 645.

In common acceptation, "bequest" and "legacy" are synonymous terms, but "bequeath" is the term generally by which a gift of personality is made in a will, and a legacy is the money or personal property bequeathed. The words "devise," "bequest," and "legacy" are not infrequently used in wills in a sense different from their strict legal meaning. It is stated in a recent work on wills that, "of the verbs used to denote the act of making a will, 'devise' is properly used of realty, and 'bequeath' of personality. Of the nouns used to name the various forms of gift, 'devise' is used of a gift of realty. 'Legacy' is used of a gift of personality in general. None of these words have so fixed a legal meaning, however, that a gift will fail because testator does not use the words descriptive of the gift or the act of giving with technical accuracy. A devise is often misnamed a 'bequest,' or 'bequest' is often used to include both realty and personality or is used of a gift of money alone. So the verb 'devise' is often used to refer to personality alone." In re Campbell's Estate, 75 Pac. 851, 853, 27 Utah, 361 (citing Page, Wills, § 2).

While the word "bequeath" is naturally applicable to personal property, yet, when associated in a will with the word "give," it is capable of transmitting real estate if such appears to have been testator's intention. Campbell v. Cole, 64 Atl. 461, 462, 71 N. J. Eq. 327.

As limited to personality

"Bequeath" is properly used only in making a testamentary transfer of personal property. Harris v. Ingalls, 68 Atl. 34, 36, 74 N. H. 339; Mills v. Tompkins, 97 N. Y. Supp. 9, 10, 110 App. Div. 212.

BEQUEST

See By Right Devise or Bequest; Collateral Bequest or Devise.

Residuary bequest, see Residuary.

Specific bequest, see Specific Legacy.

"Bequests" refer to personality. Dickson v. New York Biscuit Co., 71 N. E. 1058, 1063, 211 Ill. 468.

A "bequest" ordinarily passes personal property. Clark v. Goodridge, 103 N. Y. Supp. 36, 44, 52 Misc. Rep. 239.

While the word "devise" is usually employed to denote a gift of real estate or an interest therein, the word "bequest" may mean any gift by will, whether it consists of personal or real property, and the use of the word "bequeath" in a will instead of "devise" will not necessarily lead to the conclusion that the property which a testatrix thereby intended to dispose of was personality; but where the word "bequeath" is coupled with the word "give," which is of the largest possible signification, "bequeath" is applicable as well to real as personal estate. Rickman v. Meier, 72 N. E. 1121, 1126, 213 Ill. 507.

In a strictly modern legal sense, the word "bequest" is the appropriate term for making a gift by will of personality, and the word "devise" for a gift of realty; but as it is evident that the testator used the former word in its popular sense, and as applicable alike to a gift by will of property of any kind, it cannot be limited to gifts of personality. In re Zien's Estate, 134 N. W. 498, 500, 117 Minn. 178.

A will provided, after directing the payment of debts, that testator's wife should have the family residence for life, remainder to his three daughters, and then directed that his executor should have power to convert into money any property, real or personal, of which he might die possessed, and divide and distribute it as follows: To his granddaughter one-fifth of a $2,000 life policy, the amount to be paid out of the estate if the policy was not paid in full, and to his wife the household and kitchen furniture, and immediately following this clause the will read: "It is my special desire that my wife and three daughters shall share equally in the distribution of my estate after the bequests already made are complied with." Held, that the word "bequests" was not meant to be used in a technical sense and referred to the devise of the family residence and the legacy of $400 to the grandchild. Thomas' Ex'r v. Thomas' Guardian (Ky.) 110 S. W. 583, 585.

Although properly and technically the word "bequest" applies only to personal property, it has been made interchangeable by Ky. St. 1903, § 467, which provides that "the words 'legatee' and 'devisee' shall each be held to convey the same idea; and the words 'bequeath' and 'devise' to mean the same thing; and the words 'bequest' and 'legacy' shall each be held to mean the same thing and to embrace and include either real or personal property or both." Roberts v. Chenoweth (Ky.) 112 S. W. 625, 627.

Codicil

In reply to counsel's argument that the term "codicil," used by the notary, designated the last bequest as a separate act, and not as a part of the one will, the district court said that the notary did not use the term "codicil" alone but styled the additional bequest a "codicil and addition to the will," but, if he had used the term "codicil" alone, he would have been using a term synonymous with the word "bequest" or "disposition"; that the Civil Code uses the word "codicil" as synonymous with the word "disposition" or "legacy" in the provision that no "disposition" mortis causa shall henceforth be made otherwise than by a last will or testament, but the name given to the act of last will is of no importance, and dispositions may be made by testament or under that institution of heir, legacy, codicil, donation mortis causa, or under any other name indicating the last will, provided that the act be clothed with the forms required for the validity of the testament, and the clauses it contains clearly establish that it is a disposition of last will. The conclusions of the district court were affirmed. Oglesby v. Turner, 50 South. 859, 864, 124 La. 1084.

Legacy synonymous

In common acceptation, "bequest" and "legacy" are synonymous terms; but "bequeath" is the term generally by which a gift of personalty is made in a will, and a legacy is the money or personal property bequeathed. In re Campbell's Estate, 75 Pac. 851, 853, 27 Utah, 361 (citing Page, Wills, § 2).

Held, that the word "besides" meant "together with" or "in addition to" the property first described. Joly v. Weber, 85 La. Ann. 806, 811.

BEST AND MOST APPROVED

An appliance which is "the best and most approved" is necessarily one of the safest character, so that it was not error to instruct in an action against a railroad company for injury to property by fire that defendant must show that its engine was equipped with the best and most approved appliances, etc., to arrest sparks. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hornsby, 66 N. E. 1052, 1054, 202 Ill. 138.

BEST ENERGIES

Where plaintiff, when making a contract for the exclusive agency for defendant's automobiles in New England, was carrying on the business of selling and repairing bicycles and motorcycles; and it was not contemplated that he should abandon same, but should rather enlarge it by the addition of defendant's automobiles, a provision in the contract that he was to devote his "best energies" to the sale of defendant's product did not require that he give defendant's machines his exclusive attention, but merely required that he should conduct the business in his own way, with the right to add agency to sell noncompeting automobiles. Randall v. Peerless Motor Car Co., 99 N. E. 221, 226, 212 Mass. 352.

BEST EVIDENCE

In law "best evidence" is a technical term. It does not necessarily mean that which is most credible, though generally it is supposed to refer to that fact. By the rule requiring the introduction of the "best evidence" is meant that no evidence shall be received which is merely substitutionary in its nature, so long as the original evidence can be had. The transcript of the testimony of a deceased witness, testifying at a former trial, may be proved by the official stenographic reporter and read by him as evidence when the reporter testifies that the testimony was taken down accurately and correctly transcribed. Austin v. Commonwealth, 98 S. W. 295, 297, 124 Ky. 55 (citing in support of the definition 1 Greenl. Ev. § 82).

Where a witness testified that he worked for his father and had no money, except such as his father gave him, a question on cross-examination as to whether he had not presented a claim for $115 against a certain estate and whether that sum had not been paid was not objectionable as not the "best evidence" of the presentation of the claim, which was made of record. Joyce v. Joyce, 67 Atl. 374, 375, 80 Conn. 88.

To say that certain evidence is the best kind of evidence is tantamount to saying that it is better than any other kind. Wittick's Adm'r v. Keiffer, 81 Ala. 199, 201.

BEST INTERESTS OF TERRITORY

The "best interests of the territory," which authorize a county board to organize a new school district, means the best interests of the people of the territory. In re Irons, 137 N. W. 303, 305, 119 Minn. 119.

BEST JUDGMENT

"Best judgment" means substantially the same thing as "opinion" or "belief." Harris v. State, 137 S. W. 373, 376, 62 Tex. Cr. R. 235.

BEST MANNER

The charter of a seminary provided that property held by its trustees and necessary for carrying out the design of the seminary in the "best manner" should be free from all taxation while used exclusively for such purpose. Held that, so far as the Legislature could aid the seminary, the general purpose of the seminary could be accomplished in the "best manner" only by exempting from taxation all of its property, the income from which and the use of which were exclusively devoted to the purpose of founding and maintaining the seminary as an institution of learning and not merely by exempting property actually used for buildings. Colorado Seminary v. Board of Com'rs of Arapahoe County, 71 Pac. 410, 413, 30 Colo. 507.

BEST OF ABILITY

Where one employing himself as a cheesemaker agreed that he would do the work to the "best of his ability," if his employer knew when he was employed that he was a novice in the cheesemaking trade, the quoted phrase might well mean that he should only devote such skill and industry as he possessed to the work, though it might not equal that ordinarily exercised; but, if both parties contemplated that the employé was an extraordinary skillful man in the trade, the quoted phrase might even require a higher degree of skill than ordinary. Wenger v. Marty, 116 N. W. 7, 8, 135 Wis. 408.

BEST OF HIS KNOWLEDGE AND BELIEF

The term "best of the knowledge and belief," as used in a statute providing that an order for the examination of a judgment debtor shall issue only if certain facts be made to appear by affidavit, which affidavit shall be made to the best of the knowledge and belief of affiant, does not permit an affidavit to be made on the best information and belief of affiant. Ackerman v. Green, 81 S. W. 509, 512, 107 Mo. App. 341.

BEST QUALITY

Where a contract for the construction of a public improvement specified that the "best quality of Portland cement" should be used, the contract could not be satisfied by the use of any sound imported Portland cement which would have filled the three special requirements as to tensile strength, fineness, and weight. Drainage Commission of New Orleans v. National Contracting Co., of New York, 136 Fed. 780, 792 (citing McIntire v. Barnes, 4 Colo. 287).

BEST SKILL AND DISCRETION

Where testatrix directed her trustees to invest a fund for the benefit of the beneficiary to their "best skill and discretion," such provision required the exercise of more than ordinary care and prudence in the investment of the fund, but did not enlarge the powers or discretion of the trustees. Michigan Home Missionary Society v. Corning, 129 N. W. 686, 689, 164 Mich. 395.

BET

See, also, Wager—Wagering Contract.

The legal meaning of the term "bet" is the mutual agreement and tender of a gift of something valuable, which is to belong to one of the contending parties according to the result of the trial of chance or skill, or both combined. Mayo v. State (Tex.) 82 S. W. 515, 516; Melton v. State (Tex.) 124 S. W. 910, 911; State v. Way, 98 Pac. 159, 160, 76 Kan. 928, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 603.

An agreement that the loser of a pool game shall pay the fee for the use of the table constitutes a "bet." Berry v. State, 92 S. W. 1081, 1082, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 376; Hopkins v. State, 50 S. E. 351, 122 Ga. 583, 69 L. R. A. 117, 2 Ann. Cas. 617.

The question as to whether or not a bet has been made is entirely independent of the parties thereto having any conversation between themselves with reference to the betting, and it is not necessary in order to constitute a "bet" upon a gaming table that there be an express understanding between the parties to that effect. Rainbolt v. State, 101 S. W. 217, 218, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 158.

A "bet" is ordinarily an agreement between two or more that a sum or value or some valuable thing, in contributing which all agreeing take part, shall become the property of one or some of them on the happening in the future of an event at the present an uncertainty. Thomson v. Hayes, 111 N. Y. Supp. 495, 498, 59 Misc. Rep. 425 (quoting Harris v. White, 81 N. Y. 532, 539).

A bet, like an ordinary contract, involves a concurrence of wills. There must be an offer and an acceptance thereof in accordance with its terms; and the acceptance will not be complete until it is actually or constructively communicated to the party making the offer. McQuesten v. Steinmetz, 58 Atl. 876, 877, 73 N. H. 9, 111 Am. St. Rep. 592.

In order to constitute a bet, there must be a tender or offer to bet by one party and the acceptance by the other. The party who tenders the debt is not the party to accept the bet. It is the party to whom the tender is made who is the acceptor, and a person tendering or offering a bet on a horse race was not within Acts 1903, p. 68, c. 50, § 1, making it an offense to take or accept any bet on a horse race. Windsor v. State, 79 S. W. 312, 313, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 140.

A "bet" or wager is ordinarily an agreement between two or more that a sum of money, or some valuable thing, in contributing which all agree to take part, shall become the property of one or more of them on the happening in the future of an event at the present uncertain or upon the ascertainment of a fact in dispute. Rich v. State, 42 S. W. 291, 292, 38 Tex. Cr. R. 199, 200, 88 L. R. A. 719.

A "bet" is "an agreement between two or more that a sum of money or some valuable thing, in contributing which all agreeing take part, shall become the property of one or some of them on the happening in the future of an event at the present uncertain; the mutual agreement and tender of a gift of something valuable, which is to belong to the one or the other of the contracting parties, according to the result of the trial or chance or skill, or both combined; a wager; to put to hazard a sum ascertained upon a future happening of some event then uncertain; the thing or sum wagered." Stevens v. Cincinnati Times-Star Co., 73 N. E. 1058, 1061, 72 Ohio St. 112, 106 Am. St. Rep. 586 (quoted and adopting definition in 5 Cyc. p. 684).

An intention to "settle by the payment of differences," "betting on future prices," or "closing up without delivery by the payment of differences" is equivalent to and means an intention by one who has sold for future delivery to buy on the same board for the same delivery and to offset the purchase against the sale and receive or pay the difference. Carson v. Milwaukee Produce Co., 118 N. W. 393, 395, 133 Wis. 85.

Ordinary "betting" has never been made a crime, while the keeper of a gambling house is subjected to severe punishment. Under Code Cr. Proc. § 742, requiring the information to contain a brief description of a statutory crime, an information charging defendant with engaging in bookmaking, and stating that he did quote and lay odds, by publishing the terms on which he was willing to bet against horses on the result of races, etc., but failing to allege the writing or recording of anything, was insufficient to charge a violation of Pen. Code, § 351, making it a misdemeanor to engage in bookmaking, since there can be no bookmaking without writing or recording; the word in "betting," as used in the Penal Code, implying the use of a book, or sheets of paper, or a bulletin board, or some such thing. People ex rel. Jones v. Langan, 116 N. Y. Supp. 718, 719, 182 App. Div. 893; Id., 116 N. Y. Supp. 720, 132 App. Div. 937.

Gaming distinguished

"Betting" does not constitute gaming unless a wager is laid on a game. In re Opinion of the Justices, 63 Atl. 505, 507, 73 N. H. 625, 6 Ann. Cas. 689.

"There has always been observed distinction between 'betting' and 'gambling' or the maintaining of a house or place to which people could resort to gamble. At common law wagers on different subjects were legal and might be enforced, while a gambling house or a resort for gamblers was a public nuisance. The same distinction obtains in New York where ordinary betting has never been made a crime, while the keeping of a gambling house has been subjected to severe punishment." The laying of odds alone on a horse race would not therefore constitute a crime. People ex rel. Lichtenstein v. Langan, 89 N. E. 921, 922, 196 N. Y. 260, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 479, 17 Ann. Cas. 1061.

Premium or award distinguished

"In a 'bet' there must be two parties, and it is known before the chance or uncertain event upon which it is laid is accomplished who are the parties who must lose or win. In a 'premium' or 'award' there is but one party until the act, thing, or purpose for which it is offered has been accomplished. A 'premium' is an 'award' or recompense for some act to be done. A wager is a stake upon an uncertain event." The offering of a premium to a winner of a horse race is not a 'bet' or wager within Code, § 4028, prohibiting the making of any bet or wager. Under Code, § 1109, authorizing the county agricultural societies to award premiums for the improvement of stock, a premium may be offered for the winner of a horse race. Deller v. Plymouth County Agri. Soc., 10 N. W. 872, 374, 57 Iowa, 481 (citing Alford v. Smith, 63 Ind. 58; Harris v. White, 81 N. Y. 532).

As a wager

A "bet" is defined as that which is laid, staked, or pledged as between two persons upon the event of a contract or any contingent issue, the act of giving such a pledge, and to be synonymous with "wager" applied both to the contract of betting and wagering and to the thing or sum bet or wagered. Ex parte Walsh, 129 S. W. 118, 121, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 409 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 764).

BETTING BOOK

A "betting book," as used in Act No. 57, p. 64, of 1908, forbidding gambling on horse races by betting books, is a book kept for registering bets upon the result of horse ances, and includes the whole scheme of betting. State v. Scheffeld, 48 South. 932, 934, 123 La. 271.

BETTERMENT

The improvements, for which Sand. & H. Dig. § 2590, authorizes compensation to one holding under color of title before causing possession to be transferred to the real owner after judgment in ejectment, are technically and commonly denominated "betterments"; and the definition of the term "betterments" to be found in the books is "improvements made to an estate. It signifies such improvements as have been made to the estate, which render it better than mere repairs. * * * The term is also applied to denote the additional value which an estate acquires in consequence of some public improvement, as laying out or widening a street, etc. To entitle one to betterments depends upon his bona fide supposition that he bought the title in fee." Bouvier, Law Dict. This definition is that given substantially in all jurisdictions having similar statutes. Sometimes we say the improvements must be permanent, and not merely temporary. The idea seems to pertain that the improvements are such as were added to the value of the land as it shall come into occupancy and use of the true owner; for he is the person required to pay for them, although they have been made without his consent. Greer v. Fontaine, 77 S. W. 56, 57, 71 Ark. 605.

A railroad corporation chartered to take over the properties of another corporation and to provide for its liabilities issued bonds providing that the interest thereon should be payable out of the net earnings and income of the railroad company applicable to such purpose when ascertained and fixed as provided in the mortgage securing the bonds. The mortgage provided that the fund available for interest was to be ascertained by deducting from the gross earnings and income of the railroad company all costs of repairs, renewals, etc., and reasonable betterments to the railroad equipment and property, and certain other items of expense and charges. Held, that the betterments permissible as an item of deduction related to the betterment of the equipment of the railway company, such as would benefit the railroad equipment and other property used in the operation of the railroad company, reasonable in character and proper for the economical and efficient operation of the railroad company, not limited to renewals or replacement of equipment, but including additions thereto, provided such enlargement of equipment was reasonable and proper in the economical operation of the railroad to keep its equipment in a state of efficiency to enable the company to discharge its duty to the public, but did not include the purchase or lease of other railroads or lands acquired for expansion or extension of the railroad. Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Central Trust Co. of New York, 69 S. E. 708, 712, 135 Ga. 472.

BETWEEN

Where a testator orders a division between two groups, the word "between" imports that not more than two persons or groups are set against one another. McIntire v. McIntire, 24 Sup. Ct. 196, 197, 192 U. S. 116, 48 L. Ed. 369.

As among

Where a distribution was directed to be made "between" persons more than two, the word is equivalent in meaning to "among." In re Kleeman, 115 N. Y. Supp. 982, 983, 61 Misc. Rep. 560.

The word "between" ordinarily refers to two only and not more, but is frequently used, especially by the uneducated and colloquially, in the sense of among, as referring to more than two objects. Where a trust deed provided that the proceeds of a sale should be divided equally between the beneficiaries and each of his children, the use of the word "between" did not indicate the purpose to require the division of the fund into two parts, one to the beneficiary and the other to be equally divided between the children. Jones v. Day, 62 Atl. 364, 102 Md. 99.

While, in a strictly technical sense, the word "between" implies a division between two persons or classes, yet frequently by the uneducated and colloquially it is used in the sense of "among," especially where it follows the word "divide." Rogers v. Morrell, 64 S. E. 143, 144, 82 S. C. 402, 129 Am. St. Rep. 899.

The word "between" is not always to be given a strict etymological signification, "between two," but may, where the context demands it, be construed as "among." The decisions show innumerable instances of the interchangeable use of the words. When they follow the word "divide," their general signification is very similar, and in popular use they are synonymous, though "among" denotes a collection and is never followed by two of any sort, whilst "between" may be followed by any plural number and seems to denote rather the individuals of the class than the class itself generically. Edwards v. Kelly, 35 South. 418, 420, 83 Miss. 144.

The word "between" is not always to be given a strict etymological signification, "between two," but may, where the context demands it, be construed as "among." The decisions show innumerable instances of the interchangeable use of the words. When they follow the word "divide" their general signification is very similar, and in popular use they are synonymous, though "among" denotes a collection and is never followed by two of any sort, whilst "between" may be followed by any plural number and seems to denote rather the individuals of the class than the class itself generically. Where the joint will of a husband and wife provided that, in case of the death of either, the property of the one first dying should vest in the survivor, unless the survivor marry again, when the property inuring to the survivor's benefit by the death of the other should be divided equally "between" the survivor and the children of the survivor and the deceased, the survivor did not take one half of the estate and the children the other half, but the word "between" was used in the sense of "among." Edwards v. Kelly, 35 South. 418, 420, 88 Miss. 144.

A devise to a trustee to pay from the income a specified sum monthly to a son of testator, and at his death to equally divide between testator's surviving children and a daughter of the son, is a devise to the children of testator living at his death, except the son, and to his daughter, equally; the word "between" meaning "amongst." Spencer v. Adams, 97 N. E. 743, 744, 211 Mass. 291.

Same—As per capita

Where testator bequeathed to H. (his son) and to "W., L., and G." (children of a predeceased daughter) all his notes, mortgages, and moneys, "to be equally divided between them," and also his other personal property "to be sold to the highest bidder, and the money equally divided between the legatees above named," the word "between" was intended to mean "among," and the parties took per capita, and not per stirpes. Rogers v. Morrell, 64 S. E. 143, 144, 82 S. C. 402, 129 Am. St. Rep. 899 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 768).

Where a husband and wife, having no children, executed a joint will providing that the husband transferred to the wife the right and authority over their joint property and, in case she should outlive him, to live thereon till her death, the property left thereafter to be divided equally "between" "our lawful heirs on both sides," the wife's heirs, after her death, she having survived her husband, were entitled to share in one-half of the land so devised by him per stirpes and not per capita. Knutson v. Vidders, 102 N. W. 433, 435, 126 Iowa, 511.

The word "between," if accurately used, imports that not more than two persons or groups are set against each other, and those groups are earmarked and shown to be regarded as groups. The children of the brothers of an illiterate testator take per capita, and not per stirpes, under the residuary clause of a will in which, after making a bequest to certain nephews and nieces, the testator provides for an equal division of the remainder "between my brothers Edwin and Charles children." McIntire v. McIntire, 24

Sup. Ct. 196, 197, 192 U. S. 116, 48 L. Ed. 369 (citing Ihrle's Estate, 29 Atl. 750, 162 Pa. 369; Records v. Fields, 55 S. W. 1021, 155 Mo. 314).

Testator devised the income of certain real estate to his daughter for life, and provided that at her death, should she have issue, such issue should receive one half of the income, and the other half be equally divided between testator's other heirs, as thereafter mentioned, but, should there be no issue of the daughter, then the property should revert to testator's estate, and the income be equally divided between his surviving heirs and the children of such of his heirs who had died leaving issue; that the property should not be sold, but should be kept as a source of income to his heirs. The balance of his real and personal property was given to specifically named persons. Held, that the word "heirs," as used in the will, meant children, and that the devisees under such clause took per capita, and not per stirpes; the word "between" not being used in its technical sense as a reference to two only, but as applying to a division among many. Guesnard v. Guesnard, 55 South. 524, 526, 173 Ala. 250.

Same—As per stirpes

While "between" may sometimes mean "among," a direction in a will to divide property equally between the children of one and those of another requires a division per stirpes and not per capita. Van Houten v. Hall, 67 Atl. 1052, 1053, 73 N. J. Eq. 384.

Between and including

Pub. Acts 1905, No. 200, providing for the education of children "between and including" the age of 7 and 15 years, does not apply to children who have reached their fifteenth year. Jackson v. Mason, 108 N. W. 697, 698, 145 Mich. 338.

Between piers

See Lying Between Piers.

Between two counties

"Between two counties" means having one county on one side and one on the other. Dodge County v. Saunders County, 97 N. W. 617, 618, 70 Neb. 442.

Between two points

Interstate Commerce Law, Act. Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, § 6, 24 Stat. 380, declares that it shall be unlawful for any common carrier, party to any joint tariff, to charge or receive a greater or less compensation for the transportation of persons or property or for any services in connection therewith, between any points as to which a joint rate is named thereon than specified in the schedule filed by the commission in force at the time. Held, that the words "between two points" did not limit such section to points on the established route, but that the section prohibited the transportation of property between terminals in different states at a great er or less rate than the established rate, without reference to routes. United States v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 153 Fed. 625, 627.

BEVERAGE

See For Beverage Purposes; Harmless Beverage; Sale as a Beverage.

The word "beverage" ordinarily means mixed drinks, but under the local option law (Rev. St. 1906, § 3464—25) it means intoxicating liquors given or sold to persons other than guests and drunk not for medicinal purposes. State v. Linder, 81 N. E. 753, 754, 76 Ohio St. 463.

The terms "beverage," "liquid mixture," or "decoction," as used in Ky. St. 1903, § 2557a, making the sale at retail of a beverage, liquid mixture, or decoction which produces intoxication, unlawful in a territory wherein the sale of intoxicating liquor is prohibited, are used interchangeably, each synonymous with the other. Commonwealth v. Jarvis & Williams, 86 S. W. 556, 557, 120 Ky. 334.

The mere fact that a liquid can be and is swallowed does not make it a "beverage"; the question being whether it was intended to be used as a beverage. State v. Costa, 62 Atl. 38, 41, 78 Vt. 198.

The use of liquor as a "beverage" does not mean simply that the same is to be drunk, but the word "beverage" is used to distinguish the act of drinking liquor for the mere pleasure of drinking, from its use for medicinal purposes. Gue v. City of Eugene, 100 Pac. 254, 256, 53 Or. 282 (quoting 1 Words and Phrases, p. 769).

A registered pharmacist may sell drugs and medicine containing intoxicating liquor or alcohol without a license authorizing him to sell liquor, provided the drugs and medicines are so compounded that they cannot be used as a beverage. Tonic bitters containing 30 per cent. alcohol, and capable of being used as a beverage, held a beverage, and not a medicine, and hence could not lawfully be sold by a pharmacist without a license to sell intoxicating liquors. McNiel v. Horan, 133 N. W. 1070, 1071, 153 Iowa, 630.

In view of prior legislation on the liquor traffic, the word "sale" in the title of Acts 1909, c. 1, entitled an act to prohibit the "sale" of intoxicating liquors as a beverage near a schoolhouse, where a school is kept, whether the school be in session or not, includes all sales without regard to their form or character; and the word "tipple," in section 1, declaring it unlawful "to sell or tipple" any intoxicating liquors as a beverage within four miles of such a schoolhouse, denotes a subdivision of the more comprehensive term "sale," as used in the title, and its equivalent "to sell" as used in the body; and the word "or," between "sell" and "tipple," is used in a disjunctive sense, the prohibition not being against tippie sales alone, but as well against any other sales; and the words "as a beverage" refer to a sale of liquor, not necessarily to be consumed by the immediate purchaser, but to be finally used, when it reached the consumer, as a beverage, so that a sale in wholesale quantities of intoxicating liquors, by a manufacturer thereof to a wholesaler, with only a general and promiscuous purpose, includes a beverage sale within the prohibition of the statute. J. W. Kelly & Co. v. State, 132 S. W. 193, 199, 123 Tenn. 516.

Where a contract for the sale of coal provided that the delivery should be excused for causes "beyond the control of the seller," and required delivery at the buyer's dock, the inadequacy of the buyer's unloading facilities, of which the seller had notice when the contract was made, was not a cause affecting nondelivery beyond the control of the seller, for which delivery of a balance of the coal contracted for would be excused. Pittsburgh Coal Co. v. Northy, 123 N. W. 47, 48, 158 Mich. 530.

Where plaintiff contracted to construct a steel tower complete and ship within 45 working days from the date of the contract, but was not to be "responsible for delays in transportation, strikes, fires, floods, storms, nor any other circumstance beyond its reasonable control," a delay occasioned by inability to get material was not "beyond its reasonable control" within the contract, under the rule that the general limitation will include only causes similar to those specifically mentioned. American Bridge Co. of New York v. Glenmore Distilleries Co. (Ky.) 107 S. W. 279, 283.

BEYOND SEAS

"In several of the states, the English statute of limitations has been adopted, with various modifications; but in the saving clause the expression 'beyond the seas,' is retained. These words in some of the states are construed to mean 'out of the state,' and in others a literal construction has been given to them." Green v. Neal, 31 U. S. (6 Pet.) 291, 300, 8 L. Ed. 402.

Under an indemnity policy covering only injuries "received within the United States (not including its parts beyond the seas), Mexico and Canada," the Canal Zone on the Isthmus of Panama is "beyond the seas" within the meaning of the policy. Currie v. Continental Casualty Co., 126 N. W. 164, 165, 147 Iowa, 281, 140 Am. St. Rep. 306.

The term "beyond seas," as used in the statute of limitations, means beyond the state. Relchers v. Dammeler, 90 N. E. 644, 45 Ind. App. 208.

The words "beyond seas" were construed in Murray v. Baker, 16 U. S. (3 Wheat.) 541, 4 L. Ed. 454, to mean "without the limits of the state." Osgood v. Central Vermont Ry. Co., 60 Atl. 137, 138, 77 Vt. 334, 70 L. R. A. 930; Wadsworth v. Marshall, 34 Atl. 30, 31, 88 Me. 263, 32 L. R. A. 588.

BIAS

"Bias," as applied to the competency of jurors, is synonymous with "partiality." Macon Ry. & Light Co. v. Barnes, 49 S. E. 282, 284, 121 Ga. 443.

"Bias of mind" is, until demonstrated by act, purely a mental state, and where an affidavit of objection to the regular judge of the circuit court in a contest of a local option election case stated that he was "opposed to the sale and traffic in such liquors" to the extent that he has a pronounced bias against it," without stating that he was personally hostile or biased against the litigants, and his official integrity was unquestioned, it was insufficient to show such bias or hostility as to disqualify him from sitting in the case. Erwin v. Benton, 87 S. W. 291, 292, 120 Ky. 536, 9 Ann. Cas. 264.

BIBLE

The "Bible" is the inspired word of God. The Creator of the Universe is its author. It is a book of divine instruction as to the creation of man, his relation to, dependence on, and accountability to, God. People v. Board of Education of Dist. 24, 92 N. "Bidding," within the act of 1874 (P. L. p. 73) relating to building and loan associations, requiring them to make loans by offering the money in open meeting and that the stockholder who shall bid the highest premium for the preference of priority shall be entitled to receive a loan, implies open competition at auction and is not satisfied by the submission of written offers which are dealt with in the order of priority of date. *Klein v. BIENNIAL

Under the statutes prior to 1893, the trustees of the state charitable institutions were to be appointed biennially, and hold office for the term of two years. By an act approved April 5, 1893, the separate boards were abolished, and it was provided that the Governor should biennially appoint one board of trustees for the state charitable institutions. By the amendatory act of February 23, 1905 (Acts 1905, p. 136), a seventh member was added to be appointed upon the passage of the act, his term to "expire simultaneously with that of the other six." The act of May 14, 1907, authorized the board of trustees to make contracts for the purchase of fuel for 12 months, provided this period shall not extend beyond the tenure of the office of the board. Held, that in view of the previous policy as to a fixed tenure, and the apparent construction of the law by subsequent acts, the members of the board hold office by appointment for a fixed term, for the word "biennial" means once in two years, and, while the use of the word does not necessarily impose a limitation upon the space of time which must intervene, and it may under some circumstances be held to mean that the thing in question shall occur as often as once in two years, its use in this instance carries with it the meaning of a fixed term of two years, and that appointment to membership shall conform to the expiration of the term. Bruce v. Matlock, 111 S. W. 990, 991, 86 Ark. 555.

BIENS

The word "biens," as used in the French Civil Code, means property in its general sense. Randolph v. Kraft, 55 South. 340, 341, 128 La. 743.

The Norman French term "biens," which corresponds to goods, is said to include property of every description, except estates of freehold. State v. Fontenot, 36 South. 630-633, 112 La. 628 (quoting and adopting the definition in McCaffrey v. Woodlin, 65 N. Y. 468, 22 Am. Rep. 644).

"Biens" is defined as property of every description except estates of freehold and inheritance. In the French law the term includes all kinds of property, real and personal. "Biens" are divided into "meubles," movable property, and "biens immeubles," immovable property. Lindsay v. Wilson, 63 Atl. 566, 569, 103 Md. 252, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 408 (quoting Bouv. Law Dict.).

BIGAMY

"Bigamy," as defined in Rev. St. 1899, § 2169, providing that every person having a husband or wife living who shall marry another person without this state in case where such marriage would be punishable, if contracted or solemnized within this state, and shall afterwards cohabit with such person within the state, shall be guilty of bigamy and punished, etc., makes it "bigamy" for a man having a former wife living, from whom he had not been divorced, to cohabit with another woman in Missouri after having been married to her in another state, notwithstanding such second marriage was absolutely void. State v. Stewart, 92 S. W. 878, 881, 194 Mo. 345, 112 Am. St. Rep. 529, 5 Ann. Cas. 963.

In a prosecution for bigamy, the proper certificates showing the two marriages were sufficient proof of the corpus delicti to admit a confession of defendant, as it is not necessary, in order to prove bigamy, under Code 1907, § 6389, to prove cohabitation under either the first or the second marriage, to constitute "bigamy." Reid v. State, 53 South. 254, 255, 168 Ala. 118.

Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 38, § 28, provides that whoever, having a former husband or wife living, marries another person, shall be deemed guilty of bigamy, provided that such provision shall not extend to any person whose husband or wife shall have been continuously absent for the space of five years, or to any person who is lawfully divorced at the time of the second marriage, or where the former marriage has been declared void. Held, that the naming of these exceptions should be held to exclude other exceptions not named, and that one prosecuted for bigamy is not entitled to show that the second marriage was entered into in good faith under an honest, but mistaken, belief that his first wife had obtained a divorce. People v. Spoor, 85 N. E. 207, 209, 235 Ill. 280, 126 Am. St. Rep. 197, 14 Ann. Cas. 638.

The constitutional provision prohibiting "bigamous, polygamous, plural, celestial, and patriarchal marriages" was intended to prohibit a man from having more than one wife at any one time under whatever name he might choose to designate his marriage. Toncray v. Budge, 95 Pac. 26-38, 14 Idaho, 621.

V. S. 305 (P. S. 411), provides that the State Auditor shall require all bills presented to him for allowance to be fully itemized and accompanied as far as possible with vouchers, which shall be kept in his office. Held, that the term "bill," as used in such section, includes all claims and accounts which by law may be presented to the Auditor for allowance, and the term, "vouchers" includes all books, papers, receipts, and receipted bills and documents which serve to prove the truth of the claims and accounts presented. Clement v. Graham, 63 Atl. 146, 152, 78 Vt. 290.

"The word 'bill' means charge against another in an account for future payment; to book or charge on account; an account of charges and particulars of indebtedness by the creditor to his debtor." *Hacine Wagon & Carriage Co. v. A claim of the superintendent of the poor of the county is a "bill," within Acts 1903, No. 397, establishing a board of auditors of Saginaw county, and providing that no bills against the county shall be audited in any other manner than as provided by the act, except the bills of the county drain commissioner and the expenditures authorized by the board of supervisors. Morrison v. Kent, 97 N. W. 45, 135 Mich. 38, 67 L. R. A. 365.

Return of bill as presented, see Return.

A "bill" is a draft of a proposed statute submitted to the Legislature for enactment. It cannot become a law by the action of the Senate alone or of the Assembly alone but only by the action of both, when it becomes an act of the Legislature, subject to the approval of the Governor. It may originate in either house, and when introduced in either it is before the Legislature, or else no bill can ever get before it, for each House is part of the Legislature. People ex rel. Hatch v. Reardon, 77 N. E. 970-972, 184 N. Y. 431, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 314, 112 Am. St. Rep. 628, 6 Ann. Cas. 515.

A statute providing that no law shall be enacted except by "bill" and that no "bill" shall be passed except by the assent of a majority of the members of the Legislature is equivalent to a provision that no "law" shall be passed except by the assent of a majority of such members. People v. Lawrence (N. Y.) 36 Barb. 177, 187.

Where a journal entry recited the reading and signing of certain "House bills, the title of which are set out in the foregoing message from the House. The reading of said bill having been dispensed with by a two-thirds vote," etc., the use of the singular instead of the plural form does not indicate that the reading of any one of the bills theretofore mentioned was dispensed with, for the word "said" is a word of reference, and means, as there used, "before mentioned," or "aforesaid," and though "bill" is employed in the singular, it is colored by the antecedent to which "said" refers it, namely, the "House bills" mentioned. Moreover, the error is self-correcting when the phrase is considered as a whole, for the period after the word "house" will not be permitted to separate the phrase from its relation to the subject-matter to which it obviously refers. State ex rel. Woodward v. Skeggs, 46 South. 268, 272, 154 Ala. 249.

In pleading

See Certiorari Bill; Creditors' Bill; Cross-Bill; Supplemental Bill; True Bill.

A bill in equity is in reality a petition by another name; the only difference being that a petition is less formal in its averments and prayers, and defendant is brought in by a citation, instead of by subpoena ad respondendum, and is required to answer in a shorter time. A suit in the court of chancery when brought by a citizen is commenced by petition called a "bill," and when by the Attorney General by a petition called an "information." The provision in Divorce Act (P. L. 1907, p. 474) § 10, that suits for divorce shall be commenced by petition does not operate to prevent the petitioner from alleging in such pleading the existence of a fraudulent divorce obtained in another jurisdiction and praying for the avoidance of the alleged fraudulent decree as an impediment to the granting of relief sought in the suit for divorce. Fraser v. Fraser, 75 Atl. 979, 980, 77 N. J. Eq. 205 (quoting and adopting definition in Dan. ch. Pl. & Pr. p. 1 et seq.).

BILL FOR RAISING REVENUE

"Bills for raising revenue" within Const. art. 1, § 7, cl. 1, providing that all "bills for raising revenue" shall originate in the House of Representatives, are those that levy taxes in the strict sense of the word and are not bills for other purposes which may incidentally create revenue. Bills for other than tax purposes, but which may incidentally create revenue, such as Acts Feb. 12, 1901, cc. 353, 354, 31 Stat. 767, 774, and Feb. 28, 1903, c. 856, 32 Stat. 909, for the elimination of grade crossings and for a union railway station in the District of Columbia, which provide for the payment of a sum of money to the railway companies, to be raised by a tax on property in the District, are not revenue bills which, under Const. art. 1, § 7, cl. 1, must originate in the House of Representatives. Millard v. Roberts, 26 Sup. Ct. 674, 675, 202 U. S. 429, 50 L. Ed. 1090 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Story, Const. § 880).

The phrase as used in Const. art. 5, § 32, means "bills" intended to levy taxes in the strict sense of the word and not bills for other purposes which may incidentally create revenue as Laws 1907, c. 29, authorizing the establishment of a county free high school, and providing for the taxation of property to maintain the same. Evers v. Hudson, 92 Pac. 462, 466, 36 Mont. 135.

A "bill for raising revenue" within Const. art. 5, § 33, are only those, the principal object of which is to provide for the levy of taxes in the strict sense of the word and does not include bills for other purposes which may incidentally create revenue. Thus Laws 1907-08, p. 789, c. 81, art. 9, providing for the discovery of property not listed for taxation, is not a bill for raising revenue, within such constitutional provision. Anderson v. Ritterbusch, 98 Pac. 1003, 1005, 1006, 22 Okl. 761 (quoting The Nashville, 17 Fed. Cas. 1176).

BILL IN EQUITY

As petition, see Petition.

BILL IN THE NATURE OF INTERPLEADER

See, also, Bill of Interpleader.

A bill in the nature of a bill of interpleader is one in which complainant seeks some relief of an equitable nature concerning the fund or other subject-matter in dispute in addition to the interpleader of conflicting claimants. A bill by a railroad company against construction contractors, subcontractors, etc., alleging that claims were outstanding against a subcontractor on account of work done; that a contractor was withholding the amount due the subcontractor on account of such claims; that the railroad company owed the contractor a certain sum, and praying that all persons holding time checks for work under the subcontractor be made defendants; that the subcontractor and others be restrained from suing the railroad company for their claims until the amount owed by the contractor to the subcontractor be ascertained, and applied on the claims—was good as a bill in the nature of a bill of interpleader resting on the equitable jurisdiction of avoiding a multiplicity of suits. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Moore, 123 S. W. 233, 237, 92 Ark. 446.

"A 'bill in the nature of a bill of interpleader' is one where complainant seeks relief of an equitable nature concerning the fund or subject-matter in the suit in addition to the interpleader of conflicting claimants. The complainant is not required as in strict interpleader to be an individual stakeholder without interest in the subject-matter; but the facts on which he relies must entitle him to equitable rather than legal relief, and he cannot under the guise of a bill in equity litigate purely legal claims." McKinney v. Daniels, 68 S. E. 1095, 1096, 135 Ga. 157 (quoting and adopting the definition in 5 Pomeroy's Eq. Jur. § 60).

"Bills of attainder are acts of the supreme power, pronouncing capital sentences, where the Legislature assumes judicial magistracy; and bills of pains and penalties, those which inflict milder punishments. It is believed that 'bill of attainder' is a generic term, comprehending both descriptions of acts; such, at least, is believed to be its true signification as used in our Constitutions. 'A bill of attainder may affect the life of an individual or may confiscate his property, or both.'" Norris v. Doniphan, 61 Ky. (4 Mete.) 385, 427 (quoting and adopting definition in Doe ex dem. Gaines v. Buford, 31 Ky. [1 Dana] 509).

A resolution of the Senate resulting in the expulsion of a member is not a bill of attainder within the inhibition of U. S. Const. art. 1, § 10, and State Const. art. 1, § 16. French v. Senate of California, 80 Pac. 1031, 1034, 146 Cal. 604, 69 L. R. A. 556.

BILL OF DISCOVERY

A "bill of discovery" in the old chancery court was an auxiliary or assistant proceeding to the courts of law and arose from the defects in the courts of common law to compel a complete discovery by the oath of the parties in the suit. Under the present system of courts full relief can now be obtained in the court in which the action is proceeding and the old bill has been either expressly or impliedly abolished. Wright v. Superior Court, 73 Pac. 145, 146, 139 Cal. 242.

A "bill of discovery" seeks disclosure of facts within the knowledge of the defendant, or of papers in his possession, in aid of some other action or proceeding. The discovery may be sought in the same suit in which the ultimate relief is pursued; or it may be sought merely in aid of some other proceeding pending or to be brought. The matters as to which discovery is sought must be material to the existing suit or to the one which is to be instituted. Union Collection Co. v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, 87 Pac. 1035, 1086, 149 Cal. 790.

Pub. St. 1901, c. 148, § 12, provides that all records and papers of a corporation shall be open to inspection of stockholders, and such portions thereof as have any relation to an unpaid demand of a creditor or to the collection of any demand shall be open to the inspection of the creditor and his attorney. Held that, where a creditor of a corporation was entitled as an absolute right to an inspection of certain records of the corporation, a proceeding to compel such inspection was a proceeding at law, and not in the nature of a "bill for discovery." Hub Const. Co. v. New England Breeders' Club, 87 Atl. 574, 575, 74 N. H. 282.

A "bill of discovery" may be invoked in the federal courts. As said by Sanborn, J., in Kelley v. Boettcher, 85 Fed. 56, 66, 29 C. C. A. 14: "It is true that the federal and state statutes now in force which enable the complainant to obtain such an examination have greatly diminished the need of these discoveries; but it is none the less true that these statutes have neither abrogated the right nor curtailed the power of courts of equity to enforce them. They have only added another right to that which had already been secured in courts of chancery. Every bill for relief exhibited in a court of equity is, in effect, a 'bill for discovery,' because it asks or may ask from the defendant an answer upon oath relative to the matters which it charges. The power to enforce such a discovery is one of the original and inherent powers of a court of chancery, and the right of a party to invoke its exercise is enjoyed in every case in which he is entitled to come into a court to assert an equitable right or title, or to apply an equitable remedy." Bills for discovery and relief inhered in the ancient jurisdiction of courts of chancery in England at the time of the adoption of the federal judiciary act, and this being so, the like jurisdiction inheres in the federal courts unless abolished by statutes, or changed or modified by some rule adopted by the Supreme Court. While bills of discovery in the state courts are measurably discountenanced in view of the Code authorizing the examination under deposition de bene esse of the defendant, and the compulsory production of books and papers in his possession or under his control, such Code provisions are aids to the methods of procedure in the federal courts in actions at law, but are not entire substitutes for bills of discovery and relief in equity in federal practice. So where, under contracts for the sale and delivery of large quantities of lumber of different qualities and varying dimensions, at designated places, the vendee being a nonresident of the state from that of the place of delivery, and for his better protection against mistakes or frauds of the vendor he puts an authorized agent at the place of delivery to inspect the lumber and keep memoranda thereof, but the vendor fraudulently, with the use of intoxicating liquors, renders such agent subservient to his will, or renders the protection to the vendee unavailing, whereby the evidence of the quantity and quality of the lumber delivered is especially in the breast and keeping of the vendor, a bill of discovery will lie in a suit for accounting against the vendor. McMullen Lumber Co. v. Strother, 136 Fed. 295, 301, 69 C. C. A. 433 (citing Ryder v. Bateman, 93 Fed. 31; Indianapolis Gas Company v. City of Indianapolis, 90 Fed. 196; Brown v. McDonald, 133 Fed. 898, 67 C. C. A. 59, 68 L. R. A. 462).

BILL OF EVIDENCE

A "bill of evidence" is the stenographer's bill attested by the trial judge. Latham v. Lindsay (Ky.) 112 S. W. 584, 585.

BILL OF EXCEPTIONS

See Certificate to Bill of Exceptions; General Bill of Exceptions; Skeleton Bill.

Settlement of, see Settle—Settlement.
Settlement of as constituting a proceeding, see Proceeding.

Tender of, see Tender.

See, also, Transmit—Transmission.

Cases on appeal are tried from a bill of "exceptions," not a bill of "objections." It is true that the word "object" in certain connections may have the same meaning as "except." In the course of a trial an objection is made to the end that a ruling of the court may be had. This ruling is not upon what the court itself has done, but upon what the parties are doing or offering to do. The objection goes to the act of persons other than the court and is made to get action from the court. When the court acts, the error is preserved by an exception to the ruling. Thus the origin of the term "bill of exceptions." Harding v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 134 S. W. 641, 643, 232 Mo. 444, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1221.

The office of a "bill of exceptions" is to bring on the record such matters as are not already a part of the record in the case. Hanson v. Anderson, 121 S. W. 736, 737, 91 Ark. 443 (citing Berger Mercantile Co. v. Houghton, 105 S. W. 582, 84 Ark. 342; Lesser v. Banks, 46 Ark. 482; St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Godby, 45 Ark. 485); Fenn v. Reber, 132 S. W. 627, 632, 153 Mo. App. 219.

"The object of a 'bill of exceptions' is to put upon the record all the facts touching the decisions of the court respecting questions of law which do not appear upon the record, and which arise in the course of the trial, so that when the case is removed to an appellate court by writ of error a 'bill of exceptions' may be taken into consideration. The term 'bill of exceptions' is in the plural and strictly speaking means, ex vi termini, more than one objection to the rules of the trial court is embodied in and certified thereby." Brown v. Hall, 7 S. E. 182, 85 Va. 148, 151.

The only office of a "bill of exceptions" is to bring to the Court of Appeals the evidence, objections, and exceptions relating thereto, instructions, objections, and exceptions thereto, and such motions, exhibits, objections, and exceptions thereto, or papers, that are used or offered to be used on the trial, and are not filed in court and made a part of the record by being mentioned in the orders. Barnard Leas Mfg. Co. v. Washburn (Ky.) 99 S. W. 664, 665.

"Exceptions" and "error" are inherently proceedings of different character. On exceptions, various specific rulings, whether interlocutory or final, whether brought up immediately or only after final judgment, are made direct and independent subjects for review; only so much of the record is brought up as is necessary for passing upon the specific exceptions; the decision usually is that the exceptions be sustained or overruled and that such further proceedings be had as the rulings on the exceptions call for. On error the final judgment alone is brought up, and specific rulings, whether excepted to or not, are considered only incidentally in passing upon the correctness of the final judgment; the entire record is brought up, and the judgment of the appellate court is such as the facts and law warrant, as shown by the entire case. Cotton v. Hawaii, 29 Sup. Ct. 85, 89, 211 U. S. 162, 53 L. Ed. 131 (citing 17 Hawaii, 379).

The office of a bill of exceptions is to bring before the court the record, authenticated by the trial judge, of things that transpired in the trial court, that do not appear on the record book of the trial court, and it is not necessary to put in the bill of exceptions the pleadings, orders of court, or any motion or paper that is mentioned in the orders of court which have been offered or filed as a part of the record, though it may not be copied on the record book, as the fact that it is there mentioned is sufficient identification to make it a part of the record. Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. v. Louisville Cotton Oil Co., 122 S. W. 852, 854, 136 Ky. 843.

The official shorthand notes filed with the clerk at the close of the trial, but not certified by the trial judge or reporter in longhand, any certificate attached thereto being in shorthand is not a bill of exceptions within the statute. In re Skillman's Estate (Iowa) 134 N. W. 1064.

A mere statement of facts on the issue presented by a motion for a change of venue, which nowhere contains an exception to the court's ruling, can in no view be construed a bill of exceptions for the purpose of reviewing the court's action in granting the change to a county whose seat is not the least distant from the county seat where the case was brought, even though the statement was filed in the lower court within the time required by law. Panhandle & G. Ry. Co. v. Kirby (Tex.) 108 S. W. 498, 499.

The special statutory "bill of exceptions" authorized by Rev. St. 1892, §§ 1090, 1091, should be complete in itself, without reference to the regular bill of exceptions, since the expression "bill of exceptions" indicates that it must contain exceptions. Keigans v. State, 41 South. 886, 895, 52 Fla. 57 (citing United States v. Jarvis, 3 Woodb. & M. 217, 28 Fed. Cas. 598; Kearney v. Snodgrass, 7 Pac. 309, 12 Or. 311, text 312; 1 Words and Phrases, p. 783).

Leave by the court to file a "bill of exceptions" authorizes appellant to file separate bills, one embracing the evidence, and the other the ruling of the court in directing a verdict. Davis v. Mercer Lumber Co., 73 N. E. 899, 900, 164 Ind. 413.

Statement distinguished

There is no substantial difference between a "bill of exceptions" and a "statement." Consequently, a "bill of exceptions" or "statement" would be considered though the motion in the trial court was for leave to file a statement and the notice of intention to move for a new trial recited that it would be made on a "bill of exceptions." Sauer v. Eagle Brewing Co., 84 Pac. 425, 427, 3 Cal. App. 127.

The only difference between a "bill of exceptions" and a "statement of the case," within a statute requiring a party intending to move for a new trial to serve a notice of his intention, designating the ground on which the motion will be made, and whether the same will be made on affidavits or by a "bill of exceptions," or a "statement of the case," is that in a statement of the case the moving party, in addition to setting forth in the body of the document the exceptions which were taken at the trial, must also specify the particular ones upon which he relies in support of his motion, and, if the insufficiency of the evidence is the ground of an exception, or is stated in a notice of a motion for a new trial, the particulars in which the evidence is claimed to be insufficient must be specified in either document. Pease v. Fink, 85 Pac. 657, 659, 3 Cal. App. 371.

An order denying a new trial recited that the motion was presented on all the grounds stated in the notice of intention to move for new trial, and upon the statement of the case previously settled. The record contained a bill of exceptions in which the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings was specified, but the order denying the new trial did not clearly state that the grounds on which the motion was based were those specified in the settled statement; the document referred to as a statement of the case being denominated on its face, as a "bill of exceptions." Held that, since the expressions "bill of exceptions" and "statement of the case" would be considered synonymous when necessary to accomplish the ends of justice, the recital in the order that the motion was presented on the statement of the case previously settled would be deemed sufficient evidence that the objections set forth in the statement were the grounds of the motion, so as to authorize a consideration of the evidence on appeal, though the copy of the notice of intention printed in the transcript was not authenticated by a bill of exceptions, and therefore could not be considered, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 861, 951, 952. Dennis v. Gordon, 125 Pac. 1063, 1064, 163 Cal. 427.

BILL OF EXCHANGE

See Foreign Bill of Exchange; Inland Bill of Exchange; Negotiable Bill of Exchange.

A bill of exchange is a written order or request by one person to another for the payment of a special sum of money to a third person absolutely. Vaughn v. Farmers' & Merchants' Nat. Bank of Alvord (Tex.) 126 S. W. 690, 691 (quoting 1 Words and Phrases, p. 784); Newman v. Frost, 52 N. Y. 422, 425.

An order drawn on another to pay a sum certain to the order of the drawer and to charge the same to the drawer's account is a bill of exchange. H. T. Woodall & Son v. People's Nat. Bank of Leesburg, Va., 45 South. 194, 195, 153 Ala. 576.

An order drawn by one person on another in favor of a third person for a specific amount is a "bill of exchange" which can only be accepted by a writing signed as required by Code 1896, § 880. Faircloth-Byrd Mercantile Co. v. Adkinson (Ala.) 52 South. 419, 420.

Laws 1899, p. 362, c. 149, § 126, defines a bill of exchange as an unconditional order in writing, addressed by one person to another, signed by the person giving it, requiring the person to whom addressed to pay on demand or at a fixed or determinable time a sum certain to order or to bearer. Section 127, p. 363, provides that a bill of itself does not operate as an assignment of the funds in the hands of the drawee, and that the drawee is not liable unless he accepts the same. Held, that a writing addressed by one to another, requesting him to pay a third person at the end of each month the amount due for boarding such other's horses, was within section 126, and that the mere delivery of the same to such third person was not an assignment of the funds in the hands of the person to whom addressed, and that he would not be liable thereon until it was accepted in writing. Frederick & Nelson v. Spokane Grain Co., 91 Pac. 570, 571, 47 Wash. 85.

A check is a "bill of exchange," sometimes defined as an "inland bill of exchange." State v. Fraley (W. Va.) 76 S. E. 134, 135, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 498.

A bank check is a "bill of exchange" within the statute providing that no one shall be charged as an acceptor of a bill of exchange unless the acceptance is in writing, etc. Interstate Nat. Bank v. Ringo, 83 Pac. 119, 122, 72 Kan. 116, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1179, 115 Am. St. Rep. 176.

A bank check is a "bill of exchange" within the meaning of Gen. St. 1901, § 548, providing that an acceptance of a bill of exchange shall not bind the acceptor except in favor of a bona fide holder of the paper. First Nat. Bank of Atchison v. Commercial Sav. Bank, 87 Pac. 748, 74 Kan. 606, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1148, 118 Am. St. Rep. 340, 11 Ann. Cas. 281.

A check is a "bill of exchange" payable on demand without interest. Hobart Nat. Bank v. McMurrough, 103 Pac. 601, 24 Okl. 210.

Negotiable Instruments Law, § 185, provides that a check is a "bill of exchange" drawn on a bank payable on demand, and, except as otherwise provided, the provisions of the act applicable to a bill of exchange payable on demand apply to a check. National Bank of Commerce in St. Louis v. Mechanics' American Nat. Bank, 127 S. W. 429, 433, 148 Mo. App. 1; Same v. German-American Bank, 127 S. W. 484, 148 Mo. App. 21.

Under Civ. Code, § 3254, a check is a "bill of exchange." Du Brutz v. Bank of Visalla, 87 Pac. 467, 469, 4 Cal. App. 201.

A "bill of exchange" defined by the Negotiable Instrument Law, as an unconditional order in writing addressed by one person to another, signed by the person giving it, requiring the person to whom it is addressed to pay on demand, or at a fixed or determinable future time, a sum certain in money to order or to bearer, includes a "check," defined by section 185 as a "bill of exchange" drawn on a bank payable on demand, and except as otherwise provided the act applicable to a bill of exchange payable on demand shall apply to a check, and a check as a species of bill of exchange need not, under section 143, be presented for acceptance unless it contains an express stipulation to that effect. Van Buskirk v. State Bank of Rocky Ford, 83 Pac. 778, 35 Colo. 142, 117 Am. St. Rep. 182.

Under Rem. & Bal. Code, §§ 3516, 3575, defining a "bill of exchange" as an unconditional order in writing addressed by one person to another, signed by the person giving it, requiring the person to whom it is addressed to pay, on demand or at a fixed or determinable future time, a specified sum, to order or bearer, and defining a "check" as a bill of exchange drawn on a bank payable on demand, a certificate of deposit properly indorsed by the depositor is a "check" within an information charging larceny of a check by means of false pretenses. State v. Garland, 118 Pac. 907, 910, 65 Wash. 666.

Where an instrument for the payment of the price of a shipment of iron was drawn by the seller on the buyer, who resided in a foreign country, and, with the bill of lading attached, was indorsed for discount, it was a foreign bill of exchange, and not a check, under Negotiable Instrument Law, §§ 210, 321, defining a bill of exchange as an unconditional order in writing, addressed by one person to another, signed by the person giving it, requiring the addressee to pay on demand, or at a fixed or determinable time, a certain sum of money to order or to bearer, and defining a check as a bill of exchange, drawn on a bank payable on demand. Am-sinck v. Rogers, 93 N. Y. Supp. 87, 91, 103 App. Div. 428.

Negotiable Instrument Law, § 1684-1 defines a check as a "bill of exchange" drawn on a bank payable on demand, and provides that, except as otherwise provided, the provisions of the act applicable to a bill of exchange payable on demand apply to a check. Columbian Banking Co. v. Bowen, 114 N. W. 451, 452, 134 Wis. 218.

A voucher draft containing a statement of indebtedness, a form of receipt, and stating that, when properly receipted, the voucher would become a draft on the debtor, payable through a certain bank and signed by the debtor, is not a "bill of exchange," as defined by the statute; but it was within the power of the debtor to make it such, when properly accepted and receipted by the payee. Val Blatz Brewing Co. v. Interstate Ice & Cold Storage Co., 143 S. W. 542, 543, 161 Mo. App. 531.

BILL OF INTERPLEADER

See Bill in Nature of Interpleader.

The remedy of "interpleader" requires four elements: (1) The same thing, debt, or duty must be claimed by all the parties against whom relief is demanded; (2) all their adverse titles or claims must be dependent or derived from a common source; (3) the person asking the relief must not have nor claim any interest in the subject-matter; (4) he must have incurred no independent liability to either of the claimants. Where an insurance society was sued by various claimants of the proceeds of a certificate, and the claim of the administrator of the original beneficiary depended solely on his claim that the society was an old line insurance company, while the other claimants contended that the society was a beneficial association, there was a question of sufficient doubt raised by that issue to entitle the society to file a bill of interpleader. A valid doubt respecting either a question of fact or law with reference to a stakeholder's obligation to pay the fund to one of several claimants is sufficient to justify the filing of a bill of interpleader. Smith v. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. of Missouri, 101 S. W. 662, 669, 124 Mo. App. 181 (quoting and adopting the definition in 4 Pom. Eq. Jur. [3d Ed.] § 1322; 2 Sto. Eq. Jur. [13th Ed.] p. 136-150; Atkinson v. Manks [N. Y.] 1 Cow. 691-703; Roselle v. Farmers' Bank of Norborne, 24 S. W. 744, 119 Mo. 84; Supreme Council of the Legion of Honor v. Palmer, 80 S. W. 699, 107 Mo. App. 157).

The law applicable in actions of "interpleader" seems to be well settled. They may be divided into two classes, actions of strict interpleader, and actions in the nature of interpleader. The distinction is that in actions of strict interpleader legal rights only are enforced, while in actions in the nature of interpleader equitable relief is sometimes given if a proper case is made. The purpose of an action of interpleader is to permit a party who holds a fund or property, or who owes a debt, to which two or more persons make claim, and it is uncertain to which claimant the fund or debt belongs, to commence an action against such claimants for the purpose of having it determined between them to which the fund, property, or debt owing belongs, so that it may be paid accordingly, and the holder of the fund, or the debtor, as the case may be, relieved from the danger of a double liability for the same demand. Smith v. Mosier, 160 Fed. 430, 442.

"A bill of strict interpleader" is one in which the complainant asserts his possession of some fund or something in which he claims no personal interest but in which other persons, made defendants, set up conflicting claims, and complainant cannot safely determine to which claim he should yield. Carter v. Cryer, 59 Atl. 233, 68 N. J. Eq. 24 (citing Story, Eq. Pl. § 291; Williams v. Matthews, 20 Atl. 261, 47 N. J. Eq. 196; Packard v. Stevens, 46 Atl. 250, 58 N. J. Eq. 489; Ireland v. Kelly, 47 Atl. 51, 60 N. J. Eq. 308).

A "bill of interpleader" is strictly a "proceeding in equity" that before the Constitution regularly would have been tried without a jury. Hubbard v. Lamburn, 75 N. E. 707, 709, 189 Mass. 296.

A "bill of interpleader" is a bill filed for the protection of a person from whom several persons claim legally or equitably the same thing, debt, or duty, but who has incurred no independent liability to any of them, and who does not himself claim an interest in the matter. Detroit Trust Co. v. Hunrath, 131 N. W. 147, 151, 168 Mich. 180.

A "bill of interpleader" by an administrator against a judgment creditor of decedent and her attorneys who have filed notice of lien for services in procuring the judgment, which proceeds on the theory that the administrator who is willing to pay the judgment is in doubt as to who is entitled to the money because of the conflicting claims between the judgment creditor and the attorneys and between the attorneys themselves, states a cause of action as against a demurrer; a bill of interpleader being filed to protect persons from whom several persons claim legally and equitably the same thing, debt, or duty, and who has incurred no independent liability to any of them. Michigan Trust Co. v. McNamara, 130 N. W. 653, 654, 165 Mich. 200, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 986 (quoting 1 Words and Phrases, p. 788 et seq.).

A "bill of interpleader" lies where several persons claim the same debt, and the debtor has incurred no independent liability to any of them, and does not himself claim an interest in the matter, and the bill may be resorted to where the several claimants, instead of claiming the whole fund or matter in dispute, claim different portions thereof, and the aggregate of all the claims exceeds the full amount of the fund, and the complainant is unable to determine in what proportion the payment should be made. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Moore, 123 S. W. 233, 237, 92 Ark. 446.

A bill, showing that complainants were defendant's decedent's agents to buy cotton, grain, and securities, receive deposits of money from him for that purpose according to an account embracing more than 100 debit items and a larger number of credit items, that codefendant claims balance due him under transactions with decedent relating to a fund held by complainants, and that suits at law have been brought severally by the defendants on account of such fund, and praying to be permitted to deposit the fund in court, and that the suits at law be enjoined, and also praying general relief, is not bad as being without equity; an accounting being properly required to determine the amount of the fund. Hayward & Clark v. McDonald, 192 Fed. 890, 892, 113 C. C. A. 368.

Strictly speaking, a bill of interpleader is one in which complainant claims no relief against either defendant, merely asking that he be permitted to pay the money or deliver the property claimed by both defendants to the court, to be awarded to him to whom it belongs, and that he may thereafter be protected against both claims. Hayward & Clark v. McDonald, 192 Fed. 890, 892, 113 C. C. A. 368.

"An 'interpleader' in equity is for relief when there are at law separate and conflicting claims for the same thing, and when a recovery by one would not protect a party against a recovery for the same thing by the other." The remedy given by statute in the nature of interpleader in courts of law does not oust courts of equity of their jurisdiction. Wheeler v. Armstrong, 51 South. 268, 271, 164 Ala. 442.

The action of "interpleader" is concurrent and is not superseded by the remedy authorized by Code, § 3427, providing that a plaintiff may prosecute his action by equitable proceedings in all cases where courts of equity, before the adoption of the Code, had jurisdiction. The object of a bill of interpleader is, not to protect a party against double liability, but a double vexation in respect to one liability, and the action will not lie where defendants are making claims against plaintiff under distinct and independent contracts not necessarily in conflict, payment of one of which will not extinguish the other. Hoyt v. Gouge, 101 N. W. 464, 465, 125 Iowa, 608.

BILL OF LADING

"To facilitate commercial transactions, a 'bill of lading' has grown to be regarded as the symbolical representation of the goods which it describes." Webster v. Bear, 125 S. W. 815, 817, 141 Mo. App. 531 (citing Braunson v. Heckler, 22 Kan. 610).

A bill of lading in the first instance represents the contract between the shipper and the carrier, by which, for a specified sum, the carrier undertakes to deliver the goods received to the rightful owner, and the consignee named in the bill is presumptively the owner. Gass v. Astoria Veneer Mills, 118 N. Y. Supp. 982, 984, 134 App. Div. 184.

The term "bill of lading," strictly speaking, is one to be applied only to the written evidence of a contract for the carriage and delivery of goods shipped by C., though it is now in common use in connection with the affreightment of goods by water other than the sea or carriage by rail. "Freight bill" or "freight receipt" is perhaps the most technically correct term to employ in referring to the receipts given on the shipment of freight by a railroad. Sellers v. Savannah, F. & W. R. Co., 51 S. E. 398, 400, 123 Ga. 386 (citing 5 Cyc. 707; Cyc. Law Dict. 965).

A "bill of lading" is "a memorandum or acknowledgment in writing, signed by" the carrier, acknowledging the receipt of goods therein described, to be transported on the terms therein expressed to the place of destination, and there to be delivered to the consignee or parties therein designated. A bill of lading, to be valid, must be signed by the carrier. A bill of lading containing a carrier's limited liability stipulation, delivered unsigned by the carrier's agent, is ineffectual as a contract to limit liability. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Patrick, 88 S. W. 330, 332, 5 Ind. T. 742.

A "bill of lading" is defined to be "a written acknowledgment by the common carrier of the receipt of certain goods, and an agreement, for a consideration, to transport and to deliver the same at a specified place to a person therein named, or his order." According to this definition, one of the essentials of a "bill of lading" is an agreement between the carrier and the shipper, and an instrument delivered by a carrier's agent to the shipper, reciting the delivery of certain packages "marked and signed as stated to be shipped as per directions below, subject to the conditions and exceptions of the company's 'bill of lading,'" signed by the shipper and by the carrier's agent, was a mere receipt of the goods for the purpose of shipping them to the point named in the memorandum following the shipper's signature, and was not a contract by the carrier to ship the goods. Pittsburgh, C., O. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Bryant, 75 N. E. 829, 830, 36 Ind. App. 340 (citing 4 Elliott, Railroads, § 1415; Union R. & Transp. Co. v. Yeager, 34 Ind. 1).

As negotiable instruments

A bill of lading is a negotiable instrument, under Acts 1868, p. 193, No. 150, and may be transferred for an antecedent or pre-existing debt, or for any consideration sufficient to support a simple contract, under Acts 1904, p. 152, No. 64, § 24. Scheuermann v. Monarch Fruit Co., 48 South. 647, 648, 123 La. 55.

While a "bill of lading" is in a sense a negotiable instrument, it is not such as to preclude in the hands of a bona fide purchaser all inquiries respecting its issue. Bramley v. Ulster & D. R. Co., 126 N. Y. Supp. 854, 856, 142 App. Div. 176.

The assignment of a "bill of lading" is a symbolic "delivery" of the property represented by the bill. Kentucky Refining Co. v. Bank of Morilton (Ky.) 89 S. W. 492.

A bill of lading is assignable, such an assignment constituting in the law a complete legal delivery of the goods thereby evidenced to be in the hands of the carrier, as effectually as an actual sale and delivery thereof. Gratiot St. Warehouse Co. v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co., 102 S. W. 11-16, 124 Mo. App. 545.

Though a "bill of lading" is a negotiable instrument, it is simply a symbol or representative of the goods for which it is issued, and when issued in the usual form by a railroad company consigning the shipment to the shipper's order with an indorsement on its back to "deliver to A.," signed by the consignee, such indorsement is a valid and sufficient assignment of the bill. Allen, McIntosh & Co. v. Farmers' & Traders' Nat. Bank of Covington, Ky., 59 S. E. 813, 816, 129 Ga. 748.

"Bills of lading" stand as the substitute and representative of goods described therein, and, while quasi negotiable instruments are not negotiable in the full sense in which that term is applied to bills and notes, the transfer of the bill passes to the transferee the transferor's title to the goods described, and the presumption as to ownership arising from the bill may be explained or rebutted by other evidence showing where the real ownership lies. Roy & Roy v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 85 Pac. 53, 55, 42 Wash. 572, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 802, 7 Ann. Cas. 723 (quoting and adopting definition in The Carlos F. Roses, 20 Sup. Ct. 807, 177 U. S. 665, 44 L. Ed. 929, citing Lazard v. Merchants' & Miners' Transp. Co., 26 Atl. 897, 78 Md. 13).

A "bill of lading" is a symbol of ownership of the goods described therein. In a sense it stands in the place of the goods. The delivery of an unindorsed bill of lading constitutes a good symbolical delivery of the goods represented by the bill of lading only when such was the intent and purpose of the party. Where a consignee named in a bill of lading was arrested and thrown into jail and the bill of lading was taken from his person by the jailer and was never assigned or indorsed by the consignee, a delivery of the goods by the carrier to a person who by some means obtained possession of the bill of lading from the jailer did not discharge it from liability, though it acted in good faith in surrendering the property. Florence & C. C. R. Co. v. Jensen, 108 Pac. 974, 975, 48 Colo. 28.

Rev. St. Mo. 1909, § 11,956, provides that all bills of lading issued by a railroad company shall be negotiable by written indorsement thereon and delivery, the same as bills of exchange and promissory notes. Bills of lading in that state were already negotiable in the sense of being transferable by indorsement and delivery, so as to enable an assignee to sue in his own name. Held, that the statute makes them negotiable in the stricter meaning of the term, giving them the quality of investing an innocent purchaser with greater rights than those possessed by the original holder, and under such section a railroad company is bound by a bill of lading which has passed into the hands of an innocent purchaser, though no goods were in fact received by the company, and such rule is not altered by the fact that the statute makes it a criminal offense for any agent of a railroad company to issue a bill of lading, unless the goods have actually been received. Sealy v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co., 114 Pac. 1077, 1079, 84 Kan. 479, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 500.

Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. §§ 3590, 3598-3601, define a "bill of lading," make bills of lading negotiable, and provide that a bill of lading does not alter the rights or obligations of the carrier, unless it is plainly inconsistent therewith. A bill of lading acknowledged the receipt of property described from a person named, and gave the name of the consignee and destination, and stated that it was not negotiable or assignable. Held, that the bill of lading was in effect a receipt for the goods and a contract between the shipper and the carrier that it should be neither negotiated nor assigned, and a delivery of the bill of lading without indorsement, together with the invoice properly assigned, passed no title or right to the goods. Bonds-Foster Lumber Co. v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 101 Pac. 877, 878, 53 Wash. 302.

A "bill of lading" is a commercial instrument, and is a written acknowledgment signed by the master of a vessel or by a common carrier that he has received the goods therein described from the shipper, to be transported on the terms therein expressed to the described place of destination, and there to be delivered to the consignee or parties therein designated. It is a symbol of the ownership of the goods covered by it; a representative of the goods. It is regarded as so much merchandise. The merchant-in dispute, claim different portions thereof, and the aggregate of all the claims exceeds the full amount of the fund, and the complainant is unable to determine in what proportion the payment should be made. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Moore, 123 S. W. 233, 237, 92 Ark. 446.

A bill, showing that complainants were defendant's decedent's agents to buy cotton, grain, and securities, receive deposits of money from him for that purpose according to an account embracing more than 100 debit items and a larger number of credit items, that codefendant claims balance due him under transactions with decedent relating to a fund held by complainants, and that suits at law have been brought severally by the defendants on account of such fund, and praying to be permitted to deposit the fund in court, and that the suits at law be enjoined, and also praying general relief, is not bad as being without equity; an accounting being properly required to determine the amount of the fund. Hayward & Clark v. McDonald, 192 Fed. 890, 892, 113 C. O. A. 368.

Strictly speaking, a bill of interpleader is one in which complainant claims no relief against either defendant, merely asking that he be permitted to pay the money or deliver the property claimed by both defendants to the court, to be awarded to him to whom it belongs, and that he may thereafter be protected against both claims. Hayward & Clark v. McDonald, 192 Fed. 890, 892, 113 C. O. A. 368.

"An 'interpleader' in equity is for relief when there are at law separate and conflicting claims for the same thing, and when a recovery by one would not protect a party against a recovery for the same thing by the other." The remedy given by statute in the nature of interpleader in courts of law does not oust courts of equity of their jurisdiction. Wheeler v. Armstrong, 51 South. 268, 271, 164 Ala. 442.

Though a "bill of lading" is a negotiable instrument, it is simply a symbol or representative of the goods for which it is issued, and when issued in the usual form by a railroad company consigning the shipment to the shipper's order with an indorsement on its back to "deliver to A.," signed by the consignee, such indorsement is a valid and sufficient assignment of the bill. Allen, McIntosh & Co. v. Farmers' & Traders' Nat. Bank of Covington, Ky., 59 S. E. 813, 816, 129 Ga. 748.

"Bills of lading" stand as the substitute and representative of goods described therein, and, while quasi negotiable instruments are not negotiable in the full sense in which that term is applied to bills and notes, the transfer of the bill passes to the transferee the transferor's title to the goods described, and the presumption as to ownership arising from the bill may be explained or rebutted by other evidence showing where the real ownership lies. Roy & Roy v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 85 Pac. 53, 55, 42 Wash. 572, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 802, 7 Ann. Cas. 728 (quoting and adopting definition in The Carlos F. Roses, 20 Sup. Ct. 807, 177 U. S. 665, 44 L. Ed. 929, citing Lazard v. Merchants' & Miners' Transp. Co., 26 Atl. 897, 78 Md. 13).

A "bill of lading" is a symbol of ownership of the goods described therein. In a sense it stands in the place of the goods. The delivery of an unindorsed bill of lading constitutes a good symbolical delivery of the goods represented by the bill of lading only when such was the intent and purpose of the party. Where a consignee named in a bill of lading was arrested and thrown into jail and the bill of lading was taken from his person by the jailer and was never assigned or indorsed by the consignee, a delivery of the goods by the carrier to a person who by some means obtained possession of the bill of lading from the jailer did not discharge it from liability, though it acted in good faith in surrendering the property. Florence & C. C. R. Co. v. Jensen, 108 Pac. 974, 975, 48 Colo. 28.

Rev. St. Mo. 1909, § 11,956, provides that all bills of lading issued by a railroad company shall be negotiable by written indorsement thereon and delivery, the same as bills of exchange and promissory notes. Bills of lading in that state were already negotiable in the sense of being transferable by indorsement and delivery, so as to enable an assignee to sue in his own name. Held, that the statute makes them negotiable in the stricter meaning of the term, giving them the quality of investing an innocent purchaser with greater rights than those possessed by the original holder, and under such section a railroad company is bound by a bill of lading which has passed into the hands of an innocent purchaser, though no goods were in fact received by the company, and such rule is not altered by the fact that the statute makes it a criminal offense for any agent of a railroad company to issue a bill of lading, unless the goods have actually been received. Sealy v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co., 114 Pac. 1077, 1079, 84 Kan. 479, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 500.

Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. §§ 3590, 3598-3601, define a "bill of lading," make bills of lading negotiable, and provide that a bill of lading does not alter the rights or obligations of the carrier, unless it is plainly inconsistent therewith. A bill of lading acknowledged the receipt of property described from a person named, and gave the name of the consignee and destination, and stated that it was not negotiable or assignable. Held, that the bill of lading was in effect a receipt for the goods and a contract between the shipper and the carrier that it should be neither negotiated nor assigned, and a delivery of the bill of lading without indorsement, together with the invoice properly assigned, passed no title or right to the goods. Bonds-Foster Lumber Co. v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 101 Pac. 877, 878, 53 Wash. 302.

A "bill of lading" is a commercial instrument, and is a written acknowledgment signed by the master of a vessel or by a common carrier that he has received the goods therein described from the shipper, to be transported on the terms therein expressed to the described place of destination, and there to be delivered to the consignee or parties therein designated. It is a symbol of the ownership of the goods covered by it; a representative of the goods. It is regarded as so much merchandise. The merchant-dise is very often sold or pledged by the transfer of the bill of lading which covers it. Yegen v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 121 N. W. 205, 208, 19 N. D. 70.

At common law, a "bill of lading" is a muniment of title to the goods or property therein specified. It is a symbol or representative of the goods and, "when properly indorsed and delivered with the intention of passing the title to them, is a symbolic or constructive delivery of the goods themselves, and, when assigned, the carrier, having notice of the assignment, becomes bound to deliver the goods to the assignee if the goods by the terms of the bill of lading are deliverable to the order of the shipper. The carrier should not deliver except on production of a bill of lading properly indorsed by the shipper, for this is notice to the carrier that the shipper intends to retain in his power ultimate disposition of the goods. Arkansas S. R. Co. v. German Nat. Bank, 92 S. W. 522, 524, 77 Ark. 482, 113 Am. St. Rep. 160.

A "bill of lading" represents the goods described in it. Bills of lading by the law merchant are representatives of the property for which they have been given, and the indorsement and delivery of a bill transfer the property from the vendor to the vendee, is a complete legal delivery of the goods, and divests the vendor's lien. National Bank of Bristol v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 59 Atl. 134, 137, 99 Md. 661, 105 Am. St. Rep. 321 (citing 6 Cyc. 426).

As receipt

Bills of lading are practically no more than receipts for the goods, and are contracts only in name. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Rosebrook-Josey Grain Co., 114 S. W. 436, 442, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 156.

As both receipt and contract

A bill of lading is a receipt acknowledging the delivery and acceptance of freight and a contract binding on the parties. Williams v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ala.) 58 South. 315, 318.

A "bill of lading" is a written acknowledgment of the receipt of goods and an agreement, on consideration, to transport and deliver them at a specified place to a person named on his order. Illinois Match Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 95 N. E. 492, 494, 250 Ill. 396.

A bill of lading is an instrument issued by a carrier to the consignor, consisting of a receipt for the goods and an agreement to carry them from the place of shipment to the place of destination. Whitnack v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 118 N. W. 67, 69, 82 Neb. 464, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1011, 130 Am. St. Rep. 692.

A "bill of lading" represents the property. It is a muniment of title and is both a receipt and a contract. Garner v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 96 S. W. 187, 79

Ark. 353, 116 Am. St. Rep. 83 (citing Turner v. Israel, 41 S. W. 806, 64 Ark. 244; Ray, Negligence of Imposed Duties of Freight Carriers, § 25).

A bill of lading is an instrument of a twofold character, being at once a receipt and a contract. In the former character it is an acknowledgment of the receipt of the property by the carrier, and in the latter it is a contract to safely carry and deliver. Cobb v. Brown, 193 Fed. 958, 960, 113 C. C. A. 586.

"A 'bill of lading' is an instrument of a twofold character. It is at once a receipt and a contract. In the former character it is an acknowledgment of the receipt of the property on board his vessel by the owner of the vessel. In the latter it is a contract to carry safely and deliver. The receipt of the goods lies at the foundation of the contract to carry and deliver. If no goods are actually received, there can be no valid contract to carry and to deliver. And the doctrine is applicable to transportation contracts made in that form by railway companies and other carriers by land as well as by sea." Arthur v. Texas & P. Ry. Co., 139 Fed. 127, 133, 71 C. C. A. 391 (citing Pollard v. Vinton, 105 U. S. 8, 26 L. Ed. 998).

"A 'bill of lading' is twofold in character. It is a receipt as to the quantity and description of the goods shipped, and a contract to carry and deliver the good to the consignee upon the terms specified in the instrument." So far as it constitutes a receipt, it is, like other receipts, subject to be contradicted or explained by proof of the facts, though it may not be varied by parol evidence in the absence of fraud or mistake so far as it embodies the terms of the contract. A bill of lading as a receipt establishes prima facie the receipt of the quantity of goods named by the carrier, which prima facie case may be overthrown by proper evidence contradicting the fact, which may be done under the general denial. Cohen Bros. v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. of Texas, 98 S. W. 437, 438, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 381.

A "bill of lading" has a twofold aspect. It is both a receipt and a contract. As a receipt, it is prima facie and not conclusive evidence of the facts recited, and between the parties is impeachable for mistake, error, or false statements therein. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Citizens' Bank of Little Rock, 112 S. W. 154, 157, 87 Ark. 23, 128 Am. St. Rep. 17.

A "bill of lading" is of a dual effect, one is that of a receipt and the other that of a contract. A bill of lading as a receipt is open to explanation or modification by parol evidence, but as a contract it must be construed according to its terms, and, in the absence of fraud or mistake, it is presumed that oral negotiations respecting its terms and conditions are merged therein, so that it forms the final evidence of the agreement as to the reception, rate, and route, etc. Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Norris, 52 South. 891, 892, 167 Ala. 811.

C. O. D. shipment

"It cannot be said that the two ('bill of lading' and 'C. O. D. shipment') are not in some of their features alike. Both are, in a sense, contracts for the shipment of goods. A 'bill of lading' is a contract between the carrier and the sender, for a consideration, to transport and deliver goods at a specified place to a person therein named, or to his order, and in commercial usage it may be, in a sense, negotiable; that is, the bill of lading has become symbolical, and stands for the property itself. We do not understand that a C. O. D. has this characteristic. Ordinarily, where goods are shipped under a bill of lading, the property passes as soon as they are delivered at the point of shipment to the common carrier. But if the bill of lading is taken in favor of the consignor himself, or some agent of his, by commercial usage and the decisions of the court the property does not pass, though intended for some consignee at the point of destination, until some stipulation is complied with, as payment of the purchase money." Concurring opinion of Henderson, J. Keller v. State, (Tex.) 87 S. W. 669, 687, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 489.

BILL OF PARCELS

A "bill of parcels" is informal and is not designed or employed to set forth the terms of the bargain or sale. A writing reading: "100 cases eggs 3,000—19c. * * * He to pay interest at 6 per cent. on amount exceeding deposits of $1 per case"—is nothing more than a mere "bill of parcels" with a statement of interest to be charged, and not a "contract in writing"; and hence parol evidence as to what the terms of the contract were was admissible. North Packing & Provision Co. v. Lynch, 81 N. E. 891, 892, 196 Mass. 204 (citing Hildreth v. O'Brien, 92 Mass. [10 Allen] 104; Stacy v. Kemp, 97 Mass. 166; Hazard v. Loring, 64 Mass. [10 Cush.] 267; Edgar v. Joseph Breck & Sons Corp., 52 N. E. 1083, 172 Mass. 587; Dunham v. Barnes, 91 Mass. [9 Allen] 352; Schenck v. Saunders, 79 Mass. [13 Gray] 37; Atwater v. Clancy, 107 Mass. 369; Commonwealth v. Jeffries, 89 Mass. [7 Allen] 548—564, 83 Am. Dec. 712; Walker v. Staples, 87 Mass. [5 Allen] 34; Caswell v. Keith, 78 Mass. [12 Gray] 351; Harper v. Ross, 92 Mass. [10 Allen] 332).

BILL OF PARTICULARS

A "bill of particulars" is appropriate in all descriptions of actions where the circumstances are such that justice demands that a party should be apprised of the matters for which he is to be put on trial with greater particularity than is required by the rule of pleading, and the granting rests largely in the discretion of the trial court. Commonwealth v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 110 S. W. 253, 255, 128 Ky. 749.

A "bill of particulars" need not contain the names of a party's witnesses; its office being solely to inform the opposite party of the precise nature and extent of the claim on which the plaintiff intends to rely. Cairnes v. Pelton, 63 Atl. 105, 106, 103 Md. 40.

"The only proper office of a 'bill of particulars' is to give information of the specific proposition for which the pleader contends in respect to any material and issuable fact in the case, but not to disclose the evidence relied upon to establish any such proposition." In an action for libel defendant pleaded in mitigation that the article published was founded upon statements of residents of the police precinct of which plaintiff was captain, to a reporter of defendant, who believed them to be true. A bill of particulars containing the name and address of the reporter and the names and addresses of the residents of plaintiff's precinct who made the statement to defendant's reporter was properly refused. Knipe v. Brooklyn Daily Eagle, 91 N. Y. Supp. 872, 874, 101 App. Div. 43 (quoting and adopting the definition in Ball v. Evening Post Publishing Co., 38 Hun, 11, 15).

"The office of a 'bill of particulars' is to amplify a pleading and to inform the party with reasonable certainty of the nature of the claim made by his adversary, in order to prevent surprise and to enable him to intelligently meet the issue upon the trial." In an action for damages resulting from the loss of a suit case alleged to contain mining stocks and contracts, where the greater portion of plaintiff's claim is based on items of special damage, of which particulars have been denied, it was error to deny defendant's motion for a "bill of particulars." McIntosh v. Pullman Co., 103 N. Y. S. 223, 224, 53 Misc. Rep. 286 (citing in support of general rule Messer v. Aaron, 91 N. Y. Supp. 921, 101 App. Div. 169).

The "bill of particulars" referred to in Rev. Codes N. D. 1905, § 6868, providing that a party need not set forth in his pleading the items of an account alleged therein, but may deliver to his adversary a copy of the account, and that the court may in all cases order a bill of particulars of the claim of either party to be furnished, may be demanded on a claim which has no reference to accounting, and where the pleading is definite and certain, but further facts are required before the defendant can intelligently prepare for trial. Hanson v. Lindstrom, 108 N. W. 798, 799, 15 N. D. 584.

The office of a "bill of particulars" is not to expose one's evidence to one's adversary, but only to amplify the pleadings and indicate with more particularity than is ordinarily required in a formal plea the nature of the claim made, in order that surprise upon the trial may be avoided; and while the name of a witness, as such, may not be required to be disclosed, the name of an individual with whom it is claimed that the transaction which is one of the issues in the case was had may be required to be specified in a proper case, though it may be the intention of the opposite party to prove the fact by such individual as a witness. Sundhelmer v. James S. Barron & Co., 114 N. Y. Supp. 804, 805, 62 Misc. Rep. 263.

As part of pleading

A bill is not a pleading in any court. It may restrict, but cannot enlarge, the scope of recovery permissible under the declaration, and the issue is not changed by its amendment. Applebaum v. Goldman, 121 N. W. 288, 290, 155 Mich. 369.

A bill of particulars served on demand or order is part of the pleadings within Code Civ. Proc. § 1237, providing what the judgment roll shall contain, especially where plaintiff requests that it be included therein, and defendants in making it up do so. Stelger v. London, 122 N. Y. S. 1028, 1029, 138 App. Div. 246.

As facts admitted in a pleading do not deprive the other party of his right to examination before hearing of the party making the admissions, and as a "bill of particulars" is an extension of the complaint or answer and is a part of the pleading, a party asking for a bill of particulars does not lose his right to examine his adversary before trial. Tisdale Lumber Co. v. Droge, 181 N. Y. Supp. 683, 685, 147 App. Div. 55.

The office of a "bill of particulars" is to amplify a pleading, and to inform the party with reasonable certainty of the nature of the claim made against it; but it forms no part of the pleading, nor of the judgment roll, and it may not be resorted to in aid of a complaint wholly deficient in stating facts on which a recovery may be based. Samuelson v. Mayer, 120 N. Y. Supp. 75, 77, 78, 65 Misc. Rep. 518.

As part of statement of demand

See Statement of Demand.

Copy of account

A "copy of an account" and a "bill of particulars" do not necessarily mean the same thing. A bill of particulars may be demanded on a claim which has reference to an accounting. Hanson v. Lindstrom, 108 N. W. 798, 799, 15 N. D. 584.

Items of account synonymous

In the statute (Rev. Codes, § 7007) which defines the complaint in justices' courts as a concise statement, in writing, of the facts constituting the plaintiff's cause of action, or a "copy of the account" upon which the action is based, and section 7016, which provides that when the cause of action arises upon an account the court may require either party to furnish to the other the "items of an account" or a "bill of particulars," the term "bill of particulars" is synonymous with "items of an account" as distinguished from the "account" itself. The term "copy of account" is not used interchangeably with the term "items of account." A complaint in the form of copy of an account which is sufficient to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended is not objectionable because the items of account are not set out therein. Moran v. Ebey, 104 Pac. 522, 523, 39 Mont. 517.

In criminal law

The office of a "bill of particulars" provided for by Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 27, § 440, providing that in an indictment for false pretenses it shall not be necessary to state the false pretenses intended to be relied on, but defendants shall on application be entitled to the names of the witnesses and a statement of the false pretenses, is to inform the defendant of the name of the witnesses the state expects to call and furnish him with a statement of the false pretenses to be relied on and given in evidence, and it is no part of the pleading and cannot be demurred to, but must be excepted to if insufficient. Schaumloeffel v. State, 62 Atl. 803, 804, 102 Md. 470.

The bill of particulars is not a part of the information. It is quite generally, if not universally, held by the courts that the effect of a bill of particulars is to limit the claim and restrict the proof to the very matters therein specified. The sole office of the bill of particulars is to give the adverse party information which the pleadings, by reason of their generality, do not give. State v. Dix, 74 Pac. 570, 572, 33 Wash. 405 (citing Spokane & I. Lumber Co. v. Loy, 58 Pac. 672, 60 Pac. 1119, 21 Wash. 501).

In a homicide case, a motion made by defendant on return of the indictment, and before he pleaded to it, that the district attorney be ordered to furnish him with a copy of the autopsy, and of the alleged confession made by the defendant to the police, with a transcript of the evidence on which the grand jury found the indictment, and to afford defendant's attorneys an opportunity to inspect all weapons and other exhibits and things in the district attorney's possession, and also that the district attorney be ordered to furnish certain physicians portions of the body taken at the time of the autopsy, was not a motion for a bill of particulars, but an attempt to compel the commonwealth to disclose its evidence, in part, at least; and it was within the discretion of the court to grant or refuse it. The office of a "bill of particulars" is not to compel the commonwealth to disclose its evidence, but to give defendant such information, in addition to that contained in the complaint or indictment regarding the crime charged, as law and justice require that he should have in order to safeguard his constitutional rights, and to enable him to fully understand the crime, and to prepare his defense; and it should appear that without the desired information justice may not be done. Commonwealth v. Jordan, 98 N. E. 809, 811, 207 Mass. 259.

An indictment for nuisance, which merely charges the frequent and rapid passing and repassing of trains of defendant over a public road or street, acts which are entirely allowable in themselves, cannot be cured by a "bill of particulars," for that supplement to an indictment cannot give force to what was originally invalid. Commonwealth v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 72 Atl. 278, 279, 223 Pa. 23, 132 Am. St. Rep. 723.

BILL OF PEACE

"Bills of peace" were used, first, to prevent vexatious recurrence of litigation by several asserting the same right, and, second, to prevent reiteration of an unsuccessful claim. Where a man sets up a general and exclusive right to lands or tenements, and many persons controvert it and he cannot quiet it except by resort to numerous actions at law, he has his remedy by a "bill of peace" in equity, in which he may join all of the adverse claimants. Vandalia Coal Co. v. Lawson, 87 N. E. 47, 50, 43 Ind. App. 226.

A "bill of peace" is a bill filed to secure an established legal title against the vexatious recurrence of litigation by a numerous class insisting on the same right, or by an individual relitigating an unsuccessful claim, the equity being that a right established at law is intended to protection; and, in order to originate this jurisdiction where a numerous class insist on the same right, it is essential that there be a single claim of right in all arising out of some privity or relationship with the plaintiff. A bill filed by the guardian of a minor at the instance of the other heirs, who together are liable to litigation, both by a sublessee who went into possession under a lessee of the deceased owner and the assignee of a purchaser in a contract of sale executed by deceased owner, cannot be maintained as a bill of peace for the avoidance of a multiplicity of suits, since the rights of the sublessee and the purchaser are independent of and adverse to each other, and they have a right to litigate their claims separately, and to have them decided on their own merits without the expense and complications of a litigation which includes the rights of others. Detroit Trust Co. v. Hunrath, 181 N. W. 147, 152, 168 Mich. 180.

BILL OF PRIVILEGE

Attorneys, being officers of the court, are not liable to be arrested by its ordinary process, but must be sued by bill called a "bill of privilege"; it being presumed that they are in court as officers of the tribunal. Greenleaf v. People's Bank of Buffalo, 45 S. E. 638, 640, 133 N. C. 292, 63 L. R. A. 499, 98 Am. St. Rep. 709 (quoting 3 Black. Comm. p. 289).

BILL OF REVIEW

A "bill of review," strictly speaking, is a proceeding to correct a final decree in the same court, for error apparent on the face of the decree or on account of new evidence discovered since the final decree. The decree being final, the bill of review is not regarded as a part of the cause in which the decree was rendered, but as a new suit, having for its object a correction of the decree in the former suit. Hardwick v. American Can Co., 89 S. W. 735, 115 Tenn. 393, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1029 (quoting and adopting the definition in Laidley v. Merrifield, 84 Va. [7 Leigh] 346, 353, 354).

A "bill of review" is a bill or complaint seeking after the lapse of the term, to reverse or modify a decree that has been made or entered in the case, and can only be filed on leave first obtained from the chancellor in whose court the decree attacked was rendered, and is based on errors of law apparent on the face of the decree, or on account of new facts discovered since the decree was entered. Smith v. Rucker, 129 S. W. 1079, 1080, 95 Ark. 517, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1030.

A suit to cancel a decree against plaintiff for the amount due on a note, as a cloud on the title to his realty, and to enjoin its enforcement on the ground that defendant had agreed with plaintiff to indemnify him against the payment of the note as a consideration of plaintiff's assignment of the mortgage securing the note, is not in the nature of a "bill of review," within B. & C. Comp. § 391, abolishing that form of suit. Smith v. Nelson, 78 Pac. 740, 741, 46 Or. 1.

BILL OF SALE

"A 'bill of sale' is a written agreement, either under seal or not under seal, by which one person transfers his right to or interest in personal chattels to another. Such is the definition of a 'bill of sale' where the purpose of the instrument is to pass the absolute title from the person executing the paper to the person to whom the paper is delivered. A 'bill of sale' to secure a debt is simply a bill of sale executed by the debtor to his creditor, having the effect to transfer the title to the property to be held by the creditor until the debt is paid; that is to say, a bill of sale to secure a debt is to personal property as a security deed is to real property. * * * Where one sells to another an article of personal property, and takes a note for the purchase money, in which the purchaser agrees that the title to the property shall remain in the seller until the purchase money is paid, the promissory note with such a stipulation in it has none of the elements necessary to constitute a bill of sale. * * * A conditional sale of personal property, evidenced by a promissory note, is therefore not a bill of sale to secure a debt." Berry v. Robinson & Overton, 50 S. E. 378, 122 Ga. 575 (citing Bouv. Law Dict. [Rawle's Rev.] Stroud's Jud. Dict. [2d Ed.]).

BILL QUIA TIMET

A "bill quia timet" is in the nature of a writ of prevention and is entertained as a measure of precaution, justice, and to forestall wrongs or anticipated mischiefs, as where a guardian or other trustee is squandering an estate, or where one in possession of property which another unjustly claims is likely to lose the evidence of his title by delay in asserting and testing the hostile claim. Bailley v. Briggs, 56 N. Y. 407, 415.

A "bill quia timet" is a bill in equity whereby clouds are removed from complainant's title, and complainant must set forth his title and defendant's title, and has the burden of proof, and so differs from the statutory suit to quiet title provided for by act N. J. March 2, 1870 (P. L. p. 20), which places the burden of proof on defendant. Fittichauer v. Metropolitan Fire Proofing Co., 61 Atl. 746, 748, 70 N. J. Eq. 429.

BILL RECEIVABLE

A debt due for goods sold is a bill receivable of the seller within an assignment of his "bills receivable." Rogers v. Abbot, 92 N. E. 472, 473, 206 Mass. 270, 138 Am. St. Rep. 394.

BILLED PRICES

Where a manufacturer communicated with a customer by letter by using the term "old prices," that term meant "billed prices," or the prices at which the goods were originally sold to the customer. Danziger v. Pittsfield Shoe Co., 68 N. E. 534, 537, 204 Ill. 145.

BILLIARDS

BILLIARD TABLE

The term "billiard table," as used in a statute empowering cities to suppress "billiard tables," while that term was applied to tables substantially the same as pool tables of the present time, may be construed to include pool tables so as to authorize an ordinance prohibiting their use. City of Clearwater v. Bowman, 82 Pac. 526, 527, 72 Kan. 92.

A license to keep a "billiard table" does not authorize its use for the game of pool. Rodgers v. State, 26 Ala. 76, 77.

BIND

A memorandum in the form of an application for insurance, containing a brief statement of particulars and marked "binding," containing an agreement for insurance to a certain amount at a reasonable premium and providing for a policy when the facts are found by applicant and made known to the insurer, is an agreement for insurance to continue at a reasonable rate of premium until the applicant had opportunity to furnish further particulars, and would so furnish them, and that both parties would then endeavor to agree on a premium and make a contract in the form of a policy. Scammell v. China Mut. Ins. Co., 41 N. E. 649, 650, 164 Mass. 341, 342, 49 Am. St. Rep. 462.

A surety of mortgaged property standing as surety is released, if, without the surety's consent, a binding agreement is made between the creditor and principal debtor for an extension of the maturity of the debt with prejudice to the surety's right to pay the debt and proceed against his principal; but such a "binding agreement" must be conclusive against both the creditor and the principal, and hence an agreement for an extension of maturity procured by the principal's fraud, not being binding on the creditor, does not release the surety. Red River Nat. Bank v. Bray (Tex.) 148 S. W. 290, 291.

BIND OVER

Where the record transmitted to the circuit court by the justice holding a preliminary examination showed that there had been an examination, and that accused was "bound over" to the circuit court, and that a bond for his appearance was approved, the irregularity, if any, in summarily overruling a plea in abatement for want of a preliminary examination was not prejudicial; the words "bind over" being understood in law as requiring one to give bail to appear at the trial of a given case. Hack v. State, 124 N. W. 492, 493, 141 Wis. 346.

BINDINGS OR BRAIDS

Narrow woven cotton strips bearing "featherstitch" or "herringbone" ornamentation, used largely for binding seams, but commercially known as "featherstitch braids" at and prior to the enactment of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. L. 181, c. 11, which shifted braids from the lower duty of the notions schedule, par. 320, to the higher duty of the trimmings schedule, par. 339, without any change of phraseology to indicate that it was the purpose to depart from the settled commercial meaning of the word "braids," must be deemed dutiable at 60 per cent. under the trimmings schedule, as cotton braids, and not at 45 per cent. under the notions schedule, as "bindings" or as "tapes,"—especially in view of the settled administrative construction to such effect. United States v. Baruch, 32 Sup. Ct. 306, 223 U. S. 191, 56 L. Ed. 399.

BIRDS

Guinea fowl and turkeys, that are not shown to be in fact wild birds, are more appropriately classified as "poultry," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 278, 30 Stat. 172, rather than as "birds and land * * * fowls" under section 2, Free List, par. 494, 30 Stat. 196. Silz v. United States, 178 Fed. 273, 101 C. C. A. 537.

The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 426, 30 Stat. 191, for "furs dressed on the skin," does not include dressed goose skins with the down on. Such articles are dutiable as "bird skins, * * * dressed * * * or manufactured in any manner," under paragraph 425, 30 Stat. 191. Herskovitz & Roth v. United States, 180 Fed. 631, 632.

In regard to stuffed skins of domestic chicks and ducklings, used by confectioners and dealers in Easter goods and novelties, held, that they are not "toys" within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 418, 30 Stat. 191, but "birds, stuffed," under paragraph 493, § 2, Free List, 30 Stat. 196. Morimura Bros. v. United States, 141 Fed. 383.

Where a voter was born June 9, 1883, and an election was held on June 8, 1904, the day following the election was his "birthday." Erwin v. Benton, 87 S. W. 291, 294, 120 Ky. 536, 9 Ann. Cas. 264.

BITCH

See Whoring Bitch.

Want of chastity imported

"Bitch" is a term which may be "applied opprobriously to a woman; strictly a lewd or sensual woman" (Oxford Dictionary); "an opprobrious name for a woman, especially a lewd woman" (Webster); "a term of reproach for a lewd woman" (Chambers); "a wench or lewd woman" (March's Thesaurus); though it may be used as a general term of opprobrium without any definite reference to chastity. Where a declaration in slander by the words "damned bitch" laid an innuendo that plaintiff was thereby charged with adultery, she being a married woman, an amendment after limitations by adding the words "Whore and" should have been allowed, and the question left to the jury, since the words so understood are generically the same. Stoner v. Erisman, 56 Atl. 77, 206 Pa. 602.

A statement, made of and concerning a married woman, that she was "a God damned little black bitch" was not slanderous per se; but a further statement that she was "a God damned little whoring bitch" was slanderous per se. Cameron v. Cameron, 144 S. W. 171, 173, 162 Mo. App. 110.

BITTERS

See Intoxicating Bitters.

As mixture, see Mixture.

BITULITHIC

"Bitulithic" is the name of a particular kind of pavement invented by Warren Bros., of Boston, Mass. Lacoste v. City of New Orleans, 44 South. 287, 288, 119 La. 469.

The word "bitulithic" is a coined registered trade-mark used to designate a bituminous macadam pavement made according to the Warren Bros. process. Selbert v. City of Indianapolis, 81 N. E. 99, 102, 40 Ind. App. 296.

BLACK ROT

"Black rot" is a disease incident to grape culture which does not attack the plant itself, but is a fungus growth on the fruit and is supposed to originate from spores in the air. Lurch v. Holder (N. J.) 27 Atl. 81, 82.

BLACKLIST

The term "blacklisting" did not include a case where manufacturers of patent medicines, who had contracted with wholesale dealers to handle the goods at a uniform price, were furnished by the wholesale dealers with a list of dealers who had cut the established price, resulting in the refusal of the manufacturers to sell to such wholesale dealers except at the long or retail price. John D. Park & Sons v. National Wholesale Druggists Ass'n, 67 N. E. 136, 143, 175 N. Y. 1, 62 L. R. A. 632, 96 Am. St. Rep. 578.

The "blacklisting of employes" by an association of employers is not an actionable wrong unless actual damages occur. Willner v. Silverman, 71 Atl. 962, 964, 109 Md. 341, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 895.

BLACKMAIL

"Extortion" is a synonymous term with "blackmail."

"'Blackmail' is an extortion of hush money; obtaining value from a person as a condition of refraining from making an accusation against him, or disclosing some secret calculated to operate to his prejudice." Ex parte Algae, 104 N. W. 751, 74 Neb. 353 (quoting Rap. & L. Law Dict.).

A scheme to collect an alleged debt by putting the alleged debtor in fear and inducing him to pay a price to evade the threatened danger of prosecution constitutes "blackmail." One who pays money to a collector of alleged debt to prevent the collector from making damaging disclosures to a prosecuting officer is "blackmailed." United States v. Horman, 118 Fed. 780, 781.

The gist of "blackmail," under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 1999, punishing one who accuses another of immoral conduct with intent to extort or gain, etc., is the extortion of things of value from a person by menaces of personal injury, or by threatening to accuse him of crime or any immoral conduct, which, if true, tends to degrade and disgrace him. Eacock v. State, 82 N. E. 1039, 1041, 169 Ind. 488.

The sending of letters purporting to come from the society of the "Black Hand," stating that the society had decided prosecutor's case and demanded from him a specified sum of money or death would be the prosecutor's reward, constitutes "blackmail." People v. Triscoll, 102 N. Y. Supp. 328, 330, 117 App. Div. 120.

The gravamen of the offense of "blackmail," as defined in Pen. Code 1895, § 116, providing that if any person shall accuse another of a crime or offense, or expose or publish any of his personal acts, infirmities, failings, or compel any person to do any act or to refrain from doing any lawful act against his will with intent to extort money or other thing of value from any person, or if any person shall attempt or threaten to do any of the acts enumerated with the intent to extort money or other thing of value, such person shall be guilty of blackmail, is the "intent to extort money or other thing of value." Chunn v. State, 54 S. E. 751, 752, 125 Ga. 789.

One attempting to obtain money from another with his consent by the wrongful use of fear, and a verbal threat to publicly accuse him of adultery, is guilty of the felony of an attempt to commit "extortion," defined by Penal Law, §§ 850, 851, as the obtaining of property from another with his consent induced by wrongful use of fear and by a threat to accuse him of any crime, and is not guilty of the misdemeanor denounced by section 857, providing that a person who verbally makes such a threat as would be criminal if made in writing is guilty of a misdemeanor, which applies only to "blackmail," defined by section 856 as the extorting of money from another by any writing threatening to accuse a person of crime, for the threats under sections 850, 851, may be written or verbal. A threat that will produce the fear that constitutes an element of the crime of extortion, if verbal, is only a misdemeanor, under Penal Law (Consol. Laws, c. 40) § 857. People ex rel. Perry v. Gillett, 124 N. Y. Supp. 470, 471, 140 App. Div. 27.

BLANCO P. CARRARA

Where a subcontract for the furnishing of the marble work of an office building provided that the marble should be "Blanco P. Carrara" marble, and plaintiff's witnesses testified that such marble was not pure white, but was marble of the character furnished, and that pure white marble was known as "Blanco Puro," while the architects testified that by "Blanco P. Carrara" they meant to specify pure white marble, whether plaintiff had substantially complied with the contract was a question for the jury. George A. Fuller Co. v. B. P. Young Co., 126 Fed. 343, 345, 61 C. C. A. 245.

BLANK

See Indorsement in Blank.

One of the definitions of the word "blank," as given by Webster's Dict., is a piece of metal prepared to be made into something by a further operation, as a coin, screw, nuts. State v. Nelson, 60 Atl. 589, 590, 27 R. I. 31.

Code 1907, § 379, provides that there shall be on the right of each ballot a column containing only the printed titles of the office for which candidates may be voted for by the electors, which column is designated as the "blank column"; but the form of ballot appended to section 380 does not show a "blank column." Section 380 permits the elector to write in the column below, under the title of the office, the name of any person, whose name is not printed upon the ballot, for whom he may desire to vote. Section 414 provides that no ballot shall be rejected for technical error which does not make it impossible to determine the elector's choice. Held, that there was no doubt as to the elector's choice, where the printed name of a candidate in the Democratic column was erased, and another name written immediately thereunder, with a cross-mark placed in front of it, so that such ballot was properly counted. Wilkerson v. Cantelou, 51 South. 799, 165 Ala. 619.

An amendment of a writ by the court filling the blank after the word "defendant" is not "filled by another" in the sense of Code Civ. Proc. § 920, providing that no paper save a subpoena issuing from a justice court shall be valid if there are "blanks left to be filled by another." Brann v. Blum, 72 Pac. 168, 171, 138 Cal. 644.

BLANK INDORSEMENT

See Indorsement in Blank.

BLANKS

Papers to be used as envelopes and cut in that form but not yet pasted are not dutiable as paper envelopes under paragraph 399, Schedule M, § 1, Act of July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. 188, but are "blanks" dutiable as manufactures of paper under paragraph 407, 30 Stat. 189. Hunter v. United States, 134 Fed. 361, 362, 67 C. C. A. 343.

Rev. St. 1896, art. 4571, requiring the Railroad Commission to prepare "suitable blanks" with questions eliciting information concerning roads desired by the commission, and imposing a penalty for failure of a company or its officers to fill out and return the "blanks" or correctly answer questions propounded therein, imposes a penalty only when the questions propounded and information requested on face of the "blanks" are not answered and furnished, and orders passed by the commission requiring a company to give information as to the number of freight cars handled at designated stations during specified months, and calling for information as to salaries of attorneys, etc., are not the "blanks" required, and to authorize imposition of the penalty it must appear that the commission forwarded to the company blanks calling for the information, and that it failed to fill them up and return them to it. State v. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co., 118 S. W. 736, 738, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 108.

BLANKET

Burlap manufactured into covers for horses are "blankets" within the purview of a schedule of railroad rates including that sort of articles as blankets. Smith v. Great Northern R. Co., 107 N. W. 56, 57, 15 N. D. 195.

BLANKET CONSENT

A consent for a street railway to use the city streets, which does not mention the termini or the routes, is a "blanket consent" and is invalid when questioned by proper authority. State ex rel. Caldwell v. Citizens' St. Ry. Co., 114 N. W. 429, 480, 80 Neb. 357.

BLANKET NOTICE

A notice given by a purchaser of a certificate of land sold for taxes, which includes many descriptions, is insufficient, being a "blanket notice." Ambler v. Patterson, 114 N. W. 781, 782, 80 Neb. 570.

BLANKET POLICY

A "blanket policy" of insurance on a quantity of grain does not apply specifically to any particular number of bushels of grain that may have been in any particular granary at the time the policy was written, but applies to this class of property, even though replaced by other of a similar specie during the entire term of the policy. Johnston v. Phelps County Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co., 102 N. W. 72, 73, 78 Neb. 50 (citing and following State Ins. Co. v. Schreck, 43 N. W. 340, 27 Neb. 527, 6 L. R. A. 524, 20 Am. St. Rep. 696).

BLAST

See Double Blast.

A "blast" is a strong charge of explosive that both tears and throws the earth and rock and so is different from a "spring shot," which simply makes a chamber at the bottom of the drilled hole. City of Spokane v. Patterson, 89 Pac. 402, 408, 46 Wash. 98, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1104, 123 Am. St. Rep. 921, 13 Ann. Cas. 706.

BLEACHED

As to cotton cloth which is unbleached, except with respect to figures covering about one-eighth of the surface of the fabric, which are made of bleached threads, held, that these figures do not make the goods "bleached," within the meaning of the various provisions for bleached cotton cloth which are found in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule 1, 30 Stat. 175. United States v. Beer, 143 Fed. 918, 919.

BLEACHERS

Seats at a ball park made of boards and without any covering are called "bleachers." Heigert v. State, 75 N. E. 850, 851, 87 Ind. App. 398.

BLEACHERS' BLUE

"Bleachers' blue," which is not used as a color or dye, but solely as a bleaching mixture, although a coal tar product, does not fall within the provisions of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 15, 30 Stat. 151, including coal tar colors or dye, but within the further provision of the same paragraph providing for duties on coal tar preparations that are not colors or dyes. Abram De Ronde v. United States, 148 Fed. 653, 654.

BLEED OR DRAIN VALVE

A "bleed or drain valve" is a valve used for the purpose of draining the pipe leading from the boiler into the engine. Roche v. Llewellyn Ironworks, 74 Pac. 147, 148, 140 Cal. 563.

BLEND

As expressly defined by Food and Drugs Act June 30, 1906, c. 3915, § 8, 34 Stat. 770,

"blend" is a mixture of like substances, not excluding harmless coloring or flavoring ingredients used for the purpose of coloring and flavoring only. Savage v. Jones, 32 Sup. Ct. 715, 725, 225 U. S. 501, 56 L. Ed. 1182.

Food and Drug Act June 30, 1906, c. 3915, § 8, 34 Stat. 771, provides that an article which does not contain any added poisonous or deleterious ingredients shall not be deemed to be adulterated or misbranded, if labeled so as to plainly indicate that it is a compound imitation or blend, and the word "blend" is plainly stated on the package, which term shall be construed to mean a mixture of like substances, not excluding harmless coloring or flavoring ingredients used for coloring or flavoring only. Held that, where syrup consisting of refined cane sugar flavored with an extract of maple wood was sold under a label describing it as "Western Reserve Ohio Blended Maple Syrup," the word "blend" indicated that the article was a mixture and imitation, and there was therefore no violation of the act. United States v. Sixty-Eight Cases Syrup, 172 Fed. 781, 783.

In view of Food and Drug Act June 30, 1906, c. 3915, § 8, 34 Stat. 770, providing that the term "blend" shall be construed to mean a mixture of like substances, and regulation 27a, made under the authority of such act, and providing that the terms "mixture" and "compound" are interchangeable, "blend" is a "compound"; but a "compound" may or may not be a "blend." In other words, the term "compound" does not necessarily denote a mixture of unlike substances. Frank v. United States, 192 Fed. 864, 869, 113 C. C. A. 188.

BLENDING FLOUR

"Blended flour" is flour mixed with corn meal, about half and half, of a dark color and of a peculiar odor. Bunch v. Well Bros. & Bauer, 80 S. W. 582, 72 Ark. 343, 65 L. R. A. 80.

BLIND BILLING

The act of shipping without stating the charges is called "blind billing." Standard Oil Co. of New York v. United States, 179 Fed. 614, 616, 103 C. C. A. 172.

BLIND STITCHES

"Blind stitches" are ones which enter the cloth without going entirely through it and show only on one side. Acme Keystone Mfg. Co. v. Dearborn, 180 Fed. 766, 768, 769.

BLIND TIGER

A "blind tiger" is a place where intoxicants are "sold on the sly." Town of Ruston v. Fountain, 42 South. 644, 645, 118 La. 53 (citing Stand. Dict.).

A "blind tiger" is a place where intoxicating liquors are kept for illegal sale in defiance of law. Allison v. State, 55 South. 453, 454, 1 Ala. App. 206.

A "blind tiger" is a place where liquors are sold on the sly, in violation of law, and is a common nuisance. Callaway v. Mims, 62 S. E. 654, 656, 5 Ga. App. 9 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 808).

A "blind tiger," within Pen. Code 1895, art. 406, is any place in which intoxicating liquors are sold by any device whereby the party selling or delivering the same is concealed from the person buying or to whom the same is delivered. Fitch v. State, 127 S. W. 1040, 1043, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 366.

It is well known that a keeper of a "blind tiger" in its general acceptation and understanding means a person engaged in the unlawful sale of intoxicating beverages. State v. Tabler, 72 N. E. 1039, 1040, 34 Ind. App. 393, 107 Am. St. Rep. 256 (citing Stand. Dict.; Rush v. Commonwealth [Ky.] 47 S. W. 586).

An information, charging that accused violated an ordinance by having in his possession a jug of whisky within the city limits, sufficiently charged him with running a "blind tiger," defined by the ordinance to be a nuisance. State ex rel. Johnson v. Thompson, 35 South. 582, 111 La. 315.

BLINDNESS

See Color Blindness.

As sickness, see Sickness.

BLIZZARD

The term "blizzard" is a familiar term in the Mississippi Valley applying to certain violent storms. This term has found its way into dictionaries, and is defined by Webster as: "A violent blow. A dry, intensely cold, violent storm, with high wind and fine driving snow, such as those which originate on the eastern slope of the Canadian Rocky Mountains." Jordan v. Iowa Mut. Tornado Ins. Co., 130 N. W. 177, 178, 151 Iowa, 73, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 266.

BLOCK

See Lots, Blocks, Tracts, and Parcels of Land; Snatch Block; Solid Block.

The "block" of a railway switch frog is a piece of wedge-shaped wood driven in the point where the two rails come together to keep one's foot from being caught in the frog. Schroeder v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 103 N. W. 985, 986, 128 Iowa, 365.

As building

Under an insurance policy covering goods contained in "brick block situated at Nos. 82-90 W. St.," where it appeared that insured occupied the fifth story over stories No. 84-90, and also the fifth story over a store No. 80; that the only entrance to the premises was a stairway at No. 82, except a freight elevator in the rear of No. 80; and that the entire premises from No. 80 to No. 90 were built and remodeled at the same time, the front upon the street being the same in appearance and owned by the same person; and that from the halls over No. 82 doors opened on both sides into rooms occupied by insured—it was held that there was nothing in the word "block" which required a holding, as a matter of law, that the part of the building running from the west side of the doorway numbered 80 to the east end of the building was a separate and distinct block by itself, but that the question was one of fact for the jury, who would be warranted in finding that it was merely a part of a large block. Westfield Cigar Co. v. Insurance Co. of North America, 48 N. E. 504, 506, 165 Mass. 541, 546.

As land inclosed by streets

Land as including, see Land.

A "block" is "a square or portion of a city inclosed by streets, whether occupied by buildings or composed of vacant lots." City of Ottawa v. Barney, 10 Kan. 270, 278 (quoting and adopting a definition in Webster, Dict.); Olsson v. City of Topeka, 21 Pac. 219, 220, 42 Kan. 709, 712 (quoting and adopting the definition in Webster, Dict.).

A "block" in a city is a part of the city inclosed by streets, whether occupied by buildings or composed of vacant lots. A statute relative to disconnecting territory from a town provided that it must appear that no part of the territory has been platted into "lots" or "blocks" as part of the town. Held, that where the territory in question constituted a portion of a subdivision of the town included in the town site at the time of the incorporation and the plat of the subdivision showed the streets of the town proper running east and west, and each alternate street running north and south laid out through the subdivision, and the spaces between the streets divided into parcels of various dimensions, the parcels being numbered, the territory could not be disconnected; it being platted into lots and blocks. Town of Fruita v. Williams, 80 Pac. 132, 133, 33 Colo. 157.

A tract of platted ground, surrounded by streets and forming a portion of a city, constitutes a block, within Gen. St. 1909, § 1874, relating to the method of assessing the cost of street improvements, and providing the same shall be made for each block separately, though the donor of the plat divided the tract into two portions by an alley and designated each portion a block. Bowlus v. City of Iola, 109 Pac. 406, 408, 82 Kan. 774.

A square surrounded by streets is a "block" within the meaning of Denver City Charter, § 75, providing that no license for the sale of intoxicating liquors shall be granted "except on petition of the owners of a majority of the real estate within the frontage of the block in which such liquors or any thereof are to be sold," though such square is made up of two platted subdivisions, and one-half of the square is designated as a block in one of the subdivisions. Slater v. Fire & Police Board of City & County of Denver, 96 Pac. 554, 555, 43 Colo. 225.

The annexation act (Acts 1888, p. 113, c. 98), as amended by the Foutz act (Acts 1902, p. 198, c. 130), defines a block for taxation purposes to be an area bounded by streets, etc., opened, graded, curbed, and otherwise improved from curb to curb by pavement by some substantial material, etc. A particular avenue was opened, graded, and curbed on both sides, and has properly paved gutters. The space occupied by car tracks, and two feet outside of them was paved. The remaining strips lying between the gutters and the paving along the tracks which are six or seven feet wide have substantial bases and a pike macadam condition. Held, that the avenue is improved within the statute. Coulston v. City of Baltimore, 71 Atl. 990, 991, 109 Md. 271.

A tract of land containing 200,660 superficial square feet is not taxable at the full city rate under Acts 1902, c. 130, defining "landed property" within Acts 1888, c. 98, § 19, relating to the taxation of property annexed to Baltimore, and providing that a "block of ground" shall be deemed to mean a tract not exceeding 200,000 superficial square feet bounded by improved streets or alleys. City of Baltimore v. Harris, 77 Atl. 335, 336, 113 Md. 227.

Section 19 of the act annexing certain territory to Baltimore City (Acts 1888, c. 98) declares that until the year 1900 the right of taxation on all "landed property" in the territory annexed shall not exceed the rate for Baltimore county; that from the year 1900 "the property, real and personal," shall be liable to taxation as property within the city's old limits, provided that after the year 1900 the Baltimore county rate of taxation at the time of the passage of the act shall not be increased for such purposes "on any landed property within the city territory until avenues, street, or alleys shall have been opened and constructed through the same, nor until there shall be upon every block of ground so to be formed at least six dwellings or store houses ready for occupation." Acts 1902, c. 130, amendatory of Annexation Act, defines "landed property" as real estate, whether in fee simple or leasehold, and whether improved or unimproved, and provides that "until avenues, streets, or alleys shall have been opened and constructed," shall be construed to mean until avenues, streets, or alleys shall be opened, graded, curbed, and otherwise improved from curb to curb by pavement or other substantial material. It also provides that the words "avenues," "streets," and "alleys" are used interchangeably, and that "block of ground" shall be construed to mean an area not exceeding 200,000 superficial square feet, formed and bounded on all sides by intersecting improved avenues, streets, or alleys. Held, that the effect of the amendatory act was to retain the county rate of taxation in the annexed territory until landed property therein situated became urban property within the terms of the act. Mayor, etc., of City of Baltimore v. Gall, 68 Atl. 282, 285, 106 Md. 684.

The words "square" and "block," when used to designate a piece of land in a city, are synonymous terms. We find the word "square" used chiefly in southern cities, and the word "block," elsewhere, but they mean the same thing; they mean a piece of land defined by streets surrounding it. Gilsonite Roofing & Paving Co. v. St. Louis Fair Ass'n, 132 S. W. 657, 660, 231 Mo. 589.

The word "block," as used with reference to subdivisions of land, is synonymous with the word "square," and means the territory bounded by four streets. An application for a liquor license, under an ordinance requiring that it shall be signed by a majority of the property owners, according to the frontage, "on both sides of the street in the block upon which such dramshop is to be kept, and * * * by a majority of the bona fide householders and persons and firms doing business on each side of the street in the block upon which the dramshop is to have its main entrance," though signed by the property owners and householders and persons or firms doing business on both sides of the street in the block in which the dramshop is to have its main entrance, is insufficient to compel the issuance of a license, where it does not have the signatures of a majority of the property owners on both sides of the streets bounding the block in which the dramshop is to be located, for the word "block," as used in the first clause recited, means the territory inclosed by the four streets, and is synonymous with the word "square." Harrison v. People ex rel. Boettger, 63 N. E. 191, 192, 195 Ill. 466 (citing Cent. Dict.; Webster, Dict.; City of Ottawa v. Barney, 10 Kan. 270; Olsson v. City of Topeka, 21 Pac. 219, 42 Kan. 712; State v. Deffes, 10 South. 597, 44 La. Ann. 164; Todd v. Kankakee & I. R. R. Co., 78 Ill. 530; City of Chicago v. Stratton, 44 N. E. 853, 855, 162 Ill. 494, 501, 35 L. R. A. 84, 53 Am. St. Rep. 325).

The word "block" ordinarily contemplates a territory divided by streets into blocks or squares. As defined by Webster, it is a "square or portion of a city inclosed by streets, whether occupied by buildings or composed of vacant lots." This definition was evidently not the one intended in Ky. St. § 3449, authorizing the common council of cities of the third class to pass ordinances requiring the improvement of streets and alleys by grading any portion thereof not less in length than one "block," since such construction would deny the city the right to require owners living in territory within the city not capable of division into blocks or squares to contribute their just proportion of the expense of improving the sidewalks, guttering, and curbing in front of their property. In the absence of a statutory definition of what constitutes a block, its length is a question of fact to be determined from the evidence as any other disputed fact. Evidently the purpose of the Legislature was to require a city, when it undertook to improve streets or alleys, to improve not less than a block in territory divided into squares or blocks, or, if not so divided, to improve not less than a block in distance. Board of Councilmen of City of Frankfort v. Brislan, 104 S. W. 311, 312, 126 Ky. 477.

Rev. St. 1909, § 7201, makes it unlawful for a county court to grant a license to keep a dramshop in a town or city containing 2,000 inhabitants or more until a majority of the taxpaying citizens and guardians of minors holding property in the "block or square" in which the dramshop is to be kept shall sign the petition asking for such license to keep a dramshop in such block or square. Held, that the words "block" or "square" as so used were synonyms and contemplated a portion of a city inclosed by streets, whether occupied by buildings or composed of vacant lots; the term "block or square" meaning a portion of ground in a town or city surrounded by streets, and hence a petition signed by only a majority of the owners of property within a section of a city bounded on two sides by streets, neither dedicated nor open to the public, but shown on the plat of that portion of the city, was insufficient. Kochitzky v. Herbst, 140 S. W. 925, 929, 160 Mo. App. 443.

As street lying between two cross-streets

Acts 1904, relating to the obstruction of sidewalks in the city of Baltimore, defines "block" to mean a portion of one side of any street included between the nearest two cross-streets. Storck v. Baltimore City, 61 Atl. 380, 381, 101 Md. 476.

The word "block" used in an ordinance prohibiting the erection of a blacksmith's shop in any block in which two-thirds of the buildings on both sides of the street are used exclusively for residence purposes, without the written consent of a majority of the property owners, "provided that in determining whether two-thirds of the buildings * * * are used exclusively for residence purposes, any building fronting on another street and located upon a corner lot shall not be considered," means merely the part of the street upon which the blacksmith's shop is to be located, which lies between two cross-streets, and does not mean the square surrounded by four streets. Patterson v. Johnson, 73 N. E. 761, 765, 214 Ill. 481.

BLOOD CHARCOAL

"Blood charcoal," a substance which, like bone char, is composed chiefly of carbon, and is used for decolorizing sugar, is not dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 87, 30 Stat. 156, as an "article composed of carbon," but either under paragraph 10, Schedule A, 36 Stat. 152, as "bone char" by similitude, or at the similar rate provided in section 6, 30 Stat. 205, for unenumerated manufactured articles. United States v. George Leuders & Co., 148 Fed. 398.

BLOOD POISONING

"Blood poisoning" is not one of the primary or idiopathic diseases. It is a toxic condition of the blood caused either from or through a surface wound or some internal lesion, or from the breaking down of tissue incident to an existent or precedent disease and thereby producing suppuration. Jones v. Pennsylvania Casualty Co., 52 S. E. 578, 579, 140 N. C. 262, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 982, 111 Am. St. Rep. 843.

BLOOD RELATIONS

See Nearest Blood Relations.

Where a testator has no blood relations except through his mother, her descendants are his blood relatives, whether they are illegitimates or the descendants of illegitimates, and such persons are included within the term "blood relations" when used in a will by necessary implication. In re Sander's Estate, 105 N. W. 1064-1066, 126 Wis. 680, 5 Ann. Cas. 508.

A will, devising real estate to a sister of testatrix, and providing that any part of the property or the proceeds on hand at the sister's death not disposed of by her to her blood relatives shall descend under the statute of descent and distribution, does not vest in the sister an absolute title except in so far as she may dispose of the property during life or by will to blood relations, and a devise by her to her husband for life with remainder over to her nieces is void as to the husband, since he is not a "blood relation." Flippen v. Robinson (Tex.) 144 S. W. 707.

Under the charter of a beneficial association, authorizing a member to designate, as the recipient of the benefit payable on his death, a person of his "immediate family," or, in default of such family, one of his blood relatives, a daughter of insured living with him as a member of the same household, with him as its head, may be designated as beneficiary, as one of his immediate family, though she be of age, so that he is not legally bound to support her and she is not under his legal control. Though the daughter is more than 21 years of age before the death of her father, left his home, intending to make a living for herself and using her own earning for her own benefit, and though the father left a widow and minor children, who had been, and were at his death, a part of his household, dependent on him, such daughter had not necessarily ceased to be a member of the father's "immediate family," and so not entitled to take his death benefit as his designated beneficiary. The primary meaning of the word "family," as used in our language to specify a definite group of persons, is "the collective body of persons who form one household under one head and one domestic government, including parents, children and servants." Quoting and adopting definition in Cent. Dict. In construing a writing in which the word "family" is used, this primary meaning should be assumed in determining the expressed intention of the writer, unless there is something in the context to show that it is used in some other meaning. The same person may be either a member of the "immediate family" of the insured or one of his "blood relatives." Both groups are composed of persons of the same "family" with the member; in the former reference being had to the primary meaning of "family" as denoting members of one household, gathered around one head, and in the latter to "family" as denoting individuals related through descent from one stock. "Family" is frequently used to denote those connected by the tie of common descent as well as that of a common household. The words "immediate family" is used in this connection to indicate a group of persons, of which the insured is one, connected as one "family," and from which is excluded any member who has become separated from the group as constituting one household, and "immediate family" certainly includes all persons bound together by the ties of relationship and parents and children living together as members of one household under one head. Dalton v. Knights of Columbus, 67 Atl. 510, 511, 512, 80 Conn. 212, 125 Am. St. Rep. 116, 11 Ann. Cas. 568 (citing Town of Cheshire v. Town of Burlington, 31 Conn. 326, 329; Hart v. Goldsmith, 51 Conn. 479, 480; Wood v. Wood, 28 Atl. 520, 63 Conn. 324, 327; Crosgrove v. Crosgrove, 38 Atl. 219, 69 Conn. 416, 422; *Knights of Columbus v. BLOWN GLASSWARE

Thermometers and lactoscopes, composed chiefly of blown glass, but in part of other materials, are not dutiable under the provisions in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 100, 30 Stat. 157, as "blown glassware," but under paragraph 112 of said act, as manufactures of which glass is the component material of chief value, not specially provided for. Elmer & Amend v. United States, 126 Fed. 439, 441.

"Bottles," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 99, 30 Stat. 156, exclude blown glass flasks for chemical laboratories, dutiable under paragraph 100, 30 Stat. 157, as "blown glassware." Elmer & Amend v. United States, 168 Fed. 240, 241, 242, 93 C. C. A. 454.

Crude, incomplete articles of glass, known as "blanks," produced by blowing glass into a mold, which are suitable only to be placed in the hands of glass cutters for further manufacture into finished articles, are not within the provision for "blown glassware" in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 100, 30 Stat. 157, but are dutiable under the provision for "all glass or manufactures of glass," in paragraph 112 of said act, 30 Stat. 158. United States v. Durand, 137 Fed. 382, 383, 69 C. C. A. 566.

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 100, 30 Stat. 157, the term "blown glassware" includes articles blown in a mold as well as freehanded. Articles in chief value of blown glass, but in part of other glass or other material, are not within the provision for "blown glassware" in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 100, 30 Stat. 157, but are dutiable as manufactures of glass under paragraph 112, 30 Stat. 158. In par. 99, the term "molded," as applied to glassware, is synonymous with "pressed." In par. 100, the provision for "articles of glass * * * ornamented, decorated, or ground (except such grinding as is necessary for fitting stoppers)," is not limited to articles in which the grinding is done for ornamental or decorative purposes, but includes plain goods ground for utility purposes only. United States v. Hell Chemical Co., 178 Fed. 537, 539, 102 C. C. A. 47.

BLUDGEON

"Bludgeon" is a short club commonly loaded at one end or bigger at one end than the other, used as a weapon. State v. Lett, 60 S. E. 782, 783, 63 W. Va. 685 (quoting Cent. Dict.).

"Blue notes" are notes accepted by an insurance company for unpaid premiums. A method of extending the time to pay premiums. New York Life Ins. Co. v. Board of Assessors for Parish of Orleans, 158 Fed. 462, 474.

BLUNT INSTRUMENT

In a prosecution of murder, a charge in the indictment that the striking was with a "blunt instrument" is sustained by testimony of the coroner's surgeon, who made the post mortem examination that the skull of the murdered person had been fractured, that the cracks in the skull were due to external violence, to a blow on the skull, and that it was with a blunt instrument, such as a stick, butt of a gun, gas pipe, hammer, or something like that. *People v. Guest relationship

The word "board," in the ordinary acceptance of the term, covers both room rent and table board. If it has the narrower meaning, it is usually designated "table board." Heron v. Webber, 68 Atl. 744, 745, 103 Me. 178.

Official boards

Under Rev. Codes, § 262, authorizing the board of examiners to employ clerical help for any state officer or board, and prohibiting such officers or boards from employing clerks without the authority of the board of examiners, the Supreme Court is not an officer or board. State ex rel. Schneider v. Cunningham, 101 Pac. 962, 965, 39 Mont. 165.

The term "board" is defined to be "a number of persons organized to perform a trust or execute official or representative functions; * * * a number of persons who have the management of some private or public business." Wilson v. Bleloch, 109 N. Y. Supp. 340, 343, 125 App. Div. 191 (dissenting opinion of Woodward, J.).

The term "boards," as used in Const. Okl. art. 7, § 2, providing that the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court shall extend to a general superintending control over all the inferior courts and over all commissions and boards created by law, is limited to such boards as are vested with judicial power by Const. art. 7, § 1, to hear and determine matters from which appeals may be taken or to which writs of certiorari and other like writs may lie. Homesteaders v. McCombs, 103 Pac. 691, 694, 24 Okl. 201, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1000, 20 Ann. Cas. 181.

A "board," in railroad parlance, is a semaphore. Tillson v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 67 Atl. 407, 412, 102 Me. 463.

BOARD MEASURE

A provision in the charter of a vessel for the carriage of a cargo of lumber for the payment of freight at so much per thousand "superficial feet, board measure," is not to be taken as requiring the application, with mathematical exactness, of the unit of one foot in length, one foot in width, and one inch in thickness to the cubical contents, but only a substantial application of that unit to the lumber according to certain standard sizes by which an overrun in thickness of less than one-quarter of an inch, in width of not more than one-half inch, and in length of a fraction of a foot, is not to be taken account of. The Loch Rannoch, 192 Fed. 219, 221.

BOARD OF ALDERMEN

In the Austin City Charter, providing that the city council shall consist of a mayor and board of aldermen, and that a majority of the members of the "whole council" shall be necessary to pass any ordinance in any wise increasing or diminishing the city revenues, the term "council" is used synonymously with the "board of aldermen," and the "whole council" referred to means the whole board of aldermen, as distinct from a quorum thereof, so that, one of the aldermen having died prior to the passage of a tax levy ordinance passed by the vote of seven, such ordinance should be considered as having received a majority of the whole board or council. Nalle v. City of Austin, 93 S. W. 141, 145, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 423.

Where, by legislative act establishing boards of street and water commissioners in cities of the first class, control over streets for the purpose of passing an ordinance authorizing construction and maintenance therein of conduits and wires for supply and distribution of electricity was taken from the common council and lodged in the board of street and water commissioners, a subsequent act relating to electric light and power companies, containing a provision that "no public street shall be open for the purpose of laying any such pipes, conduits or wires without the consent of the board of aldermen or common council of such city," did not have the effect of restoring such control to the common council; the phrase "board of aldermen or common council" in such act being used in the general sense of "governing body," and points to the board of street and water commissioners as such governing body. United Electric Co. of New Jersey v. Mutual Benefit Electric Light & Power Co. (N. J.) 81 Atl. 754.

BOARD OF THE CITY OF BOSTON

A janitor of a police station, who was removed by the police commissioners, was not protected from removal by St. 1885, c. 266, § 5, providing that officers and boards of the city of Boston may remove their subordinates "for such cause as they may deem sufficient and shall assign in their order for removal," since the police commissioners were not "officers" and did not constitute a "board of the city of Boston," but were appointed by and were responsible to the Governor of the commonwealth. Sims v. O'Meara, 79 N. E. 824, 825, 193 Mass. 547 (citing Commonwealth v. Plaisted, 19 N. E. 224, 148 Mass. 375, 383, et seq., 2 L. R. A. 142, 12 Am. St. Rep. 566; Phillips v. City of Boston, 23 N. BOARD OF DIRECTORS

The words "board of directors," as used in Code 1906, § 2276, providing that the books of a corporation shall be subject to investigation by the board of directors, applies to the board, both as a unit and also to each individual member composing the board of directors; and each individual director is entitled to inspect the corporate books. State v. Grymes, 64 S. E. 728, 730, 65 W. Va. 451, Ann. Cas. 838.

A board of education is in fact a board of trustees, and the term "board of education" is simply another name for trustees; and Pen. BOARD OF PARDONS

The "board of pardons" belongs to the executive department of the state; its privilege and prerogative being that of granting clemency. It is a board of clemency rather than a punitive body, and, instead of pronouncing judgment and sentences and imposing punishment, its duty is that of forgiving offenses and removing penalties, wiping out judgments and sentences of conviction either in whole or in part. Whenever such board undertakes to increase or extend the penalty or punishment imposed on a convict by a decree of the court, it at once passes beyond the realm of its jurisdiction and authority and infringes on a judicial power. Ex parte Prout, 86 Pac. 275, 276, 12 Idaho, 494, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1064, 10 Ann. Cas. 199.

BOARD OF POLICE COMMISSIONERS

As court, see Court (Of Justice).

BOARD OF REVENUE

The term "board of revenue" has a distinct meaning in the legislative history of Alabama from the fact that for many years there had existed in various counties of the state such boards as substitute for board of county commissioners with like powers and duties. This is further shown from the fact that the General Statutes provide for the elections of members of "boards of revenue and county commissioners," and such boards are mentioned in various other statutes. State ex rel. Leslie v. Brackin, 45 South. 841, 842, 154 Ala. 151.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS

As county officers, see County Officer.

As inferior court, see Inferior Court.

The term "board of supervisors" means an aggregation of town officers. There is no method by which one supervisor can be legislated or construed in a board. People v. Maynard, 15 Mich. 463, 472.

BOARD OF TAX REVIEW

The words "other taxing officers" as used in the act abolishing the state board of taxation and creating in lieu thereof a board for equalization, revision, review, and enforcement of tax assessments, and providing in section 34 that, where complaint is made to the created board by any person or corporation aggrieved by the assessment of property, the board shall have the power to review and correct the action of the local assessors or "other taxing officers" and of all "boards of tax review" by reducing or increasing such assessment, refers only to local taxing officers, and the term "boards of tax review," referred to in the statute, means boards that exercise an appellate review of the acts of local assessors and other local taxing officers. Tuckerton R. Co. v. State Board of Assessors (N. J.) 67 Atl. 69, 70.

BOARD OF TRADE TRANSACTION

A "board of trade transaction," as the term is generally used, represents a form of contract for the purchase and sale of wheat or other commodity, which in truth and in fact is a mere bet or wager on the price of the commodity, without any intention that anything should be actually purchased or delivered thereunder. Merrill v. Garver, 96 N. W. 619, 4 Neb. (Unof.) 830.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES

The term "board of trustees," when used in relation to municipal corporations in Colorado, has practically the same meaning as "town council," and it is therefore immaterial which form is used as the style of the enacting clause of an ordinance. People ex rel. Town of Sterling v. Chipman, 71 Pac. 1108, 1109, 31 Colo. 90.

Persons invested with the management or control of a fund may be properly styled a "board of trustees" without holding any relation of trust to the fund other than such as exist in all cases where one person has the management or control of property belonging to another. Nicols v. Board of Police Pension Fund Com'rs, 82 Pac. 557, 558, 1 Cal. App. 494.

BOARD ROOF

Where a tornado policy provided that it covered all buildings of insured except those covered with "board roof," it covered a building the roof of which was in part board and in part shingle. Kennedy v. Agricultural Ins. Co., 110 N. W. 116, 118, 21 S. D. 145.

BOARDER

See Table Board.

A "boarder" is ordinarily one who has food and lodging in another's house or family for a stipulated price. Heron v. Webber, 68 Atl. 744, 745, 103 Me. 178.

Guest distinguished

A "guest" is a transient person who resorts to and is received at an inn or hotel for the purpose of obtaining the accommodations which it purports to afford, as distinguished from a "boarder," who is one who abides at a place. It is said that the essential difference between a guest and a boarder lies in the character in which the party comes. If as a transient, he is a "guest"; while, if he seeks accommodation with a view to permanency so as to make the place his home for the time being, he is a "boarder." The length of his stay, however, is not of itself ordinarily decisive, for he will continue to be a guest so long as he remains in the transitory condition of that relation. Within this definition a person who came from another state to a summer resort and entered into a contract with the "proprietors of the Imperial Hotel," by which she was to stop there at a reduced rate, no definite time for her stay being fixed, was a "guest." Holstein v. Phillips & Sims, 59 S. E. 1087, 1089, 146 N. C. 366, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 475, 14 Ann. Cas. 323.

BOARDING AND LODGING

Under Laws 1903, c. 304, authorizing the sheriff to recover for boarding and lodging for each prisoner 50 cents per day, exclusive of light, fuel, furniture, and bedding, the term "boarding and lodging" does not include repairs on the jail or other property of the county nor disinfectants, toilet necessities, mops, brooms, and other articles necessary to keep the jail clean and fit for occupancy. Simms v. Norton, 118 Pac. 1071, 1072, 85 Kan. 822.

BOARDING BY J. B. W.

Where a signboard in a barroom contained the words, "boarding by J. B. W.," those words were prima facie proof that J. B. W. was the keeper of the barroom. State v. Wilson, 5 R. I. 291, 292.

See Private Boarding House.

"It is clear that as a general rule a restaurant or boarding house where the meals are wholly cooked and served by the proprietor and members of his family must be a very small affair, hardly rising to the dignity of a 'restaurant' or 'boarding house.'" Ex parte Lemon, 77 Pac. 455, 456, 143 Cal. 558, 65 L. The word "boat," when used in its ordinary sense, means any water craft; while a "barge" is a flat-bottomed freight boat or lighter for harbors and inland waters. In an action by a servant for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by stepping upon a defective portion of a "barge," evidence that the injury occurred because defendant stepped upon a defective portion of a "boat" was not at variance, although the tow, which plaintiff was engaged in assisting to make up at the time he was injured, consisted of crafts some of which were technically known as "boats" and others as "barges." Monongahela River Consol. Coal & Coke Co. v. Hardsaw (Ind.), 77 N. E. 863-865; Id., 79 N. E. 1062, 1064.

Boating

When a party goes "boating," it is not usually understood that each member performs the physical act of rowing the boat. State v. Goodwin, 82 N. E. 459, 460, 169 Ind. 285.

BOCK BEER

BODILYBODILY DEFORMITY

Where an application for an accident policy warranted that insured had no bodily deformity, and it was conceded that he was born without fingers on his right hand, there was a sufficient breach of warranty to avoid the policy. Lynch v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 200 Fed. 193, 196, 118 C. C. A. 379.

BODILY HARM

See Great Bodily Harm; Serious Bodily Harm or Injury.

The term "violent injury," as defined by Pen. Code, § 240, to be "an unlawful attempt, coupled with a present ability to commit injury upon the person of another," is not synonymous with "bodily harm," but includes any wrongful act committed by means of physical force against the person of another, even though only the feelings of such person are injured by the act. People v. Bradbury, 91 Pac. 497, 151 Cal. 675.

BODILY HEIRS

See Heirs of the Body.

Ordinarily the words "bodily heirs" and "heirs of the body," when used in a deed, will be given their technical meaning, unless there is something in the instrument itself which shows that they were used in a contrary sense as children, or as words of purchase. Dotson v. Kentland Coal & Coke Co., 150 S. W. 6, 7, 150 Ky. 60.

The term "bodily heirs" may be used in a will contrary to its technical sense to designate children of a daughter or, if dead, their descendants in being at her death. Haggin v. Rogers (Ky.) 97 S. W. 362, 363.

A deed to a married woman and her "body heirs" vests a fee simple in the grantee. Bigham v. Weller, 81 S. W. 843, 845, 113 Tenn. 70, 69 L. R. A. 370, 106 Am. St. Rep. 808.

Where testator devised land to his daughter and her "bodily heirs" the words "bodily heirs" are synonymous with children and are the words of purchase and give the daughter a life estate with remainder to her heirs. Sims v. Skinner's Ex'r, 81 S. W. 703, 118 Ky. 573.

"As the word 'heirs' is necessary to create a fee, so, in further limitation of the strictness of the foedal donation, the word 'body,' or some other words of procreation, are necessary to make it a fee tail, and ascertain to what heirs in particular the fee is limited." Tygard v. Hartwell, 102 S. W. 989, 990, 204 Mo. 200 (quoting and adopting the definitions in 2 Black. Com. p. 115).

A deed conveying land to the grantee and her "bodily heirs and assigns, forever," creates in the grantee at common law an estate tail, which is converted into a fee simple by statute. Handy v. Harris (Ky.) 105 S. W. 378.

If the words "bodily heirs" employed in a conveyance to N. and her bodily heirs are given their ordinary, legal significance, the estate is a fee simple in N.; that is, at common law it would have been an estate tail in her which our statute converts into a fee simple. Those words are to be taken in that sense—to mean the issue of the body of N. in all generations to the end of time, rather than as meaning her children, the first generation of issue of her body—unless it can be said to appear upon the face of the instrument that the grantor intended by their use to designate the children of the said N. Edins v. Murphree, 38 South. 639, 640, 142 Ala. 617.

The words "bodily heirs," as used generally in conveyances and devises, are technically and appropriately words of limitation. They were such as at common law created an estate tail. By section 2343, Ky. St. 1903, "all estates heretofore or hereafter created, which in former times would have been deemed estates entailed, shall henceforth be held to be estates in fee simple; and every limitation on such an estate shall be held valid if the same would be valid when limited upon an estate in fee simple." The effect of this statute is to convert estates tail into fee-simple estate. In construing devises and conveyances using such terms, the first rule observed is to arrive at the intention of the testator or grantor, resort being had to the whole document for the purpose; and, as the term "bodily heirs" is a term of art, it will be given its technical construction, unless there is something in the instrument evincing that it was used otherwise. Where testator gave to his widow all his property for life, and directed that after her death the same should be equally divided between his children, and provided that the portion that should go to his unmarried daughter should "descend to her bodily heirs," it was held to create an estate tail in the daughter, converted into an estate in fee by Ky. St. 1903, § 2343; the words quoted being words of inheritance and not of purchase. Edwards v. Walesby (Ky.) 98 S. W. 306.

While the words "bodily heirs" have been held to be both words of limitation and of purchase, a conveyance to one and her "bodily heirs" after her, where there is no remainder over and no showing that testator intended her to take only a life estate, vests a fee in the first grantee, under Ky. St. 1903, §§ 2342, 2343, declaring that, unless a different purpose appears by express words or inference, every estate in land created by deed or will with or without words of inheritance shall be deemed a fee simple, or such estate as the grantor or testator had the right to dispose of, and that all estates which formerly would have been deemed estates tail shall be estates in fee simple. Lawson v. Todd, 110 S. W. 412, 129 Ky. 182.

Where testator left his property to his wife and three children in equal proportions during their natural life, "and to the children and the heirs of their bodies" at the time of their death, and provided that, if they have no children or heirs of their bodies, it shall be again divided between his wife and children, "or such of them as shall survive, and to their heirs, share and share alike, * * * and all the children of my deceased children," the words "heirs" and "bodily heirs" mean children. Davenport v. Collins, 48 South. 733, 735, 95 Miss. 353.

Testator gave the remainder of his estate to his wife and two children, to be equally divided, and provided that on the death of either of the children leaving no bodily heirs the part should go to the remaining heir, or bodily heir or heirs, and declared that all heirs referred to were bodily heirs, unless bodily heirs became extinct. Held to create an estate tail in the children of two-thirds of the remainder, converted by Ky. St. 1903, § 2343 (Russell's St. § 2045), into a fee; the words "bodily heirs" not being used with reference to his children alone, but limited to his blood, no matter how far removed. Tag-

Where a deed conveyed land to plaintiff's father during his life and at his death was to descend to his "bodily heirs," if he left any, or his nearest blood, plaintiff's father took only a life estate, remainder to his children surviving him under Ky. St. § 2345, providing that if any estate shall be given to a person for life and after his death to his heirs or the heirs of his body, or his issue or descendants, the same shall be construed to be an estate for life with remainder in fee to his heirs, etc. Clubb v. King (Ky.) 99 S. W. 935.

A deed conveying to a grantee certain described land to have and to hold the same during her lifetime, then to her "bodily heirs," conveys a life estate to the grantee and a fee simple to her "bodily heirs"; those words being used as the equivalent of children, for Ky. St. § 2343, provides that all estates which would have been deemed estates in tail shall henceforth be held to be estates in fee simple, and section 2345 provides that, if an estate shall be given any person for life and after death to his heirs or the heirs of his body, it shall be considered an estate for life with remainder in fee simple to his heirs. Eggner v. Hovekamp, 119 S. W. 818, 819, 134 Ky. 224.

Heirs of body synonymous

The words "bodily heirs" have the same meaning as "heirs of the body," and are words of limitation, and not words of purchase. Marsh v. Griffin, 48 S. E. 735, 736, 136 N. C. 333 (citing Donnell v. Mateer's Ex'rs, 40 N. C. 7; Worrel v. Vinson, 50 N. C. 91, 94; Leathers v. Gray, 7 S. E. 657, 101 N. C. 162, 9 Am. St. Rep. 30).

There is no distinction between the words "bodily heirs" and "heirs of the body" when used in a conveyance, and under Kirby's Dig. § 735, providing that a conveyance, which by common law would create an estate tail in lands, shall instead pass to the grantee an estate for his life only, with remainder in fee to the person to whom the estate tail would first pass according to the common law, a conveyance to the daughter of the grantor "and unto her bodily heirs and assigns forever" created a life estate in the grantee, with remainder in fee simple to her children that might survive her and the issue of such as might die during her life. Watson v. Wolff-Goldman Realty Co., 128 S. W. 581, 582, 95 Ark. 18, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 540.

"There is no substantial difference between the words 'heirs of his body' and 'bodily heirs.' They are all words of limitation, and not of purchase, and the latter have the same meaning as the former, unless there is something in the instrument to show that the donor used them in some other than their technical sense." A will, after making a gift to testatrix's daughter, gave to her son and his bodily heirs, forever, certain property, and provided that if either of testatrix's children should die without leaving a surviving bodily heir, before receiving its share of testatrix's estate, such share should descend to the surviving child and its bodily heirs, forever, thus devising to the son an estate in fee tail, which is by statute a life estate, with a remainder in fee to his children living at his death. Miller v. Ensminger, 81 S. W. 422, 424, 182 Mo. 195.

BODILY INFIRMITY

"Bodily infirmity" means a settled disease, an ailment that will probably result to some degree in the general impairment of physical health and vigor, and the words "bodily infirmity," as used in an accident policy exempting the insurer from liability, only includes an ailment of a somewhat established or settled character, and not merely a temporary disorder arising from a sudden and unexpected derangement of the system. French v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 115 N. W. 969, 875, 135 Wis. 259, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1011.

BODILY INJURY

See Great Bodily Injury; Serious Bodily Harm or Injury.

From external violent and accidental means, see Accident—Accidental.

Where a petition, in an action against a street railway company for personal injuries received by a passenger, specified some personal injuries, and charged permanent internal injury, "bodily injury" which is distinguishable from conditions and diseases resulting therefrom, may be shown under the general allegation. Price v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 119 S. W. 932, 941, 220 Mo. 435, 132 Am. St. Rep. 584.

An allegation in an action for injuries that plaintiff sustained "bodily injuries" was sustained by proof of injury to her hands and wrists. City of Eureka v. Neville, 79 Pac. 162, 163, 70 Kan. 893.

The word "injuries" is a generic term, and it naturally includes injuries that are fatal and that are not fatal. Again, the word is known by its associates and by the sense in which it is used in other parts of the same contract or in similar agreements. An agreement to insure one against bodily "injuries," except injuries sustained while entering or leaving or trying to enter or leave any moving conveyance, and except injuries fatal or otherwise caused by intoxicants, anesthetics, etc., excepts from the promised indemnity fatal injuries sustained while trying to enter a moving passenger car. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co. of Detroit, Mich. v. McNulty, 157 Fed. 224, 225, 85 C. C. A. 22.

In an instruction on the measure of damages that, "if now you shall find for plaintiff, you will allow him for what he has paid or become liable for as medical bills on account of his 'injuries,' not to exceed a reasonable sum, and what you find and believe to be just pecuniary compensation for the bodily 'injuries' and disabilities and suffering and distress of mind caused by the fall in alighting from the train," the terms "injuries" and "disabilities" refer to the same thing, and the instruction is not subject to the objection that it allows a double recovery. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. of Texas v. Highnote (Tex.) 84 S. W. 365, 368.

Where insured, in his application for accident insurance, warranted that he had never had "paralysis, fits of any kind, brain disorder, diabetes, hernia, varicose veins, or any bodily or mental infirmity, injuries or wounds," or suffered the loss of a limb or an eye, except as stated, and that he had never been ruptured or "otherwise injured," the words "injuries or wounds" and "otherwise injured" should be construed to refer only to such serious other wounds or injuries not specified as might affect the risk. Trenton v. North American Acc. Ins. Co., 89 S. W. 276, 277, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 296.

The words "injuries or wounds" in an insurance policy were sufficiently broad and comprehensive to include every injury or wound, however trifling, such as the pricking of a hand by a pin, the slightest cutting of a finger, or any bruise or contusion produced by coming in contact with a hard substance. If literally and strictly construed, it would make it impossible for any man to obtain accident insurance, because no man, no matter how tenderly reared or well cared for, but that at some time in life has been injured or wounded. If during childhood a boy stubbed his toe or mashed his finger or bruised his head, he would, under the literal terms of the policy, be incapacitated to obtain insurance against accidents. To place that construction upon the policy would be to hold that accident insurance companies do not desire to insure; for not one man in 10,000, if any at all, could truthfully say that he had never received the slightest wound or injury. We must conclude that the insurance company was seeking to insure, rather than to make it impossible for any man to insure, and that a reasonable construction must be placed upon the words 'injuries or wounds,' or the words 'otherwise injured.' The only reasonable construction that can be placed upon the words is that the applicant had not received any such serious wound or injury as might affect the risk taken by the company in insuring the applicant against accidents." North American Accident Ins. Co. v. Trenton (Tex.) 99 S. W. 740, 741 (quoting Id., 89 S. W. 276).

BODY

See Containing Body; Corporate Body; Extremities of the Body; Governing Body; Independent Body; Legislative Body.

A complaint in an action for personal injuries, which alleges that plaintiff was injured and bruised on her right ankle, leg, hip, and body, is, in the absence of a special demurrer or demand for a bill of particulars, sufficient to authorize evidence of an internal injury, the word "body" comprehending all portions of the body, inside and outside, and advising defendant that plaintiff would prove injuries to portions of her body other than her ankle, leg, and hip. Jenkins v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 119 Pac. 794, 796, 44 Mont. 295.

Proof that one of plaintiff's legs was broken and an elbow injured is no variance from an allegation that divers bones of her body were broken. One definition given by Mr. Webster of the word "body" is the entire physical part of a man. This meaning is properly to be given the word as employed in the declaration, and it was not essential there should be greater particularization as to the bones that were broken. Elgin, A. & S. Traction Co. v. Wilson, 75 N. E. 436, 438, 217 Ill. 47.

BODY CORPORATE

See Corporate Body.

BODY EXECUTION

An "order for commitment" in contempt proceedings is in no sense such an "execution against the body" as the Legislature had in contemplation in the adoption of Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 817, providing that no female shall be imprisoned on any order of arrest and bail or on an execution against the body. The order was not a prescribed writ or process nor in aid of a civil remedy. It proceeded directly and primarily from the court as a means of maintaining its authority. Joyce v. Everson, 89 N. E. 135, 136, 161 Ind. 440.

BODY OF THE OFFENSE

Where the court, in charging on the question of the corroboration of an accomplice's testimony, used the term "body of the offense," that expression is too vague to be interpreted as defendant's connection with the crime. State v. Hopper, 38 South. 452, 453, 114 La. 557.

BODY POLITIC OR CORPORATE

See Civil Bodies Politic.

"A 'body politic' is a social compact by which the whole people covenants with each citizen, and each citizen with the whole people, that all shall be governed by certain laws for the common good." City of Durham v. Eno Cotton Mills, 54 S. E. 453, 463, 141 N. C. 615, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 321 (citing License Cases, 5 How. 504, 12 L. Ed. 256); Home Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 155 Fed. 554, 568 (quoting and adopting the definition in the preamble of the Constitution of Massachusetts).

Municipal corporation

BODY PORTION

The "body portion" of a turnbuckle is all of that portion of the turnbuckle save the ends. Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Ohio Brass Co., 129 Fed. 378, 381.

BOER

As african descent, see African Descent.

BOGUS

The word "bogus" is defined as spurious, fictitious, sham. Williams v. Territory, 108 Pac. 243, 245, 13 Ariz. 27, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1032.

BOGUS CHECK

A check is "false" within Pen. Code 1901, § 489, making it a felony to obtain money or property by a false or bogus check, when it is a willfully untrue written order directing a bank to pay money on demand. A check given by a person upon a bank in which he has no funds, and which he has no reason to suppose will be honored, is a "bogus check" within Pen. Code 1901, § 489, making it a felony to obtain, or attempt to obtain, with intent to cheat, any money or property by a false or bogus check. Williams v. Territory, 108 Pac. 243, 245, 13 Ariz. 27, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1032.

BOHEMIAN

The word "Bohemian," placed on bottles of beer, is a descriptive term, indicating a brand of beer in the manufacture of which Bohemian hops are used and cannot be monopolized as a trade-mark by a particular manufacturer. American Brewing Co. v. Blenville Brewery, 153 Fed. 615, 617.

BOILED OFF

Under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule L, par. 387, 30 Stat. 186, providing for silk fabrics when "in the gum" and when "boiled off," held that fabrics which on boiling lost from 18 to 27 per cent. in weight were classifiable under the former, rather than the latter, clause. H. Mendelson & Co. v. United States, 154 Fed. 33, 34, 83 C. C. A. 145.

BOILER

See Sectional Steam Boiler; Steam Boiler; Water-Tube Boiler.

In the term "boilers," as used in paragraph "1" of section 4 of the Miner's Act relating to duty to keep boilers in repair, are included all pipes and connections between a boiler and a steam chest or engine. Sheppard v. Marquette Third Vein Coal Mining Co., 164 Ill. App. 495, 501.

See Structure.

BOILER OR OTHER PLATE

Steel plates cut in unusual shape at a slight variation from a right angle, for a special purpose, are provided for in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 135, 30 Stat. 161, enumerating "sheared * * * shapes" of steel and "plates and steel in all forms and shapes not specially provided for," rather than in paragraph 128, 30 Stat. 159, enumerating "boiler or other plate iron or steel, * * * sheared or unsheared." United States v. Vandegrift, 142 Fed. 448, 73 C. C. A. 564.

Thin steel plate cut into a specific shape according to a sketch and for a special purpose, while falling within the purview of Tariff Law (Act of July 24, 1897, c. 11, Schedule C, § 1, par. 128), imposing a duty on "boiler or other plate iron or steel, sheared or unsheared," is governed by the language of paragraph 135 of the same act imposing duty on pressed, sheared, or stamped shapes of such steel. In re F. B. Vandegrift & Co., 189 Fed. 790, 791.

BOILER TUBES OR FLUES

Held, that so-called arched Purves furnaces are not commercially known as furnaces, and that, therefore, they are not dutiable as such under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 152, 30 Stat. 163, but under the provision in the same paragraph for boiler tubes or flues. Thomas v. F. B. Vandegrift & Co., 153 Fed. 591, 592.

BOISTEROUS

The word "boisterousness" has no special legal meaning as used in Acts 1905, p. 114, making it a misdemeanor to be intoxicated on any public street or highway when manifested by boisterousness but is used in its popular and ordinary signification to characterize the conduct of the intoxicated person. Coleman v. State, 59 S. E. 829, 830, 3 Ga. App. 298.

An order adjudging defendants guilty of contempt recited that an action was pending in court, that one of the defendants, an attorney, was applying to have an order of dismissal signed by the court, that, in the presence of the judge at chambers, such defendant used boisterous and angry language and gestures, and that in the clerk's office, in the immediate presence of the court, he engaged in a fight with codefendant. Held, that the facts recited show conduct constituting contempt; the word "boisterous" meaning loud, stormy and noisy. State v. Buddress, 114 Pac. 879, 881, 63 Wash. 26.

BOK ALE

"Bok ale" or barley brew base, which is an unfinished nonalcoholic beverage, but which is produced by processes and from materials similar to those employed in the manufacture of beer, is dutiable by similitude at the same rate of duty as beer, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule H, par. 297, 30 Stat. 174. Wakem & McLaughlin v. United States, 180 Fed. 1021.

"Bolacek" is a glass larger than those ordinarily used for serving strong drink. Young v. Beveridge, 15 N. W. 766-768, 81 Neb. 180.

BOLOGNA SAUSAGE

See Sausage.

BOLTING CLOTH

"Bolting cloth," especially for milling purposes but not suitable for the manufacture of wearing apparel, as used in Tariff Act Aug. 28, 1894, c. 349, § 2, 28 Stat. 538, is not limited to bolting cloth composed of silk but includes bolting cloth made of fine, copper-wire gauze. United States v. Markt, 124 Fed. 1012, 1013.

BOLTS

"Bolts," as known to the sawmill business, are slabs of wood about four ft. long $1\frac{1}{2}$ inches wide and of variable thickness, from which laths are sawed. Callopy v. Atwood, 117 N. W. 238, 239, 105 Minn. 80, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 593.

BONA FIDE

See Good Faith.

"'Bona fide' is a legal technical expression; and the law of Great Britain and this country has annexed a certain idea to it. It is a term used in statutes in England, and in acts of assembly of all the states, and signifies a thing done really, with a good faith, without fraud, or deceit, or collusion, or trust. The words 'bona fide' are restrictive, for a debt may be for a valuable consideration, and yet not bona fide. A debt must be bona fide at the time of its commencement, or it never can become so afterwards." Ware v. Hylton, 3 U. S. (3 Dall.) 199, 241, 1 L. Ed. 568.

"Bona fides" is sometimes used as an equivalent of the word "frankly." Origler v. Commonwealth, 87 S. W. 276, 280, 120 Ky. 512.

The words "bona fide," as used in an instruction stating that, if an entry truly represented an actual bona fide transaction, then it would not constitute a false entry, means "real" and merely emphasizes the word "actual." Coffin v. United States, 16 Sup. Ct. 943, 952, 162 U. S. 664, 40 L. Ed. 1109.

"Bona fides" or good faith is a term used as a mere distinction from "mala fides" or bad faith; thus, if negotiable "paper is purchased without anything which the law can construe into notice, it is spoken of as being purchased in good faith. Where, on the contrary, the purchaser has what the law construes to be notice of defects or equities, then he is a purchaser in bad faith and can secure to himself none of the advantages given to the bona fide purchaser; but bad faith means nothing more than participation in the fraud and resolves itself into a question of honesty or dishonesty, for guilty knowledge and willful ignorance alike involve the result of bad faith." Forbes v. First Nat. Bank, 95 Pac. 785, 788, 21 Okl. 206 (quoting Norton, Bills & N. p. 306).

BONA FIDE CLAIMANT

A "bona fide claimant," within section 3376 of the Revised Statutes, prescribing a penalty for demanding and receiving on sale of a ticket a greater sum for the transportation of the passenger than that allowed by law, is one claiming in good faith. Using the road of such company implies an intention to use it. It does not imply a contract personally to use it. Pennsylvania Co. v. O'Connell, 95 N. E. 773, 774, 84 Ohio St. 218, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 540.

BONA FIDE CREDITORS

"Real 'bona fide creditors' are rarely unwilling to receive their debts from any hand that will pay them." Thompkins v. Wheeler, 41 U. S. (16 Pet.) 118, 119, 10 L. Ed. 903.

BONA FIDE EMPLOYEES

Where a contract for the shipment of cattle provided for the carriage of a person in charge of the stock, and on the back of the contract it was provided that agents would permit only the names of "bona fide employees" accompanying the stock to be entered on the waybill, so as to secure carriage for such person, the phrase "bona fide employees" meant persons actually in charge of the stock, and one came within such description, though he had never been employed before the occasion, and though there had been no agreement for his compensation in money by the shipper. Weaver v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 102 N. W. 1037, 1040, 139 Mich. 590, 5 Ann. Cas. 764.

BONA FIDE FREEHOLDER

"One made a freeholder for the sole purpose of qualifying him as a petitioner for a liquor license is not a 'bona fide freeholder.'" Cohn v. Welliver, 121 N. W. 107, 108, 84 Neb. 230 (quoting and adopting a statement in Dye v. Raser, 112 N. W. 332, 79 Neb. 149, 16 Ann. Cas. 274).

BONA FIDE HOLDER

See Holder for Value; Holder in Due Course; Innocent Holder for Value.

A "bona fide holder" of commercial paper must be a purchaser in the usual course of business. Bettanier v. Smith, 105 N. W. 999, 1000, 129 Iowa, 597, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 628.

"A bona fide holder of a negotiable instrument" is one who takes it (1) bona fide; (2) for valuable consideration; (3) in the usual course of business; (4) before maturity; (5) without notice of any existing defense and of dishonor thereof. If the purchaser can be charged with notice of the defense or defect of title, he is not a bona fide holder of the instrument, but such notice must exist at the time the paper is transferred to him or before he has paid for it. Hogg v. Thurman, 117 S. W. 1070, 1072, 90 Ark. 93, 17 Ann. Cas. 383 (quoting Tiedeman, Commercial Paper, §§ 279-299; 1 Daniel, Neg. Inst. §§ 769a-789; Old National Bank of Ft. Wayne v. Marcy, 95 S. W. 145, 79 Ark. 149, 9 Ann. Cas. 339; Jones v. Jackson, 110 S. W. 215, 86 Ark. 191).

A "bona fide holder" of a negotiable paper, against whom the defense of fraud or mistake cannot be availed of, must take it in good faith, for a valuable consideration, in the usual course of business, before maturity, and without notice, at the time of the transfer or before payment therefor, of an existing defense. Bank of Monette v. Hale (Ark.) 149 S. W. 845, 847.

It is a principal of general recognition that a purchaser of commercial paper in the usual course of business before its maturity, for a valuable consideration, having no notice of defenses that existed between the parties or have subsequently arisen, is a "bona fide holder for value" and as such takes the instrument free from defenses which were available between the original parties. Woodall & Son v. People's Nat. Bank, 45 South. 194, 195, 153 Ala. 576 (quoting Randolph, Com. Paper, § 14; 2 Daniel, Neg. Inst. 769).

Before one can become a "bona fide" and innocent holder of commercial paper, it must appear that it was acquired without notice or knowledge of defenses or circumstances which would put him on inquiry. Simmons Nat. Bank v. Dilley Foundry Co., 130 S. W. 162, 164, 95 Ark. 868.

A "bona fide holder" is one who receives the instrument in the ordinary course of business in good faith and for a valuable consideration; but honest intention alone in the taking or putting off of negotiable instruments is not enough to prove one a bona fide holder, and to establish good faith there must not only be an absence of knowledge of any invalidity, but an absence of circumstances which would put an ordinarily prudent man upon inquiry. Pennington County Bank v. First State Bank of Moorhead, 125 N. W. 119, 121, 110 Minn. 263, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 849, 136 Am. St. Rep. 496.

A bank, which discounts paper for a depositor and gives him credit for the proceeds, is not a "bona fide holder" for value, so as to be protected against infirmities in the paper unless some other consideration passes, such transaction merely creating the relation of debtor and creditor between the bank and the depositor; and so long as that relation continues and the deposit is not withdrawn the bank is subject to the equities of the prior parties, though the paper is taken before maturity and without notice. Alabama Grocery Co. v. First Nat. Bank of Ensley, 48 South. 340, 341, 158 Ala. 143, 132 Am. St. Rep. 18.

Knowledge that a note was given in consideration of an executory agreement of the payee which has not been performed does not deprive the indorsee of the character of a "bona fide holder," unless he also has notice of the breach of the agreement. McNight v. Parsons, 118 N. W. 858, 860, 136 Iowa, 390, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 718, 125 Am. St. Rep. 265, 15 Ann. Cas. 665.

A "bona fide holder for value" of negotiable paper is one who has acquired title in the usual course of business for valuable consideration, in good faith, from one capable of transferring it or from one in possession of the paper with an apparent right to transfer it and without notice or knowledge of defects or circumstances which should put him on inquiry. 7 Cyc. 924. It is a well-established rule, both in England and America, that one who purchases, for a valuable consideration, commercial paper in the usual course of trade, transferable by delivery and not due, which has been lost or stolen or fraudulently transferred, acquires complete title thereto. Peirson v. McNeal, 100 N. W. 458, 465, 137 Mich. 158 (citing 2 Parsons, Bills & N. 279; 7 Albany L. J. 385; Kuhns v. Gettysburg Nat. Bank, 68 Pa. 445; Davis v. Seeley, 38 N. W. 901, 71 Mich. 209; Chapman v. Remington, 46 N. W. 34, 80 Mich. 552; Goodrich v. McDonald, 43 N. W. 1019, 77 Mich. 486).

Under the law merchant, a "bona fide holder in due course" of a negotiable instrument payable to bearer, is one who gave a valuable consideration for it before maturity, and without notice of any infirmity in his grantor's title, and obtained it in due course of trade, which rests on an exchange of values. Parsons v. Utica Cement Co., 73 Atl. 785, 788, 82 Conn. 333, 135 Am. St. Rep. 278.

A transferee of notes secured by a mortgage fraudulently given upon property which the mortgagor had agreed should be sold for the benefit of creditors of his firm, was not a bona fide holder; he being the father-in-law of the mortgagor, and having knowledge of the latter's agreement authorizing the sale of the property for creditors. Union Garment Co. v. Newburger, 50 South. 740, 744, 745, 124 La. 820.

BONA FIDE MORTGAGEE

A mortgagee of a grantee in a deed void on the ground of the incapacity of the grantor had notice that the premises were in the possession of a third person as tenant of the grantor. The grantor received no part of the money loaned by the mortgagee. Held, that the mortgagee was not a "bona fide mortgagee," and on setting aside the conveyance to the grantee a refunding of the money paid by him, except the taxes on the land, was not required. Peck v. Bartelme, 77 N. E. 216-218, 220 Ill. 199.

BONA FIDE OCCUPANT

A "bona fide possessor or occupant" is "one who not only supposes himself to be the true proprietor of the land but who is ignorant that his title is contested by some other person claiming a better right to it." Broumel v. White, 39 Atl. 1047-1049, 87 Md. 521 (quoting Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. 79, 5 L. Ed. 547; McLaughlin v. Barnum, 81 Md. 425); Brown v. Nelms, 112 S. W. 373, 386, 86 Ark. 368.

Where the deed to defendant's grantor was on record, and showed that such grantor only had a life estate, with remainder in her children, and defendant had often heard, while living on the land, that the children intended to claim the land as soon as their mother died, defendant was not a "bona fide occupant," within the meaning of the statute, so as to entitle him to claim for improvements made, in an action by the remaindermen to recover the land. Douglass v. Hunt, 136 S. W. 170, 171, 98 Ark. 320.

BONA FIDE PURCHASER

See Innocent Purchaser.

See, also, Good Faith.

The expression "bona fide purchasers" is to be understood as the equivalent of purchasers without notice. Wilkins v. McCorkle, 80 S. W. 834, 835, 112 Tenn. 688.

A "bona fide purchaser" is one who purchases, believing in good faith vendor has a right to sell, and who is without notice, actual or constructive, of adverse rights or claims by others, and who pays a new consideration at time of purchase. Foster v. Winstanley, 102 Pac. 574, 579, 39 Mont. 314.

The essential elements that make a bona fide purchase are a valuable consideration, the absence of notice, and the presence of good faith. Houston Oil Co. of Texas v. Wilhelm, 182 Fed. 474, 477, 104 C. C. A. 618.

The essential elements of a "bona fide purchaser" of land are, first, the payment of a valuable consideration; second, good faith and absence of purpose to take an unfair advantage of third persons; and, third, absence of notice, actual or constructive, of outstanding rights of others. Bergstrom v. Johnson, 126 N. W. 899, 900, 111 Minn. 247.

Under Ky. St. 1909, § 2087 (Russell's St. § 3863), providing that any estate aliened by the heir or devisee before suit brought shall not be liable to the creditors of decedent in the hands of a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration unless action is instituted within six months, a "bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration" is one who in good faith buys the land and pays therefor. Buchanan v. Boyd's Ex'r, 121 S. W. 981, 982, 135 Ky. 94.

A grantee who pays the purchase money without notice, actual or constructive, of a third party's claim, and receives a deed which is more than a quitclaim deed and by which the parties intended to and did convey the premises in question, is an innocent purchaser, entitled to be protected as such. Allen v. Anderson & Anderson (Tex.) 96 S. W. 54, 55.

The doctrine of "bona fide purchase" without notice applies only in favor of the purchaser of a legal title and does not apply in favor of a bare equity. Deskins v. Big Sandy Co., 89 S. W. 695, 697, 121 Ky. 601.

To entitle a party to protection as a subsequent purchaser in good faith and for value against the title of a grantee under a prior unrecorded deed, he must aver and prove the possession of his grantor, the purchase of the premises, the payment of the purchase money in good faith and without notice, actual or constructive, prior to and down to the time of its payment, for if he had notice, actual or constructive, at any moment of time before the payment of the money, he is not a "bona fide purchaser." Civ. Code, § 1214, provides that a conveyance of real property is void as against a subsequent purchaser in good faith for a valuable consideration whose conveyance is first duly recorded. Plaintiff rented land for the term of five years, with an option to purchase during the life of the lease. Defendant held a prior unrecorded deed from plaintiff's lessor, which deed was not recorded until after the recording of the lease and option. Plaintiff built a barn on the premises and paid the rent, but did not offer to exercise the option until after the recording of defendant's deed. Held, that plaintiff was not a subsequent purchaser in good faith for a valuable consideration within the meaning of the section. Lindley v. Blumberg, 93 Pac. 894, 897, 7 Cal. App. 140 (citing Eversdon v. Mayhew, 3 Pac. 641, 65 Cal. 163; Wilhoit v. Lyons, 33 Pac. 325, 98 Cal. 413; Beattie v. Crewdson, 57 Pac. 463, 124 Cal. 579; Kenniff v. Caulfield, 73 Pac. 803, 140 Cal. 45).

A widow taking from her children a deed for their interest in land of which their father had died seised, for the recited consideration of one dollar and other good and valuable considerations, subject to the lien of judgments, mortgages, and municipal liens, which aggregated more than the value of the land, was not a bona fide purchaser as against a judgment creditor who could revive his judgment, though more than five years had elapsed since its entry; a "bona fide purchaser" being one purchasing property without notice that another person is interested therein, and paying a full price therefor. Meyer v. Safe Deposit & Trust Co. of Pittsburgh, 79 Atl. 249, 230 Pa. 106.

Consideration

Where the consideration paid is an antecedent debt, it is not such a consideration as will support the claim of "bona fide purchaser." Sparks v. Taylor (Tex.) 87 S. W. 740, 743.

To be a "bona fide purchaser without notice" the defendant must not only have agreed to purchase without notice of the complainant's previous agreement, but he must also have actually paid the purchase money and taken his deed without such notice. Cranwell v. Clinton Realty Co., 58 Atl. 1030, 1035, 67 N. J. Eq. 540.

One who takes a negotiable instrument before maturity in good faith, as collateral security for a pre-existing debt, is a bona fide purchaser. Walden v. Downing Co., 61 S. E. 1127, 4 Ga. App. 534.

Where a debtor obtained from his creditor a valid extension of the time of payment of a debt and gave a mortgage for the same, the creditor became a "bona fide purchaser," within the meaning of the recording act (Laws 1896, c. 547, § 241). O'Brien v. Fleckenstein, 73 N. E. 30, 31, 180 N. Y. 350, 105 Am. St. Rep. 768.

To entitle a defendant to protection as a "bona fide purchaser" for value and without notice of lands which had previously been conveyed by the grantor, he must allege and prove, not only want of notice, but also actual payment of the purchase money, independently of the recitals in his deed, which do not constitute proof of such payment. Johnson v. Georgia Loan & Trust Co., 141 Fed. 593, 597, 72 C. C. A. 639.

"A 'bona fide purchaser' is one who has bought property without notice of the claims of third parties thereto and upon the faith that no such claims exist and who has paid or parted with some valuable consideration or has in some way altered his legal condition for the worse." Where creditors levied on property which their debtor held, at least in part, as a resulting trustee for plaintiff, but neither of such creditors paid or parted with any valuable consideration or in any way altered their legal condition to their prejudice on the faith that there existed no claim of any third person to the property, they were not entitled to maintain their liens as against plaintiff as bona fide purchasers for value. Waterman v. Buckingham, 64 Atl. 212, 214, 79 Conn. 236.

One is not a "bona fide purchaser for value" unless he has actually paid the purchase price or become irrevocably bound for its payment; as, for instance, by giving his negotiable obligation, which has been or may be transferred to an innocent purchaser according to the law merchant, so as to cut off his defense to it. Nebraska Moline Plow Co. v. Blackburn, 104 N. W. 178, 179, 74 Neb. 246.

Sufficiency of notice

A person cannot be a "bona fide purchaser" who has brought to his attention facts which should have put him upon inquiry, an inquiry which, if pursued with due diligence, would have led to a knowledge of a lien on the property. Mangum v. Stadel, 92 Pac. 1063, 1064, 76 Kan. 764.

A bona fide purchaser is one who has in good faith paid a valuable consideration without notice of adverse rights, and, if he had knowledge of circumstances sufficient to put a prudent man on inquiry which, if prosecuted with ordinary diligence, would have led to actual notice, he was charged with knowledge of a prior conveyance. La Brie v. Cartwright, 118 S. W. 785, 787, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 144.

A receiver purchased machinery under a contract of conditional sale by which the seller retained title until full payment should be made therefor, but on receipt of the machinery the receiver turned it over to another corporation of which he was the principal stockholder, vice president, and general manager. Such corporation, after making partial payments through the receiver, became bankrupt. The seller, although having knowledge of the transfer of the machinery, did not recognize the transferee as a purchaser, nor did it record its contract until a short time before the bankruptcy, when it instituted an action in replevin for the machinery, but the same was not removed from the mill in which it had been placed and was sold by the bankrupt's trustee as a part of its plant. Held, that the bankrupt was not a "bona fide purchaser" of the property within the protection of the North Carolina statute which provides that contracts of conditional sale shall be invalid against creditors or innocent purchasers without notice until they shall be recorded, nor could it acquire any rights by attaching the machinery to its realty, but that the seller had a valid lien thereon for the unpaid portion of the purchase price. American Woodworking Mach. Co. v. Norment, 157 Fed. 801, 806, 85 C. C. A. 165.

Attaching creditor

An attaching creditor is not a "bona fide purchaser" for value as against a third person having a prior claim to the property. Tishomingo Sav. Inst. v. Johnson, Nesbitt & Co., 40 South. 503, 146 Ala. 691.

"An attaching creditor is not a 'bona fide purchaser' without notice. He stands simply in the shoes of his debtor and has no higher right than his debtor has." Monroe v. Mattox (Ky.) 85 S. W. 748, 749.

Quitclaim grantee

A grantee under a quitclaim deed is a bona fide purchaser within the recording acts. Eyanson v. Waldlich, 106 Pac. 746, 747, 57 Wash. 234.

Judicial sale

Where both the purchaser of land at a judicial sale and the person to whom he assigned the bid were parties to the proceeding under which the land was sold and had knowledge of the illegal method by which minor heirs were deprived of their interest in the land, they were not "bona fide purchasers," under Civ. Code Prac. § 391, authorizing an infant to show cause against a judgment, but providing that the vacation of the judgment shall not affect the title of a bona fide purchaser thereunder. Davidson v. Marcum (Ky.) 89 S. W. 703, 704.

Lien Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 33) § 231, providing that mortgages creating a lien on real and personal property, executed by a corporation as security for the payment of "bonds," need not be filed or refiled as chattel mortgages, applies in case of such a mortgage securing a single nonnegotiable bond, in view of General Construction Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 22) § 35, providing that words in the singular number include the plural, and in the plural include the singular. Clement v. Congress Hall, 132 N. Y. Supp. 16, 18, 72 Misc. Rep. 519.

The general rule that, when a judgment is reversed, the reversal does not affect the title or possession of the purchaser at a sale made thereunder before the reversal, though he may be the plaintiff or a party to the action, does not apply to the sale of infants' land to one not a bona fide purchaser. Turner v. City of Middlesboro (Ky.) 117 S. W. 422, 424.

Tax purchaser

A "bona fide purchaser" is one who buys an apparently good title without notice of anything calculated to impair or affect it, but a tax purchaser is always deemed to have such notice when the record shows defects. Minnesota Loan & Investment Co. v. Beadle County, 101 N. W. 29, 30, 18 S. D. 431.

Of public land

The term "bona fide purchaser" of Texas school lands does not necessarily exclude one who was acting in collusion with another in the purchase of the land, provided the applicant makes the required affidavit; that he was not buying the land for any other person or corporation. The title of the purchaser after such affidavit is filed not being subject to collateral attack on the ground that he purchased in collusion with another and was therefore not a "bona fide purchaser." Logan v. Curry, 69 S. W. 129-131, 95 Tex. 664.

Of railroad land

"Bona fide purchaser," as used in Act Cong. March 3, 1887, c. 376, 24 Stat. 556, granting land to railroad companies, section 5 declaring that where any said company shall have sold to a citizen of the United States, as a part of its grant, lands not conveyed to or for the use of the company, said lands being the numbered sections described in the grant and being coterminous with the constructive parts of the road, and if the land so sold are for any reason excepted from the operation of the grant to the company, it should be lawful for the bona fide purchaser to make payment to the United States and thereupon be entitled to patents, was not used in any technical sense but simply as demanding good faith in the transaction between the individual purchaser and the railroad company. Gertgens v. O'Connor, 24 Sup. Ct. 94, 97, 191 U. S. 237, 48 L. Ed. 163 (quoting United States v. Winona & St. P. R. Co., 17 Sup. Ct. 363, 165 U. S. 463, 480, 481, 41 L. Ed. 789, 797).

Subsequent purchaser

If a second purchaser for value and without notice purchases from a first purchaser who is charged with notice, he thereby becomes a "bona fide purchaser" and is entitled to protection. Coombs v. Aborn, 63 Atl. 817, 29 R. I. 40, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1248.

BONA FIDE RESIDENT

An allegation in a complaint that plaintiff is a "bona fide resident" of a certain state is not equivalent to one of his citizenship in such state, and is not sufficient to give a federal court jurisdiction on the ground of diversity of citizenship. Kolke v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 157 Fed. 623, 624.

The divorce and annulment act of 1907 (P. L. 1907, p. 474), provides that a decree of nullity may be rendered at the suit of the husband, when he was under 18 at the time of the marriage, unless such marriage be confirmed by him after arriving at such age. The act further provides, "for purposes of annulment of marriage, jurisdiction may be acquired by personal service of process upon the defendant within the state when either party is a bona fide resident of the state, at the time of the commencement of the action." Petitioner and defendant resided with their respective parents, who were domiciled in Philadelphia, Pa., and came to New Jersey and were married, returning at once to the homes of their parents in Philadelphia. When the marriage was disclosed a week later, the petitioner's parents would not permit him to receive defendant as his wife, and on March 9, 1910, sent him into the state to board with relatives; his earnings and some assistance from his father going to pay his board. His petition was filed March 28, 1910. Held, that the term "resident," as used in the act, included not only the factum of residence, but also the animus manendi, the residence required by the statute being equivalent to domicile; and that petitioner was not a "bona fide resident" of this state, and hence that the court had no jurisdiction. Hess v. Kimble, 81 Atl. 363, 364, 79 N. J. Eq. 454.

BONA FIDE STOCKHOLDER

In general the test of a stockholder's right to vote at corporate meetings is the ownership of shares as disclosed by the proper record books of the corporation. A "bona fide stockholder," within Civ. Code, § 312, providing that only bona fide stockholders shall be entitled to vote at corporate meetings, need not necessarily be the owner of the stock; it being sufficient that the stock stands in his name in good faith for a proper purpose and that he is holding the same either for himself or in trust for another. Royal Consol. Min. Co. v. Royal Consol. Mines Co., 110 Pac. 123, 132, 157 Cal. 737, 137 Am. St. Rep. 165.

BONA NOTABILIA

"Bona notabilia," as used in the English probate law, means notable goods, or property worthy of notice, or of sufficient value to be accounted for. Neal v. Boykin, 64 S. E. 480, 482, 132 Ga. 400.

Debts due decedent at the time of his death are called "bona notabilia," under the laws of England, and are assets to be administered upon under the American law. Saunders v. Weston, 74 Me. 85, 89.

A "bond" is an obligation in writing to pay. State ex rel. Louisiana Imp. Co. v. Board of Assessors, 36 South. 91, 93, 111 La. 982.

A "bond" is an obligation under seal by which the obligor acknowledges himself bound to the obligee, in a specified form.

Ordinary of State v. Connolly, 72 Atl. 363, 364, 75 N. J. Eq. 521, 188 Am. St. Rep. 577.

"A 'bond' is the acknowledgment of a debt under seal; the debt being therein particularly specified. In every good 'bond' there must be an obligor and an obligee and a sum in which the former is bound. Shep. Touch. 56; Com. Dig. 'Obligation,' A; Hurleston, 2." Rollins v. Ebbs, 49 S. E. 341, 342, 137 N. C. 355, 2 Ann. Cas. 327 (quoting and adopting the definition in Graham v. Holt, 25 N. C. 300, 40 Am. Dec. 408).

"A 'bond' is an obligation in writing and under seal, binding the obligor to pay a sum of money to the obligee." Gutta Percha & Rubber Mfg. Co. v. City of Attalla (Ala.) 39 South. 719.

A "bond" is an obligation in writing to pay, evidencing a liability by the person executing it. State ex rel. Louisiana v. Board of Assessors, 36 South. 91, 93, 111 La. 982.

"Bonds" are obligations to pay money usually to the bearer and constitute evidence of indebtedness; the person or corporation issuing them being a borrower and the purchaser a lender. Sweetsir v. Chandler, 56 Atl. 584, 98 Me. 145, 151.

A "bond" is a simplex obligation; "any instrument in writing that legally binds a party to do a certain thing. 'Bond,' 'obligation,' 'an instrument in writing' are sometimes used in convertible terms;" an "obligation under seal;" a "sealed obligation to pay money on the happening of some future event." Walter Pratt & Co. v. S. J. Langston Mercantile Co., 85 S. W. 184, 136, 111 Mo. App. 96 (quoting and adopting definitions in Bouv. and Anderson Law Dicts. and in Commonwealth v. Smith, 92 Mass. [10 Allen] 443, 67 Am. Dec. 672, and in Rawson v. Taylor, 95 N. W. 1033, 69 Neb. 473).

"'Bonds' and negotiable instruments are more than mere evidences of debt; the debt is inseparable from the paper which declares and constitutes it by a tradition which comes down from more archaic conditions." Hall v. Miller (Tex.) 110 S. W. 165, 168 (quoting and adopting a statement in Blackstone v. Miller, 23 Sup. Ct. 277, 188 U. S. 189, 47 L. Ed. 439).

The term "bond" has a great variety of meanings and in law does not necessarily import a seal; Webster defining it to be an obligation or deed by which a man binds himself, his heirs, etc. The Maine act authorizing bona fide holders of coupons to maintain an action in their own names is not limited in its operation to bonds under seal but applies to scrip issued under an act authorizing certain cities and towns to grant aid to the construction of a railroad. Augusta Bank v. Augusta, 49 Me. 507, 525.

No precise form of words is necessary to create a "bond." Sharp v. Bates, 62 Atl. 747, 748, 102 Md. 344.

"In its ordinary commercial sense, the term 'bond' signifies an obligation to pay money. Such a bond contains a promise to pay money usually to bearer, and hence is negotiable and is transferable by delivery." Sweetsair v. Chandler, 56 Atl. 584, 586, 98 Me. 145.

Ky. St. § 474, making "bonds" for money or property assignable, and Civ. Code Prac. § 19, providing that an action by an assignee of a thing in action is without prejudice to any defense or set-off, modify the common-law rule as to what is assignable, and a written guaranty to indemnify purchasers of corporate stock against loss is assignable as a bond within the statute. Rogers v. Harvey, 136 S. W. 128, 129, 143 Ky. 88.

Ordinarily the words "bonds, securities, etc.," include shares of stock; and a form of report prepared by the comptroller of the currency, containing a subheading entitled "(8) Bonds, Securities, etc., including premium on same (see schedule)," followed by the schedule entitled "Bonds, Securities, etc. (bonds, claims, judgments, and similar items should be included under this head)," includes certificates of stock. Morse v. United States, 174 Fed. 539, 551, 98 C. C. A. 321, 20 Ann. Cas. 938.

Securities issued by a corporation, which were denominated "bonds," contained a promise to pay a certain sum at a fixed time with a stated interest, and further provided that, after the payment of specified dividends on the stock, the holders of the bonds were entitled to a proportionate share in the surplus income, if any. Held, that the securities were in effect a species of preferred stock, as "stock" confers upon the holder a part ownership of the assets with the right to share in the profits of the corporation, and on dissolution in the assets after payment of debts, but without a lien on the property, while a "bond" is an obligation to pay a fixed debt with interest, which debt, if secured, is not wiped out if the security proves insufficient. Cass v. Realty Securities Co., 132 N. Y. Supp. 1074, 1077, 1078, 148 App. Div. 96.

An ordinary street railroad bond represents a loan of money from the holder to the borrower, and, although completely executed in due form to be used as security, does not become a valid obligation until it is actually delivered for a valuable consideration. Zimmermann v. Timmermann, 86 N. E. 546, 541, 193 N. Y. 486.

Municipal obligations

"Any instrument under seal, whereby the party from whom the security is intended to be taken obliges himself to pay a certain sum of money at a date specified, will constitute a 'bond.'" A certificate of indebtedness issued by the mayor and city council of Baltimore, known as city stock, is a "bond" within Code 1878, art. 30, § 24, punishing the forgery of any bond. Bishop v. State, 55 Md. 138, 141 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Black, Com. 340).

"A 'bond' is an obligation in writing to pay." A general law in terms directing that all property be taxed, including "bonds," does not include public securities due by the municipality by which they are issued. The state cannot, through her board of assessors, be recognized as entitled to a tax on public municipal bonds, unless it be made sufficiently evident that such a demand is made in accordance with the expressed intention of the lawmaking authority. State ex rel. Louisiana Imp. Co. v. Board of Assessors, 36 South. 91, 92, 111 La. 982.

Priv. Laws 1911, c. 251, amending Charlotte City Charter by giving the city power to tax the cost of street improvements against abutting property owners, and to issue street improvement bonds to be sold at not less than par, adds to the powers of the city to pave its streets at the cost of its general fund by authorizing the issuance of street improvement bonds, possessing the character of municipal bonds; and the provision in the act that the bonds shall contain recitals showing that they are chargeable to particular property does not affect the character of the bonds, but merely makes the property benefited specially liable to their payment—the word "bonds," when used in connection with municipal obligations, implying an obligation of a city, as obligor, bound to do what it has agreed shall be done. City of Charlotte v. American Trust Co., 74 S. E. 1054, 1055, 159 N. C. 388.

Bonds issued by a municipal corporation in pursuance of an act of the Legislature, approved April 17, 1908, to raise revenue or funds with which to make street improvements in a city, which are to be paid by special assessments levied against the property benefited by the improvements, are not "public securities or bonds," within the meaning of section 2 of an act of the Legislature, approved March 24, 1910, entitled "An act for the protection, validation and sale of bond issues of the state, counties, townships and municipalities and all other political organizations and subdivisions of the state of Oklahoma"; and such bonds are not required to be examined and certified to by the Attorney General as ex officio bond commissioner.

Where testatrix by will devised to her husband her house and lot and contents, without disposing of the remainder of her estate, and by codicil gave to her sisters all her bank stock and "bonds," the notes of testatrix passed to the sisters as bonds; a "bond" being an obligatory instrument in writing whereby one binds himself to another to pay a specified sum, or do some specified act. BOND FOR DEED

A "bond for a deed" is a contract for the sale of real estate. Royce v. Carpenter, 66 Atl. 888, 890, 80 Vt. 37.

"A 'bond for a deed' is only an agreement to make title in the future, and so long as it remains executory the title is vested in the original owner." National Fire Ins. Co. v. Three States Lumber Co., 75 N. E. 450, 453, 217 Ill. 115, 108 Am. St. Rep. 239 (quoting and adopting definition in Langlois v. Stewart, 41 N. E. 177, 156 Ill. 609).

A bond for title to school lands, executed by the purchaser and the broker employed by the owner to procure a purchaser, stipulating that the purchaser will pay part of the price in cash and execute vendor's lien notes for the balance, and that the vendor will execute a bond for title binding the vendor to execute a deed of conveyance to the school sections when they have been lived out under his contract for purchase from the state, is an instrument evidencing a contract for the sale of land, and is substantially an agreement by the vendor to make to the vendee a title to the land purchased and on the payment of the purchase money it vests in the purchaser the equitable title. Johnson & Moran v. Buchanan, 116 S. W. 875, 878, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 328.

BOND FOR THE PAYMENT OF MONEY

A bond conditioned for the performance of an act or service is not within the statute which provides that all "bonds for the payment of money or other things" may be assigned by indorsement. Shackelford v. Franks, 25 Miss. 49, 52.

BOND ISSUE

Rev. St. 1895, art. 877, as amended by Acts First Called Sess. 28th Leg. 1903, c. 4, and Acts 26th Leg. c. 149, § 4, authorizes the county commissioners' court to issue bonds for the construction of bridges for public purposes, provided that the act shall not be construed as authorizing an issue of bonds for such purpose without submitting it to a vote of the people. Article 918h makes it unlawful for the commissioners' court to issue the bonds for any purpose authorized by law unless the proposition for the issuance of such bonds shall have been first submitted to a vote of the qualified electors. Article 918k provides that the act shall not apply to any bond issue when for a sum less than $2,000 when issued for the purpose of repairing buildings, or structures for the building of which bonds are allowed to be issued. Held, that a commissioners' court may issue bonds for less than $2,000 for the repair of a bridge for public purposes, though the aggregate amount of former issues for such purpose exceed $2,000; the term "bond issue" being confined to a class or series of bonds emitted at one time. Bell County v. Lightfoot, 138 S. W. 381, 383, 104 Tex. 346.

BOND PROVIDED BY CODE

The phrase "a bond provided for by this Code," as used in a code provision authorizing the execution of a sufficient bond, in case a bond provided for by this Code be adjudged to be defective, refers to the bonds which the Code authorizes only, and has no application to an appeal bond given in an election contest. Galloway v. Bradburn, 82 S. W. 1018, 1015, 119 Ky. 49.

BONDS OF MATRIMONY

Gen. Laws 1896, c. 195, § 1, provides that divorces from the "bonds of matrimony" shall be decreed in case of any marriage originally void or voidable by law. Held, that a contention that a case where the marriage was invalid because the husband had another wife living was not within the statute on the ground that there were no bonds of matrimony to dissolve was untenable. "The words 'from the bonds of matrimony' have a well-known signification at common law, and it must be presumed that it was in this sense that they were used by the Legislature. At common law no divorce a vinculo matrimonii could be granted except for cause existing previous to the marriage and which rendered marriage unlawful ab initio. In such cases, says 2 Blackstone, 94, the law looks upon the marriage to have been always null and void and decrees not only a separation from bed and board but a vinculo matrimonii itself." Leckney v. Leckney, 59 Atl. 311, 312, 26 R. I. 441.

BONDS TO BE ISSUED

The phrase "bonds to be issued," within a statute providing that any drainage district desiring to issue bonds in accordance with the act shall, before such bonds are offered for sale, forward to the Attorney General a copy of the "bonds to be issued," etc., means those to be offered for sale and not those to be prepared and executed. Hidalgo County Drainage Dist. No. 1 v. Davidson, 120 S. W. 849, 851, 102 Tex. 539.

BONE CHAR

Blood charcoal, a substance which, like bone char, is composed chiefly of carbon and is used for decolorizing sugar, is not dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 87, 30 Stat. 156, as an article composed of carbon, but either under paragraph 10, schedule A, 30 Stat. 152, as "bone char" by similitude, or at the similar rate provided in section 6, 30 Stat. 205, for unenumerated manufactured articles. United States v. George Lueders & Co., 148 Fed. 398.

BONED

See Fish Skinned or Boned.

BONUS

A provision of a contract of subscription to the preferred stock of a corporation that the subscriber shall receive as a "bonus" a certain amount of the common stock does not require an inference that the bonus stock was to be issued without consideration in violation of law. Skillin v. Magnus, 162 Fed. 689, 690.

A city granted two street railway franchises, one for 25 years, calling for a payment of $250 a year as bonus, and the other providing for an annual license tax on cars used. Subsequently it adopted an ordinance, accepted by a company owning both franchises, which required the company to pay an annual sum in installments in June and December, in lieu of its obligation to repair streets. Pending litigation by the company to determine its rights under the franchises, it contracted to pay the city $2,500 annually for five years, and additional sums annually for subsequent five-year periods, which payments should be in lieu of car license or bonus; and it also agreed to make specified improvements. Held, that the payments required by the last contract were in lieu of payments required under the original franchises or the ordinances; the word "bonus" being used as equivalent to "consideration." City of Covington v. South Covington & C. St. Ry. Co., 144 S. W. 17, 20, 147 Ky. 326.

Though an agreement to pay a "bonus" does not necessarily mean the payment of a bribe, but generally means a sum given or paid beyond what is legally required, the word may also be used to designate bribery; so that where, in a contract for services as salesman, there was no explanation of a provision for the reimbursement of sums to be paid by the salesman as "bonuses," evidence was admissible under a proper plea to explain that the payments were to be made as bribes to purchasing agents. Smith v. David B. Crockett Co., 82 Atl. 569, 571, 85 Conn. 282, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1148.

Rev. St. 1909, § 8389, which directs, after providing for the making of loans by building and loan companies by competitive bidding for premiums, that the by-laws of the company may dispense with bids and provide for the making of loans to members at such a rate of interest and premium as may be provided in the by-law, "such premium to be paid in gross installments." Section 3390 provides that premiums shall consist of a percentage of the amount loaned. Held that, as "installment" means a part of a greater amount and is a word only fitly used in connection with an ascertained amount, especially when qualified by "gross," and as "interest" is a certain rate per cent. of the sum loaned for the time the money is detained by the borrower, while a "bonus" or "premium" is a definite sum agreed upon which is paid in addition to interest, either in advance or by installments, the statute means that the premium referred to should be in gross, payable in installments, and it does not therefore authorize the charging of a rate per cent. for the uncertain period for which the money may be kept, so that, though such a charge be called a "bonus" in by-law authorizing it, it is without statutory authority. Holmes v. Royal Loan Ass'n, 150 S. W. 1111, 1114, 166 Mo. App. 719.

BOODLING

In the slang of the day, corrupt legislative practices and corrupt influences affecting legislation are termed "boodling." Julian v. Kansas City Star, 107 S. W. 496, 501, 209 Mo. 85.

As including bank deposit book

A bequest of all my "books" does not include the testator's bank books or books of deposit, even though the definition of "book," as given in dictionaries, is broad enough to include bank books. In re Jeffreys' Estate, 82 Pac. 549, 550, 1 Cal. App. 524.

Corporate stock book

Bal. Ann. Codes & St. § 4269, makes it the duty of a corporation to keep a book containing the names of stockholders, showing the number of their shares, which book during the usual business hours shall be open for inspection of stockholders and creditors, and provides that any stockholder or creditor of the company shall have the right to make extracts from such book, or demand from an officer a certified copy of any paper placed on file in the office of the company. Section 4270 (section 7071) provides that if the officer having charge of such book, or of any papers of the company shall refuse or neglect to exhibit them, or allow them to be inspected, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor or punishable by imprisonment in the county jail, or by fine, or by both. Held that the book referred to in section 4270 (section 7071) is the stock book mentioned in section 4269 (section 7070), and the papers referred to in such section are the papers placed on file, within the meaning of the preceding section, meaning some paper lodged with and kept by the corporation, and pertaining to its corporate business, and to subject an officer to the payment of the statutory penalty, there must be a demand for inspection of the book named in the statute, or a designated paper or papers lodged with and kept by the corporation and pertaining to its corporate business by a person having an interest in inspecting the paper, and there must be a refusal to comply with the demand, and a simple demand to inspect the books and papers is not sufficient to subject the officer refusing it to the penalty. BOOK (In Copyright Law)

Rev. St. § 4956, as amended in 1891, after enumerating the things which may be copyrighted, provides that the person desiring a copyright shall deposit with the librarian of Congress "two copies of such copyright book, map, chart, dramatic or musical composition; * * * provided that in the case of a book, photograph, chromo or lithograph, the two copies of the same required to be delivered or deposited as above shall be printed from type set within the limits of the United States or from plates made therefrom. * * * Held, that dramatic compositions, being enumerated in the body of the section separately from books, and not being specified in the proviso, are not included therein, and that such a composition, although printed in book form, need not be printed from type set or plates made in the United States to be entitled to copyright. Heryieu v. J. S. Ogilvie Pub. Co., 169 Fed. 978, 981.

Under the statute of 8 Anne, c. 19, in England, it was held that a musical composition was protected by a copyright within the words "books or other writings"; and now under the act of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, § 2, it is declared that in the construction of the act the word "book" shall be construed to mean and include "every volume, part, or division of a volume, pamphlet, sheet of letter press, sheet of music," etc. Under these acts, it has been determined in effect that the adaptation of a well-known air, either by changing it to a dance or by transferring it from one instrument to another, is not a work entitling an author to a copyright. Our own law (Act Cong. Aug. 10, 1846) provides that the author of any book, map, chart, musical composition may have the same copyrighted, and the court holds that a musical composition must be substantially new and original and not a copy with such additions or variations which an experienced writer of music might readily make. Jolile v. Jaques, 1 Blatch. 625, 13 Fed. Cas. 910, 913.

BOOK (In Gaming)

Duplicate copies of policy tickets copied by the owner running the game are called "books." State v. Wilkerson, 70 S. W. 478, 479, 170 Mo. 184.

While the word "book," in the vernacular of the race track, need not be a bound volume with printed matter therein, yet to make a book, as that term is understood by the gambling fraternity, there must be a sheet of paper on which is recorded the name of the horse, the odds to be given, and either the name of the bettor or a numbered card by which the holder of the card could be designated, and the name of the bettor printed on a card or ticket and the amount which the bookmaker bet against the same, and so a blackboard containing the names of entries and the odds is not a book. State v. Oldham, 98 S. W. 497, 503, 200 Mo. 538.

BOOK OF ACCOUNT

See Account.

The fly leaf of a book containing only one account is a sufficient "book of accounts" within the meaning of Rev. St. 1899, § 4653, to be admissible in evidence. Stephan v. Metzger, 69 S. W. 625, 628, 95 Mo. App. 609.

The term "books of account," in Civ. Code, § 4574 (Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903), authorizing the admission in evidence of entries in books of account, refers to books containing charges by one party against the other, or of dealings with him, and a written memorandum of subjects and events, made contemporaneously with their taking place, are not books of account. First Nat. Bank of Enid v. Yeoman, 78 Pac. 388, 389, 14 Okl. 626.

BOOK OF AN ENTRY TAKER

The "book of an entry taker" is a record, and copies taken from it constitute record evidence. The entry taker must furnish the surveyor with a copy of his record on which he makes his survey. Reeve v. North Carolina Land & Timber Co., 141 Fed. 821, 824, 72 C. C. A. 287.

BOOK OF ORIGINAL ENTRIES

"A book of original entries is a book in which a merchant keeps his accounts generally and enters therein from day to day a record of his transactions." A book of a firm, which was not one of the firm's regular books, and which contained only the account of one person, and in which the entries were not made contemporaneously with the transaction, was not a book of original entries. McKnight v. Newell, 57 Atl. 39, 40, 207 Pa. 562.

The evidence discloses that modern wholesale houses have adopted modern methods of bookkeeping in which the daybook and journal once in common use have no place in the system. The order from a customer comes in, and when approved by a credit man is passed to shipping and bill clerks, who select and assemble the goods ordered from different departments of the house and check them out, and then the order, initialed or marked by those through whose hands it passes, is handed to the bookkeeper, who formally enters the items in a book designated as a "ledger." This book is the first complete and permanent record of the charges and credits in the dealings had between the house and the customer. It appears that in some instances, for safety and convenience, an impression of the order is taken in a book; but it is only a copy of the order itself and cannot be regarded as a book of original entries. All that precedes the entries in the so-called "ledger" are mere temporary memoranda, which are turned in to the bookkeeper, who makes the first and only formal entries of the transactions between the parties. Such ledgers are "books of original entry," within the rules of evidence, making such entries admissible. State v. Stephenson, 76 Pac. 905, 906, 69 Kan. 405, 105 Am. St. Rep. 171, 2 Ann. Cas. 841.

Mere order slips or shopbooks, in which orders for goods are entered as received, are not "books of original entry," within the rule under which shopbooks of original entry are admitted in evidence to prove the account, when the entries contained therein are properly proved or established. Ogden Packing & Provision Co. v. Tooele Meat & Storage Co. (Utah) 124 Pac. 333, 334.

A "ledger" is a book of accounts in which are collected and arranged, each under its appropriate head, the various transactions scattered throughout the journal or daybook, and is not a "book of original entries," within the rule making such books competent evidence. First Nat. Building Co. v. Vandenberg, 119 Pac. 224, 227, 29 Okl. 583.

BOOK OR OTHER PAPER

Plaintiff purchased of defendant a picture alleged to be the work of a celebrated artist, and thereafter, on discovering it to be only a copy, he returned it to defendant, and sued to recover the purchase price, and applied for an order for inspection of the picture. Held, that the picture not being a "book, document or other paper," within Code Civ. Proc. § 803, the motion will be denied, with leave to renew on affidavits showing that the picture bears the purported signature of the alleged artist, and that plaintiff expects to prove that the signature is spurious. Wilson v. Collins, 109 N. Y. Supp. 660, 661, 57 Misc. Rep. 363.

The defendant, as commissioner of accounts of the city of New York, was empowered by section 119 of the Greater New York Charter (Laws 1901, c. 466), to make special examinations of the accounts of the officers and departments of the city, and report to the mayor. The relator's petition set forth that defendant, as commissioner of accounts, had taken testimony in a matter relating to the accounts of the office of the president of the borough of Queens, and that the testimony had been typewritten and filed in the defendant's office, that a copy had been forwarded to the district attorney, who had obtained an indictment against the borough president, and that the petitioner desired a certified copy of the minutes and records of the proceedings had before the defendant. Greater New York Charter, § 1545, requires that the heads of departments and bureaus shall furnish to any taxpayer desiring the same a certified copy of any book, account, or paper kept by such department, and that all the books shall be open to inspection by taxpayers, who, if refused the right to inspection may petition for an order of the Supreme Court for an inspection; and section 51 of the general municipal law (Consol. Laws, c. 24) declares all books of minutes, entry of account, and the books, bills, vouchers, checks, contracts or other papers used by or filed with county officers to be public records subject to inspection. Held that, unless in cases where public interests clearly require a disclosure the minutes and record of the commissioner's investigation made for the purpose of determining a course of official action were not within any of the specified books, accounts, etc., as to which the taxpayer's right to copy or inspect was mandatory. People ex rel. Woodliff v. Fosdick, 128 N. Y. Supp. 252, 253, 141 App. Div. 450.

BOOKS, RECORDS, AND PAPERS BELONGING THERETO

The phrase "books, records, and papers belonging thereto," used in a code section, authorizing clerks of the chancery courts to make allowances for the safe keeping of the same, means such books, records, and papers only as belong to a court of chancery and such as are needed by the clerk of court in matters pertaining to the procedure and business therein. County of Choctaw v. Hughes, 85 South. 424, 425, 83 Miss. 195.

BOOK VALUE

"Book value," as applied to the book value of corporate stock, means value as predicated on the market value of the assets of the corporation after deducting its liabilities. Steege v. Leopold Weil Bldg. & Imp. Co., 52 South. 232, 235, 126 La. 101.

The "book value" of a capital stock of a corporation is reached by extending all the assets as they appear on the corporate books and deducting all the liabilities and other matters required to be deducted and taking the balance as the measure of value. Cable v. Cable, 97 N. Y. Supp. 773, 775, 111 App. Div. 426.

BOOKING COTTON

The term "booking cotton" means making specific arrangements for the transportation of cotton by a particular vessel in advance of its sailing day. Merchants' & Miners' Transp. Co. v. Granger & Lewis, 63 S. E. 700, 702, 132 Ga. 167.

BOOKINGS

The common-law obligation of a common carrier by sea to serve the public impartially in the receipt and transportation of goods does not inhibit a carrier from taking "bookings" of freight—that is, from making specific arrangements for the transportation of goods by a particular vessel in advance of its sailing day, provided this privilege is extended to all, or if the grant of this privilege to shippers of one commodity does not interfere with the carrier's duty to shippers of other commodities. Ocean S. S. Co. of Savannah v. Savannah Locomotive Works & Supply Co., 63 S. E. 577, 580, 131 Ga. 831, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 867, 127 Am. St. Rep. 265, 15 Ann. Cas. 1044.

BOOKLETS

Under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, schedule M, par. 400, 30 Stat. 188, relating respectively to lithographic prints and to "booklets," articles composed of several post cards folded together and ready to be detached, though with a paper cover pasted thereon, are not "booklets" but fall within the former designation. Downing & Co. v. United States, 172 Fed. 447, 448.

BOOKKEEPER

See Competent Bookkeeper.

"The term 'bookkeeper,' we think, implies mere servantry to record or keep a record of the transactions of the master and under his direction and not official character or agency to deal with third persons." One employed by a corporation to serve as bookkeeper for a definite period is not ex vi termini an officer or agent of such corporation within the intendment of Code 1906, c. 53, § 53, holding his place during the pleasure of the board of directors and removable without cause by such board without liability upon the corporation for a breach of its contract of employment. Munn v. Wellsburg Banking & Trust Co., 66 S. E. 230, 231, 66 W. Va. 204, 135 Am. St. Rep. 1024.

Under a statute providing that all persons doing labor or service of whatever character in the regular employment of an insolvent company shall be entitled to two months' wages next preceding the institution of proceedings of insolvency, one acting as "bookkeeper of a corporation" is entitled to that exemption although general manager and a director. *Buvinger v. BOOKKEEPING

System of bookkeeping, see System.

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 4571 (Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 6067), giving the Railroad Commission "power to prescribe a system of bookkeeping," since "system" means "method" and "bookkeeping" is the art of recording in a systematic manner the transactions of merchants, traders, and other persons engaged in pursuits connected with money, the commission cannot order the apportionment of items of expense to be made upon a purely arbitrary basis of "car miles" in a certain ratio between passenger traffic and freight, and orders prescribing that certain conclusions and deductions be entered upon the books of the railroads are not authorized (citing 1 Words and Phrases, 842). Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Railroad Commission of Texas (Tex.) 150 S. W. 878, 880.

An order of the state railroad commission requiring railroads to divide their expense accounts into five primary accounts, and requiring such primary accounts to be divided into 123 subaccounts, following the system of bookkeeping prescribed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and requiring that a few of the subaccounts should again be subdivided so as to apportion expenses between freight and passenger traffic and between state and interstate traffic, was a compliance with Rev. St. 1895, art. 4571, authorizing the Railroad Commission to prescribe a system of bookkeeping for railroads.

BOOKMAKING

"Bookmaking," as used with "pool selling" in Act March 21, 1905, prohibiting bookmaking and pool selling, is germane to "pool selling"; both terms having been always understood to refer to horse racing of some character. State ex inf. Hadley v. Delmar Jockey Club, 92 S. W. 185, 190, 200 Mo. 34.

"Bookmaking" is a species of betting on horse races, and Act 28th Leg. c. 50, entitled "An act to prohibit the buying and selling of pools or receiving or making bets on horse races," is not repugnant to Const. art. 3, § 35, prohibiting bills from containing more than one subject to be expressed in the title in that it prohibits "bookmaking" in the body thereof and does not mention it by that name in the title. Ex parte Hernan, 77 S. W. 225, 226, 45 Tex. Cr. R. 343.

The term "bookmaking" originally indicated the collection of sheets of paper or other substances on which entries could be made, either written or printed. People ex rel. Lichtenstein v. Langan, 89 N. E. 921, 922, 196 N. Y. 260, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 479, 17 Ann. Cas. 1081.

Under Code Cr. Proc. § 742, requiring the information to contain a brief description of a statutory crime, an information charging defendant with engaging in bookmaking, and stating that he did quote and lay odds, by publishing the terms on which he was willing to bet against horses on the result of races, etc., but failing to allege the writing or recording of anything, was insufficient to charge a violation of Pen. Code, § 351, making it a misdemeanor to engage in bookmaking, since there can be no bookmaking without writing or recording; the word "betting," as used in the Penal Code, implying the use of a book, or sheets of paper, or a bulletin board, or some such thing. People ex rel. Jones v. Langan, 116 N. Y. Supp. 718, 719, 132 App. Div. 393; Id., 116 N. Y. Supp. 720, 132 App. Div. 937.

An information insufficiently charges the commission of the crime of bookmaking "with or without writing," under section 986 of the Penal Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 40), as amended by Laws 1910, c. 488, which in substance alleges that the defendant unlawfully, willfully, and privately made several bets orally and without writing, but that a memorandum of each of the bets was prepared by the opposite party thereto and shown to the defendant. Such an information fails to set forth the chief elements of the crime of "bookmaking," as defined by the courts, in that, among other things, it fails to charge the defendant with the public quoting and offering of odds, with the soliciting of bets, with inducing the public to take chances with him in any scheme of odds, and with effecting through his methods any passing of money or property. People ex rel. Shane v. Gittens, 137 N. Y. Supp. 670, 672, 73 Misc. Rep. 7.

To "make a book," as that term is understood by the gambling fraternity, there must be a sheet of paper on which is recorded the name of the horse, the odds to be given, and either the name of the better or a numbered card, by which the holder of the card could be designated and the better furnished with a card or ticket, and the amount which the bookmaker bet against the same, which the player handed to the bookmaker, and when the race was won this sheet would indicate to the cashier or bookmaker the amount won by the player. A blackboard behind a betting booth on which the names of horses and the terms were written, and numbered tickets issued to betters, did not constitute a book for registering debts or selling pools on horse races within Laws 1905, p. 131, prohibiting the use of any room, etc., with a book for purpose of recording bets on horse races. State v. Oldham, 98 S. W. 497, 503, 200 Mo. 533.

BOOM

The word "booms" means the spars or logs and chains and other fixtures to keep them in place and extending wholly or partially across a river or other body of water to obstruct the floating of objects therein. A boom corporation leased some flats and lands and erected thereon a boom extending into the river for catching and securing lumber. Held, that a sale of the boom and tiers on execution against a corporation only affects the logs and chains from which the boom was made and not the leasehold. Hollins v. Clay, 33 Me. 132, 133.

The word "boom" in an instruction, in proceedings by a railroad to condemn land, that the law does not permit the fixing of speculative, boom, or fancy values upon the property in controversy, but the law requires the determination of the reasonable market salable value of the property, if the owner was offering to sell on the usual terms and the purchaser desired to buy, though not a word descriptive of values which should be considered in estimating values arising under the law of eminent domain, does not extend the ordinary meaning of the other words "speculative" and "fancy"; the court using the words "speculative," "fancy," and "boom" as nearly equivalents of each other. Blincoe v. Choctaw, O. & W. R. Co., 83 Pac. 903, 909, 16 Okl. 283, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 890, 8 Ann. Cas. 689.

BOOM POLE

A long pole which is moved by a wire rope running over a drum and used to raise and lower stone in a quarry is called a "boom pole." Clear Creek Stone Co. v. Dearmin, 66 N. E. 609, 610, 160 Ind. 162.

"Boomage" is a fixed charge on logs, payable at the place of delivery. Moss Point Lumber Co. v. Thompson, 35 South. 828, 829, 83 Miss. 499.

BOOT-BLACKING STAND

As place of public accommodation, see Public Accommodation.

BOOTLEGGER

In suit to enjoin a liquor nuisance, injunction does not properly run on the theory defendant violated Code Supp. 1907, § 2461a, defining a "bootlegger" to be one who carries intoxicants around for unlawful sale, where the evidence showed defendant conducted a restaurant. Barr v. Neel, 131 N. W. 650, 651, 151 Iowa, 458.

BOOTLEGGING

"Bootlegging" is an unlawful selling of liquor. Lambert v. State, 114 N. W. 775, 776, 80 Neb. 562.

BOOTY

Movables taken from the enemy on land are generally called "booty" and on the high seas "prize." The "high seas" include coast waters without the boundaries of low-water mark, though within bays or roadsteads—waters on which a court of admiralty has jurisdiction. United States v. Dewey, 23 Sup. Ct. 415, 422, 188 U. S. 254, 47 L. Ed. 463 (citing United States v. Ross, 1 Gall. 624, 27 Fed. Cas. 899).

"Booty of war" is distinguished from a seizure for immediate use of the army, and neither the capitulation of San Diego, nor cessation of active military operations in the San Diego district, nor the President's proclamation of July 13, 1898, relative to the rights of private property, change the character of a Spanish merchant vessel lying in the harbor as enemy's property nor exempt it from liability to capture by the military authorities for military purposes. Herrera v. United States, 32 Sup. Ct. 179, 183, 222 U. S. 558, 56 L. Ed. 316.

BORACIC ACID

terial," under paragraph 11, 30 Stat. 152, and is subject to an assessment at the same rate of duty as boracic acid, under said paragraph 1, by virtue of section 7 of said act (30 Stat. 205), which prescribes that on articles not enumerated, manufactured of two or more materials, the duty shall be assessed at the highest rate at which the same would be chargeable, if composed wholly of the component material thereof of chief value. Berth Levi & Co. v. United States, 126 Fed. 420-422.

BORATE MATERIAL

Other borate material, see Other.

"Borate material," as used in Tariff Act 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 11, fixing a rate of three cents a pound ad valorem on importations of borates of lime or soda, or other borate material not otherwise provided for, containing not more than 6 per cent. of anhydrous boracic acid, was not limited to material from which borates might be produced but included as well borates of any other substance, as borate of magnesia, etc. O. G. Hempstead & Son v. United States, 123 Fed. 346.

The enumeration in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, par. 11, 30 Stat. 152, of other borate material refers only to "borate materials" found in nature in a raw condition, such as the borates of lime or soda included in the same provision, and does not embrace borate of manganese, or bormangan, which is a manufactured article made from manganese and borates of lime or soda and which is held to be dutiable as a chemical compound or salt under paragraph 3. Hempstead v. Thomas, 129 Fed. 907, 908, 64 C. C. A. 339.

BORATE OF MANGANESE

"Borate of manganese" is a manufactured product containing from 4 to 20 per cent. of manganese and from 10 to 30 per cent. anhydrous boracic acid, taxable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 11, and not under section 1, Schedule A, par. 3. O. G. Hempstead & Son v. United States, 123 Fed. 346.

BORDER

A deed described lands as situated on the side of an unnavigable stream and as bounded by it on three sides, and gave the particular subdivisions of the section. Grantee in the deed conveyed by deed which fixed the starting point in a subdivision of a section; thence east, a specified distance, to the side of the stream; thence down the stream with the meanderings thereof—being the property conveyed by the first deed. Held, that under Civ. Code, §§ 830, 1069, providing that, when land borders on unnavigable water, the owner takes to the middle of the stream, and declaring that a grant must be interpreted in favor of grantee, one claiming under the deeds took to the middle of the stream; the word "border" being synonymous with "boundary." Drake v. Russian River Land Co., 103 Pac. 167, 169, 10 Cal. App. 654.

The word "border," in a statute authorizing the disconnection of territory from a town or city where the territory is, among other things, upon or contiguous to the "border," means the corporate limits, and not the area adjacent to that part in actual use for municipal purposes. Anaconda Min. Co. v. Town of Anaconda, 80 Pac. 144, 146, 33 Colo. 70.

BORINGS

In specifications for public work, the word "borings," as used in a statement, "probable surface of rock as shown by borings," was not the same as soundings, which meant that tests had been made at intervals by driving a bar into the earth, while "borings" indicated that a hole had been bored which would show the character of the soil and indicate clearly at what depth rock was encountered and the character of the rock. Kelly v. City of New York, 84 N. Y. Supp. 349, 350, 87 App. Div. 299.

BOROUGH

The term "boroughs," as used in Const. c. 2, § 9, authorizing the incorporation of towns and boroughs, includes villages. Atherton v. Village of Essex Junction, 74 Atl. 1118, 1119, 83 Vt. 218, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 695, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 339.

"Boroughs" cannot be formed out of territory already part of a city or town. State v. Stout, 33 Atl. 858, 58 N. J. Law, 598.

BORROW

The transaction between a member and the association called "borrowing" is simply allowing the member to receive money on his shares of stock in advance of their maturity, in pursuance of the plan and purpose of the association. Broch v. French, 116 Ill. App. 15, 18.

A national bank borrowing money to meet its obligations on it finding itself embarrassed with a large amount of assets much in excess of its obligations but without the cash to make payment of the balances which are due does not "borrow" money to engage in a new business but simply exchanges one creditor for others. Wyman v. Wallace, 26 Sup. Ct. 495, 497, 201 U. S. 230, 50 L. Ed. 738.

BORROW PITS

What is known as "borrow pits" in railroad construction work are pits dug along the side of the roadbed for the purpose of making embankments, where the material coming out of the cuts is insufficient for the construction of embankments. Choctaw & M. R. Co. v. Newton, 140 Fed. 225, 235, 71 C. C. A. 655.

Excavations made to secure material for fills are, in railroad parlance, called "borrow pits."—Arkansas Valley & W. R. Co. v. Witt, 91 Pac. 897, 898, 19 Okl. 262, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 237.

BORT

Industrial diamonds of the description known as bort, which have been pierced by a process of drilling or cutting, are not dutiable as diamonds advanced by cutting or other process, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 435, 30 Stat. 192, but are free of duty as "bort," under paragraph 545, Free List, § 2, 30 Stat. 197. United States v. American Express Co., 140 Fed. 967, 968.

BOSH

"Bosh" is an erection above the hearth of a blasting furnace built of fire brick and extending upward about 20 feet, slanting outward, containing hollow cooling plates through which water circulates.—Illinois Steel Co. v. Saylor, 80 N. E. 783, 226 Ill. 283.

BOSS

See Mining Boss; Shift Boss; Straw Boss.

"Boss" means a master workman or superintendent, a director, or manager; one who oversees or gives direction. Johnson v. Butte & Superior Copper Co., 108 Pac. 1057, 1060, 41 Mont. 158.

In common parlance, the word "boss" is applied to a person who gives orders and who directs or controls. Ozogor v. Pierce, Butler & Pierce Mfg. Co., 105 N. Y. Supp. 1087, 1090, 55 Misc. Rep. 579.

A "boss" of a small gang of 10 or 15 men engaged in making repairs on a railroad wherever they might be necessary over a distance of three sections, aiding and assisting the regular gang of workmen on each section as occasion demanded, was not such a superintendent of a separate department, nor was he in control of such a distinct branch of the work as would be necessary to constitute him a superintendent or vice principal or make the railroad company liable to a fellow servant for his neglect. Wagner v. New York, C. & St. L. R. Co., 76 N. E. 1112, 1115, 183 N. Y. 523.

A "boss" in a quarry having under him 22 men and authorized to give directions for their employment, to discharge them, and accustomed to mark places where drilling was to be done, but who did no drilling, was a superintendent and vice principal. Mahoney v. Bay State Pink Granite Co., 68 N. E. 234, 235, 184 Mass. 237.

BOTH

Ky. St. 1903 ("Charter of Cities of the Second Class") § 3044, provides that a majority of members elect of both the board of aldermen and the general council shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business in joint session. Held, that a majority of "both" boards means a majority of the members taken as a whole and not a majority of each board considered separately. The word "both" is not synonymous with the word "each."—Davis v. Claus, 100 S. W. 263, 264, 125 Ky. 4.

In a suit for an accounting for royalties under a contract for the sale of an invention of a bicycle brake and coaster, the bill charged that a large number of devices known as Farrow's were being manufactured and sold by the defendant, averred plaintiff's ignorance of details and want of means of learning them except by discovery, and prayed for disclosure of the number of "both" the devices manufactured, sold, and held by defendant. Held, that the word "both" meant in the context the Farrow brake and the Farrow coaster, and the disclosure was intended to include substitutes. Eclipse Bicycle Co. v. Farrow, 26 Sup. Ct. 150, 152, 199 U. S. 581, 50 L. Ed. 817.

BOTTLE

In tariff act

Bottle-like containers of glass used in chemical operations and known as Koch flasks and certain so-called Woulf flasks, shaped like bottles, but having two or three necks a piece, are "bottles" or jars within Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 99, 30 Stat. 156. Elmer & Amend v. United States, 126 Fed. 439, 441.

"Bottles," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 99, 30 Stat. 156, exclude blown glass flasks for chemical laboratories, dutiable under paragraph 100, 30 Stat. 157, as "blown glassware." Elmer & Amend v. United States, 168 Fed. 240, 241, 242, 93 C. C. A. 454.

In imposing the ad valorem duty provided by Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 99, 30 Stat. 156, on bottles filled with olive oil, there should be taken as the dutiable value of the bottles only the value of the bottles by themselves, exclusive of corks, capsules, labels, reed envelopes, wooden cases, cost of filling, etc., all of which should be attributed to the contents rather than to the bottles. James A. Hayes & Co. v. United States, 150 Fed. 63, 64, 80 C. C. A. 17.

BOTTLES, JARS, OR SIMILAR PACKAGES

Olives in jars holding ten gallons were olives in "bottles, jars, or similar packages" within Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 264, 30 Stat. 171, taxing olives in bottles, jars, or similar packages at 25 cents a gallon. United States v. Shing Shun & Co., 173 Fed. 844, 845.

BOTTOM

BOTTOMRY

BOTTOMRY BOND

A "bottomry bond" is an obligation, executed generally in a foreign port by a master of a vessel for advances to supply the necessities of a ship, together with such interest as may be agreed on, which bond creates a lien on the ship which may be enforced in admiralty in case of her safe arrival in port of destination, but becomes void in case of her loss before arrival. Where the master of an English vessel lying in the port of New Orleans ready to sail with cargo was without funds and was unable to hear either from the owners or the charterers, a draft drawn by the master to raise money for supplies and to pay legal obligations in such port, which was duly discounted at the instance of the ship's agents, was in the nature of a bottomry bond, and created a lien on the vessel enforceable in admiralty. The Wyandotte, 145 Fed. 321, 324, 75 C. C. A. 117 (quoting The Grapshot Case, 9 Wall. 135, 19 L. Ed. 651).

A "bottomry bond" may be executed by the owner of a ship at a home port, its validity not depending on the application money to the purposes of the ship or the voyage, although it is the essence of a "bottomry bond" that it is for money taken up on a maritime risk. Greeley v. Waterhouse, 19 Me. 9, 13, 36 Am. Dec. 730.

BOUGHT

BOUGHT AND PAID FOR

Exchange bought and paid for, see Exchange (In Commercial Law).

BOUGHT AND SOLD

The use of the words "bought and sold" in a written contract of sale does not necessarily import a present sale, but are frequently used to express a mere agreement to sell. Walt v. Gaba, 116 Pac. 963, 964, 160 Cal. 324.

"Bought and sold notes" are written memoranda of a sale of goods delivered to the parties thereto by the broker employed to negotiate the sale. Generally the memorandum delivered to the buyer is the bought note, and that delivered to the seller is the sold note, but some authorities hold that the sold note is delivered to the buyer and the bought note to the seller. Eau Claire Canning Co. v. Western Brokerage Co., 73 N. E. 430, 433, 213 Ill. 561.

BOULEVARD

As street, see Street.

A parkway is essentially a "boulevard," giving to the term its modern meaning. Kleopfert v. City of Minneapolis, 95 N. W. 908, 909, 90 Minn. 158 (citing Cent. Dict.).

The term "boulevard," anciently used to designate the flat top of a bulwark or rampart around a city, now means a street constructed with parklike features, a wide street, or a street encircling a town, one with sides or center for shade trees, flowers, seats, etc., and not used for heavy teaming. City of St. Louis v. Handlan, 145 S. W. 421, 423, 242 Mo. 88.

"A 'boulevard' is a public street which is usually of greater width than ordinary business streets and is given a parklike appearance by reserving places at the sides or center for shade trees, flowers, seats, and the like, and ordinarily is not used for heavy teaming. It is usually set apart for pleasure driving rather than the general business purposes of an ordinary street." Laws 1909, p. 290, § 1, making it unlawful to erect a structure of any kind within 500 feet of any public park or boulevard within any city having a population of 100,000 or more for the purpose of placing advertisements thereon, is unconstitutional as an unreasonable attempt to limit the proper use of private property for æsthetic reasons, not being justified under the police power. Haller Sign Works v. Physical Culture Training School, 94 N. E. 920, 922, 249 Ill. 436, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 998.

26 Del. Laws, c. 189, authorizing the organization of boulevard corporations and the construction by them of boulevards 200 feet wide, part to be used as a road for vehicles and part to be ornamented by trees and other parking features, or to be utilized for railways, telegraphs, telephones, pipe lines, etc., and providing for the maintenance of the road for vehicles by the state, for a new state official with supervision over such road, and for a new item of public expense in maintaining it, is not invalid, under Const. art. 2, § 16, as containing more than one subject, part of which are not germane to its title, reciting that it is an act to amend the general corporation law, by authorizing the organization of boulevard corporations, or which are not germane to the title of the general corporation law, since the popular meaning of the word "boulevard" is a broad and attractive highway designed and used for the transportation of persons, and things by any of the means now commonly employed on city streets or country roads, and all the provisions of the act relate to the one subject of the construction, operation, regulation, and maintenance of boulevards and boulevard corporations. Clendaniel v. Conrad (Del.) 83 Atl. 1036, 1041.

BOUND

See Mutually Bound.

The term "bound," as used in Rev. St. 1899, § 4211, providing that in all suits under this article the parties to the contract shall, and all other persons interested in the matter in controversy or in the property charged with the lien may, be made parties, but such as are not made parties shall not be bound by any such proceedings, is used in a narrow sense, namely, as meaning concluded. McLaren v. International Real Estate & Improvement Co., 102 S. W. 1105, 1107, 126 Mo. App. 254.

A manifold book, in which the carbon sheets are attached to a card board stub having a notched edge, the teeth of which may be pressed between the staples which bind the edges of the leaves together to hold the sheets in place, although such sheets are removable does not escape infringement of a patent because the sheets are described therein as "bound" in the book. John Kitchen, Jr., Co. v. Levison, 188 Fed. 658, 662, 110 C. C. A. 424.

BOUND TO KNOW

"Bound to know," as applied to the duty of a tug to know the condition of the channels and other waters where she assumes to tow vessels, clearly means that the tug is at law "bound to know" and must be presumed to know the conditions of the waters where she assumes to take the tow. The Naos, 144 Fed. 292, 296.

The phrase "bound to know," as used in the statement of the obligation resting on a tug, means that she must use proper diligence in ascertaining the condition of the channels and other waters where she assumes to tow vessels. Winslow v. Thompson, 134 Fed. 546, 549, 67 C. C. A. 470.

BOUND WITH SURETY

A statutory requirement that one shall be "bound with surety" means that he shall be bound "by" surety or shall "find surety." If sufficient security is entered, it is unnecessary that the party himself be bound. Caunce v. Butler (Pa.) 6 Bin. 52, 53.

BOUNDARY

See Common Boundary; Exterior Boundaries; Intersecting Boundary; Natural Boundary; Title or Boundaries of Land; Well-Defined Boundary.

As stream, see Stream.

Interlocking boundaries, see Interlock.
Point in boundary, see Point.

The word "boundary" has a well-defined meaning; it is "that which indicates and fixes a limit or extent or marks a bound, as of territory." Board of Com'rs of Orook County v. Board of Com'rs of Sheridan County, 100 Pac. 659, 673, 17 Wyo. 424 (quoting and adopting definition in Webster's Dict.).

A conveyance of that part of a certain lot west of the "boundaries of a railroad" is properly construed to mean that part outside and west of the railroad's right of way. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Hasenwinkle, 83 N. E. 815, 818, 232 Ill. 224, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 129.

In the absence of other controlling circumstances, there is a conclusive inference that a division line between adjoining tracts definitely marked by the erection and maintenance of a fence or other monuments recognized by the owners as such, and up to which they have occupied and cultivated land on either side more than ten years, the statutory period of limitations, is the true "boundary line." Lawrence v. Washburn, 93 N. W. 73, 74, 119 Iowa, 109.

Between states

The state of Louisiana may make it a criminal offense for a pilot not duly qualified under its laws to pilot a foreign vessel from the Gulf of Mexico to New Orleans, La., although he holds a license issued under the authority of the state of Mississippi; since New Orleans, although upon the Mississippi river, is not "situate upon waters which are the boundary between two states," within the meaning of Rev. St. U. S. § 4236, authorizing the master of any vessel coming into or going out of any port so situated to employ any pilot duly licensed or authorized by the laws of either of the states bounded on such waters to pilot a vessel to or from such port, the limit of the waters so referred to being the point at which they cease to be a boundary between the two states. Leech v. State of Louisiana, 29 Sup. Ct. 552, 553, 214 U. S. 175, 53 L. Ed. 956, affirming Judgment State v. Leech, 44 South. 285, 119 La. 522, 129 Am. St. Rep. 336.

On river or street

"Bounded by street" or "bounded by river" is equivalent to bounding by the center of the river or to the center of the street, subject to public easements. Brown v. City of Baraboo, 74 N. W. 223, 226, 98 Wis. 273.

A state "boundary" formed by a river changes with the change of a bank by accretion or reliction, but is not affected by an avulsion. De Loney v. State, 115 S. W. 138, 140, 88 Ark. 811; Id., 115 S. W. 142, 88 Ark. 615.

The common-law rule that the boundary of land bordering on an unnavigable stream is along the center, unless there is something in the deed to show a contrary intention, is the rule adopted by Civ. Code, § 830. Drake

v. Russian River Land Co., 103 Pac. 167, 168, 10 Cal. App. 654.

The western boundary line of Missouri, extended by Act Cong. June 7, 1836, c. 86, § 5 Stat. 34, to the Missouri river, remains the center of that stream, even if, by erosion, the result may be to take from Missouri territory which lies east of the original boundary, defined as a meridian line running due north from the mouth of the Kansas river. State of Missouri v. State of Kansas, 29 Sup. Ct. 417, 418, 213 U. S. 73, 53 L. Ed. 706.

"The true 'boundary line of a navigable stream' or lake is the point to which the water usually rises in ordinary seasons of high water" (dissenting opinion of Sullivan, J.). Johnson v. Johnson, 95 Pac. 499, 512, 14 Idaho, 561, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1240 (quoting Gould, Waters [3d Ed.] § 76).

Meander line

"It has been decided again and again that the meander line is not a boundary, but that the body of water whose margin is meandered is the true boundary." Mitchell v. Smale, 11 Sup. Ct. 819, 840, 140 U. S. 414, 35 L. Ed. 442.

"The meander line is not a line of boundary, but one designed to point out the sinuosities of the bank of the stream, and as a means of ascertaining the quantity of land in the fraction which is to be paid for by the purchaser." "A patent for a tract of land bordering on a river conveys the land, not simply to the meander line, but to the water line." Horne v. Smith, 15 Sup. Ct. 988, 159 U. S. 42, 40 L. Ed. 68.

BOUNDING

"Bounding," as used in Rev. St. § 2264, providing that, where an improvement is made on an existing street, alley, or other public highway, the cost and expense shall be assessed on the abutting lots and lands in the corroboration by the front foot of the property "bounding" and abutting on the improvement, is synonymous with "abutting"; the word "front" indicating the extent to which the lot is bounded by the highway for the improvement of which the assessment is made (dissenting opinion of Shauck, J.). City of Toledo v. Shell, 42 N. E. 323, 326, 53 Ohio St. 447, 30 L. R. A. 598.

BOUNTY

See Natural Object of His Bounty.

A gratuity of money, given as "a testimonial for meritorious service" and in recognition of services rendered and sacrifices made, and not as a bounty or in equalization of bounties, and which is not to be paid to a person who has received a bounty from the commonwealth or any town, by an act applying only to cases where a soldier enlisted in his own proper name from purely patriotic motives, without the payment of a bounty, and received an honorable discharge, is not a substantive provision for the payment of bounties in time of peace, serving no public purpose, but benefiting only individuals; "bounty" being properly used in the sense of a payment to encourage enlistments and to aid towns and cities in filling their quotas. In re Opinion of the Justices, 98 N. E. 338, 339, 211 Mass. 608.

"Bounty" is defined by Webster as "a premium offered or given to induce men to enlist into the public service, or to encourage any branch of industry, as husbandry or manufactures." And by Bouvier as "an additional benefit conferred upon or a compensation paid to a class of persons." In a conference of representatives of the principal European powers, specially convened at Brussels in 1898 for the purpose of considering the question of sugar bounties, the definition of "bounty" was examined by the conference sitting in committee, who made a report that it was of the opinion that bounties which should be abolished were understood to be all the advantages conceded to manufactures and refiners by the fiscal legislation of the states and that, directly or indirectly, were borne by the public treasury, classified: "(a) The direct advantages granted in case of exportation. (b) The direct advantages granted to production. (c) The total or partial exemptions from taxation granted to a portion of the manufactured products. (d) The indirect advantages growing out of surplus or allowance in manufacturing effected beyond the legal estimates. (e) The profit that may be derived from an excessive drawback." A "bounty" may be direct, as where a certain amount is paid on the production or exportation of particular articles, of which Act Cong. 1895, allowing a bounty on the production of sugar, and Rev. St. §§ 3015-3027, allowing a drawback on certain articles exported, are examples; or indirect, by the remission of taxes upon the exportation of articles which are subjected to a tax when sold or consumed in the country of their production, of which the law permitting distillers of spirits to export the same after payment of an internal revenue tax or other burden is an example. Downs v. United States, 23 Sup. Ct. 222, 223, 187 U. S. 496, 47 L. Ed. 275.

BOURBON WHISKY

As understood in the trade, "Bourbon whisky" is confined to a whisky made in Kentucky, distilled from a grain mash, of which corn forms the largest constituent. United States v. Fifty Barrels of Whisky, 165 Fed. 966, 972.

"Bourbon whisky" is a Kentucky product, made principally out of corn with sufficient rye and barley malt added to distinguish it from straight corn whisky. Levy v. Uri, 31 App. D. C. 441, 445.

BOVINE

A description of stolen property as "one female animal of the bovine species, nearly two years old," alleges with sufficient accuracy that the animal was a cow or heifer, and satisfies Gen. St. 1906, § 3299. Jones v. State, 59 South. 892, 64 Fla. 92.

BOWLING ALLEY

See, also, Tenpin Alley.

The term "bowling alley," being construed to connote pieces of wood so conjoined as to present a plane surface 42 inches wide and 72 feet long, and wooden pins and wooden balls used in the game of bowling, is not exempt from seizure and sale on execution as the tools or implements of a keeper's trade or business. Williams v. Vincent, 79 Pac. 121, 70 Kan. 595, 68 L. R. A. 634, 109 Am. St. Rep. 469.

The statutes use the terms "tenpin alley" and "bowling alley" interchangeably. In the act levying occupation taxes (Rev. St. 1895, art. 5049), every nine or ten pin alley, or any other alley used for profit, by whatever name called, constructed, or operated upon the principle of a bowling alley, etc., is amenable to the tax. Webster also defines "tenpin alley" and "bowling alley" as in effect synonymous. An indictment charging in the same count a violation of the occupation law, in that accused pursued the occupation of running a tenpin alley "and" bowling alley for profit without procuring a license, is not vitiated by the use of "and," even if the terms "tenpin alley" and "bowling alley" be not in effect synonymous. O'Neal v. State, 100 S. W. 919, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 100.

"By * * * 'boxes' * * * we understand those encasements which are not usually of permanent value, and such as are ordinarily used for the convenient transportation of their contents." United States v. Nicholls, 22 Sup. Ct. 918, 186 U. S. 298, 300, 46 L. Ed. 1173.

In Florida where the production of spirits of turpentine and rosin, otherwise known as "naval stores," constitutes one of the leading industries, courts will take judicial notice that such naval stores are the manufactured products of the gum extracted from pine trees that constitute the chief timber growing on large areas of the state, and that the crude gum so extracted in its unmanu-factured state is popularly known as and called "Dip," from the fact of its being collected by being dipped up from receptacles called "boxes" cut into the growing pine trees near the ground. Knight v. Empire Land Co., 45 South. 1025, 1027, 55 Fla. 301.

BOY

The word "boy" is always applied to a male person under 21 years of age. Hartsell v. State, 116 S. W. 1159, 55 Tex Cr. R. 389; White v. State (Tex.) 151 S. W. 828.

BOYCOTT

See Primary Boycott; Secondary Boycott.

As using mails to defraud, see Defraud.

The term "boycott" ordinarily means a confederation, generally secret of many persons whose intent is to injure another by preventing any and all persons from doing business with him through fear of incurring the displeasure, persecution, and vengeance of the conspirators. My Maryland Lodge No. 186 of Machinists v. Adt., 59 Atl. 721, 723, 100 Md. 238, 68 L. R. A. 752 (quoting 8 Cyc. p. 639). Branson v. Industrial Workers of the World, 95 Pac. 354, 360, 30 Nev. 270.

Combinations formed for the purpose of interfering otherwise than by lawful complication with the business affairs of others and depriving them by threats and intimidation of the right to conduct the business in which they are engaged according to their own ideas are usually termed "boycotts." Rocky Mountain Bell Telephone Co. v. Montana Federation of Labor, 156 Fed. 809, 818.

A conspiracy to "boycott" is a confederation, generally secret, of many persons, whose intent is to injure another by preventing any and all persons from doing business with him through fear of incurring the displeasure, persecution, and vengeance of the conspirators. Funck v. Farmers' Elevator Co. of Gowrie, 121 N. W. 53, 55, 142 Iowa, 621, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 108 (quoting and adopting the definition in 8 Cyc. p. 639).

A "boycott" may be defined to be a combination of several persons to cause a loss to a third person, by causing others against their will to withdraw from him their beneficial business intercourse, through threats that, unless a compliance with their demands be made, the persons forming the combination will cause loss or injury to him, or an organization formed to exclude a person from business relations with others by persuasion, intimidation, and other acts which tend to violence, and thereby cause him, through fear of resulting injury, to submit to dictation in the management of his affairs. Gray v. Building Trades Council, 97 N. W. 663, 666, 91 Minn. 171, 63 L. R. A. 753, 103 Am. St. Rep. 477, 1 Ann. Cas. 172.

The word "boycott" was first used in an American case in State v. Glidden, 55 Conn. 46, 8 Atl. 890, 3 Am. St. Rep. 23, where the court said that it originated from the efforts of certain Irish tenants to exclude Capt. Boycott from all intercourse with its neighbors because he endeavored lawfully to collect his rents. The court in that case observed: "It seems strange that in this day, and in this free country—a country in which law interferes so little with the liberty of the individual—it should be necessary to announce from the bench that every man may carry on his business as he pleases, may do what he will with his own, so long as he does nothing unlawful and acts with due regard to the rights of others, and that the occasion for such an announcement should not be an attempt by government to interfere with the rights of the citizen, nor by the rich and powerful to oppress the poor, but an attempt by a large body of workmen to control, by means little, if any, better than force, the action of employers." Consolidated Steel & Wire Co. v. Murray, 80 Fed. 811, 819.

A "boycott" may adopt illegal means, and thus become a conspiracy and illegal, in which case injunction lies to restrain it, or a boycott may employ legal means and methods, and be merely a legitimate combination by a number of men to accomplish a legal result, in which case equity will not restrain it. Pierce v. Stablemen's Union, Local No. 8760, 103 Pac. 324, 327, 156 Cal. 70.

Where, pending a labor controversy between complainant and its employes, defendants, as members of unincorporated labor organizations, published notices, viz.: "Organized Labor and Friends: Don't drink scab beer" — and then naming certain different kinds of beer and alleging the same to be "unfair," together with other signs directing organized labor and friends not to use "this beer," and advising that they should guard their health by refusing to drink "unfair beer," which was alleged to include beer manufactured by complainants, such notices amounted to a "boycott," which complainants were entitled to enjoin. Seattle Brewing & Malting Co. v. Hansen, 144 Fed. 1011, 1012.

A "boycott" is an unlawful conspiracy consisting of a combination of several persons whose purpose is to cause a loss to another by causing third persons, through threats of injury to themselves, to cease doing business with him, or an organization formed to exclude one from business relations with others, and such a combination may be restrained by injunction. Baldwin v. Escanaba Liquor

"A 'boycott' means the confederation, generally secret, by many persons, whose intent is to injure another by preventing all persons from doing business with him through fear of incurring the displeasure, persecution, and vengeance of the conspirators." Where an association of retail druggists in a certain city and wholesale druggists formed a combination to maintain a maximum schedule of prices, and in pursuance of the plan refused to sell to plaintiff, a retailer who had refused to join the combination, and coerced and intimidated vendors of like commodities by means of threats to blacklist and boycott such vendors if they sold to plaintiff, whereby such vendors were deterred from selling to plaintiff, the parties to the combination were liable to plaintiff for resulting damages to his business. Klingel's Pharmacy of Baltimore City v. Sharp & Dohme, 64 Atl. 1029, 1032, 104 Md. 218, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 976, 118 Am. St. Rep. 399, 9 Ann. Cas. 1184 (citing 8 Cyc. p. 639.)

"The word 'boycott,' by reason of the circumstances under which it originated, and the extent to which the means used to accomplish the purpose of the parties engaged in it were carried, is commonly supposed to involve unlawful means. The word is defined in Black's Law Dict. p. 150, as follows: 'In criminal law. A conspiracy formed and intended directly or indirectly to prevent the carrying on of any lawful business, or to injure the business of any one by wrongfully preventing those who would be customers from buying anything from or employing the representatives of said business by threats, intimidation, or other forcible means.' In Brace v. Evans, 3 Ry. & Corp. Law J. 561, it is said: 'The word in itself implies a threat in popular acceptance. It is an organized effort to exclude a person from business relations with others by persuasion, intimidation, and other acts which tend to violence and have coerced him, through fear of his own injury, to submit to dictation in the management of his affairs.' In Matthews v. Shankland, 56 N. Y. Supp. 123, 25 Misc. Rep. 604, the term is held to come within the statutory definition of an 'unlawful conspiracy.' For history of the word and definition as adopted by many courts, see Words and Phrases, p. 855." State v. Van Pelt, 49 S. E. 177, 188, 186 N. C. 633, 68 L. R. A. 760, 1 Ann. Cas. 495.

A combination of carpenters, joiners, and others doing carpenter work and labor in the construction of buildings, existing as a labor union, to injure the business of an individual, by intimidating contractors and builders from purchasing and using building materials manufactured by the individual in any building to be constructed by them, by prohibiting their members from working on all buildings in which the materials of the individual are used, is an unlawful combination and conspiracy, and a boycott defined as a combination of several persons to cause a loss to a third person by causing others against their will to withdraw from him their beneficial business intercourse through threats that, unless a compliance with their demands be made, the persons will cause loss or injury to him, authorizing the individual to seek relief by injunction, his remedy at law being inadequate. Lohse Patent Door Co. v. Fuelle, 114 S. W. 997, 1003, 215 Mo. 421, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 607, 128 Am. St. Rep. 492; Charles A. Olcott Planing Mill Co. v. Same (Mo.) 114 S. W. 1018.

The employees of a railroad company, without having any complaint against a Pullman car company or any relation to that company in handling the Pullman cars on railroad trains, for the purpose of compelling the railroad companies to withdraw custom from the Pullman company made threats of quitting the railroad company's service and actually did so. Held, that the acts of the railroad employees constituted a "boycott." Loewe v. California State Federation of Labor, 139 Fed. 71, 82 (quoting and adopting the definition in Thomas v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co., 62 Fed. 803).

"While the courts have invariably upheld the right of individuals to form labor organizations for the protection of the interests of the laboring classes and have denied the power to enjoin the members of such associations from withdrawing peaceably from any service, either singly or in a body, even where such withdrawal involves a breach of contract, yet they have generally condemned those combinations usually termed 'boycotts,' which are formed for the purpose of interfering otherwise than by lawful competition with the business affairs of others and depriving them by means of threats and intimidation of the right to conduct the business in which they happen to be engaged according to the dictates of their own judgment." Union Pac. R. Co. v. Ruef, 120 Fed. 102, 111 (quoting and adopting Hopkins v. Oxley Stave Co., 23 Fed. 912, 28 C. C. A. 99).

An organized attempt to induce the public to refrain from purchasing the products of a manufacturer and deprive him of a part of his trade, commonly called "boycotting," the object being to compel the manufacturer to unionize his business and to submit its conduct to the regulation of a labor union, is an irreparable injury to his property which equity will enjoin. George Jonas Glass Co. v. Glass Bottle Blowers' Ass'n of United States & Canada, 66 Atl. 953, 958, 72 N. J. Eq. 653.

A newspaper article asserting that a citizen and resident of France, who by virtue of a contract with an opera company of New York to secure engagements for opera singers had an absolute monopoly of the engagement of French artists for the company, that no one could be engaged unless he acted as intermediary; that he was an autocrat, and held up contracts and boycotted the best singers, and commenting unfavorably on such a method of doing business, was not libelous; the word "boycott," not referring to the offense denounced by Penal Law (Consol. Laws N. Y. 1909, c. 40) § 580, but only referring to his failure to submit for engagement artists whom he did not approve. Astruc v. Star Co., 193 Fed. 631, 632, 113 C. C. A. 499, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 79.

A "boycott" is a combination to cause a loss to one person by coercing others, against their will, to withdraw from him their beneficial business intercourse, by threats that unless they do so the combination will cause similar loss to them, or by the use of such means as will inflict bodily harm on them, or such intimidation as will put them in fear of bodily harm. Intimidation and coercion are essential elements of a boycott, and the means used must be threatening and intended to overcome the will of others and compel them to do or refrain from doing that which they would or would not otherwise have done. Meler v. Speer, 132 S. W. 988, 991, 96 Ark. 618, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 792.

The verb "to boycott" does not necessarily signify that the doers employ violence, intimidation, or other unlawful coercive means, but it may be correctly used in the sense of the act of a combination in refusing to have business dealings with another until he removes or ameliorates conditions which are deemed inimical to the welfare of the members of the combination, or some of them, or grants concessions, which are deemed to be made for that purpose. Butterick Pub. Co. v. Typographical Union No. 6, 100 N. Y. Supp. 292, 298, 50 Misc. Rep. 1 (quoting Mills v. United States Printing Co., 91 N. Y. Supp. 189, 99 App. Div. 605); Lindsay & Co. v. Montana Federation of Labor, 96 Pac. 127, 130, 37 Mont. 264, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 707, 127 Am. St. Rep. 722.

"A 'boycott' is not unlawful unless attended by some act which in itself is illegal." To "boycott" does not necessarily signify that the doers employed violence, intimidation, or other unlawful coercive means, but it may be correctly used in the sense of the act of a combination, in refusing to have business dealings with another until he removes or ameliorates the conditions which are deemed inimical to the welfare of the members of the combination or some of them, or grants concessions which are deemed to make for that purpose, and as such a combination may be formed and held together by argument, persuasion, or by entreaty, or by the "touch of nature," and may accomplish its purpose without violence or other means, it cannot be said that to "boycott" is to offend the law. An injunction against boycotting without qualification is therefore too broad, as in so far as boycotting is mere abstention, it is not unlawful per se. Mills v. United States Printing Co., 91 N. Y. Supp. 185, 189, 99 App. Div. 605 (quoting and adopting definition of Bouvier, citing Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Hollis, 55 N. W. 1119, 54 Minn. 223, 21 L. R. A. 337, 40 Am. St. Rep. 319; Sinsheimer v. United Garment Workers of America, 28 N. Y. Supp. 321, 77 Hun. 215; Cook, Trade & Labor Comb. § 9; Tiedemann, State & Federal Control of Persons & Property, p. 440; Bowen v. Matheson [Mass.] 14 Allen, 499).

The object of a "boycott" being to inflict injury upon another, a strike called by union workmen to compel the employer to discharge nonunion men is not a "boycott"; the purpose of the strike being not to injure nonunion employes but to protect the union. Kemp v. Division No. 241, Amalgamated Ass'n of Street & Electric Ry. Employes of America, 99 N. E. 389, 397, 255 Ill. 213.

BRACE

In the excavation of a trench, that portion of the earth left undisturbed so as to form a "brace" or support for the sides. Finegan v. Moore, 46 N. J. Law, 602, 603.

The word "braces" in common parlance, applied to men's wear, is synonymous with suspenders. Charles R. De Bevoise Co. v. H. & W. Co., 60 Atl. 407, 408, 69 N. J. Eq. 114.

BRAID

See Silk Braid.

"Braid" is defined in the Standard Dictionary as "a narrow, flat tape or woven strip, for binding the edges of fabrics, or for ornamenting them." A. Steinhart & Bro. v. United States, 121 Fed. 442, 443.

Featherstitch braids, so called, which are not producing by braiding, but by a process of weaving, but which are known commercially as braids, are within the provision for "braids" in paragraph 339, Schedule J, § 1, c. 11, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. 181. Vom Baur v. United States, 141 Fed. 439, 444.

Under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, 30 Stat. 151, 181, enacted when cotton featherstitched braids were generally known to the wholesale trade of the United States as "feather braids" and assessed as braids, such goods are properly assessed at 60 per centum as "braids" under the trimming schedule, par. 339, including embroideries, and all trimmings, composed wholly or in chief value of cotton, flax or other vegetable fiber, and not elsewhere provided for in this act; and not at 45 per centum as bindings under the notions schedule, par. 320. United States v. Baruch, 32 Sup. Ct. 806, 223 U. S. 191, 194, 56 L. Ed. 399; Baruch v. United States, 159 Fed. 294, 295.

Braids composed of straw

Braids composed in chief value, but not wholly of straw, were "braids * * * composed of straw," within the meaning of Tariff Act Oct. 1, 1890, c. 1244, § 2, Free List, par. 518, 26 Stat. 604. United States v. Rheims, 154 Fed. 865, 866.

BRAKE

See Emergency Brake; Service Brake.

A request to charge that defendant's servants, at the time they moved the car that injured plaintiff, were entitled to presume that the car was properly equipped with a brake, unless the jury believed that defendant knew to the contrary, and that by a "brake" was meant such a brake as is usually and customarily supplied as a part of the equipment of an ordinary freight car of the kind and character disclosed by the evidence, was substantially covered by an instruction given that defendant could presume that the car was properly equipped with a brake unless the jury believed that defendant actually knew the contrary, or by the exercise of ordinary care would have known the contrary, and that by "brake" was meant such a brake as was usually and customarily supplied as a part of the equipment of an ordinary freight car of the kind and character disclosed by the evidence. Moudy v. St. Louis Dressed Beef & Provision Co., 130 S. W. 476, 480, 149 Mo. App. 413.

Though the evidence in an action for injury to a passenger from the slipping of a work train against a passenger train was that the work train was equipped with a Westinghouse brake and machinery, as well as with a steam brake, the instruction as to defendant being negligent if the train could not be held on the track by its "brakes" is not open to the criticism that with "brakes" should be included "braking appliances and machinery"; the term "brakes," as ordinarily understood, including all the mechanism employed to control the motion of the train, and the jury undoubtedly having so understood it. Valenti v. Sierra R. Co., 111 Pac. 95, 97, 158 Cal. 412.

A "brake rod" is an iron rod connecting the brakes of a railroad car with the air apparatus on the car; such rod being about twelve feet long and three-fourths of an inch in diameter. Kentucky & I. Bridge & R. Co. v. Moran, 80 N. E. 536, 169 Ind. 18.

"Bran" is a product from grinding wheat. German Fire Ins. Co. of Peoria v. Walker (Tex.) 146 S. W. 606, 607.

BRANCH

See Connecting Branch.

The term "branch," as used in a statute providing that every person in the employ of a railroad company having charge or control of employes in any separate "branch or department" shall be held to be the superior and not fellow servants of employes in any other branch or department, etc., evidently refers to the small divisions which separate the employes from one another while at work, and in this sense a train is a separate branch or department. Kane v. Erie R. Co., 142 Fed. 682, 685, 73 C. C. A. 672.

Branch bank

Sess. Laws 1907, p. 519, c. 225, § 6, defining the term "bank," as used in that act, to mean every corporation, domestic or foreign, except national banks and foreign banks not authorized to receive deposits, transacting a banking business in the state, makes it apparent, by including foreign banks transacting business in the state in the definition of the term "bank," that the term "branch bank" defined in the same section means a branch established in a town or city other than that in which the principal office is located, and refers to branches of domestic banking corporations only, and not to branches of foreign banking corporations. State ex rel. Flumerfelt v. Engle, 96 Pac. 1045, 1046, 50 Wash. 207.

Branch of state government

The state board of agriculture created by Laws 1899, p. 208, and consisting of five citizens of the state named by the Governor with power to organize by electing officers, and charged with the exclusive management and control of the state agricultural society and having possession and care of its property and intrusted with the direction of its entire business and financial affairs, and being required to provide for an annual fair, the state not to be liable for premiums awarded or debts created beyond the amount actually appropriated, is a corporation, but not a "branch of the state government." Tongue v. State Board of Agriculture, 105 Pac. 250, 251, 55 Or. 61.

BRANCH OFFICE MANAGER

As workman, see Workman.

BRANCH RAILROAD

"A 'branch road,' as applied to railroads, denotes a road, connected, indeed, with the main line, but not a mere incident of it, or constructed simply to facilitate the business of the chief railway, but designed to have a business of its own, for the transportation of persons and property to and from places not reached by the principal road." Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Lynchburg Cotton Mill Co., 56 S. E. 146, 147, 106 Va. 376.

An approach to the Ohio River bridge of the Illinois Central Railroad, consisting of the tracks leading to the bridge and the embankment and steel structure upon which they rest, used in connection with its charter lines to connect with the Mobile & Ohio Railroad, is not a "branch or lateral line," but a switch or side track which it is empowered to acquire by section 1 of its charter (Acts Feb. 10, 1851, § 1 [Priv. Laws 1851, p. 61]), as needful to carry into effect its purposes, and falls within sections 18 and 22, imposing a tax on gross receipts and exempting its charter lines from other taxation. State Board of Equalization v. People, 82 N. E. 824, 334, 229 Ill. 430.

BRAND

See Misbrand—Misbranding.

The word "brand" derivatively has reference to burning, and in many cases signifies a distinctive mark placed on objects by a hot iron. The verb has been judicially defined as meaning to stamp or to mark, as by a stencil, plat, or chisel, and the noun as indicating some figure or device burned on an animal by a hot iron (citing 1 Words and Phrases Judicially Defined, 858). Pollock v. Kansas City, 123 Pac. 985, 986, 87 Kan. 205, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 465.

"Branding" has become a recognized mode of marking animals so that the owners may recognize them, and consists of indelible marks on the hide of the animals. State v. Wolfley, 89 Pac. 1046, 1047, 75 Kan. 406, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 87, 12 Ann. Cas. 412.

BRANDISHING

The act of decedent in "brandishing" an ax does not necessarily show that he was about to use it on defendant, or that defendant was in imminent peril or had reason to believe that he was in great peril so as to render the killing an act of self-defense. Patterson v. State, 41 South. 157, 159, 146 Ala. 89.

BRANDY

As intoxicating liquor, see Intoxicating Liquor.

Cider is not "brandy" or any mixture thereof. Donithan v. Commonwealth, 64 S. E. 1050, 109 Va. 845.

BRASS

See Old Brass.

BRASSIERE

The French word "brassiere," which means simply "brace," as applied to an article of women's wear, but includes the idea of "restraint" and "to be under constraint," is not subject to exclusive appropriation as a trade-mark for a combined corset cover and bust supporter, even by a manufacturer first so using it in the United States. Charles R. De Bevoise Co. v. H. & W. Co., 60 Atl. 407, 408, 69 N. J. Eq. 114.

BREACH

See Prison Breach.

BREACH OF CONTRACT

Expenses on breach of contract, see Expenses.

Dissolution of a contractual relation by an adjudication in bankruptcy, is a "breach of the contract" for which a claim for damages may be allowed in bankruptcy. Watson v. Merrill, 186 Fed. 359, 360, 69 C. C. A. 185, 69 L. R. A. 719.

Technical violations of a building contract, which the contractor corrects on his attention being called thereto, are not "breaches," within the contractor's bond requiring notice to the surety of breaches of the building contract. Lazelle v. Empire State Surety Co., 109 Pac. 195, 196, 58 Wash. 589.

Where a proviso in a bond limits the right to bring suit thereon to a period of six months after the first breach of the contract secured, the breach of the contract referred to is a breach creating liability on the bond. Fitger Brewing Co. v. American Bonding Co. of Baltimore, 131 N. W. 1067, 1069, 115 Minn. 78.

Where defendant obtained the confidence of prosecutor by representing that he would engage in a contemplated real estate business with prosecutor as his partner in another city, and by reason of the confidence so inspired induced prosecutor to pay money to M. for the purchase of certain city lots, and defendant had not intended to engage in the business at all, but falsely pretended he would do so to induce prosecutor to pay his money for the lots, which were of little or no value, defendant was guilty of obtaining money by the "confidence game," and not of a mere "breach of a civil contract." Chilson v. People, 79 N. E. 934, 936, 224 Ill. 535 (citing Maxwell v. People, 41 N. E. 995, 158 Ill. 248; Du Bois v. People, 65 N. E. 658, 200 Ill. 157, 93 Am. St. Rep. 183; Hughes v. People, 79 N. E. 187, 223 Ill. 417).

The dividing line between "breaches of contract" and "torts" is often dim and uncertain. There is no definition of either class of defaults which is universally accurate or acceptable. In a general way, a "tort" is distinguished for a "breach of contract" in that the latter arises under an agreement of the parties; whereas, the tort ordinarily is a violation of a duty fixed by law independent of contract or the will of the parties, although it may sometimes have relation to obligations growing out of or coincident with the contract, and frequently the same facts will sustain either class of action. A complaint alleging that plaintiff became a passenger of defendant, to be carried on one of its cars, and, in consideration of five cents paid, defendant agreed "safely to carry" plaintiff, and "to treat him properly and carefully," and that, after he had passed onto a platform at a station to take a train, defendant, through its employes, in violation "of the terms of said contract," assaulted him, states a cause of action for "breach of contract," and not in "tort." Busch v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 80 N. E. 197, 198, 187 N. Y. 388, 10 Ann. Cas. 460 (citing Rich v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 87 N. Y. 382, 390).

BREACH OF COVENANT

A judgment in partition against covenantee is a sufficient eviction to constitute a breach of the covenant of seisin, and the purchase of the outstanding title by covenantee, after resistance in good faith, in no wise affects the sufficiency of the eviction. Brooks v. Mohl, 116 N. W. 931, 104 Minn. 404, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1195, 124 Am. St. Rep. 629.

BREACH OF DUTY

In an action arising out of the alleged negligence of a street railway company in a collision with plaintiff's milk wagon, a "breach of duty" is a failure to exercise, in conduct liable to be dangerous to others, that care which a man of ordinary prudence would exercise under the particular circumstances. The state regards certain acts as so liable to injure others as to justify their absolute prohibition. In such cases the doing of the forbidden act is a breach of duty in respect to those who may be injured thereby. The cause of action which arises on an injury resulting from a breach of duty in respect to the party injured in neglecting to use that care which the law requires, under the particular circumstances of the case, for the protection of those liable to be injured by such neglect, is the same as the cause of action arising upon an injury resulting from a breach of duty in respect to the person injured in doing an act forbidden by statute for the protection of those liable to be injured by such act. The main distinction lies only in the method of proof. In the former case the breach of duty must be established by showing a want of care under all the circumstances, while in the latter it may be established by showing the commission of the illegal act. In both two questions are presented: (1) Was there a breach of duty to any one liable to be injured by the conduct proved? and (2) was this breach of duty a proximate cause of the injury alleged? Munroe v. Hartford St. Ry. Co., 56 Atl. 498, 500, 76 Conn. 201.

BREACH OF MARRIAGE PROMISE

As personal injury, see Personal Injury.

BREACH OF PENAL LAWS

Const. art. 9, pt. 2, § 4, providing for the application of fines collected for any breach of the penal laws to the support of the common schools, has no application to a fine imposed for violation of an injunction; such fine not being imposed for a "breach of the penal laws." Gunn v. Mahaska County (Iowa) 136 N. W. 929, 931.

BREACH OF THE PEACE

See Tending to a Breach of the Peace; Treason, Felony, and Breach of the Peace.

A "breach of the peace" is an offense well known to the common-law. It is a disturbance of public order by an act of violence, or by an act likely to produce violence, or which, by causing consternation and alarm, disturbs the peace and quiet of the community. People v. Most, 64 N. E. 175, 177, 171 N. Y. 423, 58 L. R. A. 509 (citing Barb. Crim. Law, 219; Archb. Crim. Prac. 91; Bish. Crim. Law, § 533; Clark & M. Crimes, 983; McLean, Crim. Law, § 1012).

By "peace" is meant the tranquillity enjoyed by the citizens of a municipality or community where good order reigns among its members. It is the natural right among all persons in a political society, and any intentional violation of that right is a "breach of the peace." Town of Neola v. Reichart, 100 N. W. 5, 6, 131 Iowa, 492.

The term "breach of the peace" is generic, and includes all violations of public peace or order, or acts tending to the disturbance thereof, a definition broad enough to include the statutory offense "the disturbance of the peace." State v. Clark, 63 S. E. 402, 408, 64 W. Va. 625.

A breach of the peace is a violation of public order or decorum; the offense of disturbing the public peace. By "peace" is meant the tranquillity enjoyed by the citizens of a municipality or community, where good order reigns among its members. Under Snyder's Comp. Laws, § 2782, providing for the punishment of any one who grossly disturbs the public peace, whooping and yelling and uttering loud language are acts prohibited if they disturb the public peace. Stewart v. State, 109 Pac. 243, 245, 4 Okl. Cr. 564, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 505.

A "breach of the peace" is a common-law offense. The term is generic and includes all violations of public peace or order or acts tending to the disturbance thereof. The offense may consist of acts of public turbulence or indecorum in violation of the common peace and quiet or an invasion of the security and protection which the law affords every citizen, or of acts such as tend to excite violent resentment. Actual personal violence is not an element in the offense; but, where the incitement of terror or fear of personal violence is a necessary element, the conduct or language of the wrongdoer must be of a character to induce such condition in a person of ordinary firmness. The "breach of the peace" may therefore consist of one act or of several acts, and the fact that accused are charged with having violated several express statutes, for any one of which violations they might have been punished, affords them no relief from prosecution for a breach of the peace. King v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 105 S. W. 419 (quoting 5 Cyc. 102).

The unlawful striking of one with a hard substance is an assault and battery, but not a disturbance of his peace and quiet within Mansfield's Dig. § 1800, providing punishment for a breach of the peace. Miles v. United States, 103 S. W. 598, 599, 7 Ind. T. 11.

The firing of pistol shots in a public street of a town at night near to private residences is an "offense against the public peace," within Pen. Code 1895, art. 334, providing that, if any person shall go into any public place and rudely display a pistol or any deadly weapon in a manner calculated to disturb the inhabitants of such public place or private house, he shall be fined, etc. King v. Brown, 94 S. W. 328, 329, 100 Tex. 109.

"An offense against the public peace may consist either of an actual 'breach of the peace,' or doing that which tends to provoke or excite others to do it. Within the latter fall all acts and attempts to produce disorder by written or oral communications, for the purpose of generally weakening those religious and moral restraints, without the aid of which mere legislative provisions would prove ineffectual." This doctrine justifies an act punishing the desecration of the national flag as a valid exercise of the police power of the state. Halter v. State, 105 N. W. 298, 300, 74 Neb. 757, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1079, 121 Am. St. Rep. 754 (quoting and adopting definition in Updegraph v. Commonwealth [Pa.] 11 Serg. & R. 406).

A charivari at a house occupied by a newly wedded couple, consisting of the ringing of bells, blowing of horns, and shouting, was not a "breach of the peace," where it was not shown that citizens not participating were in fact disturbed, and where the bridegroom regarded it as a compliment, and paid money to the performers on their agreeing to give more of the "music." City of St. Charles v. Meyer, 58 Mo. 86, 89.

A large number of persons, many of them newspaper reporters, gathered in front of defendant's house, under the belief that a certain person was concealed therein, and, although told that such person was not there, continued conversing in loud tones, and, on defendant approaching his residence, surrounded his cab, while efforts were made to snap a camera at him, so that it was impossible for him to alight; the conditions became worse, until it was necessary for a policeman to drive persons off the sidewalk, and later, on defendant leaving his house, with others, attempts were made to take his photograph, a crowd gathering around, who, when told that the person sought was not in the house and that they must disperse, jeered; plaintiff, one of the reporters, laughing with the rest. Held, that these acts constituted conduct tending to a breach of the peace, within Consolidation Act (Laws 1882, p. 366, c. 410) § 1458, preserved by Greater New York Charter, providing that every person shall be deemed guilty of disorderly conduct "who shall use any threatening, abusive or insulting behavior with intent to provoke a breach of the peace or whereby a breach of the peace may be occasioned"; and an action for malicious prosecution would not lie against defendant for procuring plaintiff's arrest under such circumstances, as being without probable cause. Deering v. Gebhard, 108 N. Y. Supp. 715, 718, 57 Misc. Rep. 451.

BREACH OF TRUST

In Pom. Eq. Juris. § 1079, it is said: "It might be supposed that the term 'breach of trust' was confined to willful and fraudulent acts which have a quasi criminal character, even if they have not been made actual crimes by statute. The term has, however, a broader and more technical meaning. It is well settled that every violation by a trustee of a duty which equity lays upon him, whether willful and fraudulent or done through negligence or arising through mere oversight or forgetfulness, is a breach of duty. Cominger v. Louisville Trust Co., 108 S. W. 950, 954, 128 Ky. 697, 129 Am. St. Rep. 322.

BREAK

BREAK AND DESTROY

Under an act which makes it an offense to maliciously break, destroy, or injure the door of any shop or building, the property of another, the words "break" or "destroy" mean to destroy the completeness of anything; and defendant who forced open a back door fastened by a bolt upon the door and a socket which held the bolt in the casing of the door frame, the socket coming out and the door opening without injury to it, was guilty of no offense under the statute. State v. McBeth, 31 Pac. 145, 49 Kan. 584.

BREAK GROUND

"Break ground," as applied to a contract, of affreightment, means that the vessel shall enter on the voyage named and begin the carriage of goods shipped as a condition of the vessel's right to claim freight money, unless the shipper undertakes to reclaim the goods; the vessel remaining ready to enter on the voyage. The Norman Prince, 185 Fed. 169, 171 (quoting The Tornado, 2 Sup. Ct. 746, 108 U. S. 342, 27 L. Ed. 747).

BREAKAGE

"Breakage" covers damage to glass. Hecht v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 113 N. W. 68, 182 Wis. 605.

BREAKER

A "breaker," used with reference to the operation of a street car, means that part where the power is cut off, or a separation between the channel works. O'Donnell v. Interurban St. Ry. Co., 88 N. Y. Supp. 1016, 1017.

BREAKING

The breaking of plaintiff's close was complete so as to support trespass, when defendant, making an unlawful entry, stepped across the imaginary line which divided the lot on which plaintiff's house stood from the street. Moore v. Duke, 80 Atl. 194, 196, 84 Vt. 401.

BREAKING (In Criminal Law)

See Housebreaking; Jail Breaking.

The verb to "break," as used in an accusation of burglary, implies force. Parnell v. State, 110 S. W. 1036, 1037, 86 Ark. 241 (adopting a statement in Shotwell v. State, 43 Ark. 845).

As used in a statute defining burglary, the word "breaking" has a well-known and definite meaning at common law; and in order to constitute it the action of the person accused must have been such as would, without additional effort, have made an entry possible. Gaddie v. Commonwealth, 78 S. W. 162, 163, 117 Ky. 468, 111 Am. St. Rep. 259.

In a trial for burglary that the court in defining burglary gave the statutory definition was not error, where, in a charge applicable to defendant, it instructed that by the term "breaking" was meant that the entry must be made with actual force, and that, as the burglary was alleged to have taken place in the daytime, the jury must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the entry was made by force in the daytime, or they could not convict. Kinhead v. State, 135 S. W. 573, 574, 61 Tex. Cr. R. 651.

A person may be convicted of breaking with attempt to commit larceny, where it appears that he broke a transom window of a store in the nighttime with attempt to feloniously enter the store, but before he succeeded in making the entry was discovered and fled. Commonwealth v. Flaherty, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 490, 491.

White's Ann. Pen. Code, art. 838, provides that burglary is committed by entering a house by force, threats, or fraud at night, or in like manner by entering a house during the day and remaining concealed there till night, with the intent of committing a felony or the crime of theft. Article 841 declares that the entry is not confined to the entrance of the whole body, but may consist of the entry of any part for the purpose of committing a felony, and article 842 defines the term "breaking" to mean an entry by actual force, such as the introduction of the hand or any instrument to draw out the property through an aperture made by the offender for that purpose. Held, that where defendant broke a glass of a store window in which certain shoes were displayed, but he was arrested before he abstracted any of the shoes therefrom, he was guilty of an attempt to commit burglary, regardless of the value of the property in the store. Mason v. State (Tex.) 100 S. W. 383.

One who attempts to secretly enter a store which is still open for business, by the regular door but with the intention to commit a felony therein, is guilty of "breaking and entering," within the purview of Rev. St. c. 155, § 11, providing that if any person, with intent to commit a felony, shall attempt to break and enter into a shop, he shall be punished by imprisonment in the state prison. State v. Newbegin, 25 Me. 500, 502.

The offense of "breaking" into a dwelling house is akin to the crime of burglary, having most of the elements of the latter except that it need not be in the nighttime. It is held without exception that any force applied to effect the entry is sufficient to constitute that part of the offense. Both burglary and housebreaking are offenses against the security of the habitation, and it is the possession that must be invaded to constitute a breach of the statute. Where a laborer occupying a house with the owner while on leave of absence obtained the key ostensibly to take away some of his clothing, but with intent to steal property therefrom, and did so enter and steal, he was guilty of "housebreaking" under Ky. St. 1903, § 1162, providing that, if any person shall break any dwelling house and take anything of value, though the owner or any person may not be there, he shall be punished, etc. Young v. Commonwealth, 104 S. W. 266, 267, 126 Ky. 474, 128 Am. St. Rep. 326, 15 Ann. Cas. 1022.

The prying off of a window shutter over a window of a store without opening or breaking the window, and the cutting of an inch-square hole through the door of the store too far from the latch to permit the use of an instrument to unfasten the door, did not constitute a "breaking and entering" sufficient to sustain a charge of burglary under Kirby's Dig. § 1605, providing that a burglary is committed by breaking or entering the house of another in the nighttime, with intent to commit a felony, and section 1604, declaring that the manner of breaking or entering is not material further than to show intent. This section does not change the rule of the common law that such breaking was any disrupting or separating of material substances in any inclosing part of a dwelling house, whereby the entry of a person, arm, or any physical thing capable of working a felony therein may be accomplished. Anderson v. State, 104 S. W. 1096, 1097, 84 Ark. 54.

Where one opens from the outside a bolted window of a dwelling house and enters the house, except as to his legs, and is then prevented from further entering, there is a "breaking and entering," within the statute defining burglary. White v. State, 67 S. E. 705, 7 Ga. App. 596.

Entering open door or window

Entering a house by crawling through an open window is not a "breaking" so as to constitute house breaking. Smith v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 128 S. W. 68, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1023 (quoting and adopting definition in Bishop, Statutory Crimes, § 312; 2 Bish. New Crim. Law, § 92; Rose v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 40 S. W. 245).

The term "breaking" required by Pen. Code, art. 839, to constitute burglary, refers to breaking in the daytime, so that the removal of money from a house in the daytime through a window found open is not burglary. Winkler v. State, 126 S. W. 1134, 1137, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 564.

Where one of the windows in the house which defendant entered in the nighttime had been left up from the bottom, leaving an aperture which was not large enough for a man to enter, and defendant increased the same by raising the window and thereby effecting an entrance, such act constituted a sufficient "breaking" to sustain a conviction of burglary. Claiborne v. State, 83 S. W. 352, 353, 113 Tenn. 261, 68 L. R. A. 859, 106 Am. St. Rep. 833 (citing State v. Connors, 64 N. W. 295, 95 Iowa, 485; Webb v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 85 S. W. 1038; Knotts v. State (Tex.) 32 S. W. 532; Miller v. State, 77 Ala. 41; Donohoo v. State, 86 Ala. 281; State v. Willis, 52 N. C. 190; State v. Powell, 58 Pac. 968, 61 Kan. 81; Rex v. Russell, 2 Eng. Cr. Cas. 377; King v. Hymans, 7 Car. & P. 441; King v. Hall, Russ. & R. 451; People v. Dupree, 56 N. W. 1046, 98 Mich. 26; Bass v. State 69 Tenn. [1 Lea] 444; People v. White, 117 N. W. 161, 162, 153 Mich. 617, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1102, 15 Ann. Cas. 927.

Penal Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 40) § 400, defines the word "break" as breaking or violently detaching any part, internal or external, of a building, opening any outer door of a building, or any window, shutter, scuttle, or other thing closing an opening, or obtaining an entrance by or through any pipe, chimney, or other opening. Held, that the admission that accused in the nighttime without invitation, right, or lawful occasion entered the dwelling of another and therein committed an offense was sufficient to sustain a conviction of burglary in the first degree, notwithstanding he testified that he entered by a basement gate, ash hoist, and cellar door, all of which he found open. People ex rel. Hubert v. Kaiser, 135 N. Y. Supp. 274, 280, 150 App. Div. 541.

Where any force at all is necessary to effect an entrance into a building through any place of ingress, usual or unusual, whether open, partly open, or closed, such entrance is a "breaking," sufficient in law to constitute burglary, if the other elements of the offense are present. People v. White, 117 N. W. 161, 162, 153 Mich. 617, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1102, 15 Ann. Cas. 927.

Under an indictment based upon Act Gen. Assem. March 20, 1905 (23 Del. Laws, c. 206), the "breaking" which must be proved does not necessarily mean the breaking of a lock or fastening, as there would be a breaking if the car, while not locked, was pushed open and entered; but where the door of the car is already open, and there is an entrance without interfering with the door, there is no breaking. State v. Davenport (Del.) 77 Atl. 967, 968.

Pen. Code 1895, art. 838, defines burglary as "entering a house by force, threats or fraud at night * * * with the intent * * * of committing a felony or the crime of theft." Article 841 declares that the entry is not confined to the entrance of the whole body, but may consist of the entry of any part for the purpose of committing a felony. Article 842 declares that the slightest force is sufficient to constitute breaking, such as the introduction of the hand or any instrument to draw out the property through an aperture made by the offender for that purpose. Held that, under article 842, if the glass in a door through which accused thrust his arm was already broken, he would not commit burglary by inserting his hand or arm, even for the purpose of committing theft. Jones v. State, 87 S. W. 1157, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 336.

Opening door or window

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1159, subd. 1, making every person guilty of forcible entry who by "breaking open" doors, windows, or other parts of a house, enters upon or into any real property, the meaning of the provision is that opening of a closed door or window, involving the use of force, is to be regarded as "breaking open" the door or window or house, as this was the construction given to the term "break" as entering into the common-law definition of burglary. Winchester v. Becker, 88 Pac. 296, 297, 4 Cal. App. 382 (citing Abbott's Law Dict. and Webster's Dict., and Pen. Code, § 461, as originally enacted, and Act Feb. 27, 1864, Stat. 1863-64, p. 104, c. 114).

Entering a house by moving the bolt of the door, or raising the latch, is a "breaking" within the definition of burglary. State v. Woods, 38 S. W. 722, 723, 137 Mo. 6 (citing State v. Tutt, 63 Mo. 595; State v. Moore, 22 S. W. 1086, 117 Mo. 395).

Where a door of a building is so nearly closed that one may not enter through the opening into the building without pushing the door further open, such pushing constitutes a breaking within the law of burglary, State v. Sorenson (Iowa) 138 N. W. 411, 414.

The opening of a door, though it may not be latched or fastened, and effecting an entrance therein, is a "breaking," within the law relating to burglary. Bloodworth v. State, 70 S. E. 892, 9 Ga. App. 161.

Unbuttoning the outside door of a chicken house and removing the slat fastening the inner door constitute a "breaking," within the meaning of the term as used in a statute defining burglary. State v. Helms, 78 S. W. 592, 594, 179 Mo. 280.

A "breaking," to constitute burglary, may consist in anything by which any obstruction to entering the building by the body is removed. So, if a person unlocks or unlatches a door and walks in, or if a door has no latch or lock on it and the door is pushed open and a person goes in, that is a sufficient breaking in the law. State v. Vierck, 120 N. W. 1098, 1101, 23 S. D. 166, 139 Am. St. Rep. 1040.

Under Pen. Code, §§ 498, 499, making one who with intent to commit a crime therein breaks and enters a building guilty of burglary, and defining the word "break" as opening for the purpose of entering by any means whatever any door of a building, or to any apartment therein, persons who opened an unlocked door to a store and who assaulted the clerks in the store and threatened them with violence and tied them, and who carried away merchandise, are guilty of burglary. Rosenthal v. American Bonding Co. of Baltimore, 128 N. Y. Supp. 553, 555, 143 App. Div. 362.

Where a door of a house which is fully closed or a window which is completely closed is pulled open with no greater degree of force than is necessary to accomplish the opening, it is a sufficient breaking within the statute as to burglary. Scott v. State, 50 S. E. 49, 122 Ga. 138.

Raising the latch of the door of a chicken house, and opening the door, thereby effecting an entrance, is a sufficient "breaking," if done with a felonious intent, and accompanied by the taking of chickens. Abrams v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 85 S. W. 173, 174.

On a trial for burglary, the court charged that under the evidence there was a breaking by some one of the four parties mentioned; that the word "breaking" had a technical meaning, that "unfastening" anything constituted a "breaking"; that, where anything was shut up, if opened by another person, that constituted a breaking; and so, "under the evidence in this case," etc. The court further charged that if one, who was with defendant at the time, had the charge of the premises, and a right to enter the corncrib and chicken coop, there was no burglary; and that, if defendant had good reason to believe that such one had charge of the property and could dispose of it as he pleased, defendant would not be guilty of burglary. Held, that the charge must have been understood by the jury to mean that proof of the opening of the doors, which was undisputed, was sufficient to constitute an actual breaking, and, so understood, the charge was not subject to criticism. People v. Evans, 114 N. W. 223, 224, 150 Mich. 443.

Under an act which provides that any person convicted of "breaking" and entering in the nighttime any warehouse or other building, in which any merchandise shall be kept, with intent to steal or commit any felony therein, shall be guilty of burglary in the second degree, the lifting of a latch of a closed door of a granary, and the pushing open of the door with the intent expressed in the statute, is a sufficient "breaking" to constitute burglary. State v. Groning, 5 Pac. 446, 447, 33 Kan. 18.

The term "breaking," as used in statutes providing that every person breaking into and entering in the nighttime the building or house of another, in which there shall be some human being, with intent to commit a felony, or any larceny therein, by forcibly bursting or breaking the wall or any outer door, etc., shall be guilty of burglary in the first degree, and providing that the same offense if committed in the daytime is burglary in the second degree, does not require that there be a greater degree of force in the "breaking" of an outer door than is ordinarily necessary to constitute a "breaking" in the crime of burglary; "the addition of the term 'forcible' only expressing what was implied by the term 'breaking' at common law. Pushing open a closed door constitutes an actual 'breaking.' To break a door it is not necessary to injure the door or its fastenings." An information, in a prosecution for burglary with intent to commit rape, that defendant in the daytime did break into a dwelling house "by forcibly pulling open a closed outer door" sufficiently charges the offense of burglary in the second degree. State v. Moon, 64 Pac. 609, 611, 62 Kan. 801 (citing and adopting Ducher v. State, 18 Ohio, 308, 316, 317; State v. Connors, 95 Iowa, 485, 64 N. W. 295).

A charge that to constitute burglary, where the indictment, as in the present case, does not specifically allege the offense was committed either in the day or night time, the evidence must show to the jury's satisfaction beyond a reasonable doubt that entry was effected by breaking—that is, by actual force applied to the building itself—the slightest force, however, applied to the building, being sufficient to constitute a breaking, such as lifting or unfastening the latch of a door shut and fastened by means of such lock, or by any other actual force applied to the building, was simply a definition of a “breaking,” in view of a charge, immediately afterwards given, that, “bearing in mind the foregoing definition, if” the jury believe accused by force in the nighttime, and by breaking, did enter the house as charged in the indictment, etc., and was not on weight of evidence. Montgomery v. State, 116 S. W. 1160, 1162, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 502.

Opening screen or curtain

If a screen door is kept closed by means of hinges and springs in such manner that some force is necessary to open the door, an opening by using such force is a sufficient “breaking” to constitute burglary. State v. Henderson, 110 S. W. 1078, 1079, 212 Mo. 208, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1100, 15 Ann. Cas. 930 (citing State v. Tutt, 63 Mo. loc. cit. 600; State v. Hecox, 88 Mo. loc. cit. 538; Dennis v. People, 27 Mich. 151).

Entering a room through a transom by tearing away a curtain is a sufficient breaking to justify a conviction of burglary. Holland v. State, 85 S. W. 798, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 623.

One who entered a store by opening an unfastened screen door, so securely fitted that the use of some strength was required to open it, and who stole goods therein, is guilty of breaking into a store, within Ky. St. § 1164, punishing the felonious “breaking” into any store with intent to steal. Collins v. Commonwealth, 143 S. W. 35, 36, 146 Ky. 698, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 769.

BREAKING OF A LEG

An insurance certificate entitling the insured to a certain benefit in case of the “breaking of a leg,” and defining the breaking of a leg as “the breaking of the shaft of the thigh bone between the hip and knee joints, or the breaking of the shafts of both bones between the knee and ankle joints,” does not cover what is known to the medical profession as a Pott’s fracture. Peterson v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 101 N. W. 289, 125 Iowa, 562, 67 L. R. A. 631.

BREAST OF THE COURT

Until the end of the term at which rendered, judgments are “in the breast of the court,” and may be set aside or modified at the judge’s discretion; but to set aside a final judgment based on a verdict, except for defects appearing on the face of the record, the verdict must also be set aside, and the verdict is not “within the breast of the court” in the sense that the judgment is

BREVET CAPTAIN

A “brevet captain” is one who—unless specially assigned command by the President—is not a captain, but merely has the title. Reed v. Schon, 83 Pac. 77, 79, 2 Cal. App. 55.

BREW

See Small Brew.

BRIBE

A “bribe” may be defined as any gift, advantage, or emolument offered, given, or promised to an elector to influence his conduct or vote. Tinkle v. Wallace, 79 N. E. 355, 356, 167 Ind. 382.

Rev. Codes N. D. 1905, § 9526, gives the word “bribe” a specific meaning, and whenever used in the Code it signifies anything of value or advantage which is asked, given, or accepted with the corrupt attempt to influence unlawfully, the person to whom it is given in any public or official capacity, and so an information charging that accused unlawfully and feloniously offered a bribe with intent to influence the action of a road overseer is sufficiently specific. State v. Johnson, 118 N. W. 230, 231, 17 N. D. 554.

“By the term ‘bribe’ * * * is meant any gift, emolument, money, or thing of value, or the promise of either, bestowed or promised for the purpose of inducing a peace officer in the performance of any duty, public or official, or as an inducement to favor the person offering the same. * * * The actual tender of the bribe is not necessary to perfect the offense of offering a bribe as contemplated by statute. Any expression of an ability to produce a bribe as a gift to the officer to induce him to release the person is all that is necessary to perfect the crime.” Lee v. State, 85 S. W. 804, 805, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 620.

“A promise by a candidate to discharge the duties of the office for less than the legal salary or compensation is contrary to public policy as in the nature of a ‘bribe.’” A promise by the successful candidate, in effect, that the duties of the office should not be performed and there would be no expense in connection with it, was a promise of a valuable consideration to a voter to induce him to vote for such candidate. Bush v. Head, 97 Pac. 512, 515, 154 Cal. 277.

Pen. Code, § 7, subd. 6, defines the word “bribe” as anything of value or advantage, etc., given with a corrupt intent to influence "unlawfully" the person to whom it is given in his action, vote, etc., in any public or official capacity. Section 165 punishes one giving a bribe to any member of any board of supervisors with intent to "corruptly" influence such member in his action on any matters, etc. Held, that the use of the word "unlawfully" as qualifying "to influence" in section 7, adds nothing to the meaning of section 165, and hence an indictment for bribery charging an intent to "corruptly" influence, etc., by giving money, etc., was sufficient, though the word "unlawfully" was not used. People v. Glass, 112 Pac. 281, 286, 158 Cal. 650.

A publication alleged that a piano had been sold to a certain miners' union, which required great financiering, and that the agent thought it a great thing to bribe a committee or officers so as to sell the piano, and that such was the case. Held, that the word "bribe" would be understood as charging that the committee had received a bribe, gift, or reward which had influenced its action. Barron v. Smith, 101 N. W. 1105, 1108, 19 S. D. 50.

The word "bribe," as used in Ky. St. § 1586 (Russell's St. § 3416), imposing a penalty therefor, is defined by subsection 1 to mean any reward, benefit, or advantage, present or future, to the party influenced or intended to be influenced, or to another at his instance, or the promise of such reward, benefit, or advantage; and thereunder it is as much an offense to accept a bribe not to vote, or to forfeit the right to vote, as it is to accept a bribe to vote. It is the act of receiving a bribe for his vote that the statute was primarily intended to punish, and not the act of voting that might follow the bribe-taking. Commonwealth v. Roberts, 140 S. W. 313, 314, 145 Ky. 290.

BRIBERY

"Bribery," within V. S. 5066, is the receiving or offering any undue reward, by or to any person whomsoever whose ordinary business or profession relates to the administration of public justice, in order to influence his behavior in office, to incline him to act contrary to his duty and the known rules of honesty and integrity. State v. Smith, 48 Atl. 647, 650, 72 Vt. 366.

At common law, "bribery" was the voluntary giving or receiving of anything of value in unlawful payment of an official act done or to be done. The acceptance by an officer of a gift after an official act is consummated without any prior corrupt understanding does not constitute bribery. People v. Coffey, 119 Pac. 901, 907, 161 Cal. 433, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 704.

Bribery in elections involves moral turpitude, and falls within the class of crimes deemed infamous, within Const. art. 4, § 4, declaring that no person who has been or shall hereafter be convicted of bribery, perjury, or other infamous crime, shall be eligible to the General Assembly, or to any office of profit or trust in the state. Christie v. People, 69 N. E. 33, 35, 206 Ill. 337.

"Bribery," technically speaking, is the giving of something of value to a public official to influence his official act. Pen. Code, § 384R, has extended it to jurors and witnesses and makes it a misdemeanor to give, or offer, or promise, to an agent, employé, or servant, any gift, or gratuity with intent to influence his action in relation to his employer's business. Proper understanding of the word "bribery" or "to bribe" includes the debauching and corrupting of any individual by inducing him through money or its equivalent to do something contrary to his duty, either as trustee, agent, or servant, and, popularly speaking, has long included the matters specified in the section of the Penal Code referred to. Kemble & Mills of Pittsburgh v. Kaighn, 115 N. Y. Supp. 809, 812, 813, 131 App. Div. 63.

A newspaper article averring that a member of the General Assembly had been induced by the hospitable attentions of a candidate for United States Senator to declare himself as a supporter of the candidate, and had announced that he would vote for him, though the public had previously been informed that he could not reconcile his conscience to vote for him, does not charge the member with bribery and is not libelous, in view of the evidence of the candidate's campaign for the office of Senator and the member's position towards the different candidates. Branch v. Publishers: George Knapp & Co., 121 S. W. 93, 98, 222 Mo. 580.

Attempt or offer

The offense of bribery embraces any attempt to bribe. Commonwealth v. Bailey (Ky.) 82 S. W. 299.

An "attempt to bribe" is the same as an "offer to bribe." Johnson v. State, 92 S. W. 257, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 250.

Under Rev. St. § 1781, the act of "agreeing" to receive a bribe is a substantive offense, and the act of "agreeing" to give a bribe another. Concert of action is therefore essential to a violation of the section. Chadwick v. United States, 141 Fed. 225, 236, 72 C. C. A. 343.

Under Pen. Code, § 7, subd. 6, defining a bribe to be anything of value or advantage, present or prospective, or any promise or undertaking to give any, asked, given, or accepted, with a corrupt intent to influence unlawfully the person to whom it is given, in his action, vote, or opinion, in any public or official capacity, a promise to give a public officer anything which may have a future existence and value, with intent to unlawfully influence him in his official action, constitutes bribery. People v. Vincillione, 120 Pac. 438, 439, 17 Cal. App. 513.

"Bribery" was an indictable offense at common law, and, although in the early days it was limited to judicial officers and those engaged in the administration of justice, it was later extended to all public offices. It was variously defined as taking or offering an undue reward or a reward to influence official action. 4 Blackstone's Com. 139; 3 Coke's Inst. 145; Hawkins' Pleas of Crown (Carwood's Ed.) pp. 414, 415; 2 Bishop's New Crim. Law, § 85, note; Barbour's Crim. Law [3d Ed.] 346; 2 Wharton's Crim. Law, § 1858; Walsh v. People, 65 Ill. 58, 16 Am. Rep. 569; Curran v. Taylor, 18 S. W. 232, 92 Ky. 537; State v. Ellis, 33 N. J. Law, 102, 97 Am. Dec. 707. Where an alderman wrote the commissioner of street cleaning that, if he would reinstate a certain employé, the writer would help the commissioner to obtain the money needed for a new plant in Brooklyn, there being then pending a bill to authorize issue of stock for a plant for the department of street cleaning, held to show a violation of Pen. Code, § 72, imposing a punishment for offering to receive, etc., a bribe. People ex rel. Dickinson v. Van De Carr, 84 N. Y. Supp. 461, 463, 87 App. Div. 386.

"Bribery" or the attempt to bribe was an offense at common law, and constituted the voluntary giving or receiving of anything of value in corrupt payment for an official act done or to be done. The tendering by a person of his personal check, drawn on a bank and payable to an officer of the United States, to such officer, with intent thereby to affect his official action, does not constitute the crime of "bribery," under Rev. St. § 4451, since a check made and delivered for such illegal purpose is void, and not within any of the classes of instruments enumerated in the statute. United States v. Green, 136 Fed. 618, 651 (citing 1 Bishop, New Crim. Law, p. 288, § 468, subd. 3, and 2 Bishop, New Crim. Law, p. 51, § 85).

As felony

See Felony.

Nature of office or official act

The asking of money by a public officer to influence his action, which is not official, and which he has no authority at law to perform, is not "bribery." Hence a coroner for a borough in New York does not commit "bribery" by agreeing to receive money with the understanding that his official action will be influenced in the matter of the death of a person in New Jersey, unless the body has been brought into the borough. People v. Jackson, 95 N. Y. Supp. 286, 290, 47 Misc. Rep. 60.

Though, according to the old writers, the crime of "bribery" is said to be perpetrated "where any man in judicial place takes any fee or pension, robe or livery, gift, reward or brocage, from any person that hath to do before him in any way, for doing his office, or by color of his office but of the king only, unless it be meat or drink and that of small value," or "when a judge or other person concerned in the administration of justice takes any undue reward to influence his behavior in his office" (Blackstone's Com. vol. 4, p. 139), the crime may be committed at common law as to other than judicial officers, and therefore the definition in Blackstone is too narrow. See 2 Bishop's Crim. Law, § 85, note 1. And Blackstone in another place states that "bribery" was an offense in other officers punishable by fine and imprisonment, and that a statute of Henry IV included "other officers with the king" with judges as punishable for bribery. It is therefore apparent that it was an offense at common law to bribe or attempt to bribe other than judicial officers, and hence the offense could have been committed in respect to a legislative officer. State v. Sullivan, 84 S. W. 105, 108, 110 Mo. App. 75 (citing Commonwealth v. Flagg, 135 Mass. 545; Commonwealth v. Randolph, 23 Atl. 388, 146 Pa. 83, 28 Am. St. Rep. 782, State v. Ellis, 33 N. J. Law, 102, 97 Am. Dec. 707; Wharton's Crim. Law, §§ 179, 1857, 1858).

It is not necessary, in order to constitute bribery, that the vote of a public official bribed should be in a measure valid and enforceable. State v. Lehman, 81 S. W. 1118, 1129, 182 Mo. 424, 66 L. R. A. 490, 103 Am. St. Rep. 670.

Act April 9, 1872 (Laws 1871-72; p. 671), amending Rev. St. 1845, c. 30, § 86, and making municipal officers punishable, was repealed by Cities and Villages Act (Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 24, § 79) § 8, making it bribery for municipal officers to accept any gift, etc., to influence official conduct, and the latter section was superseded by Cr. Code, § 31 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 38), under which such officers are now punishable. People v. McCann, 98 N. E. 100, 104, 247 Ill. 130, 20 Ann. Cas. 496.

White's Ann. Pen. Code, art. 44, states that "bribe," as used throughout the Code, means any gift, emolument, money, or thing of value, testimonial, privilege, appointment, or personal advantage, or the promise of either, bestowed or promised for the purpose of influencing an officer or other persons such as named in the performance of any duty, public or official, or as an inducement to favor the person offering the same or some other person, and so, in order to bribe an officer, he must be in the discharge of a legal and official duty, and one could not be convicted for offering money to an officer who illegally held him under arrest. Moore v. State, 69 S. W. 521, 522, 44 Tex. Cr. R. 159.

Of voter

Since under Ky. St. § 1488, a voter cannot vote unless he presents to the election officers his certificate of registration, the buying of certificates to prevent voters from voting is the buying of persons not to vote, and is "bribery" under section 1596A, subsec.

12, prohibiting bribery. Skain v. Milward, 127 S. W. 778, 188 Ky. 200.

Purchase of a voter's certificate of registration to prevent him from voting at an election constitutes bribery under Ky. St. § 1586 (Russell's St. § 3416), declaring that any person guilty of receiving a bribe for his vote at an election or for services or influence in procuring a vote shall be fined, etc. Commonwealth v. Glass, 131 S. W. 494, 140 Ky. 589.

The word "bribery," as used in Ky. St. § 1586, imposing a penalty therefor, is defined by subsection 1 to mean any reward, benefit, or advantage, present or future, to the party influenced or intended to be influenced, or to another at his instance, or the promise of such reward, benefit, or advantage; and thereunder it is as much an offense to accept a bribe not to vote, or to forfeit the right to vote, as it is to accept a bribe to vote. It is the act of receiving a bribe for his vote that the statute was primarily intended to punish, and not the act of voting that might follow the bribe taking. Commonwealth v. Roberts, 140 S. W. 313, 314, 145 Ky. 290.

Of witness

To constitute the offense of bribing a witness to avoid a process, there must have been a process either issued or served. Harrison v. State (Tex.) 151 S. W. 552, 553.

BRICK

See Fire Brick.

As deadly weapon, see Deadly Weapon.

A city ordinance, prohibiting the erection of any building within fire limits, except buildings constructed of "brick" does not prohibit the construction of a concrete building, since "concrete" is a species of brick; and the ordinance is not in conflict with Rev. St. 1895, art. 523, authorizing cities to establish fire limits, and to prohibit the construction of buildings therein, except buildings of fireproof materials. Ex parte Morris, 120 S. W. 1007, 1008, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 533.

Certain magnesic brick, glazed, known in commerce as "fire brick," are not within the provisions in Tariff Act Aug. 28, 1894, c. 349, § 1, Schedule B, par. 77, 28 Stat. 512, for "magnesic fire brick," but are dutiable as "brick * * * glazed," under paragraph 76 of said act. Fleming v. United States, 124 Fed. 1014, 1015.

BRICKWORK

See Rub Down Brickwork.

The term "brickwork," in a contract to complete the brickwork as prescribed in the specifications of a house, included a pressed brick fireplace mentioned in the specifications. Daly v. Kingston, 58 N. E. 1019, 1020, 177 Mass. 312.

BRIDGE

See County Bridges; Low Bridge; Necessary Bridge; Public Bridge; Railroad Bridge; Toll Bridge; Town Bridge; Village Bridge.

Approaches of bridge, see Approaches.

Control of bridge, see Control.

A "bridge" is defined to be "any structure which spans a body of water, or a valley, road, or the like, and affords passage or conveyance." Wilson v. Town of Barnstead, 65 Atl. 298, 299, 74 N. H. 78 (citing Cent. Dict.; 5 Cyc. p. 1052).

"The simple term 'bridge' means a viaduct in a road dedicated to common use, and the qualified term 'railroad bridge' means a viaduct constructed for the exclusive use of railroad transportation." Diebold v. Kentucky Traction Co., 77 S. W. 674, 676, 117 Ky. 146, 63 L. R. A. 637, 111 Am. St. Rep. 230, 4 Ann. Cas. 445.

An elevated roadway constructed in a street, partly on posts resting on mudsills and partly on piles, the posts and piles being surmounted by capping or stringers and the whole overlaid with planks, does not constitute a "bridge," which is properly defined as a structure erected over a river or other water course or over a chasm to make a passageway from one bank to the other, anything supported at the ends which serves to keep some other thing from resting upon the object spanned or which forms a platform or staging over which something passes or is conveyed. Knickerbocker Co. v. City of Seattle, 124 Pac. 920, 922, 69 Wash. 336.

A structure of masonry having perpendicular walls on either side, arising 12 to 15 feet from the ground, with five arches of 12 feet span, and at the top a roadway of dirt and gravel, about 41 feet in width, 479 feet in length, and having on either side a railing, the structure occupying a place between a bridge crossing a river and one crossing a canal, thereby making a continuous roadway, being built across low lands, covered with running water when the river overflows its banks, and at nearly, if not quite, all other times, with pools of greater or less depth and number, is a bridge. Schell v. Town of German Flats, 104 N. Y. Supp. 116, 118, 54 Misc. Rep. 445.

An appropriation of money for "bridges" does not import or suggest any costly improvement of an unusual and extraordinary character, such as the purchase of an entire addition embracing 14 city lots. City of Fargo v. Keeney, 92 N. W. 886, 840, 11 N. D. 484.

An objection that a county board should have subdivided a levy for bridges, under Hurd's Rev. St. 1908, c. 121, § 19, by showing how much of the money was to be used for building new bridges, how much for repairing bridges, and how much for the approaches, was without merit; the term "bridges" fairly including building new bridges, repairing old ones, etc. People ex rel. v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 94 N. E. 57, 249 Ill. 170.

Abutments, approaches, and piers as part of

A "bridge structure" consists of all the abutments, spans, and all other parts of the structure not movable. Middletown & Portland Bridge Co. v. Town of Middletown, 59 Atl. 34, 35, 77 Conn. 814.

The term "bridge" includes all the appurtenances necessary to its proper use, and embraces its abutments and approaches. Howington v. Madison County, 55 S. E. 941, 942, 126 Ga. 699.

The right of a railroad company to build a "bridge" across a stream includes the right to place necessary piers on its banks and in its bed. Braine v. Northern Cent. Ry. Co., 66 Atl. 985, 986, 218 Pa. 43.

Under the common law, and usually under the statutes in this country, a "bridge" includes abutments and approaches, which make it accessible and convenient for public travel. State v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 92 N. E. 814, 853, 246 Ill. 188.

The term "bridge" includes, not only the structure spanning the chasm over which it is located, but also the approaches by which access to the bridge is obtained. Schell v. Town of German Flats, 104 N. Y. Supp. 116, 118, 54 Misc. Rep. 445.

The term "bridges," in Cobbe's Ann. St. 1903, § 8756, pertaining to the liability of counties and cities for the construction and repair of bridges, does not include approaches thereto. Central City v. Morquils, 108 N. W. 221, 222, 75 Neb. 233.

Under Const. art. 13, § 5, prohibiting a county from incurring any indebtedness for any single purpose in excess of $10,000, and Rev. Codes, § 1416, defining the word "bridges" to include approaches thereto, a contract by a county for the construction of a bridge without approaches is invalid when the cost of the bridge with approaches will exceed $10,000. Jenkins v. Newman, 101 Pac. 625, 626, 39 Mont. 77.

Within the meaning of that part of Comp. St. 1909, c. 78, § 88, defining the duties of county boards in relation to bridges, approaches are parts of bridges and grading, and riprapping may be essential parts thereof. Brown County v. Keya Paha County, 129 N. W. 250, 252, 88 Neb. 117, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 790.

A roadway intersected a river and a canal, and at each crossing was a bridge. The distance between the two bridges was 470 feet, and consisted of low lying land which in time of flood was overflowed. The two bridges were connected by a structure of masonry having perpendicular walls on either side rising 12 or 15 feet from the ground below with five arches of 12-foot span. At the top the roadway was of dirt and gravel, the surface of which was slightly above the coping of the walls on either side and practically on a level with the floors of the canal and river bridges. The width of the structure over all was 41 feet, and on each side was a railing about 3 feet from the outer edge leaving a space within the railing for travel of 35 feet. Held, that the structure was a "bridge" within the meaning of a statute conferring jurisdiction of bridges on the highway commissioner of the town. The term "bridge" includes not only the structure spanning the chasm over which it is located, but also the approaches by which access is obtained. Schell v. Town of German Flats, 104 N. Y. Supp. 116, 118, 54 Misc. Rep. 445.

Under the common law, and generally under the statutes in this country, a "bridge" includes the abutments and such approaches as will make it accessible and convenient to public travel. Ordinarily an "approach," as the term is used, is considered a part of a viaduct or bridge. The question what is a viaduct proper and what is an approach, where one begins and the other ends, and what is street or highway, as distinguished from an approach to a viaduct or bridge, are more questions of fact than law. City of Chicago v. Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co., 93 N. E. 307, 308, 247 Ill. 319; Id., 93 N. E. 309, 248 Ill. 100.

A city vacated an avenue between designated streets for the construction, by a corporation, of a union station, under an agreement that, should the city provide for the building of a "bridge" over the avenue between the designated streets, the corporation would pay into the city treasury a specified sum as part payment for the construction of the bridge. Held, that the city could, in building the bridge over the avenue, build the approaches on the designated streets; and the approaches need not be on the avenue, the words "bridge" and "approach" conveying different meanings, though for certain purposes the approaches may be considered a part of the bridge, as where one, under obligation to keep a bridge in repair, is liable on his failure to keep the approaches in repair. City of St. Louis v. Terminal R. Ass'n, 109 S. W. 641, 645, 211 Mo. 364.

The word, "bridge," as used in Act Cong. April 2, 1888, c. 53, 25 Stat. 74, authorizing the construction of railroad bridges across the Ohio river, comprehended not only the span or roadway, but also the abutments and piers on which it was supported, and hence the replacing of a wooden superstructure of a bridge, which had become unsafe from decay and long use, by a new superstructure of iron, did not constitute the erection of a new bridge. City of Buffalo v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 110 N. Y. Supp. 488, 493, 126 App. Div. 125 (quoting and adopting definition given in syllabus to United States v. Cincinnati & M. V. R. Co., 134 Fed. 353, 67 C. C. A. 335); United States v. Cincinnati & M. V. R. Co., 134 Fed. 353, 357, 67 C. C. A. 335.

Laws 1893, p. 47, c. 59, § 1, provides that towns are liable for damages happening to any person, team, or carriage traveling on a bridge on any highway, by reason of any obstruction, defect, or want of repair of such bridge which renders it unsuitable for travel thereon. Held, that a person is "traveling upon a bridge" within such section when he is traveling over that part of the way which is above the abutments and other essential portions of the structure as well as when he is traveling over the part spanning the stream or depression, and, if he is injured by a defect or want of repair there existing, he is entitled to the benefit of the act. Wilson v. Town of Barnstead, 65 Atl. 298, 299, 74 N. H. 78.

Culvert distinguished

The words "bridge" and "culvert" as used in the statute giving an action for damages caused by reason of the insufficiency of "any bridge or culvert" are not synonymous. Cleveland v. Town of Washington, 79 Vt. 498, 65 Atl. 584, 585.

Pontoon bridge

Authority in a town to build a "bridge" did not warrant the building of what is known as a pontoon bridge. Clay City v. Roberts, 99 S. W. 651, 652, 124 Ky. 594.

BRIDLE RODS

"Bridle rods" are rods used to hold together the rails of a movable railroad track. Burke v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co., 97 S. W. 981, 120 Mo. App. 683.

BRIDLING THE HOOK

"Bridling a hook" means fitting a piece of iron over the mouth of the hook to keep it from spreading or straightening out under a strain. Louisville & E. Packet Co. v. Hazard (Ky.) 107 S. W. 270, 271.

BRIEF

A "brief" is a written presentation of the matters of fact and of law which demand investigation. Ferguson v. Union Nat. Bank of Columbus, Ohio, 99 Pac. 641, 642, 23 Okl. 37; Stewart v. Territory, 102 Pac. 649, 650, 2 Okl. Cr. 63.

A "brief" is the vehicle of counsel to convey to the appellate court the essential facts of his client's case, a statement of the questions of law involved, the law he would have applied, and the application he desires made of it by the court. Bell v. Germain, 107 Pac. 630, 631, 12 Cal. App. 375.

A "brief" is a written presentation of the questions involved in a forensic controversy and of the matters of fact and of law which demand investigation. The primary object is to convey information to the court, and this cannot be done without clearly stating the manner in which the controverted points arise, the facts which constitute the groundwork of the legal dispute, and the governing propositions of law. Brunson v. Emerson, 124 Pac. 979, 34 Okl. 211.

BRIEF OF EVIDENCE

An alleged brief of evidence, spread over 54 typewritten pages, when it could easily be condensed into 10 pages, is not a brief of evidence, within Civ. Code 1895, § 5488; and where the materiality of the exceptions depends on the testimony they cannot be considered. Southern R. Co. v. Wafford, 67 S. E. 831, 7 Ga. App. 652.

Documentary evidence, set out in the pleadings or attached as an exhibit, should not be included in the brief of evidence otherwise than by reference. Slappey v. Charles, 68 S. E. 808, 7 Ga. App. 796.

"Brief of evidence," which contains 82 pages of copies of letters and orders for goods, and which shows that no effort was made to brief or abstract them, and containing the oral evidence and colloquies between counsel and rulings and remarks of the judge, is not such a "brief of evidence" as the law requires on appeal. Farmers' Alliance Ex- change v. Crown Cotton Mills, 16 S. E. 985, 91 Ga. 178.

Where there is no legal brief of evidence, alleged errors requiring a review of the evidence cannot be considered. General Accident, Fire & Life Assur. Corp. v. Turner, 67 S. E. 832, 7 Ga. App. 679.

There being no legal brief of evidence, as required by Civ. Code 1895, § 5488, the errors cannot be considered. Lanham v. Presley, 68 S. E. 448, 7 Ga. App. 839.

BRIEF STATEMENT

The phrase, "brief statement of the cause of action," within the meaning of the requirement embodied in Rev. St. 1895, art. 1235, that a citation to nonresidents and persons whose residence is unknown shall contain a "brief statement of the cause of action," means the substance of the cause of action as stated in the petition, but briefly stated, instead of fully and clearly stated, as in the petition. Humphrey v. Beaumont Irrigating Co., 93 S. W. 180, 182, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 308.

BRIEFLY

Const. art. 3, § 16, requiring the subject of an act to be briefly expressed in its title, does not warrant the courts in passing on the brevity of such expression, where the title is not misleading, and violates no principle of the organic law. State v. Bethea, 55 South. 550, 551, 61 Fla. 60.

BRIGADIER GENERAL

The title of an officer commanding a brigade is that of "Brigadier General," and when the field officers of a brigade elect a "Brigadier General" the brigade becomes his brigade within Const. art. 7, relating to militia officers, and he becomes its commander, and the commission which is thereafter issued to him by the Governor is plenary evidence of his right to hold his office, which is a public office, and the supplement of Act March 2, 1909, to the act concerning the militia (P. L. 1909, p. 13), which provides that when any commissioned officer shall reach the age of 64 years he shall be retired from active service, so far as it applies to the incumbents of offices created by the Constitution, and who were commissioned before the passage of the supplement, is in violation of the Constitution, providing that no commissioned officer shall be removed from office but by the sentence of a court-martial. Campbell v. Gilkyson, 75 Atl. 160, 161, 78 N. J. Law, 327.

BRIGHT'S DISEASE

A disease which, in its progress, tends to weaken and impair the mental faculties and physical action and to break down the nervous system, and which causes a degeneration and hardening of the arteria. Allen's Adm'rs v. Allen's Adm'rs, 64 Atl. 1110, 1113, 79 Vt. 178.

BRINE

The word "brine" means water that is highly impregnated with salt, consequently a solution which contains only from .0118 to .0402 per cent. of salt is not "brine." A. L. Causse Mfg. Co. v. United States, 143 Fed. 690.

Cherries immersed in a solution containing not more than .402 per cent. of salt are not fruits in "brine," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 559, 30 Stat. 198. Causse Mfg. Co. v. United States, 151 Fed. 4, 5, 80 C. C. A. 461.

BRING

See, also, Brought.

As import or introduce

The term "bring," as used in Rev. St. § 3082, which imposes a penalty on any person who shall fraudulently or knowingly import or bring into the United States any merchandise contrary to law, is not synonymous with "import," and comprehends the whole act of bringing into this country dutiable articles, and extends to cases within section 2802, which provides a forfeiture and penalty of treble the value of any dutiable articles found in the baggage of any person arriving within the United States, which were not mentioned to the collector at the time of making entry thereof. United States v. Chesbrough, 176 Fed. 778, 782.

An indictment for smuggling, charging that defendant did "bring into the country clandestinely" certain dutiable goods, was synonymous with the provision of Rev. St. § 2865, making it an offense to "clandestinely introduce" dutiable goods into the country with intent to avoid payment of duty. Rogers v. United States, 180 Fed. 54, 58, 103 C. C. A. 408, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 264.

In reference to actions

The filing of the petition with the clerk of the court before limitations have run is the bringing of a suit within the Code, though summons be not issued until after that time. State ex rel. Brown v. Wilson, 115 S. W. 549, 573, 218 Mo. 215.

Const. art. 7, § 34, vests the probate court with original jurisdiction of the estates of persons of unsound mind, and section 35 provides that "appeals may be taken from judgments and orders of the probate court to the circuit court, under such regulations and restrictions as may be prescribed by law." Held, that the Constitution contemplated that an existing controversy should be an essential requisite to appellate jurisdiction, and that an appeal should be a continuation of the suit below and not the bringing of a new action, and hence an appeal from a judgment of confirmation of a settlement of the account of a guardian of an insane ward is not the bringing of an action within the meaning of Kirby's Dig. § 5075, authorizing an insane person at the time of the accrual of the cause of action to bring the action within three years after his disability is removed, but is subject to section 1348, restricting appeals in probate cases to 12 months after judgment. Nelson v. Cowling, 116 S. W. 890, 892, 89 Ark. 334.

Bringing seller and purchaser together

"Bringing the seller and purchaser together," to entitle a broker to his commissions, does not mean introduction, but, if his efforts result in bringing the minds of the two to an agreement resulting in the sale and purchase of the land, he has then brought them together. Lewis v. McDonald, 120 N. W. 207, 209, 83 Neb. 694.

BRING IN

Section 9 of Act March 3, 1903 (32 Stat. 1215), makes it unlawful for any person, transportation company, etc., to "bring" into the United States any alien afflicted with a loathsome or with a dangerous contagious disease, and provides that, if it shall appear that any alien so brought was afflicted with such a disease at the time of foreign embarkation, and that the existence of the disease might have been detected by competent examination, the person so bringing shall pay a fine, etc. Held, that the word "bring" is used in the sense of import, and the vessel owner cannot be subjected to the penalty for bringing into port an alien who has stolen his passage, and whose presence on the vessel was not discovered before her sailing. Cunard S. S. Co. v. Stranahan, 134 Fed. 318, 319.

Chinese Exclusion Act Sept. 8, 1888, c. 1015, § 9, 25 Stat. 478, provides that the master of any vessel who shall knowingly bring into the United States on such vessel and land, or permit to be landed, any Chinese laborer or Chinese person, in contravention of the act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, etc. Held, that the words "bringing into the United States" mean "bringing with the intention to leave"; and hence an indictment charging the master of a vessel with bringing a Chinese laborer into the United States, failing to allege that his act was with the specific intent to leave such person in the United States contrary to law, was insufficient. United States v. Jamieson, 185 Fed. 165, 168.

The phrase "bringing to the United States," in Immigration Act March 3, 1903, c. 1012, § 18, 32 Stat. 1218, 1217, making it the duty of any officer in charge of any vessel bringing an alien to the United States to adopt precautions to prevent the landing of such alien at any time or place other than that designated by the immigration officers, means literally transporting with intent to leave in the United States and for the sake of transport, not transporting with intent to carry back and merely as incident to employment on the instrument of transport. Taylor v. United States, 28 Sup. Ct. 53, 54, 207 U. S. 120, 52 L. Ed. 180.

Seamen who, upon arrival, leave the ship and enter into the general body of the population, are within Act March 3, 1903, c. 1012, § 18, 32 Stat. 1217, making it the duty of the owners and officers of any vessel bringing an alien to the United States to adopt due precautions to prevent the landing of such alien at any time or place other than that designated by the immigration officers. Taylor v. United States, 152 Fed. 1, 5, 81 C. C. A. 197.

BRIOLETTES

Diamonds and other precious stones cut in drop shape and faceted are known in trade as "brioletts." Though in many instances they are drilled through, they are not beads within the meaning of the Tariff Act. United States v. American Gem & Pearl Co., 142 Fed. 283, 284.

BRISTLES BUNCHED OR PREPARED

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 411, 30 Stat. 190, relating to "bristles, sorted, bunched, or prepared," and in section 2, Free List, par. 509, 30 Stat. 196, relating to "bristles, crude, not sorted, bunched, or prepared," the distinction made is between absolute crudeness and advancement one or more steps in preparation for the arts; and bristles that have been tied in separate bundles, with their butt ends together, in preparation for brushmakers, are subject to duty under the former provision. J. C. Pushee & Sons v. United States, 155 Fed. 265, 266.

BROADSIDE EXCEPTIONS

Exceptions which are not specific are sometimes termed "broadside exceptions." Dressel v. North State Lumber Co., 119 Fed. 531, 532.

BROKER

See Floor Broker; Grain Broker; Insurance Broker; Merchandise Broker; Real Estate Broker; Stockbroker.
See, also, Middleman.

A "broker" is defined by Story as an agent employed to make bargains. Alt v. Doscher, 92 N. Y. Supp. 439, 441, 102 App. Div. 344.

"The 'broker' is he who is employed to negotiate a matter between two parties, etc."

Lockett Land & Emigration Co. v. Brown, 43 South. 628, 629, 118 La. 948.

A "broker" is an agent employed to make bargains and contracts between other persons in matters of trade, commerce, etc., for a compensation commonly called brokerage. Turner v. Crumpton & Crumpton, 130 N. W. 937, 939, 21 N. D. 294, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1015; New Roads Oilmill & Mfg. Co. v. Kline, Wilson & Co., 154 Fed. 296, 302, 83 C. O. A. 1 (citing Mechem, Agency, § 13); Stevens v. Bailey & Howard, 42 South. 740, 741, 149 Ala. 256.

A "broker" is an agent employed to make bargains and contracts between other persons in matters of trade for a compensation commonly called "brokerage," and is a mere negotiator between other parties who does not act in his own name, and is not intrusted with the custody or possession when employed to buy or sell goods. Eau Claire Canning Co. v. Western Brokerage Co., 73 N. E. 430, 439, 213 Ill. 561.

"A 'broker' is one who acts as agent, middleman, or negotiator between other persons." State v. Mitchell, 51 South. 4, 7, 96 Miss. 259, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1072, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 309 (quoting and adopting the definition in Baker v. State, 12 N. W. 16, 54 Wis. 376).

A "broker" is a special agent who derives his power and authority to bind his principal from instructions given him by the latter. W. O. Brackett & Co. v. Americus Grocery Co., 56 S. E. 762, 763, 127 Ga. 672 (citing Clark v. Cumming, 77 Ga. 64, 4 Am. St. Rep. 72).

A "broker" is an agent employed to effect bargains, and contracts as a middleman between other persons for a compensation called brokerage. He takes no possession, as broker, of the subject-matter of the negotiations. French v. City of Toledo, 90 N. E. 160, 161, 81 Ohio St. 160, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 748 (quoting and adopting the definition in Webster's International Dict.).

"'Brokers' are persons whose business it is to bring buyer and seller together; they need have nothing to do with the negotiation of the bargain. A broker becomes entitled to his commissions whenever he procures for his principal a party with whom he is satisfied and who actually contracts for the purchase of the property at a price acceptable to the owner." Pierce v. Nichols, 110 S. W. 206, 208, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 443 (citing Keys v. Johnson, 68 Pa. 42).

A "broker" is one who negotiates contracts relative to property, and makes sales of the same when he has no custody of the property. "Broker" is an intermediate agent between buyer and seller, and as broker he is not entitled to the possession of the property which is the subject of sale or purchase, nor does he receive or share the price unless he is authorized to do so. An agent employed to sell machinery by procuring orders or purchasers therefor is a commercial broker when the contract of agency neither gives nor contemplates any possession or right of possession in the agent to the machinery to be sold. Southwestern Port Huron Co. v. Wilber, 88 Pac. 892, 893, 75 Kan. 175 (quoting 1 Words and Phrases, p. 882).

A dealer in stocks took verbal orders from an employer for the purchase and sale of stocks. After the deals were made it was his custom to give the employer unsigned tickets as evidence of the transaction. Held, that he was acting in the capacity of a "broker," and could not set off payments of profits to the employer against an action by the latter for sums advanced as margins. Picard v. Beers, 81 N. E. 246, 248, 195 Mass. 419.

A municipal ordinance making it unlawful for one to do business as a broker without first obtaining a license therefor, and defining a broker as one engaged for others in negotiating contracts relative to property, with the custody of which he has no concern, does not impose a license on a stockbroker, for, though stocks, bonds, and securities are technically only evidence of property, they are in the usual form of speech regarded as property and the broker having custody of them is not within the ordinance. Hately v. Kiser, 97 N. E. 651, 253 Ill. 288.

Agent distinguished

Parties ceased to be "brokers" and became "agents" the moment they bound themselves to solicit business for one principal in particular to the exclusion of all others. City of Lake Charles v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of United States, 88 South. 578, 579, 114 La. 836.

One who acts as a middleman between the insured and insurer, and who solicits insurance under no employment for any particular company, is a "broker" as distinguished from an "agent," who represents the insurance company, which well-understood distinction is recognized by Rev. Laws 1905, § 1620, defining a "broker" as one not an appointed agent of the insuring company and who acts for or aids another in any manner in effecting insurance. Fredman v. Consolidated Fire & Marine Ins. Co. of Albert Lea, 116 N. W. 221, 223, 104 Minn. 76, 124 Am. St. Rep. 608.

A "broker" is one engaged in making contracts for others relating to property not in his custody, he acting in a sense as agent for both parties, and a salaried agent not acting for a fee or commission is not a broker. Rodman v. Manning, 99 Pac. 657, 53 Or. 336, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1158.

Factor or commission merchant distinguished

"A factor is generally defined to be an agent to sell goods or merchandise consigned or delivered to him by or for his principal for a compensation, commonly called factorage or commission," while a "broker," as such, cannot ordinarily buy or sell in his own name, and has no possession of the goods sold. Goesling v. Gross, Kelly & Co., 113 Pac. 608, 15 N. M. 721 (quoting definition in 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2640, citing Slack v. Tucker, 23 Wall. 330, 23 L. Ed. 143).

A "broker" is one whose occupation it is to bring parties to a bargain or to bargain for them in a matter of trade or commerce, and differs from a factor in that ordinarily he does not have possession of the goods, and his contracts are always made in the name of his employer. Yunker v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 125 N. W. 577, 581, 146 Iowa, 490.

"The law makes a very wide distinction between merchandise brokers and 'factors,' or, as they are most frequently called, 'commission merchants.' A factor or commission merchant is one who has the actual or technical possession of goods or wares of another for sale. Thus the property may be in his own warehouses, or he may have a warehouse receipt or bill of lading. The possession of the property is prima facie evidence of ownership. Being thus intrusted with possession of it by the owner for the purpose of its sale, a factor may sell it in his own name, without disclosing the name of his principal, and he may collect the proceeds and give the purchaser a complete acquittance. * * * Whether the selling agent has possession of the wares determines the characters of his agency." Where a buyer of cotton cloth ordered the mill operator to ship it to a certain place, which was done by billing it in his own name and forwarding the bills of lading to the buyer with a draft for the purchase money attached, thus reserving possession of the property until the purchase price was paid, and the buyer wrote the merchant that it was a lot of goods owned by a mill which he was selling for it, the buyer was not a factor, not having had possession of the goods of which the merchant had knowledge from his letter so that payment to the buyer was not payment to the mill. Robinson, Norton & Co. v. Corsicana Cotton Factory, 99 S. W. 305, 306, 124 Ky. 435, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 474, 14 Ann. Cas. 802.

A "factor" is one who receives and sells the goods of another on commission, and, in order to be held as a factor, and not a mere "agent" or "broker," must be in actual or constructive possession of the property sold. A factor has no implied authority to sell or transfer his principal's property in payment of his own debts, nor has he any lien upon property the possession of which he acquired by wrongful methods or in bad faith. People's Bank of Pratt, Kan., v. Frick Co., 73 Pac. 949, 951, 13 Okl. 179.

A "commission merchant" is an intermediary who sells on commission accounting to the manufacturer for the purchase money, and such a person is liable to the government for the revenue tax as a dealer under the statute. The difference between a commission merchant and a broker is this: A commission merchant may buy and sell in his own name, and he has the goods in his possession, while a "broker" as such cannot ordinarily buy or sell in his own name and has no possession of the goods sold. The local agents of an express company in a prohibition state took orders from persons desiring beer and forwarded the same to breweries in another state. The breweries delivered the beer to the company for shipment to the agent, who sent the order charging the price to the company, and having no knowledge of the local customer. On its receipt the agent stored the beer in the company's warehouse until it was called for, and then delivered it to the customer, collecting the price and the express charges, and accounting to the company for the same. He sometimes also sent orders which had not been requested and delivered the beer to persons who thereafter applied for it. No receipts were taken from persons to whom beer was delivered, and their names did not appear on the company's books. When beer was not called for it was returned to the breweries and the company given credit therefor. The company received nothing except the usual charges for transportation. The company was not merely a carrier nor a commercial broker in the transaction, but was, in effect, a "commission merchant," and as such was subject to special tax under Rev. St. § 3244, as a dealer in malt liquors at each of the agencies where such business was carried on. Western Express Co. v. United States, 141 Fed. 23, 32, 72 O. C. A. 516 (citing in support of definition Slack v. Tucker & Co., 23 Wall. 321-330, 23 L. Ed. 143).

BROKERS' BOARD

Where a pledge agreement provided that the pledgee upon default might sell the pledged property, and if the sale was made at brokers' board, or public auction, the pledgees might themselves become the purchaser, the pledgees had no right to purchase the property themselves at a sale on the curb, made at a place in the street where street or curbstone brokers were accustomed to congregate and trade with each other on their own account or for others; this not constituting a "brokers' board." Manning v. Heidelberg, 138 N. Y. Supp. 750, 753, 153 App. Div. 790.

BROKERS' MEMORANDUM

As contract, see Contract.

BROKERS' SERVICES

A contract for plaintiff's services in the discovery and pointing out of public timber lands to defendant's timber inspector, who was to estimate the timber on such lands, and procure title thereto in defendant by exchanging forest reserve lands therefor, and pay plaintiff a certain sum per 1,000 feet of timber on the land, less the cost of reservation scrip necessary to acquire the lands, was not a contract for brokers' services in purchasing land within the Montana Code, requiring contracts for brokers' services to be in writing. Western Lumber Co. v. Willis, 160 Fed. 27, 82, 87 C. O. A. 183.

BROKERAGE

See Marriage Brokerage.

The compensation of a broker is commonly called "brokerage." Eau Claire Canning Co. v. Western Brokerage Co., 73 N. E. 430, 439, 213 Ill. 561.

BROKERAGE BUSINESS

A "brokerage business," as known to insurance, is business brought to agents by outsiders who share in the agent's commission. Weidenaar v. New York Life Ins. Co., 94 Pac. 1, 7, 86 Mont. 592.

BROKERAGE COMPANY

As trading corporation, see Trading Corporation.

BROKERAGE CONTRACT

A contract whereby defendant agreed to sell plaintiff or his assigns certain land for $150 per acre, plaintiff to plat the land and sell it, and to pay all proceeds to defendant until the latter had received $150 per acre, was a contract for the sale of land, not a mere brokerage contract, which defendant had a right to forfeit by reason of nonperformance. Whipple v. Lee, 89 Pac. 712, 714, 46 Wash. 266.

BROMO

BROMOFLUORESCIC ACID

"Bromofluorescic acid" is a color or dye having no long-continued commercial designation. With the trade it seems to have gone largely as "bromo." At one stage of chemical development from coal tar it is fluorescein, which is a color, and the completed product is obtained by adding bromine. It contains all the essential elements and determining characteristics of a color or dye, and is dutiable as a coal-tar color or dye under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, schedule A. United States v. Kuttroff, Pickhardt & Co., 147 Fed. 758, 759, 760.

BRONCHITIS

A warranty in an accident policy that insured had not had and was not suffering from bronchitis must be given a reasonable interpretation in arriving at the intention of the parties; and, though bronchitis as a medical term is defined as inflammation, acute or chronic, of the bronchial tubes, or any part of them, it must be used in its limited sense as meaning a chronic disease which will not yield readily to treatment, and which tends to impair the health and strength of insured, and does not include an acute attack from which he had fully recovered at the time the policy was accepted. French v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 115 N. W. 869, 875, 135 Wis. 259, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1011.

BROOKLYN BRIDGE

As public way, see Public Way.

BROTHEL

A "bawdyhouse" is a house kept for the purpose of prostitution; that is, for men and women to have unlawful, illicit sexual intercourse together therein. The statute uses the words "bawdyhouse or brothel, or house of assignation." A "bawdyhouse" is a house of ill fame. An "assignation house" is a house resorted to for purposes of prostitution, and is synonymous with "bawdyhouse" or "brothel." State v. Keithley, 127 S. W. 406, 408, 142 Mo. App. 417.

BROTHER

An applicant for fraternal insurance declared that his personal and family history were clearly and truthfully set forth in the questions and answers in the application. It contained the following questions: "Brothers?" "Age of living?" "Age at death?" "Year of death?" "Specific cause of death?" "Duration of last illness?" The applicant answered only the first question, his answer being in the negative. He had a brother who had died prior to the application and the cause of his death was diabetes, and the applicant knew such fact. Held, that the question "Brothers?" applied to brothers living or dead, and was also applicable to one brother as well as several brothers, and his answer was a fraudulent concealment, misleading the insurer. Keatley v. Grand Fraternity, 198 Fed. 272, 274.

Brother of the half blood

The word "brothers" includes brothers of the half blood. Watkins v. Blount, 94 S. W. 1116, 1117, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 460 (quoting and adopting the definition in 4 Encly. of Law, 990; 2 Redf. Wills, p. 30).

The half-brothers and half-sisters of an ancestor are included in the words "brothers and sisters of such ancestors" in Rev. St. § 4158, subd. 5, providing that, if an ancestor from whom an estate came is deceased, the estate shall under certain circumstances vest in the brothers and sisters of such ancestor. Stockton v. Frazier, 90 N. E. 168, 169, 81 Ohio St. 227, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 603.

Under Gen. St. 1902, § 296, providing that where a legatee being a brother of the testator shall die before him, the issue of the and contrary to public policy." State v. McGinnis, 51 S. E. 50, 51, 138 N. C. 724 (quoting and adopting definition in Smith v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 2 S. W. 483, 84 Ky. 664).

As Rev. St. §§ 4772, 4773, making it an offense to carry on a "bucket shop," defined as a place wherein pretended sales and purchases in certain commodities are made, applies to all pretended trades therein, it is unnecessary that a definition be given therein of a pretended sale or purchase. State v. Miner, 135 S. W. 483, 487, 233 Mo. 312.

The gravamen of the offense of keeping a bucket shop, as defined in Lan. Rev. St. § 10,578, is in keeping a place wherein is conducted or permitted the pretended buying and selling of stock, etc., on margin or otherwise, without intention on the part of the customers to receive or deliver the stocks. Gill v. State, 30 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 278, 279.

Where, in an action to recover money lost in dealings in stock, it appeared that defendant never owned any of the stock dealt in by plaintiff, or had any under his control; that he always made settlements with his customers on the difference in the market price of the article at the time of making and closing the deal; that it made no difference whether customers bought or sold, settlements were always made in the same way—the transaction was a well-recognized species of gambling, known as "bucket shop." Boyd Commission Co. v. Coates (Ky.) 69 S. W. 1090, 1092.

An agreement for the sale of stocks or other commodity is a gambling contract, where the parties do not intend an actual delivery, but agree that at the time fixed for delivery they shall settle by one of them paying the other the difference between the agreed price and the market price at the time of delivery. This is a mere bet or speculation and illegal not only under the statutes, but in most states independently even of any statute, and such brokerage establishments known as "bucket shops" are expressly denounced by statute law. Bailey & Graham v. Phillips, 159 Fed. 535, 537.

An alleged libel consisted of a magazine article entitled "Bucket Shop Sharks," and stated that the business of bucket shop keeping was followed by persons calling themselves "bankers and brokers" who fleeced their customers by pretended sales and purchases of stock; that H. was one of the members of plaintiff firm of "bankers and brokers"; that his picture was in the rogues' gallery; and that these were but specimens of the thieves who plied their trade as keepers of bucket shops while posing as "bankers and brokers." The complaint denied that H. was ever a member of their firm, or that they were brokers, or had ever done business as "bankers or brokers" or as brokers, or advertised themselves as such. The answer alleged that

H. became "associated with the plaintiffs in their business" without stating in what capacity, and that plaintiffs held themselves out as "bankers"; their principal business being the promotion of corporate enterprises and marketing the capital stock of mining enterprises, which stocks plaintiffs and H. knew were practically worthless. Held, that a justification must be as broad as the alleged libel and justify the exact words of the libel, and the facts alleged in the answer did not amount to a justification of the libel alleged, which was keeping a "bucket shop"; that term meaning a place where wagers are made on the fluctuations of the market value of commodities. Bergstrom v. Ridge-way Co., 123 N. Y. Supp. 29, 32, 138 App. Div. 178.

Exchange distinguished

According to the common understanding, the "bucket shop" uses the terms and outward forms of the exchanges, but differs from the 'exchanges' in that there is no delivery, and no expectation or intention to deliver, or receive securities or commodities said to be sold or purchased." The probability that an intelligent and experienced business man who enters upon a course of speculative dealings with a "bucket shop" does so with the understanding that the purchases or sales are to be merely colorable is so strong as to amount to a presumption of fact, which is not overcome by his testimony to the contrary given in his own interest, nor by a recital in confirmation slips given on receipt of the orders that actual delivery was in all cases understood, which in itself indicated that it was inserted for some ulterior purpose. In re A. B. Baxter & Co., 152 Fed. 137, 140, 81 C. C. A. 355, 11 App. Cas. 437 (quoting and adopting definition in Stand. Dict.).

BUCKEYE AUTOMATIC COUPLER

The "Buckeye automatic coupler" is operated by a rod running across the end of the car at right angles to the track. On the end of the rod a crank is attached. A brakeman standing outside of the track may pull the crank, and thereby move the rod, which in turn draws a chain attached to an iron pin, which is raised by the use of the crank, and when so raised the only remaining duty is to bend the knuckles on a plane with the earth's surface. If the coupler is in order, all this may be done in a moment, and the stationary car is thus made ready to grasp an approaching car. Murphy v. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co., Ky., 71 S. W. 886, 887, 114 Ky. 696.

BUCKING UP

"Bucking up" consists in holding a rivet on the inside of a tank while a man on the outside strikes it. A "bucking-up bench" is a bench used by one "bucking up" to stand on. Petroleum Iron Works Co. v. Wantland, 114 Pac. 717, 720, 28 Okl. 481.

BUCKLES

Not dutiable as articles commonly known as jewelry, see Articles Within Tariff Act.

BUDDY

Name applied to a miner's helper. "Evidently used for brother or partner." Big Hill Coal Co. v. Abney's Adm'r, 101 S. W. 394, 395, 125 Ky. 355.

BUFFALO

As cattle, see Cattle.

BUFFET

Permission in a lease to use the premises as a "buffet" may be sufficient to authorize the selling of intoxicating liquors on the premises, and whether or not the parties so intended may be shown by parol evidence. Pine Beach Inv. Corp. v. Columbia Amusement Co., 56 S. E. 822, 823, 106 Va. 810.

"Sodomy" is derived from Sodom, where the crime was prevalent, and is carnal copulation by human beings against nature with penetration, but penetration of the mouth is not sufficient, and consent does not affect its criminality, but makes the consenting party an accomplice; and buggery is the same offense between a man and a beast. Commonwealth v. Poindexter, 118 S. W. 943, 944, 133 Ky. 720.

BUGGY

As necessities, see Necessaries (For Infants).

As tool, see Tools—Tools of Trade.

A contrivance, consisting of a tongue with two wheels at its rear end, connected by an axle, and used to raise beams from the ground and hold them suspended under the axle, is a "buggy." Pluckham v. American Bridge Co., 93 N. Y. Supp. 748, 749, 104 App. Div. 404.

BUGGY THE WHEELS

In the manufacture of car wheels, the wheels when cast were carried by running pulleys suspended from an overhead rail to an annealing pit, where they were covered for cooling purposes, the work of molding the wheels requiring the services of 40 or 50 men, amongst whom were two whose duty it was to "buggy the wheels" after they were raised by derricks from the molds. "This process of bugging was employed by an employé in this way: He caught a wheel after it had been taken from the mold and placed it in the proper position with an apparatus like ice tongs which had a shaft four or five feet long with a short crossbar at the end for a handle and pulled it along behind him under the overhanging rail from which it was suspended to its place of destination. The work of raising the hot wheel from the mold and taking it to the annealing pit required rapid action to prevent spoiling it from hasty or improper cooling. Portas v. Griffin Wheel Co., 160 Fed. 648, 649, 87 C. C. A. 544.

BUILD

See Building Contractor; Person Who Builds; Rebuild.

"One of the definitions of 'build' found in the Century dictionary is 'to form by uniting materials into a regular structure.'" In re Rutland Realty Co., 157 Fed. 296, 297.

Const. art. 10, § 6, provides that the General Assembly shall not have power to authorize any county or township to levy a tax or issue bonds for any purpose, "except for educational purposes, to build and repair roads, buildings and bridges, etc." Act Feb. 20, 1908 (25 St. at Large, p. 1431), providing for free bridges across certain rivers between counties named, the purchase thereof by a township, and the issue of bonds, if approved by the electors for the purposes of such purchase, conferred authority to "build" or purchase and to maintain such bridge, etc. Held, that the purpose of the Constitution was to leave the Legislature free to authorize counties and townships to establish and maintain public roads, buildings, and bridges, and that the word "build" might be employed in the sense of obtain, secure, or acquire, as well as in the ordinary meaning, and that hence the purchase of standing bridges was not in violation of the Constitution (citing 1 Words and Phrases). Verner v. Muller, 72 S. E. 393, 89 S. C. 545.

As repair

To "build" is to construct and raise anew, and not simply to amend or repair something previously constructed. Attorney General ex rel. Gibson v. Board of Sup'rs of Montcalm County, 104 N. W. 792, 794, 141 Mich. 590 (quoting and adopting definition in State v. White, 18 Atl. 179, 1038, 16 R. I. 591).

BUILDER

A "builder" is one whose occupation is to build or erect buildings and structures, and he is not in the same class as an architect, who makes plans and specifications for others. People ex rel. v. Lower, 96 N. E. 346, 347, 251 Ill. 527, 36 L. R. A. 1203.

A "builder," in both its literary and legal signification means, one whose occupation it is to build, who controls and directs the work of construction, and as used in Laws Wash. 1899-90, p. 128, entitled "an act for the protection of builders," it is synonymous with the word "contractor." State v. Clark, 86 Pac. 1067, 43 Wash. 664.

BUILDER'S LIEN

The term "builder's lien," in a contract providing that the contractor shall have a builder's lien, has reference to the lien described in the Constitution and the statutes, and extends, not only to the house or building erected, but also to the lot or lots of land necessarily connected therewith. June & Co. v. Doke, 80 S. W. 402, 406, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 240.

Sand. & H. Dig. § 6251, giving a lien to every mechanic, "builder," artisan, workman, or laborer, or other person who shall do or perform any work or labor, does not apply to a contractor who furnishes a place for labor and appliances necessary for the building of a railroad, but personally does no labor or work. Little Rock, etc., R. Co. v. Spencer, 47 S. W. 196, 197, 65 Ark. 183, 42 L. R. A. 334.

Whether or not a covenant that "not more than one building shall be erected upon a single lot" is violated by the erection of a structure whose exterior walls, foundation, and roof constitute it one building, but whose interior arrangement and entrances show that it is to constitute two residences, is not so clear that a court of equity will aid in its enforcement. Fortesque v. Carroll, 75 Atl. 923, 76 N. J. Eq. 583, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 79.

Laws 1897, p. 467, c. 415, § 18, provides that one employing another to furnish labor in the erection, repairing, etc., of a house, building, or structure, shall not furnish or erect for performance of such labor unsafe scaffolding, ladders, or other mechanical contrivances, and section 19 requires all scaffolding to be constructed so as to bear four times the maximum weight to be placed thereon.

Plaintiff, while repairing a car 47 feet long, 8½ feet wide, and 16 feet high, jacked up about 6 feet above the floor of the shops, and around which was erected a staging of "painter's horses," like ladders with rungs about 12 inches apart, and planks placed on them about 8 feet above the floor, was injured by breaking of a plank. Held, that "house," in common speech, embraced every structure designed for human habitation, but in a legal sense was even more comprehensive, and "building" included every form of artificial house, as well as many other structures, and "structure," in its broadest sense, included any artificial production composed of parts joined together in a definite manner, and, in view of the meaning of the terms, and of the language of the statute, the word "structure" used therein did not include merely structures similar to those mentioned, and included the car on which he worked when injured. Caddy v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 88 N. E. 747, 195 N. Y. 415, 80 L. R. A. (N. S.) 30.

"All permanent structures intended to shelter human beings or domestic animals, or to receive, retain, or confine the goods in which a person deals, or to house the tools or machinery he uses, or the persons he employs in his business, are commonly called 'buildings.'" An ordinance providing that no person shall use any "engine in any building" in a fire precinct without the written consent of the city engineer includes a structure erected for an engine and consisting of a roof made of boards and roofing paper and supported by rows of posts and fire walls composed of boards and piles of wood. City of Concord v. Morgan, 64 Atl. 725, 726, 74 N. H. 32.

Where a plant for the manufacture of caustic soda and other by-products of salt by electricity was erected on leased land, and the lease provided that if it was terminated before November 15, 1909, the buildings could not be removed, not only the building materials that went into the construction of the buildings, but also such fixtures and attachments as were built into and constituted a part of the plant which could be utilized for no other purpose, were a part of the "buildings," and, were not removable either under the contract or as trade fixtures. Niagara Falls Hydraulic Power & Mfg. Co. v. Schermerhorn, 111 N. Y. Supp. 576, 585, 60 Misc. Rep. 209.

A lease of the top loft of a building provided that if the premises leased should be injured by fire, but not rendered untenable, they should be speedily repaired at the lessor's expense; but, if the damage should be so extensive as to render the premises untenable, the rent should be proportionately paid to the time of such damage, and should thereafter cease till they should be put in good repair; but, in case of such destruction of the "building" as to make it necessary to rebuild it, the rent should be paid up to the time of the destruction. Held, that the word "building," having its ordinary meaning, and referring to the whole building, and not merely to the leased premises, there was, in case of the destruction of the loft only, an express agreement that the rent should cease only till such premises were put in good repair, so that the provision of Real Property Law (Consol. Laws, c. 50) § 227, for surrender without liability for subsequent rent, in the absence of express agreement to the contrary, in case of the leased premises being made untenable, is inapplicable. Friedlander v. Citron, 125 N. Y. Supp. 510, 512, 140 App. Div. 489.

Basement

In computing the value of a wooden building upon a concrete basement, to determine whether it has been damaged to the extent of 30 per cent. of its value within the contemplation of the ordinance only the value of the wooden superstructure is to be considered; the basement not being a part of the "building" for such purpose. Davison v. City of Walla Walla, 100 Pac. 981, 982, 52 Wash. 453, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 454, 132 Am. St. Rep. 983.

Box car or railroad car

The act known as Senate File 150, Laws 1905, c. 184, examined, and held, that the enumeration of buildings contained within section 1 of the act, which includes "railroad car," comes fairly within, and is not broader than, the title, which mentions buildings of all character. Hardin v. State, 138 N. W. 146, 147, 92 Neb. 298.

A box car is not a "building," which implies a permanent structure, and not a part of the rolling stock of a railroad company which may be moved at will along the line of the railroad. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Berry, 110 S. W. 1049, 1051, 86 Ark. 309.

Bulkhead

A "bulkhead," which is a necessary feature of water front property, was not prohibited by an ordinance enacting that no "building" of any kind or description whatsoever than said piers and bridges shall hereafter be erected on said streets." Timpson v. Mayor, 39 N. Y. Supp. 248, 250, 5 App. Div. 424.

Fence

Whether in any particular case the word "buildings" includes fences depends upon the circumstances of the case. John T. Moore Planting Co. v. Morgan's Louisiana & T. R. & S. S. Co., 53 South. 22, 25, 126 La. 840.

A fence maintained across land acquired by a city for street purposes is a "building," within Greater New York Charter, Laws 1901, p. 406, c. 466, § 971, authorizing the board of estimate and apportionment to permit any building wholly or partially within the limits of an unopened street to remain unremoved for such time or times as they shall think proper. Parsons Bros. v. City of New York, 77 N. E. 1192, 184 N. Y. 604.

A deed to plaintiff's grantor, whereby it was provided that no dwelling or other house or "building," or any part thereof or projection therefrom, should be built on defendant's remaining land within a certain distance of the premises conveyed, restricted defendant only in reference to the house to be built on the land, and did not prevent the building of a wall by him, even though it should extend from the house into the restricted space. "The word 'building' cannot be held to include every species of erection on land, such as fences, gates, or other like structure. Taken in its broadest sense, it can mean only an erection intended only for use and occupation as a habitation or for some purpose of trade, manufacture, ornament, or use, constituting a fabric or edifice, such as a house, a store, a church, a shed." Clark v. Lee, 70 N. E. 47, 185 Mass. 223 (citing Truesdell v. Gay, 79 Mass. [13 Gray] 811; Nowell v. Boston Academy of Notre Dame, 130 Mass. 209).

There is no well-established legal definition of the word "building," which absolutely and under all circumstances either includes or excludes a "fence," and the question greatly depends on the connection in which the word "building" is used, and the evident purpose of the statute and contract in which it is found. Under St. 1897, p. 459, § 25, subd. 8, providing that the county supervisor shall have power under such limitations as may be provided by law to provide such public buildings as may be necessary, and that none shall be constructed until plans and specifications shall have been made therefore and adopted by the board, and that all such "buildings" must be erected by contract let to the lowest responsible bidder, after notice by publication in a newspaper, the board cannot let a contract to build a fence around the courthouse without such notice and compliance with other provisions of the statute. Swasey v. Shasta County, 74 Pac. 1031, 1032, 141 Cal. 392.

Jail cells

Cells in a jail, consisting of steel tanks or cages erected in but independent of the jail building, are not within Pol. Code, § 4041, subd. 8 (St. 1907, p. 368, c. 282), requiring a county board to award contracts for public "buildings" to the lowest bidder based on plans and specifications previously adopted, but are "furnishings," as to which there is no such requirement. Sarver v. Los Angeles County, 108 Pac. 917, 918, 156 Cal. 187.

Loft of barn

Under an accident policy providing for double indemnity for injuries caused by the "burning of a building," recovery may be had for death resulting from injuries received in the burning of the contents of the loft of a barn. Wilkinson v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 88 N. E. 550, 553, 240 Ill. 205, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1256, 130 Am. St. Rep. 269.

Overhanging windows, eaves, and other projections

Where defendants covenanted that no building should be erected on a lot adjoining the property sold nearer than three feet from the party line, the term "building" was not limited to the main body of the structure erected on such adjoining lot, but included overhanging bay windows and eaves. Supplee v. Cohen, 83 Atl. 373, 374, 80 N. J. Eq. 83.

The term "building," as used in a restriction in a deed that no "building" shall be placed at a less distance than 20 feet from the easterly line of a street, included a piazza about eight feet wide encircled by a railing and having a roof supported by posts attached to the house and extending along the entire front within the restricted limits. Reardon v. Murphy, 40 N. E. 854, 163 Mass. 501.

Portable structure

A portable schoolhouse of a city, movable from place to place as the exigencies require, is not a "building" within Laws 1898, c. 123, art. 4, § 828, providing for the filing of a map which in case of opening streets shall show the course of the proposed street and the lots and buildings thereon which shall be "taken or destroyed," especially where the schoolhouse was placed within the limits of a proposed street after the filing of the map, and was simply to be moved by the school authorities, and they could not claim compensation for moving the house, they having notice of the proposed street in consequence of the filing of the map. Whiteley v. City of Baltimore, 77 Atl. 882, 883, 113 Md. 541.

A lunch wagon moved from without to within the fire limits, placed on a city lot, and there connected with gas, telephone, and electric light wires for business purposes, is a "building or structure," as used in an ordinance prohibiting the erection of any frame building within certain fire limits, and prohibiting the removal of any wooden building from without to within the fire limits. Town of Montclair v. Amend, 68 Atl. 1067, 1068.

Real estate

The term "buildings" includes the real estate on which they are situated, unless the general meaning of the terms is modified by the language of the context. A devise of all the rents of a building carries the property itself; there being nothing in the statutes to prevent the operation of such rule. Gidley v. Lovenberg, 79 S. W. 831, 832, 835, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 203 (citing Cassino v. Ursuline Academy, 64 Tex. 675).

Repairing or remodeling distinguished

The words "repairing" and "remodeling" are not synonymous or included within the meaning of the word "building," within an ordinance prohibiting the erection of a wooden building within the fire limits. City of Mayville v. Rosing, 123 N. W. 393, 395, 19 N. D. 98, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 120.

Room

An accident policy, insuring against accidents "caused by the burning of a building" while the insured is therein, insures against accidents caused by fire in a building; and hence a death caused by the burning of the contents of a room in a building was "caused by the burning of a building," within the terms of such policy, and it is immaterial whether more or less of the building itself was actually consumed. Houlihan v. Preferred Acc. Ins. Co., 111 N. Y. Supp. 1048, 1049, 127 App. Div. 630.

Stable

In a restriction in a deed that no building shall be erected upon the granted premises to cost less than a certain sum, and that but one building, a private stable excepted, shall be erected, the word "building" includes a stable. Peck v. Hartshorn, 75 N. E. 133, 134, 189 Mass. 110.

Steps

Stone steps, designed and fitted to provide the only entrance from a street to a building, so as to make the building accessible, are a part of the "building," though the steps are not in actual contact with the building; and where they have been maintained within the limits of a street for over 40 years they may not be removed by the public authorities. *Smith v. BUILDING (In Criminal Law)

Pen. Code, § 542, defines arson as the burning of a building; and section 543 defines a building as "any house, edifice, structure, vessel or other erection, capable of affording shelter for human beings, or appurtenant thereto, or connected with an erection so adapted." Section 720 makes it an offense to burn stacks of hay, grain, fences, etc. Held, that an ordinary box car, in use as a freight car, is a building, within section 542. State v. Lintner, 104 N. W. 205, 19 S. D. 447.

One who breaks and enters a freight car resting on timbers on railroad ground after the removal of the trucks, and occupied by section hands as a lodging place, and who commits larceny therein, violates Code, § 4791, punishing the burglary of any office, shop, store, warehouse, railroad car, or any building in which goods are kept, though the structure is not a railroad car as alleged, but is a building within the statute. State v. Anderson, 135 N. W. 405, 406, 154 Iowa, 701.

Cellar, or basement, and garret

The word "building" includes the cellar or basement as completely as it does the garret. State v. Brower, 104 N. W. 284, 285, 127 Iowa, 687 (citing Mitchell v. Commonwealth, 11 S. W. 209, 88 Ky. 349).

Dugout or cave

A dugout or cave 13 feet long, 10 feet wide, and 7 feet deep, mostly below the surface, covered with a roof, and entered through a door fastened to the structure, and used for the preservation of vegetables and the like, is a building within Crimes Act, § 107 (Gen. St. 1901, § 2100), punishing every person who shall injure maliciously the door or window of any dwelling or building being the property of another. State v. Sanders, 106 Pac. 1029, 1030, 81 Kan. 836.

Hotel

A hotel is a "building" within Cr. Code, § 38, defining burglary as the breaking or entering of a dwelling house or other building. "In Orrell v. People, 94 Ill. 456, 34 Am. Rep. 241, it was held that a stable is the equivalent of a building. In Gillock v. People, 49 N. E. 712, 171 Ill. 307, it was held that a chicken house was a building within the meaning of such statute. * * * A building has been defined to be a fabric or edifice constructed for use or convenience." It must be permanent and designed for the habitation of men or animals or the shelter of property. Bruen v. People, 69 N. E. 24, 26, 206 Ill. 417.

Portable structure

A small chicken coop which may be moved about from place to place is not a building within Rev. St. § 6835, declaring it burglary to maliciously and forcibly break and enter any dwelling house, kitchen, smoke house, etc., or any other building. Bailey v. State, 26 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 375, 376.

Residence distinguished

An indictment charging larceny from the "residence" of M. under Comp. Laws 1897, § 11551, prohibiting larceny from any "building" on fire, was not objectionable on the ground that the term "residence" was not synonymous with "building." People v. Klammer, 100 N. W. 600, 187 Mich. 399.

Wharf

A house or "building" within the meaning of Pen. Code 1895, §§ 178, 179, defining larceny from the house, is a structure having a roof and lateral inclosure of some sort in which persons live or work, animals are confined, or property is stored or contained. A wharf or landing place where vessels are brought to discharge or take on cargoes, and where freight is placed awaiting removal, covered by a roof but otherwise wholly uninclosed, it is not a house or "building" within the statute. A "building" is defined as an edifice for any use; that which is built as a dwelling house, barn, etc. McCabe v. State, 58 S. E. 277, 1 Ga. App. 719.

BUILDING (In Insurance)

The words "building" and "premises" are sometimes used interchangeably in prohibitive clauses of insurance policies. These words were so used in the clause of a policy prohibiting the keeping of explosives. Kenefick v. Norwich Union Fire Ins. Society, 103 S. W. 957, 959, 205 Mo. 294.

Barn

Under an accident policy, providing for double indemnity for injuries caused by the burning of a "building," recovery may be had for death resulting from injuries received in the burning of the contents of the loft of a barn. Wilkinson v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 88 N. E. 550, 553, 240 Ill. 205, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1256, 130 Am. St. Rep. 269.

Wall

Rev. St. § 3691, providing that the foundation walls shall not be considered as part of a building in settling losses, does not prohibit the insurance of the foundation walls, but does provide that they shall not be considered a part of the building or structure in settling the loss; and where the building is also insured the cellar and foundation walls must be insured for a specific sum, and described separately. German-American Ins. Co. v. McBee, 97 N. E. 378, 379, 85 Ohio St. 161.

BUILDING (In Lien Laws)

Where the claimant of a mechanic's lien agreed to do work upon three structures, which stood on one lot and were connected on the street line by a framework attached to each, and there was a door placed therein for the use of occupants of both structures, and in each there were cellar windows opening upon the passway, the certificate of lien claiming a lien on a certain "building" and upon the lot was a sufficient description notwithstanding the adaptation of the structures to separate use. Cronan v. Corbett, 62 Atl. 662, 663, 78 Conn. 475.

Sidewalk

A mechanic laying a sidewalk in the street in front of real estate of his employer is not entitled to a lien thereon, under Mills' Ann. St. § 2867, giving a lien for "building, repairs, and improvements" on real estate. Fleming v. Prudential Ins. Co., 73 Pac. 752, 753, 19 Colo. App. 126.

BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION

As engaged in mercantile pursuit, see Mercantile.

Insolvency, see Insolvency—Insolvent.

See, also, Premium.

"Building and loan associations," as used in the statute regulating such associations (Rev. St. 1892, §§ 2205-2213), are corporations, societies, organizations, or associations doing a saving and loan investment business on the building society plan, to wit, loaning their funds to members only, whether issuing certificates of stock which mature at a fixed time or not. Skinner v. Southern Home Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 35 South. 67, 68, 46 Fla. 547.

Building and loan associations are a peculiar kind of corporation usually composed of aggregations of people dealing exclusively among themselves in accumulating a savings fund for investment in homes, more in the nature of limited co-operative home building copartnerships than commercial bodies. Commonwealth v. Home & Savings Fund Co. Bldg. Ass'n, 106 S. W. 221, 222, 127 Ky. 537, 32 Ky. Law Rep. 435.

A "building and loan association" is "a private corporation, designed for the accumulation by the members of their money by periodical payments into its treasury, to be invested from time to time in loans to the members upon real estate for home purposes, the borrowing members paying interest and a premium as a preference in securing loans over other members and continuing their fixed periodical installments in addition, all of which payments together with the nonborrower's payments, including fines for failure to pay such fixed installments, forfeitures for such continued failure of such payments, fees for transferring stock, membership fees required upon the entrance of the member into the society, and such other revenues, go into the common fund until such time as that the installment, payments, and profits aggregate the face value of all the shares in the association, when the assets, after payment of expenses and losses, are prorated among all members, which in legal effect cancels the borrower's debt and gives the nonborrower the amount of his stock." A foreign corporation issuing contracts which provide for small monthly payments by contract holders, which produce the home maturity fund from which loans are made to these contributors for the purpose of building homes, making improvements and discharging incumbrances on real estate, is a building, loan, and saving association, within the meaning of Laws 1890, p. 62, c. 4, § 22, which declares that the name "building and loan association" shall include all corporations doing a saving and loan or investment business on the building society plan, whether neutral or otherwise, and whether issuing certificates of stock which mature at a time fixed in advance or not, though the persons with whom it contracts and to whom loans are made are not members of the corporation; the statute imposing no penalty for noncompliance therewith, and Laws 1903, p. 219, c. 116, § 5, permitting building and loan associations to loan to nonmembers. State ex rel. Atkinson v. Co-Operative Homebuilders, 91 Pac. 953, 47 Wash. 235 (quoting and adopting definition in Thompson, Bldg. Ass'ns, p. 2).

The general purpose of "building associations" is the accumulation of funds to be loaned to their members and to be repaid in small periodical payments. They are authorized by statute to borrow money for temporary use when applications for loans exceed the accumulations in the treasury and when a series of stock has matured. The issuing by them of full-paid stock to serve the same purpose as borrowing is an enlargement of their scope of operations not inconsistent with their original design if properly restricted. Folk v. State Capital Savings & Loan Ass'n, 63 Atl. 1013, 1019, 214 Pa. 529.

Laws 1895, c. 114, entitled "An act to provide for the examination and supervision of building and loan associations," in section 2 provided that "building and loan associations," as used in the statute, should include all corporations, societies, organizations, or associations doing business under a building and loan charter, or engaging in a building and loan business. Laws 1897, c. 126, amended section 2, so that the name "building and loan association" should include all corporations, etc., doing business under a building and loan charter, or engaged in a building and loan business, "but which need not necessarily be mutual." Held, that the amendment introduced into the original act a new subject of legislation, rendering the amendatory act invalid, as violative of Const. art. 2, § 17, declaring that no law shall embrace more than one subject, which must be embraced in the title. State v. Folk, 135 S. W. 776, 777, 124 Tenn. 119.

A corporation which made loans and required payment of an entrance fee after a certain number of payments, a person being able to obtain a loan to be secured by mortgage, held a "building and loan association," within Acts 1907, c. 79, § 78, subd. V—c (Code Supp. 1909, c. 54, § 78, subd. V—c), requiring such associations to procure a certificate authorizing doing of business in the state. Standard Home Co. v. Reed, 74 S. E. 877, 70 W. Va. 636.

Building society plan

By the use of the term "building society plan" in section 4 of Laws 1893, c. 4158, relating to foreign building and loan associations, providing "that the name 'building and loan associations,' as used in this act, shall include all corporations, organizations, or associations doing a saving and loan investment business on the building society plan, viz., loaning its funds to its members only, whether issuing certificates of stock which mature at a fixed time or not," the Legislature must have had reference to some definite plan and not to whatever scheme under a like name might be devised in the various states or foreign country, and hence it is not improper to assume the legislators, in the use of such term, must have had in mind the auction plan with which they were familiar. Skinner v. Southern Home Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 35 South. 67, 69, 46 Fla. 547.

As membership corporation

See Membership Corporation.

BUILDING CONTRACTOR

See Builder.

One who carries on his trade of brick-laying by contracting with builders and other contractors to lay a part, or all, of the brick required in their work of construction, either at a stated sum per thousand, or at a fixed price for the part of the job undertaken, but who does not contract with the owner, or even furnish the brick laid, is not a "building contractor," within Act Congress July 1, 1902, § 46, imposing an annual license tax of $25 upon "building and other contractors." Wilson v. District of Columbia, 26 App. D. C. 110, 113.

BUILDING FOR RELIGIOUS WORSHIP

The residence of a person or clergyman is not exempt from taxation as a "building for religious worship" under Public Laws, cap. 533, No. 141876, because it contains one room set apart for a chapel for religious worship. St. Joseph's Church v. Assessor of Taxes, 12 R. I. 19-20, 34 Am. Rep. 597.

BUILDING FOR TRADE OR MANUFACTURE

A farm building, commonly called a tobacco shed, used by a farmer to dry, cure, and fit for market tobacco grown on the farm, is not a "building for trade or manufacture," within St. 1898, § 1263, providing that no public highway shall be laid out through any building other than a building used for purposes of trade or manufacture, etc. Sharpe v. Hasey, 114 N. W. 1118, 134 Wis. 618.

BUILDING INSPECTOR

As officer, see Officer.

BUILDING INTENDED FOR OCCUPATION

The term "building intended" for the occupation of human beings," in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, §§ 863, 864, providing that the lessor of a "building intended for the occupation of human beings" must, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, put it in a condition fit for such occupation, etc., does not include a building occupied for the purpose of business or trade; and a lessor, renting the second story of a store building in a block for printing and publishing a newspaper therein, is not bound to put the building in a condition fit for such occupation, in the absence of an agreement to that effect. Tucker v. Bennett, 81 Pac. 423, 425, 15 Okl. 187.

BUILDING LINE

A building line, see A.

The term "building line" is not of doubtful or obscure meaning but is a well-understood term when used upon town or city plats. The reservation is an easement for the benefit of the public and especially of the property abutting on that street in the subdivision. The space between the building and the street belongs absolutely to the owner of the lot subject to this easement, and the owners of this and the other lots in the subdivision are guaranteed whatever benefit may result from an unobstructed view across the entire reservation. Eckhart v. Irons, 20 N. E. 687, 689, 690, 123 Ill. 568; Simpson v. Nikelsen, 63 N. E. 1036, 1037, 196 Ill. 575.

The St. Louis city charter, which authorizes the assembly to establish a "building line" along boulevards, does not prevent the assembly from establishing different building lines along the same boulevard; the word "line," as used in the charter, meaning a mark of division or demarkation, an outline or contour, a limit or boundary, and not a straight line. City of St. Louis v. Handlan, 145 S. W. 421, 422, 423, 242 Mo. 88.

BUILDING LOT

Authority given in a will to sell certain "building lots" does not include the right to sell a lot on which a building then stood. Cheney's Ex'r v. Stafford, 56 Atl. 88, 89, 76 Vt. 16.

BUILDING MATERIAL

The words "building material," as used in an ordinance providing that any person may use the streets in the construction of any new building or in the removal, repair, or alteration of any building to pile "building material" thereon, should be liberally construed to cover materials for the construction of any kind of improvement of the premises. Christman v. Meierhoffer, 92 S. W. 141, 144, 116 Mo. App. 46.

BUILDING OR MONUMENTAL STONE

Japanese garden lanterns of granite, completely manufactured articles, imported in separated pieces merely for convenience of shipment, are not "building or monumental stone" within the Tariff Act. United States v. A. A. Vantine & Co., 166 Fed. 751, 752, 92 C. C. A. 431.

"Building stone" is one which enters structurally into the composition of a building, not something added as pure ornament to a structure complete without it. So-called "Mexican Onyx" not being a chalcedony or onyx proper, as defined in mineralogy, but being a carbonate of lime, containing a small proportion of carbonate of magnesia and ferrous oxides, and having the other characteristics of marble in respect of texture, hardness, and capacity for being worked and polished, is not building stone other than "marble," within the provision of paragraph 467, Tariff Ind. (new), Schedule N, Tariff Act March 3, 1883. Batterson v. Magone, 48 Fed. 289-291.

BUILDING, PREMISES, OR LAND

Liquor Tax Law (Laws 1896, p. 66, c. 112) § 24, subd. 1, prohibiting liquor traffic within one-half mile of any "building, premises, or land" occupied as a state hospital, must be liberally construed, and the quoted clause is not confined to the grounds upon which the buildings stand but includes contiguous premises belonging to a state hospital and used by it for garden purposes. In re Brady, 106 N. Y. Supp. 921.

BUILDING RESTRICTIONS

See Restriction.

As incumbrance, see Incumbrance.

As private property, see Private Property.

BUILDINGS USED FOR PUBLIC CHARITY

Buildings and grounds used by a sisterhood solely as a public hospital, the members receiving no compensation, and their earnings and lives being devoted to charity, are exempt from taxation under the constitutional provision exempting buildings and grounds and materials used exclusively for public charity, though pay patients are received; the proceeds being used to maintain the institution. Hot Springs School Dist. v. Sisters of Mercy of Female Academy of Little Rock, Ark., 106 S. W. 954, 955, 84 Ark. 497.

Vacant lots owned by the Young Women's Christian Association, purchased with money provided and to be used for acquiring a site, and erecting thereon a building suitable for the purposes of the organization, are not within the meaning of Rev. St. § 2732, which provides that all buildings belonging to, and lands actually occupied by, charitable institutions, shall be exempt from taxation. Young Women's Christian Ass'n v. Spencer, 29 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 249, 250.

BUILDING USED FOR SCHOOL PURPOSES

A building used as a private military boarding school is not deprived of its exemption from taxation, under Const. art. 10, § 6, and Rev. St. 1899, § 9119, as a building used exclusively for school purposes, by the fact that the proprietor with his family resides in the building, he having no avocation but conducting the school, in which the family participates. State ex rel. Spillers v. Johnston, 113 S. W. 1083, 1086, 214 Mo. 656, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 171.

BUILT

See Foreign Built.

Anything which is "built" is formed "by uniting materials into a regular structure," and that which is "rebuilt" is constructed "after having been demolished." United States v. Blair, 190 Fed. 372, 374.

Pub. Laws 1911, c. 702, § 2, provides that every theater "hereafter erected" shall be built to comply with the regulations of such section, etc. Held, that the word "erected," as so used, was synonymous with "built," and hence the act was not restricted to subsequent erection of a new building, but applied as well to the alteration of a stable into a theater, consisting of a demolition of a large part of the stable, and using only such parts of the walls, etc., as were suitable for the new construction. Greenough v. Allen Theater & Realty Co., 80 Atl. 260, 264, 33 R. I. 120.

BUILT UP

See Closely Built Up.

BULK

See In Bulk; Stored in Bulk.

See, also, Laden.

"Bulk" is said to be that which is neither counted, weighed, nor measured. Riggs v. State, 121 N. W. 588, 589, 590, 84 Neb. 335 (quoting 1 Words and Phrases, p. 903).

Bulk of my property

The phrase "bulk of my property," when used in a will, is vague, uncertain, and indefinite. It may vary from a little over half to nearly the whole estate and is not susceptible of being rendered certain by any proceedings within the power of a court. Smullin v. Wharton, 103 N. W. 288, 295, 73 Neb. 667.

BULKHEAD

As building, see Building.

BULL SET

A "bull set" is a steel implement five or six inches long; one end of it suitably shaped and tempered for breaking stone, the other end left with the steel unhardened and to be hammered upon. Golden v. Ellis, 71 Atl. 649, 650, 104 Me. 177.

BULLETS

"Bullets" is a technical term for steel wire plugs inserted in the points of umbrella sticks. Evans v. Newark Rivet Works, 121 Fed. 133, 134.

BUMMER

"Bum" is a contraction in common use for "bummer," signifying a worthless fellow without any visible means of support. State v. Gartrell, 71 S. W. 1045, 1051, 171 Mo. 489.

BUMPER

The extensions of the floors of street cars at either end which constitute the platforms are not "bumpers" in the sense in which that term is applied to freight and passenger cars operated in trains on steam railroad lines. Durkee v. Hudson Valley R. Co., 86 N. E. 537, 538, 193 N. Y. 555.

A petition in an action for personal injuries to a sawmill employé by the breaking of a piston rod, which threw a piece of the piston head against plaintiff, alleged negligence in keeping a worn-out and unsafe bracket pin, piston, and threads, and in failing to remedy such defects, and in undertaking to use the "short side" of the saw in the sawing of logs over 20 feet long, and in negligently striking with great force the "bumper," which defendant knew or should have known would tear up the machinery. The "bumper" is a wooden block, securely placed within four or six inches of the cylinder head of the engine to prevent the piston from flying out and doing damage, in case the piston rod should break. Held, that an instruction, submitting negligence in the construction or maintenance of the bumper, was reversible error; such negligence not being alleged. Thompson Bros. Lumber Co. v. Bryant (Tex.) 144 S. W. 290, 292.

"Bunched," in its ordinary sense, signifies collection, cluster, or tuft, particularly of things of the same kind growing or fastened together. Arrangements of hog bristles carefully put up with the roots all placed together at one end were subject to duty under Tariff Act July 24, 1907, c. 11, § 1, Schedule

N, par. 411, 30 Stat. 190, relating to bunched bristles. J. C. Pushee & Sons v. United States, 155 Fed. 265, 266.

BUNCO MEN

Two or more confederates, who, by gaining the confidence of a stranger on the ground of alleged professed acquaintance with him or his friends, lure him to a place where he is afterwards fleeced at some game, or robbed of his money, or otherwise victimized, are "bunco men," and "confidence men." People v. Simmons, 109 N. Y. Supp. 190, 193, 125 App. Div. 234.

BUNCO OR BUNKO STEERING

Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2178, provides that whoever lures, entices, or persuades another to any place, upon any pretense, and then by duress or fraud compels such person to win or lose, or advance or loan money, or execute or give his note or other obligation, either for money or anything of value, or to part with anything of value upon any game or wager, or by means of any trick, device, or artifice, is guilty of "bunco steering." Cruthers v. State, 67 N. E. 930-932, 161 Ind. 139.

An information which charges that defendant, by means of the fraudulent manner in which he threw playing cards, induced prosecutor to part with a specified sum of money on his ability to correctly describe one of the cards so thrown does not charge the offense of "bunko steering," as defined by Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2178, as by fraud inducing another to part with anything of value on any game, as it falls to charge that a wager was laid by the prosecutor or that he participated in the game. Clark v. State, 77 N. E. 52, 166 Ind. 288.

Accused, conspiring with other persons, induced the prosecuting witness to advance money to be used in betting on a wrestling match, and the same was lost, the wrestling match being fraudulent. Held that while accused was properly convicted of grand larceny under an indictment charging him with grand larceny, he might have been convicted under the same indictment of "bunko steering," defined by Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 2471, as enticing, persuading, or compelling another to lose, advance or loan money or anything of value, as the state may elect under which statute it will proceed. Fleming v. State, 91 N. E. 1085, 1086, 174 Ind. 264.

BUNDLE

"Bundle," as used in the testimony of a witness that he and others had picked up a man who had a "bundle," was used in the slang of the period to indicate a man who was intoxicated. Hartje v. Moxley, 85 N. E. 216-218, 235 Ill. 164.

Package synonymous

Generally the words "package" and "bundle," two words about as synonymous as can be, apply if they do not directly convey the exclusive idea of union or gathering together of several things attached or put up together; to put goods in a box or clothing in a trunk or bundle suggest the meaning of pack, and its derivative "package" is including several things. Henderson v. Ortte, 38 South. 440, 441, 114 La. 523.

BUNGALO OR RANCH BUILDING

A "bungalow or ranch building," all on one floor, has never been properly termed a flat, or the building a flat house. In this country flats or flat houses have usually been built of many stories one on each other, of which buildings there has been one or more suites of rooms fitted up for housekeeping purposes, and the bungalow is not within the term "flat," as used in a deed restricting the grantee from erecting on the premises any building which shall be used or occupied as a flat. Lignot v. Jaekle, 65 Atl. 221-223, 72 N. J. Eq. 233.

BURDEN

See Excessively Burdened.

The "burden," as used in an instruction that the burden is upon the plaintiff to show by a preponderance of the testimony his right to recover, could mean nothing less than the burden of proof. Goodwin v. Mortsen (Tex.) 128 S. W. 1182, 1184.

BURDEN OF PROOF

See Additional Burden.

"By 'onus probandi' is meant the obligation imposed upon a party who alleges the existence of a fact or thing necessary in the prosecution or defense of an action to establish it by proof." State v. Pressler, 92 Pac. 806, 808, 16 Wyo. 214, 15 Ann. Cas. 93.

The phrase "burden of proof," like the phrase "ordinary care," is a relative term, and must be considered, not only in the light of the conflict of evidence, but also with reference to the subject-matter to which the burden of proof relates. Liberty v. Haines, 68 Atl. 738, 741, 103 Me. 182.

The "burden of proof" is on the party who substantially asserts the affirmative of the issue, whether he is nominally plaintiff or defendant. Walker v. Carpenter, 57 S. E. 461, 144 N. C. 674.

The "burden" is upon the plaintiff to prove all the facts necessary to entitle him to recover. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. v. Wishert (Tex.) 89 S. W. 460, 461.

"To say that a party has the 'burden of proof,' is exactly the same thing as saying that the 'burden of proving' the facts in dispute rests upon him." New Castle Bridge

Co. v. Doty, 76 N. E. 557, 558, 37 Ind. App. 84.

Under Kirby's Dig. § 6196, declaring that in the argument the party having the burden of proof shall have the opening and conclusion and section 3107 declaring that the burden of proof in the whole action lies on the party who would be defeated if no evidence were given on either side, where, in an action on a note by the assignee, defendant admitted its execution, pleaded failure of consideration, and denied that the note was transferred before maturity, or that the assignee was a bona fide purchaser for value, defendant had the "burden of proof" and was entitled to open and close. Roberts v. Padgett, 101 S. W. 753, 82 Ark. 331.

The phrase "burden of proof" is often used in two different senses, as to indicate the burden resting upon the party holding the affirmative, to make out a prima facie case, in the first instance, and the burden resting upon a party to overcome a prima facie showing, by a preponderance of the testimony. Farnsworth v. Fraser, 100 N. W. 400, 402, 137 Mich. 296.

An instruction that "the burden" is on plaintiff to show by a "preponderance of the testimony" his right to recover is not objectionable for failure to use the term "the burden of proof," "the burden" being equivalent thereto; nor for use of the expression "preponderance of the testimony," instead of "preponderance of the evidence," there being nothing in the case to make a distinction between "testimony" and "evidence." Goodwin v. Mortsen (Tex.) 128 S. W. 1182, 1184.

"Burden," as used in an instruction, in an action for injuries to a passenger, that the company has the burden of proving, in order to refute the presumption of negligence, that the accident could not have been avoided by exercising the highest degree of care and diligence, was used in the sense of duty or obligation, and when so read the instruction is not subject to criticism. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hadley, 82 N. E. 1025-1028, 40 Ind. App. 731, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 527.

The "burden of proof" is a technical legal phrase and means that the burden is coextensive with the legal proposition sought to be proved and applies to every fact which is essential to or necessarily involved in the proposition. It means an obligation imposed on the party who alleges the existence of the fact or thing necessary in the prosecution or defense of an action to establish it by proof. Laurence L. Prince & Co. v. St. Louis Cotton Compress Co., 86 S. W. 873, 878, 112 Mo. App. 268 (quoting and adopting the definitions in Wilder v. Cowles, 100 Mass. 487, and Siefke v. Siefke, 22 N. Y. Supp. 546, 3 Misc. Rep. 81, and citing People v. McCann, 16 N. Y. 58, 69 Am. Dec. 642).

Burden of evidence distinguished

"Burden of proof" and "burden of evidence" are often confused. The phrase "burden of proof" is in fact more philosophical than practical. It means generally that a plaintiff, however often the evidence shifts, must, upon the whole, persuade the jury that his contention is right. The risk of nonpersuasion is all the time upon him. Foss v. McRae, 73 Atl. 827, 829, 105 Me. 140.

Under Rev. St. 1909, § 10,029, providing that every holder is deemed prima facie to be a holder in due course, but when it is shown that the title of any person who has negotiated the instrument was defective, the burden is on the holder to prove that he acquired title as holder in due course, the "burden of proof" is used in its strict sense as distinguished from "burden of evidence." Plaintiff by showing that he received the note before maturity in good faith and for valuable consideration did not shift the burden of proof on defendant; the "burden of proof" is the burden of producing a preponderance of evidence, while the "burden of evidence" means the burden that rests on a party to meet a prima facie case of fraud in the inception of a note. Link v. Jackson, 139 S. W. 588, 594, 158 Mo. App. 63.

Preponderance of evidence

The term "burden" or "burden of proof" is frequently used to signify simply the burden of meeting a prima facie case rather than the burden of producing a preponderance of evidence. Bonneau v. North Shore R. Co., 93 Pac. 106, 109, 152 Cal. 406, 125 Am. St. Rep. 68; Alabama & V. R. Co. v. Groome, 52 South. 703, 704, 97 Miss. 201.

When the subject-matter of a negative averment in an indictment or information relied on by accused as a justification or excuse lies peculiarly within his knowledge, the burden of proof as to such justification or excuse is on him; but the "burden of proof," in this connection, does not mean the quantum of evidence necessary to establish the truth of a proposition or issue, but merely the duty of producing some evidence to meet a prima facie case. State v. Carlisle (S. D.) 139 N. W. 127, 132.

The term "burden of proof" does not mean merely that it is incumbent on the party affirmatively asserting an allegation to establish it by a fair preponderance of the credible evidence, but the party on whom rests the burden of proof must, in order to entitle himself to a finding in his favor, give evidence not only of greater convincing power, but such as to convince the jury of the truth of his contention. Anderson v. Chicago Brass Works, 106 N. W. 1077, 1079, 127 Wis. 273.

Preponderance of evidence and "burden of proof" are not the same thing, although they run into each other. By preponderance of evidence is meant the evidence which possesses greater weight or convincing power; by "burden of proof" is meant the duty resting on the party having the affirmative of the issue to satisfy or convince the minds of the jury, by the preponderance of the evidence, of the truth of his contention. It is not enough that his evidence is of slightly greater weight or convincing power; it must go further and satisfy the minds of the jury before the "burden of proof" is discharged. Eichmann v. Buchheit, 107 N. W. 325, 328, 128 Wis. 385, 8 Ann. Cas. 435 (citing Anderson v. Chicago Brass Co., 106 N. W. 1077, 127 Wis. 273).

"By * * * 'burden of proof' is meant the greater weight of the testimony in the case." State v. Paulsgrove, 101 S. W. 27, 30, 203 Mo. 193.

By "burden of proof" is meant that the evidence to sustain a proposition thus to be proved is greater in weight and credibility than the evidence to the contrary. Sanitary Dairy Co. v. St. Louis Transit Co., 71 S. W. 726, 727, 98 Mo. App. 20.

The phrase "burden of proof" means the necessity of establishing the existence of a certain fact or set of facts by evidence which preponderates to the legally required extent, and in this sense the burden of proof is on the party maintaining the affirmative of the issue; but the phrase also means the necessity which rests on the party at any particular time during a trial to create a prima facie case in his own favor, or to overthrow one when created against him. Ruth v. Krone, 103 Pac. 960, 961, 10 Cal. App. 770.

An instruction that the happening of an accident did not show negligence, but that the burden was on plaintiff to prove negligence by a preponderance of the evidence, that if he failed to do so, or if the scale was evenly balanced, the verdict should be for defendant, sufficiently defined the burden of proof. Hate v. Crown Columbia Pulp & Paper Co., 105 Pac. 480, 482, 56 Wash. 286.

"The term 'burden of proof' is used in different senses. Sometimes it is used to signify the burden of making or meeting a prima facie case, and sometimes the burden of producing a preponderance of evidence. These burdens are often on the same party. But this is not necessarily or always the case. And it is by no means safe to infer that, because a party has the burden of meeting a prima facie case, therefore he must have a preponderance of evidence. It may be sufficient for him to produce just enough evidence adduced against him." Klunk v. Hocking Valley Ry. Co., 77 N. E. 752-754, 74 Ohio St. 125 (quoting and adopting Scott v. Wood, 22 Pac. 871, 81 Cal. 398); Valente v. Sierra R. Co. of California, 91 Pac. 481, 483, 151 Cal. 534 (quoting and adopting the definition in Scott v. Wood, 22 Pac. 871, 81 Cal. 398).

The term "burden" or "burden of proof" is frequently used to signify simply the burden of meeting a prima facie case rather than the burden of producing a preponderance of evidence, and as used in an instruction, in an action for injuries to a passenger, that the carrier is required to exercise the highest degree of care in the transportation of passengers, and that a showing that the injury was caused by the carrier's act in operating the instrumentalities employed in its business raises a presumption of negligence, which throws on the carrier the burden of showing that the injury was sustained without its negligence, imported nothing more and was therefore not erroneous as requiring defendant to overcome plaintiff's showing by a preponderance of the evidence, where the court charged that the plaintiff was required to prove her case by a preponderance of the evidence. Cody v. Market St. R. Co., 82 Pac. 666, 667, 148 Cal. 90 (citing Scott v. Wood, 22 Pac. 871, 81 Cal. 398, 400; Patterson v. S. F. & S. M. R. Co., 81 Pac. 531, 533, 147 Cal. 178; Kahn v. Triest-Rosenberg Cap Co., 73 Pac. 164, 139 Cal. 340, 344).

The court, in explaining the term "burden of proof," charged that the jury could not find in accordance with a particular contention unless it was "proved it was so," and defined the quoted words to mean a balance of proof in favor of that theory, and that plaintiff was required to make his side heavier, stronger in favor of the proposition in the minds of the jury, than that of the defendant. It was also charged that such damages as were proved by a preponderance of the evidence plaintiff was entitled to recover, and for those which had not been so proved there could be no recovery. Held, that such instructions were not erroneous. Soebel v. Boston Elevated R. Co., 83 N. E. 3, 197 Mass. 46, 14 Ann. Cas. 421.

An instruction defined the burden of proof as the duty of proving a fact by the preponderance of evidence. Preponderance of evidence was then defined to mean the greater convincing power of evidence, and was illustrated by saying that that side has furnished the preponderance of evidence which has produced evidence of greater convincing power in the minds of the jury than that produced by the other side. The instruction then stated that the party having the burden of proof might meet such burden by producing a preponderance of the evidence, and yet not lift the burden, because, although such evidence might be of slightly greater convincing power than that produced by his opponent, still his evidence might be weak, and that, to entitle him to a finding, his evidence must be such as to satisfy the minds of the jury of the truth of his contention. Held, that the instruction was not objectionable as self-contradictory, illogical, or misleading. Logeman Bros. Co. v. R. J. Preuss Co., 111 N. W. 64, 68, 181 Wis. 122.

Shifting of burden

"Burden of proof," in the sense of the duty of producing evidence, may be passed from one party to another as the case progresses, while in the sense of obligation to establish the proof of the claim on which plaintiff's case rests is upon him throughout the trial. Colston v. Bean, 62 Atl. 1015, 1016, 78 Vt. 283 (citing 9 Thayer, Ev.; 3 Greenl. Ev. 5).

The phrase "burden of proof" properly signifies the duty to establish the entire case by preponderance of evidence, in which sense it never shifts, and the duty to proceed to adduce evidence, in which sense it shifts when either party makes a prima facie case. Toube v. Rubin-Blankfort Co., 116 N. Y. Supp. 673, 674, 63 Misc. Rep. 298.

"Burden of proof" means the burden of establishing the case, and remains unchangeable throughout the entire case where the pleadings originally placed it, and is on him alone who has the affirmative, though the burden of the evidence may, during the trial, be shifted. Dorrell v. Sparks, 127 S. W. 103, 104, 142 Mo. App. 460.

The "burden of proof" is the duty resting on a party asserting the affirmative of an issue to establish it by a preponderance of evidence, which duty remains with him until the end of the trial, but, where such party makes a prima facie case, the duty of coming forward with evidence of sufficient weight to rebut it is shifted to the adverse party. Berger v. St. Louis Storage & Commission Co., 116 S. W. 444, 446, 136 Mo. App. 36.

In the sense of the burden of the evidence, the "burden of proof" may change from one side to the other as the trial proceeds; but in the sense of maintaining the issue involved in the action, it constantly remains on the party alleging the fact which constitutes the issue, and when all the evidence has been introduced the jury must determine whether it has been maintained. Carroll v. Boston Elevated R. Co., 86 N. E. 793, 797, 200 Mass. 527.

"Where the party having the 'burden of proof' establishes a prima facie case, and no proof to the contrary is offered, he will prevail. Therefore the other party, if he would avoid the effect of such prima facie case, must produce evidence of equal or greater weight, to balance and control it, or he will fail. Still the proof upon both sides applies to the affirmative or negative of one and the same issue or proposition of fact; and the party whose case requires the proof of that fact has all along the burden of proof. It does not shift, though the weight in either scale may at times preponderate." Klunk v. Hocking Valley Ry. Co., 77 N. E. 752, 755, 74 Ohio St. 125 (quoting and adopting Powers v. Russell, 30 Mass. [13 Pick.] 76).

The term "burden of proof" is used in different senses. In one sense the term marks or expresses the duty of the actor or party who has the risk or affirmative of the issue and will lose the case if he does not in the end establish such issue. In another sense the term means or expresses the burden or duty of the actor or party, in order to succeed, of going forward at any particular stage with the evidence, and really means that the burden is upon him to establish the particular claim, while the burden of the issue (that is, the burden of proof in the sense of ultimately proving or establishing the issue or case of the party upon whom such burden rests, as distinguished from the burden or duty of going forward and producing evidence) never shifts, but the burden or duty of going forward often does shift from one party to the other and sometimes back again. In general, the party who seeks to move a court in his favor, whether as an original plaintiff or as a defendant, who, by admitting plaintiff's contention and setting up an affirmative defense, becomes the real actor, must establish his claim. United States Wringer Co. v. Cooney, 73 N. E. 803, 805, 214 Ill. 520 (citing 1 Elliott on Evidence, §§ 129-139).

The term "burden of proof" has two distinct meanings. "It is used to refer: First, to the duty of establishing the truth of a given proposition or issue by such a quantum of evidence as the law demands in the case, whether civil or criminal, in which the issue arises; and, second, to the duty of producing evidence at the beginning, or at any subsequent stage of the trial, in order to make or meet a prima facie case." This burden of proof never shifts during the course of a trial, but remains to the end with the party asserting the affirmative of the issue. Here the burden of proof was on plaintiff to show that defendants were guilty of negligence, and it was not upon defendants to show that they were not guilty of negligence, and this burden of proof did not shift during the trial but remained with plaintiff to the end. In some of the text-books and decisions it is said that, by reason of the introduction of rebutting testimony by defendant in the case, the "burden of proof" is shifted, but "all that is meant by this is that there is a necessity of evidence to answer the prima facie case, or it will prevail, but the burden of maintaining the affirmative of the issue involved in the action is upon the party alleging the fact which constitutes the issue; and this burden remains throughout the trial." Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Mee, 75 N. E. 800-802, 218 Ill. 9, 2 N. R. A. (N. S.) 725, 4 Ann. Cas. 7 (citing Egbers v. Egbers, 52 N. E. 285, 177 Ill. 82; Jones on the Law of Evidence, § 175).

On the substantive issue between the parties the burden of proof never shifts. The words "burden of proof" are sometimes used in a secondary sense. In many cases the party having the burden of proof is assisted by presumptions. In some cases the presumptions are so strong that his adversary is required first to introduce some proof. To say, under such circumstances, that his adversary has the burden of proof means only that he has the burden only to introduce a certain quantum of proof, and when he has done so the issue is tried and the evidence weighed as upon any other issue; the party making the allegation having the burden of proof upon that issue. This is the logical use of the words "burden of proof." The party making the allegation of fact, whether it be an affirmative or negative, must, when the evidence is all in, have furnished more proof upon that fact than his adversary has, or he fails to establish his case. It is in this sense that, when the allegation of a negative fact is necessary to the statement of plaintiff's case, the burden of proof is upon him who alleges it to establish his case. So where a plaintiff, in an action to restrain a railroad company from entering upon his land and constructing a railroad, pleads that the defendant company has instituted condemnation proceedings and deposited the damages as required by law, and that the road is being constructed across his land pursuant to such proceedings, and that the proceedings are void because the road is in fact being constructed by and for another company, the burden is upon him to prove the latter allegation. Beckman v. Lincoln & N. W. R. Co., 112 N. W. 348, 351, 79 Neb. 89.

Weight of evidence distinguished

The burden of the proof and the weight of the evidence are two entirely distinct and separate things. The former does not change, but the latter may, according to the nature and strength of the proofs offered on the trial. Even when the plaintiff has made out a prima facie case, the burden of the proof does not shift to the defendant in any proper sense. All that is meant by such an expression is that the other party must go forward with his proofs, if he would not have a judgment against him. Gibbs v. Farmers' & Merchants' State Bank, 99 N. W. 703, 705, 123 Iowa, 738.

The term "burden of proof," stands for what is ordinarily meant by the use of the words. In pleading, the party who assumes the affirmative or proposition has thereby, under a rule of law, laid upon him the necessity of maintaining the issue or proposition to the end by being able at the conclusion of the evidence to point to a greater weight of evidence in support of the issue or proposition than appears against it; and this is all that the term "burden of proof" implies. When applied to the question of contributory negligence, the rule operates in precisely the same way as in the determination of any other fact, whether the affirmative is held by the plaintiff or by the defendant. "Burden of proof" and weight of evidence should not be confounded, as they have radically different meanings. The former is a question of law for the court, and the latter a question of fact for the jury. Where, in an action against a bridge company for the injury of an employé, contributory negligence was an issue, it was not error to instruct that the "burden" was cast upon the defendant to prove, by a "fair preponderance of the evidence," that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence; the instruction not having the effect of requiring defendant to prove such negligence by its own evidence. New Castle Bridge Co. v. Doty, 79 N. E. 485, 488, 168 Ind. 259 (citing Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Taylor, 63 N. E. 456, 158 Ind. 274; Fay v. Burdett, 81 Ind. 433, 443, 42 Am. Rep. 142; Carver v. Carver, 97 Ind. 497, 511).

BUREAU

See Head of a Bureau.

Webster's International Dictionary defines the verb "to establish" as "to appoint or constitute for permanence, as officers, laws, regulations," etc. The same authority defines or gives as the equivalent of "bureau" "a department of public business requiring a force of clerks; the body of officials in a department who labor under the direction of a chief." Bouvier says of the word "bureau": "In the classification of the ministerial officers of government, and in the distribution of duties among them, a bureau is understood to be a division of one of the great departments of which the secretaries or chief officers constitute the cabinet." A fair deduction from these definitions is that the word "bureau" in the connection and sense in which it is used in Const. art. 12, § 155, providing that the state corporation commission shall elect one of its members chairman of the same and shall have one clerk, one bailiff and such other clerks, officers, assistants and subordinates as may be provided by law and that the general assembly may establish subordinate divisions or bureaus of insurance, banking or other special branches of the business of that department, implies not merely a division where business is to be conducted under certain rules and regulations but includes the operating force as well, and hence Act March 9, 1906 (Laws 1906, c. 112), establishing a bureau of insurance, in providing that the commissioner of insurance shall be elected by the general assembly, does not contravene Const. art. 12, § 155, as the power of appointing the insurance commissioner was not given by the Constitution to the commission, but his election was intrusted to the general assembly by the provisions authorizing it to establish the bureau of insurance. Button v. State Corporation Commission of Virginia, 54 S. E. 769, 770, 105 Va. 634.

"Burglary" consists in entering a house with intent to commit grand or petit larceny or any felony. People v. Hower, 91 Pac. 507, 511, 151 Cal. 638 (citing People v. Phelan, 28 Pac. 855, 93 Cal. 111).

"Burglary" is the breaking and entering into a mansion house by night with intent to commit a felony." Claiborne v. State, 83 S. W. 352, 353, 113 Tenn. 261, 68 L. R. A. 859, 106 Am. St. Rep. 833.

Kirby's Dig. § 1603, defines "burglary" as the unlawful entering of a house or other building in the nighttime with the intent to commit a felony. McCarthy v. State, 119 S. W. 647, 648, 90 Ark. 384.

At common law "burglary" was the breaking and entering the dwelling house of another in the nighttime with intent to commit a felony therein. State v. Wilson, 125 S. W. 479, 480, 225 Mo. 503.

The opening of a closed door and entrance therein for the purpose of larceny is "burglary." State v. Brower, 104 N. W. 284, 127 Iowa, 687.

Under a statute providing that any person who enters any house, room, or store with intent to commit larceny or any felony is guilty of burglary, where defendants entered a store with intent to commit larceny therein, the fact that the act of entering was not of itself a trespass, but was during business hours, and while the store entered was open to the public, did not prevent the entry from constituting "burglary." People v. Brittain, 75 Pac. 314, 142 Cal. 8, 100 Am. St. Rep. 95 (citing People v. Barry, 94 Cal. 481, 29 Pac. 1026).

"Burglary" is the breaking into a house in the night season with intent to commit a felony, and if a house be so entered it is burglary, whether the felony be executed or not, and regardless of the kind of felony intended or the manner in which the felony may be frustrated, or the value of the property taken, or any other circumstance which is not intrinsic. On the other hand, while the circumstances which differentiate the crime may be a small part of the transaction and must always be the same, the things which occur in the perpetration of a crime change with every case and may be numerous. For example, when a burglary has been planned, in order to carry it out, or, in other words, to perpetrate it, the burglar must go to the building; he must break and enter it; he may effect his purpose or attempt it; and he must come away, for the very nature of the transaction implies that the burglar will not remain in the building. An infinite variety of things may happen in carrying out the crime. The perpetrator may kill a man while going to or trying to enter the building; he may kill a man after he has broken and entered the house; and he may kill a man while trying to escape either in the house or outside of it. Thus, where two, in furtherance of a common design, entered upon the perpetration of the burglary armed and prepared to kill if opposed, and while so engaged were discovered and one of the burglars, at a short distance from the building and on another lot, shot and killed a police officer who had commanded him to halt, the killing was "in the perpetration of the burglary" and was murder in the first degree. Conrad v. State, 78 N. E. 957, 959, 75 Ohio St. 52, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1154, 8 Ann. Cas. 966.

The offense of "burglary," which at common law consists in the unlawful breaking and entering of another's dwelling in the nighttime with intent to commit a felony, was enlarged by Kirby's Dig. §§ 1603-1605, defining burglary as the unlawful entering of a building at night with intent to commit a felony, and providing that the manner of breaking or entering is not material except to show intent, and that one with force entering a building in the nighttime with intent to commit a felony is guilty of burglary, so that an unlawful entry of a building in the nighttime without breaking, but with intent to commit a felony, is "burglary." One entering a saloon through the open door in the nighttime, but during business hours, with intent, formed before or at the moment he entered to commit a felony, is guilty of "burglary," though no fraud or deception was practiced on the owner in making the entry. Pinson v. State, 121 S. W. 751, 753, 91 Ark. 434.

Where, on a trial for burglary, the prosecutor positively testified that accused was inside the house, and that he could not have entered without opening a door, and accused denied entering the house and testified that he only went on its steps, a charge that a burglary is committed by entering a house by force with intent to commit theft, and that the entry must be made with actual force, but that the slightest force is sufficient to constitute a breaking, such as the opening of a door that is shut, was not objectionable as on the weight of the testimony, but was a correct definition of the offense. Snodgrass v. State (Tex.) 148 S. W. 1095, 1096.

Consummation of intent

"The offense of 'burglary' is complete without any larceny being committed." Sturges v. State, 102 Pac. 57, 61, 2 Okl. Cr. 362 (quoting and adopting definition in People v. Garnett, 29 Cal. 628).

Where there is a breaking and entry to commit theft, the offense of "burglary" is complete, notwithstanding an abandonment of the undertaking after the breaking and entry. Schwartz v. State, 114 S. W. 809, 810, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 86.

"Burglary" is "the breaking and entering the dwelling house of another in the nighttime with the intent to commit a felony therein, whether the felony be actually committed or not." Commonwealth v. Woolfolk, 89 S. W. 110-112, 121 Ky. 164 (quoting and adopting definition in Bouv. Dict. 227).

Burglary is defined as "the breaking and entering in the night of another's dwelling house with intent to commit a felony therein," and "if a man in the nighttime breaks into a dwelling house, intending to commit therein some act which in law is felony, he is guilty of burglary, whether he succeeds in doing what he meant or not." Mann v. Commonwealth, 80 S. W. 438, 118 Ky. 67, 111 Am. St. Rep. 289 (citing 1 Bish. Cr. Law, §§ 437, 559).

As defined in Cobb's Dig. p. 790, § 92, "burglary" is the breaking and entering into the mansion house of another with the intent to commit a felony. The offense may be committed within the terms of the statute where there is no intention to steal. A breaking followed by a proved theft establishes the intention of that particular breaking, but if nothing were stolen it would not follow that burglary had not been committed. Hutchins v. State, 59 S. E. 848, 8 Ga. App. 300.

Nature of building

Section 146, Pen. Code 1910, defines "burglary" as follows: "'Burglary' is the breaking and entering into the dwelling, mansion, or storehouse, or other place of business of another, where valuable goods, wares, produce, or any other article of value are contained or stored, with intent to commit a felony or larceny." This statute enlarges the common-law definition of burglary, for burglary at common law was the breaking and entering a mansion or dwelling house with intent to commit a felony or larceny therein. Keenan v. State, 74 S. E. 297, 10 Ga. App. 792.

An indictment under Acts 26th Leg. c. 178, making it a separate and distinct offense to burglarize a private residence at night, and defining a private residence as any building or room occupied and actually used at the time of the offense as a place of residence, must allege that the building or room was occupied and actually used at the time of the offense as a place of residence, and an allegation that the house was a private residence is insufficient. Jones v. State, 96 S. W. 44, 45, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 100.

A chicken house is within Kirby's Dig. §§ 1603-1605, making it "burglary" to enter a house or other building with intent to commit a felony. Evidence that defendant took chickens from a "coop" by cutting a hole in the wire around it did not sustain a charge of "burglary," under Kirby's Dig. §§ 1603-1605, making it burglary to enter any house or building, as a chicken coop is not necessarily a house. Gunter v. State, 96 S. W. 181, 182, 79 Ark. 432, 116 Am. St. Rep. 85.

Pen. Code 1895, art. 839, provides that one who with intent to commit a felony breaks and enters a house in the daytime is guilty of burglary. Laws 1899, p. 318, c. 178 (Pen. Code 1895, art. 839a), provides that the offense of burglary of a private residence is constituted by entering a private residence, etc. Article 845b makes burglary of a private residence a distinct offense. One count of an indictment charged that defendant by force, etc., in the daytime, did burglariously and fraudulently break and enter a house then and there at the time of the commission of the offense occupied by W. as a private residence, etc. Held, that the use of the words "private residence" in that count did not bring the charge within the purview of article 839a. Martinez v. State, 103 S. W. 930, 931, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 584.

A conviction cannot be had under Pen. Code 1895, art. 839a, relating to burglary of a private dwelling, where the burglarized house is not alleged to be a private dwelling; that section and article 845a, relating to burglary in private residences, covering a distinct offense from that defined by article 838, defining "burglary" as the entry into a house by force or fraud at night, or in the daytime and remaining until night, with intent to commit a felony, and article 839, making it burglary to enter a house in the daytime with intent to commit a felony or theft—article 845b providing that nothing in sections 839a or 845a shall repeal articles 838 and 839. Malloy v. State, 126 S. W. 598, 599, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 425.

Pen. Code 1895, art. 838, defines burglary as the entering of a house by force, etc., at night, or entering either in the day or night and remaining concealed therein with intent to commit a felony or a theft, and article 839a, as added by Acts 26th Leg. c. 178, provides that the offense of burglary in a private residence is committed by entering a private residence by force at night, or in any manner by entering a private residence either by day or night, and remaining concealed until night with intent to commit a felony or theft therein. Held, that the offenses described in the two articles were distinct offenses, and a conviction cannot be had under article 838, if the house burglarized was a private residence. Allins v. State, 139 S. W. 980, 981, 63 Tex. Cr. R. 272.

One may be guilty of "burglary" as to a room or apartment in a house, portions of which are open to the public, where such force, however slight, as may be sufficient to effect an entrance, is used in entering either a room or any other division of such public house. Daniels v. State, 78 Ga. 98, 6 Am. St. Rep. 238. But as to a private dwelling house a breaking into the house is necessary to be shown in order to constitute a "burglary." The breaking and entering of one of the rooms of such private dwelling house, where the entrance into the house is accomplished without breaking, is not "burglary." Lockhart v. State, 60 S. E. 215, 216, 3 Ga. App. 480.

Technically "burglary" is the breaking and entering into a mansion house by night, with intent to commit a felony. Under Shannon's Code, § 6537, providing that whoever shall break and enter the business house, out-house, or any other house of another, other than a mansion house, with intent to commit a felony, shall be imprisoned, etc., and section 6540 providing that a person indicted for burglary may be convicted under the section quoted, a defendant may be found guilty of burglary under an indictment alleging that he burglariously entered a "camp house" not shown to be a mansion house. Cronan v. State, 82 S. W. 477, 478, 113 Tenn. 539.

Pen. Code, 1895, art. 838, provides that the offense of burglary is constituted by entering a house by force, threats, or fraud at night, or, in like manner, by entering a house during the day and remaining concealed therein until night, with intent in either case of committing felony or the crime of theft. Article 839 provides that he is also guilty of burglary who, with intent to commit a felony or theft, enters a house in the daytime. Article 938a (Laws 1899, p. 318, c. 178) provides that the burglary of a private residence is constituted by entering a private residence by force, threats, or fraud at night, or in any manner by entering a private residence at any time either day or night and remaining concealed therein until night with intent in either case of committing a felony or the crime of theft. Article 845a provides the punishment at a term of years not less than five for burglary of a private residence, and article 845b provides that nothing in articles 839a and 845a of the chapter shall be construed to alter or in any manner repeal articles 838 and 839, but shall be construed to make burglary of a private residence at night a separate and distinct offense from burglary as defined in said articles 838 and 839. Article 845c defines a private residence as mentioned in the preceding article to mean any building or room occupied and actually used at the time of the offense by any person or persons as a place of residence. Held, that the burglary of a private residence in the daytime is not within the terms of article 839a, and hence the indictment need not allege that the house was a private residence. Reyes v. State, 102 S. W. 421, 422, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 420.

Rev. St. c. 44, div. 4, art. 2, § 1, defines burglary to be the unlawful entering of a house, tenement, or other building, boat, vessel, or water craft, in the nighttime with intent to commit a felony, and provides that the manner of breaking or entering is not material further than to show the intent. Section 2 provides that if any person shall, in the nighttime, willfully and maliciously and with force break or enter any house, etc., with intent to commit a felony, he shall be guilty of burglary. Section 3 provides that if any person shall, in the nighttime, willfully and with or without force break or enter any house, etc., with intent to commit a felony, and shall commit a felony or larceny, he shall be adjudged guilty of burglary and also of felony or larceny. This statute was digested in Gantt's Digest as sections 1346-1349, inclusive. Acts 1874, p. 77, amended Gantt's Dig. § 1346, by making a railway car also the subject of burglary. These sections with the amendment appear as Kirby's Dig. §§ 1603-1606, inclusive. Held, that the contention that a railway car not being inserted in Gantt's Dig. § 1348 (Kirby's Dig. § 1606), as a subject of burglary, nothing was added to the crime, and that the insertion in Gantt's Dig. § 1646 (Kirby's Dig. § 1603), was in the declaratory part of the statute, and not the substantive part, was not maintainable, and that a railway car was the subject of burglary. Parnell v. State, 110 S. W. 1036, 1037, 86 Ark. 241.

Larceny distinguished

See Larceny.

Larceny included

"Larceny" is not necessarily included in "burglary," like manslaughter in murder. The offense of "burglary" is complete without any larceny being committed. Sturgis v. State, 102 Pac. 57, 61, 2 Okl. Cr. 362 (quoting and adopting People v. Garnett, 29 Cal. 628).

Necessity of breaking and entering

Under Sand. & H. Dig. § 1492, if one either break or enter the house of another with intent to commit a felony, he is guilty of "burglary." Both a breaking and entering is not necessary. Minter v. State, 71 S. W. 944, 945, 71 Ark. 178.

In a trial for "burglary with intent to commit larceny," the state must show that accused broke and entered with a felonious intent to carry away property kept there and to convert it to his own use without the owner's consent. State v. Wright, 66 Atl. 364, 365, 6 Pennewill, 251.

On a trial for "burglary," the court charged that under the evidence there was a breaking by some one of the four parties mentioned; that the word "breaking" had a technical meaning; that "unfastening" anything constituted a "breaking"; that where anything was shut up, if opened by another person, that constituted a breaking; and so, "under the evidence in this case," etc. The court further charged that if one, who was with defendant at the time, had the charge of the premises, and a right to enter the corncrib and chicken coop, there was no burglary; and that, if defendant had good reason to believe that such one had charge of the property and could dispose of it as he pleased, defendant would not be guilty of burglary. Held, that the charge must have been understood by the jury to mean that proof of opening of the doors, which was undisputed, was sufficient to constitute an actual breaking, and, so understood, the charge was not subject to criticism. People v. Evans, 114 N. W. 223, 224, 150 Mich. 443.

Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 838, defining burglary as entering a house by force, threats, or fraud at night, with the intent of committing a felony or the crime of theft, and article 841 declaring that the entry is not confined to the entrance of the whole body but may consist of the entry of any part for the purpose of committing a felony, and article 842 declaring that the slightest force is sufficient to constitute breaking, such as the introduction of the hand or any instrument to draw out the property through an aperture made by the offender for that purpose, an accused would not commit "burglary" by inserting his hand or arm, even for the purpose of committing theft, if the glass in the door through which his arm was thrust was already broken, or even if he broke the glass, unless the theft he intended to commit was a felony; hence, if accused broke the glass in a door with the intent to steal articles of less than $50 in value, there would be no "burglary," even though he inserted his arm in the opening with the intent to consummate the intended crime, for under article 841 there would be no entry. Jones v. State, 87 S. W. 1157, 1158, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 336.

Kirby's Dig. § 1605, providing that a burglary is committed by breaking or entering the house of another in the nighttime, with intent to commit a felony, and section 1604, declaring that the manner of breaking or entering is not material further than to show intent, do not change the rule of the common law that such breaking was any disrupting or separating of material substances in any inclosing part of a dwelling house, whereby the entry of a person, arm, or any physical thing capable of working a felony therein may be accomplished; and hence the prying off of a wooden shutter over a window of a store without opening or breaking the window, and the cutting of an inch square hole through the door of the store too far from the latch to permit the use of an instrument to unfasten the door, did not constitute a breaking and entering sufficient to sustain a charge of burglary. Anderson v. State, 104 S. W. 1096, 1097, 84 Ark. 54.

Under a statute providing that every person who enters any house or building, with the intent to commit larceny or other felony is guilty of burglary," in order to constitute a burglarious entry the act of entering must be itself a trespass. State v. Mish, 92 Pac. 459, 460, 36 Mont. 168, 122 Am. St. Rep. 343.

Breaking out is not "burglary." Lockhart v. State, 60 S. E. 215, 216, 3 Ga. App. 480.

Night or daytime

It is an essential element of "burglary" that the offense be committed between sunset and sunrise. Hence such crime was not proved by evidence that a building was robbed between 9:30 p. m. and 6:30 a. m., where the sun rose at 4:38 a. m. State v. Miller, 67 Pac. 790, 24 Utah, 312 (citing Rev. St. § 4334, 4338).

Nighttime "burglary" is properly defined as entering a house by force at nighttime with the intent of committing the crime of theft. Griffith v. State, 138 S. W. 1016, 1017, 62 Tex. Cr. R. 642.

Under Rev. St. 1898, § 4334, defining "burglary" as entering "in the nighttime," etc., and section 4338, defining "nighttime" as the period between sunset and sunrise, a larceny, to constitute burglary, must be committed in the nighttime, and affirmative proof that it was so committed must be adduced; but such proof need not be direct, but may be circumstantial, in character. State v. Richards, 81 Pac. 142, 29 Utah, 310.

Purpose of entry

The gist of the crime is a breaking and entering with an intent to commit a felony or misdemeanor. State v. Beeman, 99 Pac. 756, 757, 51 Wash. 557.

The essential ingredient of burglary is the felonious entry, and the intent may be to commit any felony or the crime of theft. Polk v. State, 132 S. W. 134, 135, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 462.

Entering a house for the purpose of committing murder is "burglary," under Pen. Code, § 459, providing that every person who enters any house with intent to commit grand or petit larceny or any felony is guilty of burglary. People v. Miller, 53 Pac. 816, 818, 121 Cal. 348.

To constitute "burglary" there must not only be a breaking and entering in the nighttime but either a felony must be committed in the house or be intended to be committed. State v. Neddo, 42 Atl. 253, 255, 92 Me. 71 (quoting and adopting 1 Hale, P. C. 547).

"Burglary" may be committed under certain circumstances by a person breaking in and taking property of which he is the owner, or qualified owner, as where a livery stable keeper had a lien on horses kept by him and the owner broke in with the intention of taking them. This was "burglary" by unlawfully breaking and entering with intent to commit a crime. State v. Nelson, 78 Pac. 790, 791, 36 Wash. 126, 68 L. R. A. 283, 104 Am. St. Rep. 945.

Pen. Code 1895, art. 838, provides that burglary is constituted by the entrance of a house by force, threats, or fraud, with intent to commit a felony or theft. Article 839 provides that one is guilty of burglary who, with intent to commit a felony or theft, by breaking enters the house in the daytime. Article 841 provides that the entry may consist of the entry of any part of the body, or that the offense may be constituted by the discharge of firearms into the house with the intent to injure the person therein. Held, that article 841 is but an addition to articles 838 and 839, and under the three articles, burglary may consist of entering a house by force, etc., or in entering a house and remaining therein with the intent to commit a felony, or by the discharge of firearms into a house with the intent to injure the person therein, and the intention need not be to commit a felony. Ralley v. State, 121 S. W. 1120, 1121, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 1.

Value of property

"Burglary" is established by proving a breaking and theft of property; the value of the property taken being immaterial. Mason v. State (Tex.) 98 S. W. 854.

White's Ann. Pen. Code, art. 838, provides that burglary is committed by entering a house by force, threats, or fraud at night, or in like manner by entering a house during the day and remaining concealed there till night, with the intent of committing a felony or the crime of theft. Article 841 declares that the entry is not confined to the entrance of the whole body, but may consist of the entry of any part for the purpose of committing a felony, and article 842 defines the term "breaking" to mean an entry by actual force, such as the introduction of the hand or any instrument to draw out the property through an aperture made by the offender for that purpose. Held, that where defendant broke a glass of a store window in which certain shoes were displayed, but he was arrested before he abstracted any of the shoes therefrom, he was guilty of an attempt to commit burglary, regardless of the value of the property in the store. Mason v. State (Tex.) 100 S. W. 383.

BURGLARY IN THE FIRST DEGREE

Under Rev. St. 1898, § 4334, as amended by Sess. Laws 1905, p. 16, c. 19, making it "burglary" for any person to break and enter a building with intent to commit a larceny or any other felony, an information charging a breaking and entering a building at night with intent to steal goods, without stating their value, sufficiently charges a "burglary" in the first degree, as larceny within such section includes both a misdemeanor and a felony, and the words "or any other felony" are equivalent to "or any felony other than that embraced within the larceny." State v. Hows, 87 Pac. 163, 31 Utah; 168.

Rev. St. 1899, § 1880, makes one guilty of burglary in the first degree who breaks and enters the dwelling house of another in which there is then a human being, with intent to commit a felony or larceny therein, either by forcibly breaking the wall or outer door or window shutter of such house, or the door lock or bolt, or the fastening of the shutter or window; or, second, by breaking in any other manner, armed with a dangerous weapon, or with the assistance of confederates actually present; or, third, by unlocking an outer door by false keys, or picking the lock. Section 1881 makes one guilty of burglary in the second degree who breaks into a dwelling house with intent to commit a felony or larceny under circumstances not amounting to burglary in the first degree. Held, that the statute changed the elements of burglary at common law, and to constitute first-degree burglary under section 1880, the breaking and entering must be accomplished by some of the methods stated therein, and an information merely alleging the entering of a dwelling house by forcibly removing a wire screen from an outer window only charged burglary in the second degree. State v. Wilson, 125 S. W. 479, 480, 225 Mo. 508.

Pen. Code, § 820, provides that every person who enters any house, room, apartment, etc., with intent to commit grand or petit larceny, or any felony, is guilty of burglary. Section 821 provides that every burglary committed in the nighttime is burglary in the first degree, and every burglary committed in the daytime is burglary in the second degree. Held that, when the indictment charges the offense in the first degree, it in effect charges a burglary in the nighttime. State v. Copenhagen, 89 Pac. 61, 35 Mont. 342.

BURGLARY IN THE SECOND DEGREE

Rem. & Bal. Code, § 2578, declares that every person who with intent to commit some crime therein shall enter in the nighttime the dwelling house of another in which there shall be at the time a human being, etc., shall be guilty of burglary in the first degree. Section 2579 provides that every person who with intent to commit some crime therein shall under circumstances not amounting to burglary in the first degree enter the dwelling house of another, or break and enter, or, having committed a crime therein, shall break out of any building or part thereof wherein any property is kept for use, sale, or deposit, shall be guilty of burglary in the second degree. Held, that it is not essential to a conviction of burglary in the second degree that it shall have been committed in the nighttime. State v. Leroy, 112 Pac. 635, 639, 61 Wash. 405.

Pen. Code, § 820, provides that every person who enters any house, room, apartment, etc., with intent to commit grand or petit larceny, or any felony, is guilty of burglary. Section 821 provides that every burglary committed in the nighttime is burglary in the first degree, and every burglary committed in the daytime is burglary in the second degree. Held, that an indictment under section 820 need not allege the time of the day on which the entry was made; but, when the indictment charges the offense in the first degree, it in effect charges a burglary in the nighttime, and a conviction of burglary in the second degree cannot be had thereon, since the second degree is not included within the first, so as to authorize a conviction under Pen. Code, § 2147, providing that a defendant may be convicted of any offense necessarily included in that charged. State v. Copenhagen, 89 Pac. 61, 35 Mont. 342.

BURGLARY IN THE THIRD DEGREE

"Every person who breaks or enters in the day or in the nighttime any building, or any part of any building, booth, train, railroad car, vessel, or other structure or erection in which any property is kept, with intent to steal therein or to commit any felony, is guilty of 'burglary in the third degree,'" and entering alone is sufficient to constitute the crime. State v. Vierck, 120 N. W. 1098, 1101, 23 S. D. 166, 139 Am. St. Rep. 1040.

BURGLARY WITH EXPLOSIVES

In a prosecution for "burglary with explosives," an indictment charging that accused feloniously and burglariously broke and entered a depot, and attempted to open and opened a certain vault, safe, and other secure place in the depot, by the use of nitroglycerin, dynamite, gunpowder, and other explosives, with intent certain moneys, goods, and chattels in said vault, safe, and other secure place in said depot, then and there being, then and there feloniously to steal, take, and carry away, substantially charged the offense in the words of the statute and was sufficient. Smith v. State, 66 Atl. 678, 679, 106 Md. 39.

BURGLARY INSURANCE

A policy insuring against loss by burglary of any merchandise in premises situated in the state of New York insures against burglary as defined by the statutes of New York, and the policy is not limited to common-law burglary. The stipulation in a policy insuring against direct loss by burglary of merchandise that insurer shall not be liable, unless there are visible marks on the premises of the actual force and violence used in making entry into the premises, or exit therefrom, is not a limitation of liability, but is a mere evidentiary provision to prevent fraudulent claims, to provide for cases, where, in the absence of witnesses, a burglary is sought to be established by the mere loss of goods, with no evidence direct or circumstantial, of a breaking and entering and cases of pilfering by employes and the like, and a burglary committed in the presence of clerks of insured is within the policy. Rosenthal v. American Bonding Co. of Baltimore, 128 N. Y. Supp. 553, 556, 143 App. Div. 362.

BURIAL

See Decent Burial; Proper Burial.
Respectable burial, see Respectable.

BURLAPS

The provision for "burlaps," in Tariff Act Aug. 27, 1894, c. 349, § 2, Free List, par. 424½, 28 Stat. 539, does not include so-called doublewarp Dundee bagging. Corbitt & Macleay Co. v. United States, 158 Fed. 648, 649.

BURN

An indictment charging that defendant burned, and caused to be burned, a barn was not defective, although the statute said "burned or caused to be burned"; the expressions "to burn" and "to cause to be burned" not being incongruous nor inconsistent. State v. Price, 11 N. J. Law, 203, 204.

As blacken, scorch, or char

To constitute the offense punishable by Ky. St. § 1168, punishing the willful burning of any public prison, it is not necessary that the fire set by accused should consume the building or materially injure it, and a prisoner confined in a public prison in a city to await trial, who threatened to burn up the prison, and who set fire to a mattress in his cell and then pushed it through the bars and communicated fire to a wall of the prison, charring to some extent the wall made of wood, was guilty of burning the prison. Kehoe v. Commonwealth, 149 S. W. 818, 149 Ky. 400.

BURNS OF THE THIRD DEGREE

"Burns of the third degree" are burns where the tissue is destroyed and nature reproduces a new fibrous tissue. Such burns affect the nerves, the superficial vessels supplying the skin, and the vessels that feed the skin, which are bound down and strangulated in this new reproduced fibrous tissue, causing constant irritation for which there is no cure according to some of the expert testimony. Strand v. Great Northern R. Co., 111 N. W. 958, 961, 101 Minn. 85.

BURNT

A marine policy contained a clause, "Warranted free from particular average, unless the vessel or craft or the interest insured be stranded, sunk or on fire." The libel alleged that on November 18th, while the ship was lying in port and before discharge, a fire broke out in the after 'tween-decks of the ship and burned the bulkhead forward of the lazarette, the door thereof, and a considerable portion of dunnage and other parts of the ship. An exhibit, quoting from the ship's protest, recited that the master, on the alarm being given, went below through the lazarette and saw the reflection of the fire over the top of the bulkhead between the after 'tween-decks and the lazarette, which were then full of cargo, and that after considerable trouble the fire was extinguished, with considerable damage. Held, that the words "on fire," as used in the particular average clause, were not synonymous with the word "burnt," contained in former policies, but were indicative of a happening whereby the ship was endangered by actual fire burning some part of it, necessitating extraordinary efforts to prevent serious damage, and that under such definition the libel was not subject to exception as stating a loss from which the insurer was exempted by the particular average clause as matter of law. Pacific Creosoting Co. v. Thames & Mersey Marine Ins. Co., 184 Fed. 947, 949.

BURSTING TEST

A hydrostatic test applied to boilers is sometimes called the "bursting test." In this case a 300-pound pressure was applied. Shea v. Pacific Power Co., 79 Pac. 373, 145 Cal. 680.

BUSHEL

In passing Tariff Act July 42, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 249, 30 Stat. 170, where onions are made dutiable "per bushel," Congress must be assumed to have known the practice of the Treasury Department to consider 57 pounds as a bushel and to have intended to accept that as a standard. Hills Bros. Co. v. United States, 151 Fed. 476, 81 C. C. A. 14.

BUSHELING SCRAP

"Busheling scraps" has a definite significance and consists of small pieces of wrought iron and steel. Where, on a sale of iron scrap, the seller guaranteed the goods to be good, clean busheling scrap, the fact that they were found to contain dirt and small pieces of malleable iron, cast iron, tin, etc., impairing the value of the whole, rendered the seller liable as for a breach of collateral warranty, though the buyer had opportunity to examine the goods but did not do so. Lichtenstein v. Rabolinsky, 90 N. Y. Supp. 247, 98 App. Div. 516.

The word "business" is of large significance and "denotes the employment or occupation in which a person is engaged to procure a living." Allen v. Commonwealth, 74 N. E. 287, 288, 188 Mass. 59, 99 L. R. A. 599 (quoting and adopting definition in God- dard v. Chaffee, 84 Mass. [2 Allen] 395, 79 Am. Dec. 796).

The term "business" as used in a law imposing a license tax on businesses, trades, etc., ordinarily means business in the trade or commercial sense, only carried on with a view to profit or livelihood. Cuzner v. California Club, 100 P. 868, 871, 155 Cal. 303, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1095.

The word "business," as used in Rev. Code, § 4380, subd. 3, disqualifying a person from acting as a juror where he is united in business with either party, is employed in a general sense, and refers generally to the commercial, industrial, and professional engagements into which men jointly enter, either for a brief or considerable length of time. Hall v. Chattin, 106 Pac. 1132, 1133, 17 Idaho, 664.

The word "business" in its broad sense embraces everything about which one can be employed, and in its narrower sense it signifies a calling for the purpose of livelihood or profit. Easterbrook v. Hebrew Ladies' Orphan Society, 82 Atl. 561, 563, 85 Conn. 289, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 615.

Business in the sense in which occupation tax is applied does not, generally speaking, mean property. It means the activity, the energy, the capacity, the opportunities by which results are reached, a condition rather than fixed tangible objects for which conditions arise, the occupation, the engaging, the doing of the varied commercial acts, and the taking of the requisite steps from which result conclusions and conditions. Atlantic Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. v. City of Savannah, 65 S. E. 184, 188, 133 Ga. 66.

As action or other proceeding

The term "business," as used in Const. art. 8, § 5, providing that all civil and criminal "business" arising in any county must be brought in such county, unless a change of venue be taken in such cases as may be provided by law, is equivalent to "cause of action." Fields v. Daisy Gold Min. Co., 73 Pac. 521, 522, 26 Utah, 373.

The word "business," as used in Const. art. 8, § 5, does not refer to the acts or breach which gave rise to the cause of action, nor is it synonymous with causes of action, but it refers to those things which are required of the court to be done, or that it should do and which have arisen to engage its time and attention. Sanipoli v. Pleasant Valley Coal Co., 86 Pac. 865, 867, 31 Utah, 114, 10 Ann. Cas. 1142.

The word "business," in Const. art. 8, § 5, means causes of action, including probate and other civil proceedings. Sherman v. Droubay, 74 Pac. 348, 349, 27 Utah, 47.

Under Rev. St. § 581, which provides that special terms of any district court may be ordered by the district judge, and that "any 'business' may be transacted at such special term which might be transacted at a regular term," a district court has jurisdiction at a special term to try a defendant on an indictment returned at a previous regular term. Goll v. United States, 151 Fed. 412, 417, 80 C. C. A. 642.

As established or continuing enterprise

The word "business" implies an employment or occupation that is continuing. State v. Scampini, 59 Atl. 201, 209, 77 Vt. 92.

A farm laborer who sells soda water and lemonade on only one Sunday is not guilty of violating the Sabbath Day within Pen. Code 1895, § 422, such selling not being his "business or ordinary calling," though, if he sells on more than one occasion, it may become such. Ellis v. State, 63 S. E. 588, 589, 5 Ga. App. 615.

The phrase "business or calling," in a contract of employment providing that the employé will not become interested in other business or calling contrary to the business of the employer, does not include a single specific act of the employé in using the employer's men for the purpose of lowering a pump into the basement of a hotel on which the employé and the other men were working; such act being done to assist another contractor on the work. Batchelder v. Standard Plunger Elevator Co., 75 Atl. 1090, 1091, 227 Pa. 201, 19 Ann. Cas. 875.

By individual corporation

"There are many things which in common colloquial language would not be called a 'business,' even when carried on by a single person, which would be so called when carried on by a number of persons. This is a distinction not to be forgotten even if we were trying the question by the ordinary use of the English language. For instance, a man who is the owner of offices (that is, of a house divided into several floors and used for commercial purposes) would not be said to carry on a business because he let the offices as such; but suppose a company was formed for the purpose or object of building or leasing a house to be divided into offices, and to be let out, should not we say, if that was the object of the company, that the company was carrying on business for the purpose of letting offices, or was an office-letting company, tried by the use of ordinary colloquial language? The same observation may be made as regards a single individual buying or selling land, with this addition, that he may make it a business; and then it is a question of continuity. A man occasionally buys and sells land, as many landowners do, and nobody would say he was a landjobber or dealer in lands; but, if a man made a particular business of buying and selling land to obtain profit, he would be designated as a landjobber or dealer in land. When you go to an association or company formed for a purpose, you say at once that it is a 'business,' because there you have that from which you would infer continuity; it is formed to do that and nothing else, and therefore at once you say that the company carried on a business; so, in the ordinary case of investments, the man who has money to invest invests his money, and he may occasionally sell the investments and buy others, but he is not carrying on a business, but when you have an association formed, or where an individual makes it his continuous occupation (the business of his life) to buy and sell securities, he is called a stockjobber or sharejobber, and nobody doubts for a moment that he is carrying on 'business.' So, if a company is formed for doing the very same thing (that is, for investing money belonging to persons in the purchase of stocks and shares, and change them from time to time, either with limited or unlimited powers), I should say there can be no question that they are carrying on a 'business,' whether you call it a business of investments, or a business of dealing in securities, or, as the case before me, both the business of investment and the business of dealing in securities." Vanderbilt University v. Cheney, 94 S. W. 90, 92, 116 Tenn. 259.

Care and management of real estate

"Business" is a word commonly used to describe every occupation in which men engage, including the occupation of those engaged in the care and management of real property. Bennett v. Hebbard, 68 Atl. 537, 74 N. H. 411.

Carriers

The operation and management of railroads in carrying passengers is a "business," and part of trade and commerce. Continental Securities Co. v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 165 Fed. 945, 957.

The term "business" is synonymous with calling, occupation, or trade and may be defined as "any particular occupation or employment engaged in for a livelihood or gain" (Webster's International Dict.); hence one conducting an express agency within the limits of a city is in a "business," within an ordinance providing for a license on the business of express companies, corporations, or agencies carried on in the city. City of Topeka v. Jones, 86 Pac. 162, 163, 74 Kan. 164.

The word "business," as used in a will reciting that, in consideration of the fact that the testator had during his lifetime given a son the "business" of an express company and other interests of much value, etc., must be regarded as meaning the establishment of the enterprise, its good will, its connection with transportation lines so established, which were valuable adjuncts, and almost a necessity for the culmination of final success to the son. Solley v. Westcott, 88 N. Y. Supp. 297, 301, 43 Misc. Rep. 188.

Under the rule, as affected by the express terms of Rev. St. 1899, § 1105, that a railroad company need not fence its track at a station where it transacts business with the public, the "business" to be considered is the company's business with the public generally and with itself, connected with the station; but the maintenance of a passing track merely does not have any connection with a station within the rule, since it belongs to the general operation of the road, and it must be fenced when lying outside the limits of cities, etc., or outside necessary grounds of stations not located in towns, etc., though inconvenience result to the company through being required to maintain an additional telegraph office. Bridges v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co., 112 S. W. 37, 38, 182 Mo. App. 578.

"The mere delivery of goods of a particular class at the point of destination by a common carrier to the consignee of such goods is not a 'business' engaged in by the carrier within a city's power to tax a 'business,' but is a mere incident to the carrier's 'business.' In and of itself it is no more a business than is the measuring of calico, homespun, or silk by a retail dry goods merchant when he sells the same to his customers or the delivery by such a merchant of the cloth to the purchaser thereof. It is no more a calling or vocation than is the mere delivery of shoes by a shoemaker or plows by a blacksmith to the customer for whom the shoemaker or the blacksmith has made them. It is but a fragmentary part of the business of a carrier. In a commercial or legal sense, the word means something done or carried on for a livelihood, profit, or the like." Southern Express Co. v. R. M. Rose Co., 53 S. E. 185, 189, 124 Ga. 581, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 619, 2 Ann. Cas. 296 (citing Hewlin v. Atlanta, 49 S. E. 765, 121 Ga. 723, 67 L. R. A. 795).

Commerce

As commerce, see Commerce.

"Commerce" is "business," within the definition of "business," as given in Webster's International Dictionary defining that word as "financial dealings, buying, and selling; traffic in general; mercantile transactions." City of Topeka v. Jones, 86 Pac. 162, 163, 74 Kan. 164.

Corporations

The word "business," in Comp. Laws, § 3834, making corporate property taxable where the office of the corporation is located, provided its "business" is actually transacted at the office, otherwise at the place where the principal "business" is transacted, means something more than the annual meeting of stockholders and newly chosen directors; and, where the only "business" of a navigation company transacted at the place named in the articles of incorporation as its office is the annual meeting of stockholders, the residence of the corporation for purpose of taxation is the place where the principal "business" is conducted, such as receiving and disbursing the funds of the corporation. Teagan Transp. Co. v. Board of Assessors, 102 N. W. 278, 274, 139 Mich. 1, 69 L. R. A. 431, 111 Am. St. Rep. 391.

Act May 10, 1901 (Laws 1901, p. 124), providing that corporations, other than railroad, banking, building, and loan, and insurance companies, shall annually report to the Secretary of State the location of their principal offices, whether or not the corporation is pursuing an active business, and the kind of business engaged in, the word "business" does not restrict the operation of the act to corporations for pecuniary profits. People v. Rose, 69 N. E. 762, 764, 207 Ill. 352.

"Business" is a mere comprehensive term and comprises everything about which a person can be employed. Corporations organized for the purpose of doing business and actually engaged in such activities, as leasing property, collecting rents, renting office buildings, making investments of profits, or leasing ore lands and collecting royalties, managing wharves, dividing profits, and in some cases investing the surplus, are engaged in business within the meaning of Act Aug. 5, 1909, § 38, imposing an excise on the doing or carrying on of business in a corporate or a quasi corporate capacity. A corporation owning and leasing taxicabs and collecting rents therefrom is engaged in business within the meaning of such act, as is also a public service corporation, such as a street railway created under the state laws, and also corporations acting as trustees, guardians, etc., under authority of the laws or courts of the state. Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., 31 Sup. Ct. 342, 357, 220 U. S. 107, 55 L. Ed. 389, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1312 (quoting and adopting Black's Law Dict.; People ex rel. Hoyt v. Tax Com'rs, 23 N. Y. 242-244).

A resolution of the board of directors of a corporation engaged in mining coal, appointing one of their number general manager to have the control and management of the business of the corporation, subject to the approval and direction of the president or vice president, with the right to employ and discharge employes, and transact all kinds of business for the corporation, does not authorize such director, while acting as general manager, to employ a broker to procure a purchaser of the property of the corporation; the word "business" being confined to such business as the corporation may find necessary to transact in carrying on the coal mining business. Elk Valley Coal Co. v. Thompson, 150 S. W. 817, 820, 150 Ky. 614.

The term "business," as used in Act May 23, 1901 (Acts 1901, p. 388), regulating the business of foreign corporations, providing that before a foreign corporation shall be authorized to establish a business in the state, or to continue business therein, it shall file a copy of its articles of incorporation with the Secretary of State, etc., and that no foreign corporation may make any contract in the state, nor sue thereon, until it has complied with the provision of the preceding section, means an established, continuing business rather than mere single, isolated acts done in the state, either in connection with, or apart from, some business that has its domicile in another state. Simmons-Burks Clothing Co. v. Linton, 117 S. W. 775, 777, 90 Ark. 73.

"Business" means: (1) "That which busies" or "that which occupies the time, attention, or labor of one as his principal concern, whether for a longer or shorter time." (2) "Any particular occupation or employment engaged in for a livelihood or gain, as agriculture, trade, art, or a profession." (3) "Mercantile transactions or traffic in general." (Webster.) All these definitions imply, if not express, the idea of some permanency or durability; something more than a single temporary or spasmodic undertaking. Under Act Feb. 18, 1901, c. 379, 31 Stat. 794, which provides that, "before any foreign corporation shall begin to carry on business in the Indian Territory," it shall file a certificate designating a resident agent on whom process may be served, and also stating its principal place of business in the territory, and that if it fails to comply with such provisions all of its contracts with citizens and residents of the territory shall be void and shall not be enforced in its favor by any of the courts therein, proof that a foreign corporation, having no place of business in the territory, in a single instance completed an executory contract of sale therein by delivery of the property and taking notes and a mortgage for the purchase price through a local bank acting as its agent is not sufficient to subject it to the penalty for "carrying on business" by rendering its notes and mortgage nonenforceable, though it never filed the statutory certificate. Ammons v. Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co., 141 Fed. 570, 575, 72 C. C. A. 614.

St. 1898, § 2637, subd. 13, provides for service of process on a foreign corporation by service of summons and notice of object of action, by delivering copies thereof to any agent having charge of or conducting any business thereof in the state. Held, that a return showing the leaving of summons and notice of object of action at the office of the company maintained at a specified city with the person in charge of such office sufficiently showed legal service, the natural inferences therefrom being that the corporation did maintain an office at the specified city, which constituted "business" within the meaning of the statute, and that the person declared to have charge of the office had charge of the business, in the absence of contradiction of the facts and natural inferences therefrom by the corporation with knowledge of the facts. Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co. v. Ashauer, 126 N. W. 113, 114, 142 Wis. 646.

Const. art. 10, § 5, provides that no foreign corporation shall be permitted to transact business in this state until it shall have accepted the Constitution of the state and filed such acceptance. Rev. St. 1899, § 3058 (Sess. Laws 1890-91, p. 174, c. 42, § 1), provides that the acceptance shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of State. A foreign corporation that had not complied with these requirements sued a telephone company for failure to transmit a message correctly. Held, that these provisions are mandatory, that the word "business," as used in the Constitution and in the statute, includes the contract in question, and that such contracts cannot be enforced, if that defense is raised. Gould Land & Cattle Co. v. Rocky Mountain Bell Telephone Co., 101 Pac. 939, 940, 17 Wyo. 507.

Holding lands

The mere holding of lands interminably by a "holding" company is not a "business" within Ky. St. § 567. Commonwealth v. Louisville Property Co., 182 S. W. 413, 414, 139 Ky. 689.

Horseshoeing

The word "business" in Freeholders' Charter (St. 1903, p. 697, c. 31), authorizing a municipal corporation governed by the freeholders' charter to license, for purposes of regulation and revenue, "all and every kind of business transacted or carried on" in the municipality, includes, with a few exceptions, all manner of occupations or means by which persons earn a livelihood, and includes the business of horseshoeing carried on within the limits of the city, and an ordinance imposing a license tax on such business is valid. Ex parte Diehl, 96 Pac. 98, 100, 8 Cal. App. 51.

Insurance

When a statute speaks of the right to transact the "business" of insurance in the state, it means the right to do a general business, and has no reference to the restricted right that a mutual insurance company has to insure the property of its own membership. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Mississippi v. Cole, 43 South. 949, 950, 90 Miss. 508.

Keeping of dogs

The keeping of dogs may be licensed under Pol. Code, § 3366, authorizing cities to license any kind of "business" not prohibited by law. In re Ackerman, 91 Pac. 429, 435, 6 Cal. App. 5.

Practice of law

Practicing law is not a "business," within a statutory provision authorizing the carrying on of a business under an assumed name. In re Kaffenburgh, 101 N. Y. Supp. 507, 509, 115 App. Div. 846.

Practice of medicine

A covenant in a deed conveying a lot that but one building shall be erected thereon for the exclusive use of a private residence, and that the lot shall not be "used or occupied for trade or business of any kind whatever," prohibits, during the life of the covenant, the owner from maintaining a physician's office on the premises and there receiving and treating patients, since the word "business," defined as that which busies one, or that which engages his time, attention, or labor, as his principal concern or any particular occupation or employment engaged in for livelihood or gain, as trade, art, or profession, includes the practice of medicine. Seiple v. Schwarz, 109 S. W. 633, 636, 130 Mo. App. 65; Wood v. Same (Mo.) 109 S. W. 638.

As property

Renting rooms

The Constitution protects a homestead consisting of lots not exceeding $5,000 in value, provided the same shall be used for the purposes of a home, or as a place to exercise the "calling" or "business" of the head of the family. A debtor purchased land worth $3,000, on which a two-story dwelling stood. He moved and remained away two years, although he intended to return. He returned when the dwelling was occupied by a tenant, and he built a one-story house on a part of the land. On the two-story house being vacated, he moved into it and rented the small house. He also rented out rooms in the two-story house. He had no income except from his rents. Held, that the renting of the rooms of the house and of the small house was not the pursuit of a calling or business within the Constitution, though the words "calling" and "business" taken together embrace every legitimate avocation of life by which an honest support for a family may be obtained. Lyon v. Files, 110 S. W. 999, 1001, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 630.

Selling liquor

An instruction that it was not necessary that a party should make a profit in his business in order to be guilty of pursuing the occupation of selling intoxicating liquors was not an improper limitation on the meaning of the words, "occupation" or "business," as used in the statute, and was proper where the evidence showed that accused would order whisky for his store customers, and charge it in their store account at cost to be paid when the rest of the account was paid, since each of these transactions constituted a sale. Dickson v. State (Tex.) 146 S. W. 914, 918.

Where the words are not otherwise limited by the context, the phrase "place of business" means a place where a person carries on some regular commercial occupation, not where he makes some single bargain, or even where he engages in sporadic transactions. A person might set up a regular establishment for the illegal sale of liquor and go regularly into that business, in which event the place he should so set up would be a place of business. In some contexts "business" means lawful business. There is nothing, however, in the prohibition statute of Georgia to indicate such a contextual restriction. It would not be a fair construction of the language of the law to say that one who, in the privacy of his home, made a single sale thereby ipso facto converted his home into a place of business. The buying of a single vessel containing whisky cannot be regarded as an occupation or "business." Bashinski v. State, 62 S. E. 577, 578, 5 Ga. App. 3 (citing Henderson v. Heyward, 34 S. E. 590, 190 Ga. 373, 47 L. R. A. 366, 77 Am. St. Rep. 384; Walsch v. Call, 32 Wis. 159, 161).

The terms "business" and "occupation," as used in Acts 29th Leg. c. 64, providing for the punishment of any one, or the agent or employé of any one, engaged in the "business or occupation" of keeping or storing intoxicants, or others, in any county in which the sale of intoxicating liquors has been prohibited, mean a calling, trade, or vocation in which one engages to make a living or obtain wealth. Cohen v. State, 110 S. W. 66, 67, 53 Tex. Cr. App. 426 (quoting and adopting definitions in Stanford v. State, 16 Tex. App. 331; Love v. State, 20 S. W. 978, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 460; Koenig v. State, 26 S. W. 835, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 367, 47 Am. St. Rep. 35; State v. Austin Club, 33 S. W. 113, 89 Tex. 20, 30 L. R. A. 500; Lyons-Thomas Hardware Co. v. Perry Stove Mfg. Co., 24 S. W. 16, 86 Tex. 153, 22 L. R. A. 802; 6 Cyc. p. 259; Waggner v. Haskell, 35 S. W. 1, 89 Tex. 435).

The power to legislate for the enforcement of local option laws is not taken away from the Legislature by the adoption of local option, except as to those offenses defined and punishment attached which were in existence when local option was adopted; and, if new offenses grow out of the violation of the local option law, not covered by existing laws, it is the duty of the Legislature to pass efficient laws to meet such emergencies, under Const. art. 16, § 20, directing the Legislature to pass laws whereby the people from time to time may determine whether the sale of intoxicating liquor shall be prohibited within prescribed limits, and hence Laws 31st Leg. 1st Ex. Sess. c. 15, making it a penitentiary offense to engage in or pursue the occupation or business of selling intoxicating liquors except as permitted by law, in any county, precinct, or subdivision in which the sale of such liquors has been or shall hereafter be prohibited by law, the sale only being prohibited when local option was adopted, is valid. Fitch v. State (Tex.) 127 S. W. 1040, 1043; Payne v. Same (Tex.) 129 S. W. 1197 (quoting 1 Words and Phrases, pp. 915-926; 8 Words and Phrases, pp. 7593, 7594).

Use of trading stamps

As to whether the use of trading stamps is a business, the court quotes: "In its ultimate analysis, the use of trading stamps by a merchant is simply a unique and attractive form of advertising, resorted to for the purpose of increasing trade. In the strict commercial sense of the term 'business,' it is not a business at all. It is simply a mode or manner of business—an instrumentality or incident of a business. When resorted to for the purpose of increasing the business to which it is annexed, it occupies the same relation to that business as newspaper advertising, circulars, dodgers, and the like—and I adopt this view, of the effect of the acts for which the petitioner is held. These acts do not constitute a 'business,' in the proper use of that word. They are a mere means of advertising, an incident of a business, 'a demium,' as stated in the petition, 'of a co-operation and exchange for value.'" Ex parte Hutchinson, 137 Fed. 950, 951.

"While the word 'business,' as used colloquially, carries with it a very broad meaning, still, as used in its legal and commercial sense, it applies only to that in which one engages for the purpose of livelihood, profit, or the like. This idea of 'business' runs through all of the definitions contained in the dictionaries." An agreement between a number of merchants and a corporation provided that the latter should print the names of the former in its subscribers' directory and circulate a number of copies of the book in a named city, and that the merchants should purchase of the corporation a number of so-called trading stamps, to be delivered to customers with their purchases (and not to be otherwise disposed of), and by them preserved and pasted in the books furnished by the corporation until a certain number had been secured, when they should be presented to the corporation in exchange for the customers' choice of certain articles kept in stock by the corporation. Held, that the furnishing of the trading stamps by a merchant to his customers did not constitute a "business" separate and distinct from that of selling merchandise but was merely an instrumentality in or an incident to that business, being in its nature incapable of such separate existence as to constitute of itself a "business" in either a commercial or a legal sense. That whether the furnishing of the trading stamps be treated as a gift, or as a part of the contract of sale of the merchandise, which is delivered at the time the stamps are furnished, the furnishing of the stamps does not constitute a "business" subject to be taxed under charter authority to classify and tax "business."

Work synonymous

Acts 1902, c. 160, which provides by section 8 that, before any person should engage in the business of undertaking or any assistant or employé of such person whose duties engaged him in the care, preservation, disposition, or burial of the dead should perform such duties, he should apply to the state board of undertakers for a license to practice such business and employment, and which as amended by Acts 1904, c. 389, requires the board to find that the applicant "has been employed at least two years prior to said application by some person or firm actively engaged in the work of practical embalming and undertaking * * * is possessed of skill and knowledge of the said business," must be construed to mean that the applicant has been so employed in the work of embalming and undertaking, and that he possesses the skill and knowledge of embalming as well as undertaking, and that the word "work" in the amending clause is synonymous with the word "business." State v. Rice, 80 Atl. 1026, 1029, 115 Md. 317, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 344, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1247.

BUSINESS AGENT

"The term 'business agent,' as used in the statute, providing for service of summons in a civil action against a foreign corporation having a business agent in the state by delivering a copy to such agent, does not mean every man who is intrusted with a commission or an employment by a foreign corporation. It does not mean any man who does any kind of business for a corporation. The statute was never intended to include under the terms 'business agent' every person who might incidentally or occasionally transact some business for a foreign corporation. Its meaning must be drawn from the general context of the language used. The business agent mentioned in the statute means one bearing a close relation to the duties of managing agent, cashier, or secretary of the corporation. It must be an agent who is appointed, designated, or authorized to transact and manage one or more distinct branches of business which may be and is conducted and carried on by the corporation within the state where the service is made; one who stands in the shoes of the corporation in relation to the particular business managed, conducted, and controlled by him for his corporation. To constitute a managing or business agent upon whom service of summons could be made, the agent must be one having in fact a representative capacity and derivative authority, and not one created, by construction or implication, contrary to the intention of the parties. Jameson v. Simonds Saw Co., 84 Pac. 289-292, 2 Cal. App. 582

(quoting and adopting Doe v. Springfield Boiler & Mfg. Co., 104 Fed. 684, 44 C. C. A. 128).

BUSINESS AND FACTORY USE

The schedule of rates attached to a contract to furnish water to a town contained an item "special rates," including hydrants in yards, hotels, stables, and "business and factory use." Held, that the phrase "business and factory use" related to domestic uses as found in factories and places of business, such as drinking, washing, etc., and did not authorize the sale of water to such factories to furnish power. Mayor, etc., of Town of Boonton v. Boonton Water Co., 61 Atl. 390, 394, 69 N. J. Eq. 23.

BUSINESS BELONGING TO THE ESTATE

In Rev. St. 1895, art. 1984, providing that if there be a plantation, manufactory, or "business belonging to the estate," and the disposition thereof is not specially directed by will, and it is not required to be sold to pay debts, it shall be the duty of the executor or administrator to carry on the plantation, manufactory, or business, or to rent the same, as shall appear to him to be most for the interest of the estate, "if it be granted that this language 'business belonging to the estate' is broad enough to include a partnership business, it is not true that it necessarily includes such business, and the general language should be restricted to the individual property, because the administration of partnership estate was differently provided for in article 1867 by referring it to the common law." Altgelt v. Alamo Nat. Bank, 83 S. W. 6, 10, 98 Tex. 252.

BUSINESS CONSUMPTION

Water used in operating a café, billiard room, bar, barber shop, and garage in connection with apartment houses, is used for "business consumption," within New York City waterworks regulations, permitting a commissioner to require installation of meters. Johnson-Kahn Co. v. Thompson, 130 N. Y. Supp. 216, 220, 73 Misc. Rep. 103.

Where the owner of an apartment house furnished water to the former owner living in an adjoining private dwelling house, pending establishment by him of a separate plant, such act did not make the apartment house a place in which water was furnished for "business consumption," within the meaning of a statute, subjecting places where water is furnished for business consumption to the discretionary authority of the commissioner in the matter of the installation and maintenance of meters. Foster v. Monroe, 82 N. Y. Supp. 653, 654, 40 Misc. Rep. 449.

BUSINESS CORPORATION

The term "business corporation" means a corporation engaged in financial dealings, buying and selling, traffic, and mercantile transactions in general, and includes a corporation organized to manufacture, distill, buy, sell, import, export, exchange, and otherwise acquire, hold, own, deal in, or dispose of wines, spirits, liquors, ales, and beers at wholesale or retail or otherwise. Greenough v. Board of Police Com'rs of Town of Tiverton, 74 Atl. 785, 789, 30 R. I. 212, 136 Am. St. Rep. 953.

An association organized, as shown by its certificate of incorporation, for social fellowship, with the privilege of providing for its members refreshment, etc., is a "social club," within Acts 1902-04, c. 270, subc. 4 (Code 1904, § 1105d), authorizing the incorporation of societies without capital stock, etc., and is not a "business corporation," within chapter 1, p. 437, of the act providing for the incorporation of corporations for the transaction of any lawful business. Hanger v. Commonwealth, 60 S. E. 67, 68, 107 Va. 872.

A cemetery association, organized without capital stock under Acts June 17, 1852 (1 Rev. St. 1852, p. 461, §§ 17-22), to provide a place for the burial of the dead, with authority to sell burial lots and engaged in selling burial lots and maintaining a cemetery, is conducting a "business," and is not a "charitable" organization, and is liable for the negligence of its officers or agents, though it has maintained the cemetery without profit, and its officers have received no compensation; there being nothing in the charter precluding the association from selling lots for profit or from paying salaries to its officers or dividends to its members. East Hill Cemetery Co. of Rushville v. Thompson (Ind.) 97 N. E. 1036, 1037.

Bankruptcy Act, § 37, providing that its provisions shall apply to all money, business, or commercial corporations, the terms would seem to have been intended to embrace all those classes of corporations that deal in or with money or property in the transactions of money, business, or commerce for pecuniary gain and not for religious, charitable, or educational purposes, and a railroad corporation is a "business corporation" within the meaning of that section as against the objection that it is a public corporation. Adams v. Boston, H. & E. R. Co., 1 Holmes, 30, 1 Fed. Cas. 90, 91.

BUSINESS DONE

Where a license tax was imposed on an insurance company on premiums on "business done" in a given locality, the term means policies issued in the locality mentioned. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Commonwealth, 107 S. W. 802, 804, 128 Ky. 174 (citing and adopting the definition in Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Darenkemp, 66 S. W. 1125, 23 Ky. Law Rep. 2249).

"Business done within the state" cannot be made to mean between that state and other states. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Lewis & Clarke County, 72 Pac. 982, 984, 28 Mont. 484, 98 Am. St. Rep. 572.

"Business done within the state," within the meaning of the Political Code relating to licenses for express companies and carriers, relates to business begun and ended within the state and was evidently intended to exclude the idea that the tax was to be imposed on interstate business. "Business done within the state" cannot be made to mean business done between the state and other states. State v. Northern Pac. Exp. Co., 71 Pac. 404, 406, 27 Mont. 419, 94 Am. St. Rep. 824.

Laws 1896, c. 908, § 187, as amended by Laws 1901, c. 118, § 1, imposes an annual tax on the gross amount of the premiums received by domestic insurance companies for "business done" in the state. The premium which represents the business done is the amount that the company has the benefit of and furnishes an equivalent for. The business done through a canceled policy is the insurance made or indemnity furnished during the period that the policy is in force. That is the only business that a fire insurance company can do. People ex rel. Continental Ins. Co. v. Miller, 70 N. E. 10, 177 N. Y. 515.

BUSINESS ESTABLISHMENT

A tugboat used in dredging operations is not a "factory" or "business establishment," within the Labor Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 31), regulating the employment of minors in factories, providing that the term "factory" shall include mills, workshops, and other manufacturing or business establishments, and requiring that shafting, set screws, etc., in factories be properly guarded; the term "factory" being used to designate a structure or plant where something is made or manufactured from raw or partly wrought materials into forms suitable for use, and the term "business establishment" meaning an establishment resembling a mill, workshop, or other manufacturing establishment. Shannahan v. Empire Engineering Corp., 98 N. E. 9, 10, 204 N. Y. 543.

BUSINESS HOMESTEAD

Under Const. art. 16, § 51, providing that the homestead shall consist of lots used for a home or as a place for the business of the head of a family, the homestead embraces the family residence and the place of business, and the lots constituting the homestead may be connected or not, provided they are used for a home, and one or more lots may be devoted to business; but the portion devoted to the business must constitute one place at which the business is transacted. The head of a family claimed a business homestead of four lots; two being separated from the other two by an intervening lot. He was a dealer in implements, and his business houses were located on two of the lots, and the other two were used for storing the implements and exposing them for sale. Held, that the lots on which the business houses were located constituted the business homestead, but the other lots were not a part of it. Rock Island Plow Co. v. Alten, 116 S. W. 1144, 1145, 102 Tex. 866.

BUSINESS HOURS

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 1222, authorizing the service of citation upon a corporation by leaving a copy of the same at the principal office of the company during "office" hours, a return showing service during "business" hours is sufficient. El Paso & S. W. Ry. Co. v. Kelly (Tex.) 83 S. W. 855, 860.

What constitutes business hours of a bank within the meaning of the negotiable instrument law (Laws 1899, p. 715, c. 356, § 1678—2), providing that presentment for payment to be sufficient must be made at a reasonable hour on a business day, has reference to the general custom of the place of the particular transaction. Hence, where presentment was made to a Chicago bank between 3 and 6 o'clock, and it appeared that the business day of the bank continued after the closing of the clearing house transactions, so as to enable banks holding commercial paper for collection to present such as had been refused recognition in the clearings, the presentment satisfies the statute. Columbian Banking Co. v. Bowen, 114 N. W. 451, 453, 134 Wis. 218.

BUSINESS IN THIS STATE

The phrase "business in this state," as used in an act creating a charter board, to which application must be made for permission to organize a domestic corporation and to do business in the state as a foreign corporation, means, when applied to commerce, domestic business only—business which originates, is carried on, and is completed within the jurisdiction of the state. State ex rel. Coleman v. Western Union Tel. Co., 90 Pac. 299, 302, 304, 75 Kan. 609.

BUSINESS MEN

"Business men" may be taken as meaning men engaged in business as the modifying word "business" is defined, and to include all who as their chief concern give their time and attention to any particular livelihood, occupation, or employment. Mooreland Rural Telephone Co. v. Mouch, 96 N. E. 193, 195, 48 Ind. App. 521.

BUSINESS METHODS

"Business methods" of a mutual benefit society, as to which it is authorized to adopt new by-laws binding on existing members, includes the fixing of proper assessment rates to enable it to meet its obligations. Supreme

Ruling of Fraternal Mystic Circle v. Ericson (Tex.) 131 S. W. 92, 97.

BUSINESS OF AN INTERSTATE CHARACTER

Tax Law, Laws 1896, c. 908, § 184, provides for a franchise tax to be assessed on the gross earnings of a transportation corporation within the state, which shall include its gross earnings from its transportation or transmission business originating and terminating within the state, but shall not include earnings derived from "business of an interstate character." Where it appeared that a domestic railway company's assessment under the section included receipts from express business beginning in the state and transferred within the state for delivery in another state, or shipped outside the state for delivery within the state, such business was interstate commerce, and not taxable. People ex rel. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Miller, 88 N. Y. Supp. 373, 375, 94 App. Div. 587.

BUSINESS OF CORPORATION

Control of, see Control.

BUSINESS OF THE SAME KIND

The amended certificate of incorporation of a leather company set forth the objects as the manufacture and sale of leather, lumber, and belting, including the acquisition of lands and other property necessary in that manufacture, and in general the engagement in any business necessary in the manufacture, and to the extent necessary to purchase stock in any other company. The certificate of incorporation of another company with which it was proposed to consolidate set forth its objects to be to manufacture not only leather, lumber, and belting, but any other merchandise or article, to engage in any other manufacturing, warehousing, trading, or selling business, to acquire lands and other property necessary to purchase the stock or bonds of any other corporation, to acquire trade-marks, patents, and inventions, to build and operate railroads, tramways, etc., and to carry on any other lawful business, proper or convenient, to be carried on in connection with the foregoing purposes. Held, that the companies were not organized for carrying on business of the same or a similar kind within Act March 8, 1893 (P. L. p. 121), authorizing consolidation. Colgate v. United States Leather Co., 72 Atl. 126, 129, 75 N. J. Eq. 229, 19 Ann. Cas. 1262.

BUSINESS OFFICE

Comp. Laws, § 3831, subd. 16, provides that all the personal property of a street railroad shall be assessed in the township, village, or city where its principal office is situated, and section 6436, subd. 5, requires the articles of association of a street railroad to state the city or village in which the office for the transaction of its business is located. Held, that the place in which the stockholders and directors of the corporation occasionally met was not the principal "business office" of the corporation, but that that was in a city where its president, secretary, and treasurer had their offices and where they performed the duties pertaining thereto. Detroit, Y. A. A. & J. Ry. v. City of Detroit, 104 N. W. 327, 329, 141 Mich. 5.

A switchman's "shanty" is not a "business office," within the meaning of Rev. St. 1899, § 995, providing that, "when any such summons shall be issued against any incorporated company, service on the president or other chief officer of such company, or, in his absence, by leaving a copy thereof at any 'business office' of said company with the person having charge thereof, shall be admitted a sufficient service." State v. Myers, 104 S. W. 1146, 1147, 226 Mo. App. 544.

BUSINESS PHONE

"Business phone" may mean a phone used exclusively or mainly by persons in conducting mercantile, manufacturing, or trade pursuits only, or may mean a phone maintained chiefly for use in carrying on the business in which the patron was engaged. Mooreland Rural Telephone Co. v. Mouch, 96 N. E. 193, 195, 48 Ind. App. 521.

BUSINESS PORTION

Pub. Acts 1905, No. 196, § 12, provides that in cities and villages motor cars shall not be run at a greater speed than eight miles an hour in the "business portion," nor at a greater rate than 15 miles an hour in other portions. Section 1 defines "business portion" as the territory contiguous to a public highway which is wholly or partially built up with structures devoted to business. Held, that the regulation as to business districts is not limited to a single central business area in a city, but applies to all business districts where there are more than one. People v. Dow, 118 N. W. 745, 746, 155 Mich. 115.

BUSINESS POWERS

Municipal corporations have two classes of powers—the one, governmental, in the exercise of which their officers may not bind the municipality beyond their terms of office; the other, business powers, in the exercise of which they are governed by the same rules as individuals or private corporations. Tuttle Bros. & Bruce v. City of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, 176 Fed. 80, 88, 99 C. C. A. 606.

BUSINESS REQUIRED BY LAW

The duty imposed on towns to establish and maintain public schools, keep highways and bridges safe and convenient, relieve and support the poor, and pay the town's proportion of the state tax, does not involve "business required by law" to be transacted at the annual town meeting, within the meaning of

Gen. Laws 1896, c. 37, § 8, now Gen. Laws 1909, c. 47, § 8, requiring a notice of town meetings to contain a statement of the business required by law to be transacted therein, since Gen. Laws 1909, c. 36, §§ 3, 4, now Gen. Laws 1909, c. 46, §§ 3, 4, expressly permit such business to be transacted at any legal meeting of the qualified electors. Lonsdale Co. v. Taft, 84 Atl. 795, 797, 34 R. I. 496.

BUSINESS SERVICE

See Entire Business Service.

The words "business service," in a telephone company's franchise fixing the maximum rate for such service, means the ordinary service between business men and other citizens within the radius specified, and do not include service by which a person would receive telephone messages to be by him retelephoned to a telegraph company for transmission by it, thereby enabling the telegraph company to evade a joint traffic agreement between it and the telephone company. East Tennessee Tel. Co. v. City of Harrodsburg, 122 S. W. 126, 128, 135 Ky. 216.

BUSINESS SITUS

"Notes, mortgages, tax sale certificates, and the like, might be brought into the state for something more than a temporary purpose and be devoted to some business use here, and thus become incorporated with the property of this state for revenue purposes. Such situs has been aptly termed 'business situs.'" Board of Com'rs v. Hewitt, 93 Pac. 181, 184, 76 Kan. 816, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 493.

A line of cases hold that wherever a money lender has a local agent in another state, and permits that agent to control the evidences of debt and the mortgages securing them and to continue, for a long course of dealing, the business of lending money, collecting and relending money, in the state of the agent's residence, the evidences of debt and the mortgages securing them have what has come to be known as a "business situs" for purposes of taxation and for other purposes. Adams v. Colonial & U. S. Mortgage Co., 34 South. 482, 528, 82 Miss. 263, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 138, 100 Am. St. Rep. 633 (citing Jahier v. Rascoe, 62 Miss. 699).

BUSINESS TAX

A tax upon agents of packing houses and dealers in packing house goods or products having a place of business or stock of merchandise in a city and selling to customers therein is a tax upon business, not upon labor or the right to work. City of Savannah v. Cooper, 63 S. E. 138, 139, 131 Ga. 670.

A "business tax" is a tax on the privilege of carrying on a business or employment, and is commonly imposed in the form of an excise tax on the license to pursue the employment. It is usually a specific sum, or sum whose amount is regulated by the business done, or the income or profits earned. Central Granaries Co. v. Lancaster County, 109 N. W. 385, 387, 77 Neb. 311.

BUSINESS TENDERED

The expression "the business tendered such railroads," in Laws 1903, p. 93, c. 68, § 1, declaring that all railroads in Texas shall be required to build sidings and spur tracks sufficient to handle the business tendered such railroads, when ordered to do so by the railroad commission, refers to freight and passengers which come to the railroad from the public for transportation as a public highway; and the Legislature's intention was to require all railroad companies to provide all necessary means for accommodating such business. Railroad Commission of Texas v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. of Texas, 80 S. W. 1141, 98 Tex. 67.

BUSINESS TRANSACTED

Kirby's Dig. § 3093, authorizing a husband or wife to testify for the other respecting any "business transacted" by the one for the other in the capacity of agent, did not authorize the husband of a will contestant to testify concerning a copy of a letter written by contestant to testator; the term "business transacted" referring to business transactions with third persons, and not with each other, and the statute being designed to enable a husband or wife who had transacted business with a third person through the other as agent to prove such business by the agent who transacted it, the principal not having personal knowledge thereof. Taylor v. McClintock, 112 S. W. 405, 417, 87 Ark. 243.

BUSY

"Busy" means "actively or attentively engaged; closely occupied, mentally or physically; opposed to idle; in constant or energetic action; filled with active duties or employment." Graves v. Knights of Maccabees of the World, 112 N. Y. Supp. 948, 950, 128 App. Div. 660.

BUSY SEASON

The terms "busy season" and "dull season," unexplained, in a contract for the employment of a fur cutter, in which the employer agrees to give a certain weekly salary for the "busy season" and a certain other sum per week for the "dull season," are ambiguous to those unacquainted with the fur trade, and oral testimony is admissible to show their meaning. Schultz v. Simmons Fur Co., 90 Pac. 917, 919, 46 Wash. 555.

BUT

The word "but" is defined as "except"; "on the contrary"; "yet" or "still," as a word of limitation. El. H. Rollins & Sons v. Board of Com'rs of Grand County, 199 Fed.

71, 78, 117 C. C. A. 583 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 926).

The word "but" is commonly used in the sense of "except." In re Sullivan County R. R., 81 Atl. 473, 474, 76 N. H. 185.

The meaning of the word "but" varies according to the context. It is used to mean "except," and also to mean "on the contrary," or "on the other hand." Board of Trustees of Park College v. Attorney General, 129 S. W. 27, 80, 228 Mo. 514.

Under the statute requiring a party demanding an appeal to file an affidavit that the appeal is not intended for purpose of delay and that affiant fairly believes he has a just and legal defense, an affidavit that it was not intended for delay "but" affiant believed, etc., was sufficient. Tomlin v. Morris, 16 N. J. Law, 179, 180.

B. & C. Comp. § 226, provides that the homestead shall be exempt from sale on any judicial process after the death of the person entitled thereto for the collection of any debts for which the same could not have been sold during his lifetime, but such homestead shall descend as if death [exemptions] did not exist. Held, that the word "but" is an adversative conjunction used in the sense of "on the other hand" or "yet," and is not intended as a prohibition against the owner's power to dispose of the homestead by will, nor was the statute intended to prescribe the sole mode by which the title might pass from the owner, but only that the descent should not be affected by the exemption clause. Mansfield v. Hill, 108 Pac. 1007, 1008, 56 Or. 400.

Testator devised all his real estate to his widow so long as she should remain such, and then provided that certain of his real estate should not be sold or incumbered, and, on the death of the widow, should be owned and used by his children as equal co-owners, "but in case of the death of any one leaving heirs, then the share of such deceased child," in equal portions, should descend to his or her heirs, and, on the death of the children or any of them, the property should descend to their respective heirs in fee simple absolute. Held, that since the word "but" following the creation of the life estate in testator's children, marked the beginning of an exception, and was used in the sense of "except," "unless," "save," "yet," "still," "however," "nevertheless," the clause relating to the death of any of the children referred to their death during the lifetime of the widow, and that, as to children surviving her, no contingency longer existed, the word "heirs," in the last clause not being limited to heirs of the body but referring to testator's heirs generally. Winter v. Dibble, 95 N. E. 1093, 1099, 251 Ill. 200.

Under Public Service Commission Law (Consol. Laws 1910, c. 48) § 38, which provides that a carrier shall be liable for loss or injury to property carried as baggage up to its full value regardless of the character thereof, but that the value in excess of $150 should be stated upon delivery to the carrier, who may make a reasonable charge for the assumption of liability in excess of $150, the word "but," which ordinarily indicates an intention to limit or restrict the effect of what precedes it, may be given that effect by qualifying the extension of the liability of the carrier as insurer to property carried as baggage, though in fact it be merchandise, without operating to limit the carrier's liability to the sum of $150, where no excess value is stated. Robinson v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 129 N. Y. Supp. 1030, 1032, 145 App. Div. 391.

The word "but," as used in Kirby's Dig. § 5057, providing that unimproved and unclosed land shall be deemed to be in the possession of the person who pays taxes thereon, if he have color of title thereto, "but" no person shall be deemed to invoke the benefit of that act unless he and those under whom he claims shall have paid such taxes for at least seven years in succession, introduces an exception or proviso or limiting clause to the general provision, which precedes it, and, according to a well-settled rule of construction, where the enacting clause of a statute is general in its language and objects and a proviso is afterwards introduced, the proviso is considered strictly and takes no case out of the enacting clause which does not fall fairly within its terms. Towson v. Denson, 86 S. W. 661, 662, 74 Ark. 302 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 926; 6 Cyc. p. 261; Leggett v. Firth, 29 N. E. 950, 132 N. Y. 11).

BUT ALSO

The term "but also," when connecting two parts of a sentence, implies that what follows is in addition to what precedes it, carrying the idea "not only that but this." Hence a newspaper publication that "Julian is remembered here as a member of the Legislature who did well in a legislative way, but also as a chief of police whom a Democratic senate committee said was not a proper man," is so connected in all of its parts that the meaning of the entire publication is properly submitted to the jury for construction in a libel action. Julian v. Kansas City Star Co., 107 S. W. 496, 504, 209 Mo. 35.

BUTCHERING BUSINESS

A bequest of "all horses, harnesses, wagons, machinery, and all other personal property used in my butchering business, including all choses in action," does not pass a bank deposit, it appearing that the account was resorted to in connection with testator's general business; that accounts were paid out of it in no wise connected with his

"butchering business"; that it was not at all necessary to the conduct of that business, which was an established and profitable one; that there were motives for opening the account growing out of a contemplated visit abroad; and that there were accounts due by customers to the butcher business satisfying the provision as to choses in action. Koss v. Kastelberg, 86 S. E. 877, 878, 98 Va. 278.

BUTTER

See Cocoa Butter; Cocoa Butterine; Imitation Butter; Yellow Butter.
See, also, Oleomargarine.

Act Cong. May 9, 1902, c. 784, § 4, 32 Stat. 194, 195, defines "butter" to mean "the food product usually known as butter and which is made exclusively from milk or cream, or both, with or without common salt, and with or without additional coloring matter." United States v. 11,150 Pounds of Butter, 195 Fed. 657, 658, 659, 115 C. C. A. 468.

Encyclopedia Britannica (9th Ed.) vol. 4, p. 590, describes "butter" as "the fatty portion of the milk of mammalian animals. The milk of all mammals contains such fatty constituents; and butter from the milk of goats, sheep, and other animals has been and may be used; but that yielded by cows' milk is the most savory, and it alone really constitutes the butter of commerce." "Ghee" is defined by the Standard Dictionary as follows: "Butter clarified by boiling or heating and skimming or straining until it becomes a liquid or semisolid oil, capable of being kept for many years; largely used in India, in cookery and medicines, and in religious rites." "Ghee" is within the provisions for "butter and substitutes therefor" in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 236, 30 Stat. 170. Sahadi Bros. v. United States, 152 Fed. 486, 487.

"The food product usually known as 'butter' * * * is made exclusively from milk or cream, or both, with or without any salt, and with or without additional coloring matter." McCray v. United States, 24 Sup. Ct. 769, 771, 195 U. S. 27, 49 L. Ed. 78, 1 Ann. Cas. 561 (quoting and considering 24 Stat. 209, c. 840).

BUTTER OF A SHADE OR TINT OF YELLOW

Chapter 183, Laws 1911, construed, and held to prohibit the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine purposely made of a shade or tint of yellow, though no artificial coloring matter is used, and that the words "butter of a shade or tint of yellow" mean not only "yellow butter," but all butter which has any shade or tint of yellow. State v. Hanson, 136 N. W. 412, 413, 118 Minn. 85, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 865.

BUTTERINE

See Cocoa Butterine.

BUTTING IN

"Butting in" consists in intermeddling with other people's business. In re Riggsbee, 151 Fed. 701, 702.

BUTTONS AND BUTTON MOLDS

Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 414, 30 Stat. 190, provides that "buttons * * * and button molds * * * shall pay duty at the following rates," and the schedule of rates then prescribed mentions only "buttons." Held, that this provision for "buttons" should be construed, as though reading "buttons and button molds," and that metal button molds should pay the rate assigned to metal buttons. Hormann, Schutte & Co. v. United States, 153 Fed. 868, 869, 83 C. C. A. 50.

The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 414, 30 Stat. 190, for "button molds," includes articles commercially known as button shanks, consisting of pairs of metal disks so constructed that when a piece of cloth is placed on top of one of the disks, and they are subjected to pressure, a cloth-covered button is produced. Hormann, Schutte & Co. v. United States, 153 Fed. 868, 869, 83 C. C. A. 50.

BUTTONS OF GLASS

So-called rhinestone buttons, composed of paste, are not embraced within the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 414, 30 Stat. 190, for "buttons of glass," because, though paste is a kind of glass, it is distinguished from glass elsewhere in the tariff under its own peculiar name. B. Blumenthal & Co. v. United States, 144 Fed. 384, 385, 75 C. C. A. 322.

BUY

Where a mortgagee agreed, in consideration of his mortgagor conveying the property to him by a deed absolute on its face, that the latter might "buy" it back within a certain time at a certain price, it amounted to an agreement for a redemption. Day v. Davis, 61 Atl. 576, 578, 101 Md. 259.

To "buy and to sell" means to purchase one thing and to sell another. "To purchase," in the title of Laws 1903, p. 736, entitled "An act to authorize cities of this state to purchase lands," etc., means "to buy," and hence does not express the right to condemn, nor is it broad enough to embrace such right. Griffith v. City of Trenton, 69 Atl. 29, 30, 76 N. J. Law, 28.

Under the act of 1885 (Laws 1885, p. 229), relative to the consolidation of railroad corporations, section 1, providing that any railroad company organized under the laws of this state operating in connection with their own lines any other railroads in this or any other state may purchase and hold in fee simple or otherwise, and use and enjoy the property rights and franchises of the companies owning such other roads, it is not necessary that the transaction should take the form of a technical sale, but it is sufficient if the contract or agreement merges the properties, franchises, and corporate rights of the merging company into the merger corporation, as a result of which one corporation disposes of its property and franchises and the other acquires them in a lawful manner, since "purchase" is not used in its popular and commercial meaning as equivalent to "buy," but in its enlarged and legal signification meaning the acquisition of real property by any voluntary act of the parties, as distinguished from title by descent which results from operation of law (citing 7 Words and Phrases). Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Doyle, 100 N. E. 278, 280, 256 Ill. 514.

BUYER'S NEEDS

Plaintiff owned and operated a cannery for the manufacture of canned goods in which beef was used, having previously for four or five years purchased beef from defendant, a packer. It had not been plaintiff's custom to run its factory at full capacity, which was about 10,000 pounds a day, without regard to orders received, but rather to manufacture goods to fill orders received or sales made, and to keep on hand a sufficient supply to fill orders that would probably be received. Under these circumstances plaintiff agreed to purchase, and defendant agreed to sell to plaintiff, 175,000 to 225,000 pounds of beef trimmings, to be delivered at the seller's option during the year; defendant agreeing to "take care of the buyer's needs this year." Held, that the clause quoted did not obligate defendant to furnish a sufficient quantity to operate plaintiff's plant at full capacity for the year, but only obligated it to furnish a sufficient quantity to operate the factory in accordance with plaintiff's customary operation, and to cover the amount that plaintiff's sales might exceed the maximum quantity as named in the contract, etc. T. B. Walker Mfg. Co. v. Swift & Co., 200 Fed. 529, 532.

BUYER'S OPTION

Where meat was bought "buyer's option," which was explained to mean for the buyer to give shipping orders, when he desired the meat to be actually delivered, and the parties in subsequent correspondence recognized that interpretation of the phrase, and the buyer admitted that the meat was being held for his account, and acquiesced in the arrangement, it was not incumbent upon the seller to have the meat transported to the buyer's place of business and tender it to him after he had evidenced his intention of not receiving it, in order to hold him liable therefor. Bonds v. Thomas J. Lipton Co., 37 South. 805, 807, 85 Miss. 209.

BUYER'S TANK BASIS

Where a contract was for the sale of four cars of oil "buyers' tank basis," the term "car" meaning in the trade 60 barrels and "buyers' tank basis" meaning that the buyer shall furnish the tanks, and the buyer under the contract had the option to require shipment made in barrels or tanks and chose shipment in barrels, it could not demand that in loading the car the seller should place 125 barrels of oil therein, but was bound by the custom of the trade to place 60 barrels in the car, and by the rules of carriers not permitting more to be shipped in a car. Paris Oil & Cotton Co. v. Carstens Packing Co. (Tex.) 126 S. W. 1182, 1183.

BUYING OF A BILL

Where a corporation, organized under Act April 21, 1896 (P. L. p. 277), loaned the owner of a majority of the stock of another corporation a large sum of money, and took from him a pledge of such stock, it was a violation of the third section of such act, providing that no corporation created under the act should possess the power to carry on the business of discounting bills or notes, or of buying and selling bills of exchange, the loan, while not strictly a discounting of the note, was the "buying of a bill." Earle v. American Sugar Refining Co., 71 Atl. 391, 395, 74 N. J. Eq. 751.

BY

See Abide By; Stand By; Whereby.

A verdict finding defendant guilty of embezzlement "by" bailee, instead of "as" bailee, is defective, if not bad. State v. Jones, 89 S. W. 366, 367, 114 Mo. App. 343.

As on or before

"By," as indicating a terminal point of time, means "not later than; as early as." Goldman v. Broyles (Tex.) 141 S. W. 283, 285 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 930).

A contract to complete work "by" the ensuing month of November excludes that month and requires it to be completed before that time. Rankin v. Woodworth (Pa.) 3 Pen. & W. 48.

It is not a material alteration of an order for goods made subject to countermand "by" a certain time to write the word "before" over the word "by"; the legal effect of the instrument not being changed. Express Pub. Co. v. Aldine Press, 17 Atl. 608, 609, 126 Pa. 347.

A provision of a charter party giving the option to cancel if the vessel was not "ready for loading by November 20, 1903, at Yokahama," required her to be ready on or before that date, and the charterer was not entitled to cancel because she was not ready at the beginning of the day, where she was a few hours later. Ruprecht v. Delacamp, 165 Fed. 381, 382.

Where a defendant was granted a continuance on condition that if she failed to pay the costs by the next term of the court judgment should be rendered against her, the word "by" did not mean before, but meant not later than, or as soon as, and so payment of costs on the day of the next term when the case was called is sufficient. Weir v. S. & J. T. Clark, 58 South. 793, 794, 4 Ala. App. 302.

Where the declaration, in an action by a buyer against a seller for failure to deliver the property sold, alleged that by the terms of the contract it was to be delivered on or before the 1st day of November, while the contract in evidence showed that it was to be delivered "by the first day of November," there was no variance. Coonley v. Anderson (N. Y.) 1 Hill, 519-522.

A telegram, "If can get peanuts out by Friday, ship; answer," and response, "Order confirmed; will ship by Friday night of this week," to which no reply was made until the Friday referred to, when the buyer telegraphed a cancellation of the order, constituted a completed contract; the word "Friday" including 24 hours, until 12 o'clock Friday night, and the word "by" being equivalent to "not later than." Dukes v. D. L. Gore & Co., 78 S. E. 365, 11 Ga. App. 743 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 930).

As to See To.

As used in conveyance

As used in a conveyance, "by" is a term of exclusion unless by necessary implication it is manifestly used in a different sense. Bradley v. Rice, 13 Me. 198, 201, 29 Am. Dec. 501.

By lake or stream

"To, from, or 'by' are terms of exclusion, unless by necessary implication they are manifestly used in a different sense." So that, where land is conveyed bounded by a pond or lake, it is limited to the margin of the pond or lake. Bradley v. Rice, 13 Me. 198, 201, 29 Am. Dec. 501.

In a conveyance the words "to," "on," "by," "at," "along," a nontidal stream presumptively carry title as far into the stream as the grantor possesses. Leary v. Jersey City, 189 Fed. 419, 428.

With synonyms

The word "with," in an information for robbery charging that defendant then and there willfully, etc., and "with" force and fear committed the offense, is used as synonymous with "by" and equivalent to the expression "by means of"; the meaning of the word not being limited to accompaniment, association, or proximity, though such is its primary meaning. State v. Pemberton, 104 Pac. 556, 557, 39 Mont. 530.

BY AND WITH ADVICE

Where the Constitution declares that a power to act is in the Governor "by and with the advice of council" or "by and with the advice and consent of the council," the responsibility rests primarily on the Governor to determine as the supreme executive magistrate whether any action is called for, and what action, if any, is desirable; and the provision for advice of the council is a requirement that their approval and concurrence shall accompany the affirmative act and enter into it before it becomes complete and effective. The Governor is not required as a matter of law, on the presentation of a petition for pardon or for commutation of sentence, to refer such petition to the executive council or to submit the same to the council unless the Governor consider it his duty to exercise the pardoning power. In re Opinion of Justices, 78 N. E. 811, 312, 190 Mass. 616.

BY ANY DEVICE WHATEVER

The meaning of the clause "by any device whatever," in Act Feb. 19, 1908, c. 708, 32 Stat. 847, prohibiting rebates, is directly or indirectly in any way whatever. Armour Packing Co. v. United States, 153 Fed. 1, 16, 82 C. C. A. 185, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 400.

BY AUTHORITY

See Authority—Authorize.

BY BALLOT

The phrase "by ballot," as used in Const. art. 2, § 1, providing that all elections by the people shall be by ballot, implies that the voting shall be secret and not viva voce. Where the officers at a local adoption election provided boxes which were labeled "For Sale" and "Against Sale," respectively, into which the voters were required to cast ballots as they voted for or against the sale of liquor respectively, the election was void as destroying the secrecy of the ballot. State ex rel. Birchmore v. State Board of Canners, 59 S. E. 145, 147, 78 S. C. 461, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 850, 13 Ann. Cas. 1132.

BY CHANCE

Where prizes were offered to those sending bands of certain makes of cigars for the closest estimates of the number of cigars on which $3 tax per thousand would be paid in a certain month, the number on which the tax was paid in each month for three years being published in connection with the offer, the distribution of prizes was not "by chance," within Pen. Code, § 323, defining lotteries as a distribution of money by chance. People ex rel. Ellison v. Lavin, 87 N. Y. Supp. 776, 778, 93 App. Div. 292.

BY CONFESSION

See Decree Pro Confesso.

BY DESCENT

See Indians by Descent.

BY FORCE OF THE EXECUTION

A demand by an execution plaintiff is not a demand "by force of the execution" within the meaning of Rev. Laws, c. 189, § 40, providing that, if goods in the hands of one adjudged a trustee in trustee process are not demanded of him "by force of the execution" within 30 days after final judgment, they shall be liable to another attachment; such demand, to be effective, must be made by an officer in whose hands the execution has been placed. Barnes v. Shelburne Falls Sav. Bank, 72 N. E. 85, 86, 186 Mass. 574.

BY HAND

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 454, 30 Stat. 194, relating to "such statuary as is cut, carved, or otherwise wrought by hand * * * and as is the professional production of a statuary or sculptor only," it is not necessary that the entire work on a statue shall be "by hand," nor that the entire handiwork must be that of the statuary or sculptor personally. United States v. Tiffany & Co., 160 Fed. 408, 412, 87 C. C. A. 360.

BY HER OWN LABOR

The phrase "by her own labor," in Hill's Ann. Laws Or. 1892, § 2993, providing that the property acquired by a married woman during coverture "by her own labor" shall not be liable for the debts of her husband, is not limited to manual labor, but includes the proceeds of a mining claim which a married woman worked through her employé under a contract. Elliott v. Hawley, 76 Pac. 93, 95, 34 Wash. 585, 101 Am. St. Rep. 1016.

BY LAW

See Prescribed by Law or Ordinance.

BY MAIL

The words "by mail," used in Laws 28th Leg., Reg. Sess., c. 77, requiring the levying officer in the foreclosure of tax liens under execution or order of sale to give defendant or his attorney written notice of the sale, either in person or by mail, mean that the notice is to be in fact mailed; the officer being given the choice of two methods, one by serving personal notice and the other by mail. Rogers v. Moore, 97 S. W. 685, 100 Tex. 220.

BY NATURE OF HIS EMPLOYMENT

The expression "by nature of his employment" means through the character of his employment, or by reason of, or on account of, his employment. So, in a prosecution for embezzlement, it is sufficient for the indictment to charge that the property embezzled came into the defendant's possession, and was under his care, "by nature of" his employment, although the statute makes it a crime to embezzle property which came into his possession and was under his care "by reason of" his said employment. Strobhar v. State, 47 South. 4, 6, 55 Fla. 167.

BY ORDER OF THE COURT

The phrase "by order of the court," in a petition in an action by an infant by next friend, alleging that the next friend was appointed by order of the court, meant that his appointment was a matter of record in the court where the case was pending. Wegeschiede v. St. Louis Transit Co., 94 S. W. 774, 775, 118 Mo. App. 295.

Where a mechanic's lien does not sufficiently describe the property, and leave to amend a complaint to foreclose the lien is granted upon sustaining a demurrer thereto, the filing of a new notice or amendment of the old one is not "by order of the court," within Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5904, providing that a claim of lien may be amended in an action to foreclose same by order of court, as pleadings may be, etc., so that the filing of a new lien notice after the time for filing had expired would be of no force. Brown v. Trimble, 93 Pac. 317, 48 Wash. 270.

BY OR THROUGH

A policy insuring the owner of property "against all direct loss or damage by fire except as hereinafter provided" contained a provision that the company should "not be liable for loss caused directly or indirectly by invasion, * * * or for loss or damage occasioned by or through any * * * earthquakes." Held, that the words "directly or indirectly" did not apply to the provision respecting earthquakes; that, construing such provision most strongly against the insurer in accordance with the settled rule, and giving the words their common, ordinary meaning, the word "occasioned" was equivalent to "caused," and the phrase "by or through" was but a repetition of words meaning the same thing, so that the provision excepted only loss or damage caused directly by earthquake, and that a loss indirectly caused by the progress of a fire from a distance, although originally started by an earthquake, was not within the exemption. Williamsburgh City Fire Ins. Co. of Brooklyn v. Willard, 164 Fed. 404, 406, 90 C. C. A. 392, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 103.

BY REASON OF

The term "by reason of" in a release of debts, etc., for or "by reason of" or on account of the construction of a battleship, is equivalent to "by virtue of." United States v. Wm. Cramp & Sons Ship & Engine Bldg.

In an action for personal injuries, the use in an instruction of the words "by reason of," instead of "as the direct and proximate result of," is not misleading, since the terms are equivalent. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Anglin, 90 S. W. 897, 898, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 41.

Kirby's Dig. § 2684, declares that, in every final judgment for divorce granted a husband, an order shall be made that all property be restored to either party which either party obtained from or through the other during the marriage and in consideration and by reason thereof. Held, that on divorce granted a husband he was not entitled to have restored to him property conveyed by him to the wife under a separation agreement and that conveyed to her by him in consideration of her again living with him. The Supreme Court of Kentucky, in construing the word "consideration" in this act, held it to mean "the act of marriage, or some agreement or contract touching or relating to the act of marriage," and the expression "by reason thereof," as relating to such property as either party may have obtained from or through the other, by operation of the laws regulating the property rights of husband and wife. McNutt v. McNutt, 95 S. W. 778, 780, 78 Ark. 346 (quoting Phillips v. Phillips, 72 Ky. [9 Bush] 183; Flood v. Flood, 68 Ky. [5 Bush] 167).

By reason of any memorandum

Where testator devised the residue of his property to his executors, to be distributed by them, and directed that they should not be under any legal accountability or subject to any trust or liable to any person or corporation by reason of any memorandum which the testator might leave, the words "by reason of any memorandum," etc., should be construed to refer to antecedent clauses of the will, and to confer full discretionary powers on the executors, not limited by any express trust which otherwise might be claimed to have been created in favor of those named in a subsequent memorandum. Minot v. Attorney General, 75 N. E. 149, 189 Mass. 176.

By reason of intoxication

Rev. St. 1883, c. 27, § 49, gives a right of action to every wife, etc., injured by any intoxicated person against any one who by selling or giving any intoxicating liquor has caused such intoxication. Held, that the statute does not require that the furnishing of the liquor by defendant in an action under the statute should be the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries, but only that it should have contributed to the intoxication, and that the intoxication should have been the proximate cause, and so where defendants sold intoxicating liquor to plaintiff's son upon whom she was in part dependent for support, and the liquor caused him to make an assault upon one B., by whom in defense he was struck and his jaw broken, resulting in decreased ability to labor, defendant was liable. Currier v. McKee, 59 Atl. 442, 443, 99 Me. 364, 3 Ann. Cas. 57.

BY RIGHT, DEVISE OR BEQUEST

The phrase "by right, devise or bequest," as used in a deed of marriage settlement, conveying to a trustee all the estate that the wife may hereafter receive or be entitled to "by right, devise, or bequest," means by right of inheritance, devise, or bequest, and refers to land descending on the wife by operation of law, and not to land acquired by purchase. Land conveyed by deed to the wife during coverture is not within the deed of settlement and may be mortgaged by her without the trustee's consent. Dunlap v. Hill, 59 S. E. 112, 114, 145 N. C. 316.

BY RIGHT OF REPRESENTATION

The phrase, "which his, her, or their parent would have taken if living," is often employed as a conventional phrase, meaning that children or issue of a decedent are to take by representation. Rasquin v. Hamersley, 137 N. Y. Supp. 578, 583, 152 App. Div. 522.

The expression "by right of representation" means in the right of the ancestor through whom the heir takes. Hemenway v. Draper, 97 N. W. 874, 875, 91 Minn. 235.

"The words 'by right of representation' * * * apply to lineal descendants only." Blodgett v. Stowell, 75 N. E. 138, 139, 189 Mass. 142.

BY THE ACT

See Constituted by the Act.

BY THE COURT

See Entertained by the Court.

A decree purporting on its face to have been made "by the court" would be deemed to have been on a hearing of all the judges and not by an individual judge. Zerbey v. Allan, 64 Atl. 587, 588, 215 Pa. 383.

BY THE WRITTEN DIRECTION OF THE COURT

The words "by the written direction of the court," as used in Acts 29th Leg. c. 112, § 5, providing that any original documentary evidence, etc., if embraced in the stenographer's report, may be made a part of the record "by the written direction of the court," construed with Rev. St. 1895, arts. 1379, 1380, 1414, by the provisions of which the approval of the trial judge is full verification of the sufficiency and accuracy of a statement of facts, mean that the direction may be made by the judge either within term time or within 20 days thereafter. Colorado & S. R. Co. v. Hamm, 108 S. W. 1125, 1127, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 196.

BY, THROUGH, OR UNDER

An independent title in land is acquired by condemnation of an easement, so that the covenant of the prior owner of the premises to warrant and defend them against the lawful claims and demands of all persons claiming "by, through, or under" me is not broken thereby. Weeks v. Grace, 80 N. E. 220, 223, 194 Mass. 296, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1692, 10 Ann. Cas. 1077.

BY VIRTUE OF

The phrase "by virtue of" is defined as meaning by or through the authority of, so that, as used in the saving clause of article 5, § 54, Constitution of Oklahoma, providing that the repeal of a statute shall not affect any "proceedings begun by virtue of such repealed statute," means by or through the authority of, and in full compliance with, that statute. State ex rel. West v. McCafferty, 105 Pac. 992, 996, 25 Okl. 2.

BY VIRTUE OF AN EXECUTION

See Seized by Virtue of an Execution.

BY VIRTUE OF HIS OFFICE

Acts done "virtute officii" are within the authority of an officer, but which are accomplished by the improper exercise of that authority and in violation of the confidence which the law reposes in him, and his sureties are liable for such acts whereas acts "colore officii" are unauthorized by the office and do not amount to a breach of the bond. Stephens v. Hendee, 115 N. W. 283, 294, 80 Neb. 754 (quoting and adopting definition in Mechem, Public Officers, § 284; State, to Use of Goodin v. McDonough, 9 Mo. App. 63; citing State v. Porter, 95 N. W. 769, 69 Neb. 203; Ottenstein v. Alpaugh, 2 N. W. 219, 9 Neb. 237; State ex rel. Leidigh v. Holcomb, 65 N. W. 873, 46 Neb. 612; State v. Moore, 76 N. W. 474, 56 Neb. 82; Comstock-Castle Stove Co. v. Caulfield, 95 N. W. 733, 1 Neb. [Unof.] 542; Snyder v. Gross, 95 N. W. 636, 69 Neb. 340, 5 Ann. Cas. 152; Wilson v. State, 72 Pac. 517, 67 Kan. 44).

The accomplishment of fraud in the line of an official's duty is "virtute officii," and his sureties are responsible therefor. Board of Com'rs v. Sullivan, 93 N. W. 1056, 89 Minn. 68.

The acts for which a sheriff or his sureties may be held liable are termed acts done "virtute officii," and those for which they cannot be held liable are termed "colore officii." The distinction is that acts done "virtute officii" are when they are within the authority of the officer but done in an improper exercise of his authority or in abuse of the law, while acts done "colore officii" are where they are of such nature the office gives him no authority to do them. Gold v. Campbell, 117 S. W. 463, 469, 469, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 269 (citing Leger v. Warren, 62 Ohio St. 500, 57 N. E. 506, 51 L. R. A. 222, 78 Am. St. Rep. 738).

In an information charging embezzlement "by virtue or under color of his relation as an officer," the words "by virtue or under color of his relation as an officer," as applied to the expression of his or her relation as an officer; may be said to mean one and the same thing, to wit, the obtaining of money or property by reason of or because of such official relation. Therefore the information is not void for duplicity. Hendee v. State, 113 N. W. 1050, 1052, 80 Neb. 80.

"In considering this question—liability on official bonds—some courts have adopted a distinction between acts 'virtute officii' and acts 'colore officii'; holding sureties on official bonds liable in the former case, and not in the latter. A definition of such acts is thus stated in People v. Schuyler, 4 N. Y. 173, founded on the common law: 'Acts done "virtute officii" are where they are within the authority of the officer, but in doing it he exercises that authority improperly, or abuses the confidence which the law reposes in him, whilst acts done "colore officii" are where they are of such nature that his office gives him no authority to do them.' This distinction is said to be disregarded in most jurisdictions. And in a very full and able note in Feller v. Gates (Or.) 91 Am. St. Rep. 511, Mr. Freeman, the author, says, what our investigation convinces us is true: 'The distinction suggested has been productive of anything but harmony among the authorities, and, in its attempted application to particular cases, it has served to confuse rather than clarify. It is a distinction hard to make in theory, and even more difficult to apply in practice. Not only do courts differ as to liability of sureties for acts colore officii, but, among those authorities which agree that such acts are covered by the obligation of the bond, the most widely divergent views are entertained as to what constitute acts colore officii, within the meaning of the definition.' * * * If a state constable, in an attempt to discharge a duty of his office, in the seizure of contraband liquor or the arrest of one openly violating the dispensary law, should, without just excuse, commit an assault and battery, or if in overcoming resistance he should so exceed his duty as to become the aggressor in an assault and battery, to the injury of another, then there is liability upon his bond. But an assault and battery committed by a constable under a bald assumption and usurpation of authority, without process or authority of any kind, would not be covered by the terms of his bond." Wieters v. May, 50 S. E. 547, 548, 549, 71 S. C. 9.

BY WAY OF

The words "by way of punishment," in an instruction authorizing the award of damages by way of punishment, define punitive or exemplary damaged. Welshkopf v. Ritter (Ky.) 97 S. W. 1120, 1121.

BY-LAW

The words "ordinances," "rules," "regulations," and "by-laws" are synonymous terms. State ex rel. Krebs v. Hactor, 120 N. W. 199, 200, 83 Neb. 690 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5025).

"By-laws" of a corporation are rules of law adopted to regulate its acts, and the rights and duties of members among themselves. Smoot v. Bankers' Life Ass'n, 120 S. W. 719, 728, 138 Mo. App. 438.

"By-laws" of a corporation are defined as private statutes for the government of the corporate body. Cook speaks of them as a permanent rule of action, and Thompson broadly distinguishes them from resolutions and regulations, and Bouvier's definition runs in the same line. In no way can such by-laws be held to be analogous to the hasty proceedings of the executive committee or of directors. Where it was required that the salary of a corporate officer be fixed by a "by-law," it could not be fixed by an ordinary resolution or ordinary vote of the corporation, or of the directors. Hayes v. Canada, A. & P. S. S. Co., 181 Fed. 289, 296, 104 C. C. A. 271.

The "by-laws" of a private corporation are not in the nature of legislative enactments, so far as third persons are concerned. They are mere regulations or self-imposed rules for the management and control of corporate affairs, not intended for strangers who do not subject themselves to their influence, and in this respect are different from the provisions of the charter. Dempster Mfg. Co. v. Downs, 101 N. W. 735, 736, 128 Iowa, 80, 106 Am. St. Rep. 340, 3 Ann. Cas. 187.

The "by-laws" of a corporation are rules and ordinances made by a corporation for its own government. They are the rule of its life, and its affairs are conducted in accordance with their provisions. Renn v. United States Cement Co., 73 N. E. 269, 270, 36 Ind. App. 149.

The office of "by-laws" of a building and loan association is to regulate the conduct and define the duties of the members toward the corporation and among themselves. They constitute the contract between the members, which determine their rights, provided they do not violate the statute or public policy. Hogsett v. Aetna Bldg., etc., Ass'n, 96 Pac. 52, 55, 78 Kan. 71 (citing Thompson on Building Associations, §§ 41, 51).

The word "by-law" means those regulations which as one of its legal incidents a corporation is empowered to make affecting the management of its business, the control of its officers and agents, and the rights and duties of the members between themselves and between the corporation. Cheney v. Canfield, 111 Pac. 92, 93, 158 Cal. 342, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 16.

"The function of a 'by-law' of a private corporation is to prescribe the rights and duties of the members in reference to the internal government of its affairs; and in reference also to the rights and duties which exist between the members themselves by virtue of their membership in the same corporate body. The right of a private corporation to enact such by-laws is inherent and incident to its existence. This power is subject to the condition that the by-law must be reasonable, and not contravene or be inconsistent with the charter or any existing law of the state." Bornstein v. District Grand Lodge No. 4 Independent Order B'nai B'rith, 84 Pac. 271-272, 2 Cal. App. 624.

A "by-law" is a rule or law adopted by a corporation or association for the regulation of its own action and concerns, and of the rights and duties of its members among themselves. The term has a peculiar and limited signification, being used to designate the orders and regulations which a corporation, as one of its legal incidents, has power to make, and which is usually exercised to regulate its own action and concerns, and the rights and duties of its members amongst themselves. Hayes v. German Beneficial Union, 35 Pa. Super. Ct. 142, 148.

The by-laws of a corporation are laws for regulation of its officers and the management of its property, and have much the same force as between the members and officers in the conduct of corporate affairs that a statute has, and can only be repealed or amended as provided by law. J. P. Lamb & Co. v. Merchants' Nat. Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 119 N. W. 1048, 1050, 18 N. D. 253.

Resolutions and ordinances

A "by-law" is a law made by a municipality for the regulation of affairs within its authority. In general and professional use the term "ordinance" is almost, if not quite, equivalent in meaning to the term by-law, and is the word most generally used to denote the by-laws adopted by municipal corporations. An ordinance amending an ordinance passed by an incorporated town in what was Indian Territory, granting to a corporation a franchise to furnish the town with light and heat by means of natural gas, and extending the time set in the ordinance amended for furnishing the same, is an "ordinance" within Mansf. Dig. Ark. § 924, relating to the passage of ordinances. Town of Sapulpa v. Sapulpa Oil & Gas Co., 97 Pac. 1007, 1010, 22 Okl. 847.

"By-laws" are rules and ordinances made by a corporation for its own government." While the terms "ordinances" and "by-laws" are sometimes used interchangeably, a mere resolution granting a franchise to a street car company is not a "by-law" nor an ordinance, and is ineffective. Holst v. Savannah Electric Co., 131 Fed. 931, 940 (quoting and adopting the definitions in 1 Bouv. p. 274; 1 Dillon, Mun. Corps. par. 307).

Warrant

Under Sand. & H. Dig. Ark. § 5272, which provides that "each city council shall cause to be provided for its clerk's office a seal, which seal shall be affixed to all transcripts, orders or certificates which it may be necessary or proper to authenticate under the provisions of this act or of any by-law or ordinance of the city," a city warrant is not a "by-law." Ocondon v. City of Eureka Springs, 135 Fed. 566, 571.

BYSTANDER

Witnesses and persons interested are not bystanders within the meaning of the statute allowing such a bill of exceptions to be certified to by bystanders, and a bill filed by them cannot supersede the bill of exceptions approved by the trial court. Gay Oil Co. v. Akins, 140 S. W. 739, 100 Ark. 552.

Under Rev. St. 1909, § 7268, providing that, when ordered by the court, the sheriff shall summon petit jurors from the bystanders, and that no person shall be summoned as a standing juror twice within one year, the last provision does not relate to jurors summoned by the sheriff from the bystanders; for "bystanders" means talesman, and statutes describing the mode of drawing regular jurors do not affect the power of the court, when a panel has become exhausted, to call in talesman, irrespective of prior service. Schneider v. Chew, 138 S. W. 357, 358, 157 Mo. App. 354.

BYWAY

A "byway" being a public way of which the public are entitled to make use as of right, an electric railway company where its tracks cross it is under the duty not to subject the traveling public to latent dangers at such crossing from an unguarded third rail. Tarlucki v. West Jersey & S. R. Co., 81 Atl. 495, 82 N. J. Law, 138.

On demurrer to a declaration alleging that an "ancient byway" where it crossed a railway operated by a third rail charged with an electric current was "unguarded and unprotected," in a suit against the railway by a pedestrian on the ancient byway for injuries received by coming in contact with the current, the word "byway" must be taken to be the equivalent of the word "byroad," as used in 3 Gen. St. 1895, p. 2827, § 113, and page 2836, § 154. Tarlucki v. West Jersey & S. R. Co., 81 Atl. 495, 82 N. J. Law, 138.

Where a certificate of acknowledgment commenced with the words, "The State of Texas, Tyler County," and was signed "C. J. Booth, C. C. T. C., such abbreviations should be construed to mean county clerk of Tyler county, and sufficiently disclosed the official character of the officer. Best v. Kirkendall (Tex.) 107 S. W. 932, 933.

C. G. S. SYSTEM

Units of electrical force and volume have been fixed by law with reference to what is known as the centimeter-gram-second system, generally referred to as the "C. G. S. system." This system was adopted with reference to length, expressed by the centimeter, mass, expressed by the gram, and time, expressed by the second. These are the fundamental units of scientific work. Peoria Waterworks Co. v. Peoria Ry. Co., 181 Fed. 990, 1001.

C. O. D.

As part of contract of shipment

It cannot be said that a "bill of lading" and "C. O. D. shipment" are not in some of their features alike. "Both are, in a sense, contracts for the shipment of goods. A 'bill of lading' is a contract between the carrier and the sender, for a consideration, to transport and deliver goods at a specified place to a person therein named, or to his order, and in commercial usage it may be, in a sense, negotiable; that is, the bill of lading has become symbolical, and stands for the property itself. We do not understand that a 'C. O. D.' has this characteristic. Ordinarily, where goods are shipped under a bill of lading, the property passes as soon as they are delivered at the point of shipment to the common carrier. But if the bill of lading is taken in favor of the consignor himself, or some agent of his, by commercial usage and the decisions of the court the property does not pass, though intended for some consignee at the point of destination, until some stipulation is complied with, as payment of the purchase money." Concurring opinion of Henderson, J. Keller v. State (Tex.) 87 S. W. 669, 687, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 469.

A "C. O. D." package is in many respects similar to the open package. The consignee generally pays the express charges in both cases, and in neither instance is the package delivered unless such charges are paid; the same not having been prepaid by the consignor. In addition, in the C. O. D. package, the consignee pays the price of the article shipped, and the carrier transports the cash so received to the consignor, taking pay therefor. In substance, it is the same as if the consignee should send by the express company the sum of money he owes the consignor, paying the company for its services. It is the duty of an express company as a common carrier to serve the public impartially, and it has no right to refuse to receive and carry packages of liquors from lawful dealers therein in one state, while it receives and carries the same in other states, nor to refuse to carry the same C. O. D. and to collect and return the purchase money from the consignee in accordance with the general custom of the business, where it follows such custom with respect to other commodities; nor can it require a consignee of such liquors before delivery to furnish a certificate or affidavit that he is a bona fide purchaser of the same for his own personal use or has a state license to sell liquors. Crescent Liquor Co. v. Platt, 148 Fed. 894, 901.

Where an express company, through its agent, had at its office packages containing intoxicating liquors transported and held with direction that the same should be delivered to the consignees on payment of the purchase price, as designated by the shipper, and charges for transportation, the shipments were what is known as "C. O. D." Latta v. United States Express Co. (Iowa) 92 N. W. 68.

As affecting sale

"Undoubtedly the initials 'C. O. D.' mean collect on delivery, or, more fully stated, delivered upon payment of the charges due the seller for the price and the carrier for the carriage of the goods." The fact that the goods sold were shipped C. O. D. did not prevent title from passing to the purchaser upon their delivery to the carrier, although he was not entitled to actual possession until he paid or tendered the purchase price. State v. Mullin, 85 N. E. 556, 558, 78 Ohio St. 358, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 609, 125 Am. St. Rep. 710.

"An order for goods to be shipped 'collect on delivery' makes payment a condition precedent to or concurrent with delivery to the purchaser, but it does not necessarily make payment a condition precedent to the transfer of title." United States v. Lackey, 120 Fed. 577, 578.

A shipment "C. O. D." means to "deliver upon payment of the charges due the seller for the price and the carrier for the carriage of the goods." The delivery of such a shipment to the carrier designated by the consignee is a delivery to the consignee subject to the vendor's lien, and upon such delivery the sale is complete, and therefore a vendor shipping butterine from P. could be indicted in the county in which P. was located for selling such butterine contrary to the statute. State v. Peters, 39 Atl. 842, 343, 91 Me. 31 (quoting and adopting the definition given in State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 73 Me. 278).

On an order for shipment of goods by express "C. O. D.," the carrier designated in the order is the agent of the purchaser, and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, a delivery to the carrier is a delivery to the purchaser, and title to the goods passes to the purchaser on delivery to the carrier. State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 57 Atl. 798, 799, 98 Me. 464.

"A 'C. O. D.' package, by commercial usage, means 'collect on delivery'—that is, for the price of the goods shipped and the express charges—and is generally applied to small packages, and not to large consignments of goods, which are ordinarily shipped under bills of lading. As to bills of lading taken in favor of the consignor or his agent, or even if taken in favor of the consignee, if the bill is forwarded to some bank, with draft attached, the property does not pass until the payment of the purchase money. The authorities appear to treat the payment of the purchase money as a condition precedent to the investment of the title in the purchaser. On the other hand, the same courts hold that a 'C. O. D. package,' although it requires payment to the carrier before the delivery of the goods, is not a condition precedent to the investment of title in the property; but they treat this merely as a method of collecting the money for the goods, and the contract is regarded as a lien to enforce this payment." Concurring opinion of Henderson, J. Keller v. State (Tex.) 87 S. W. 669, 688, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 489.

CABINET WOODS NOT FURTHER MANUFACTURED THAN SAWED

Cabinet wood sawed lengthwise on two or more sides is dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, par. 198, schedule D, § 1, 30 Stat. 167, covering "cabinet woods not further manufactured than sawed." I. T. Williams & Sons v. United States, 126 Fed. 838, 839.

CABLE

Dutiable as article manufactured from wire, see Articles Within Tariff Act.

CABLE CAR

A "cable car" is a car operated by means of a steel cable or rope in the track beneath the surface to which a large metal grip is attached, or released from, by means of what may be termed a "handle" to the grip, which extends from the grip, through a slot in the track up into the grip car, where the gripman stands and operates the car. By manipulation of this handle the gripman can cause it to clasp the cable, and thereby start and run the car, and he can also release the grip and thereby stop the car. Young v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 106 S. W. 135, 126 Mo. App. 1.

CABOOSE CAR

See Dead Caboose; Dinkey Caboose.

A caboose car is a car attached to the rear of a freight train, fitted up for the accommodation of the conductor, brakeman, and chance passengers. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 78 S. W. 167, 168, 117 Ky. 345.

Evidence that plaintiff rode in a "caboose car" attached to a freight train does not show that he was a passenger, as such a car is defined by Webster as one "used on freight or construction trains for workmen or train crew." Bergan v. Central Vermont R. Co., 74 Atl. 937, 938, 82 Conn. 574.

A caboose car is intended solely for the accommodation of the men connected with the train, contains their bunks and mattresses, in which they sleep, and in which is there deposited the lamps of the cars and the tools used by the men. It is not adapted for passengers, although passengers are sometimes allowed to ride on it. Shoemaker v. Kingsbury, 79 U. S. (12 Wall.) 369, 375, 20 L. Ed. 432.

CABRETТА SKINS

"Cabretta skins" are "sheep skins," within Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 664, 30 Stat. 201, relating to raw skins "except sheep skins with the wool on," and the growth thereon is subject to duty, as provided in paragraph 360, Schedule K, § 1, 30 Stat. 183, for "wools on the skin." Lawrence Johnson & Co. v. United States, 140 Fed. 116, 117.

CADET

CADET MIDSHIPMAN

In designating students at the Naval Academy under Act July 15, 1870, § 12, as "cadet midshipmen," the style is used merely to distinguish a midshipman at school, and he is an officer and the time of service as such should be credited on a claim for additional pay as an officer under Act March 3, 1883. United States v. Cook, 9 Sup. Ct. 108, 109, 128 U. S. 254, 32 L. Ed. 464.

CALAMINE

The zinc ores known as carbonate, silicate, and sulphide of zinc are free of duty, the carbonate and silicate as "calamine," and the sulphide as "minerals, crude," under Tar-iff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, pars. 514, 614, 30 Stat. 196, 199, except that when they contain lead they are subject to the duty provided on "lead-bearing ore of all kinds," in section 1, Schedule C, par. 181, 30 Stat. 166. United States v. Brewster, 167 Fed. 122, 123, 92 C. C. A. 574.

CALAMITY

At the request of plaintiff in an action for breach of defendant's contract to furnish him lumber to plane, which they agreed to do "except in cases of delay beyond control of" defendants, the court instructed that such clause meant the act of God or some "calamity" beyond the control of defendants. For defendants it instructed that the burden of proof was on plaintiff to show, not only that they had failed to furnish the lumber as required by the contract, "but also that such failure was caused by circumstances not beyond the control of" defendants. Held that, reading the instructions together, the word "calamity" would be understood as used in the sense of "mischance" or "misfortune," and so would not be misleading. Beekman Lumber Co. v. Kittrell, 96 S. W. 988, 991, 80 Ark. 228.

The earthquake of April 18, 1906, was a calamity within Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 40, providing a presumption of survivorship with reference to persons killed in the same calamity. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. of Washington v. Miller, 96 Pac. 22, 23, 8 Cal. App. 25.

CALCIUM CARBIDE

See Crystalline Calcium Carbide.

Calcium carbide is a combination of calcium and carbon in the proportion of one part of calcium (Ca) to two parts of carbon (C), and is expressed in the chemical formula CaC_2 . The principal use of calcium carbide is to make acetylene gas which is used for illuminating purposes. Union Carbide Co. v. American Carbide Co., 181 Fed. 104, 105, 104 C. C. A. 522.

CALCULAGRAPH

A "calculagraph" is an instrument for automatically recording lapsed time and is used specifically in recording the length of time a long distance telephone has been used by the operation of a lever at the beginning and end of such use, and also the time of day when such use was commenced. Calculagraph Co. v. Wilson, 132 Fed. 20, 22.

CALCULATE—CALCULATED

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2077, subd. 2, providing that, when permanent or visible or ascertained boundaries or monuments are inconsistent with the measurement of lines, angles or surfaces, the boundaries or monuments are paramount, where a mining claim could be easily located from the description contained in the patent by reference to the monuments referred to, the patent was valid, and the land was not subject to relocation by reason of the fact that an erroneous length was given to the tying line in the description, which was merely a "calculated line" and not a surveyed line. Galbraith v. Shasta Iron Co., 76 Pac. 901, 902, 143 Cal. 94.

As intended

A witness failing, without reasonable excuse, to attend in obedience to a subpoena, is guilty of contempt, and punishable by fine not exceeding $250, together with the costs and expenses of the contempt proceeding, though the act was not willful, so as to be punishable as a criminal contempt, and did not injure the party for whom he was summoned, he having been successful, but was only "calculated" to injure him; this being the clear intent of 2 Rev. St. (1st Ed.) pt. 3, c. 7, tit. 3, § 43, and chapter 8, tit. 13, §§ 20-22, and the change in phraseology when these provisions were enacted into Code Civ. Proc. §§ 14, 2266, 2281, 2284, now Judiciary Law (Consol. Laws, c. 30) §§ 753, 754, 770, 778, not showing an intention to change the substance of the law. People ex rel. Springs v. Reid, 124 N. Y. Supp. 205, 207, 139 App. Div. 551.

A bill for unfair competition in trade by the use by defendant of a name for a periodical similar to one used by complainant must clearly allege that it was so used with intent to deceive the public or patrons, and an allegation that it was "calculated to deceive" is insufficient. Industrial Press v. W. R. O. Smith Pub. Co., 164 Fed. 842, 843, 90 C. C. A. 604.

CALENDAR DAY

Statutory Construction Law, § 27, declares that a "calendar day" shall include the time from midnight to midnight. In re Niel, 106 N. Y. Supp. 479, 55 Misc. Rep. 317.

CALENDAR MONTH

As month, see Month.

A "calendar month" is not one of any given number of days throughout the year, but varies in length according to the Gregorian calendar. As, for instance, a "calendar month" beginning in February, except in leap year, is of 28 days' duration. In re Gregg's Estate, 62 Atl. 856, 857, 213 Pa. 260.

CALENDAR YEAR

As year, see Year.

A "calendar year" is ordinarily and in common acceptation considered to be 365 days. Geneva Cooperage Co. v. Brown, 98 S. W. 279, 124 Ky. 16, 124 Am. St. Rep. 388.

The statutory limitation on the power of the county board to contract for bridge building to cost a sum not greater than the amount of money on hand in the county bridge fund derived from a levy of "previous years" and two-thirds of the levy of the "current year" gives no authority to the board to take into account the levy of the "current calendar year" prior to the making of such levy. Until it is made, there is no "levy of the current year." Ordinarily, the terms "this year," "current year," or "the previous year," mean in each instance the calendar year in which the event under discussion took place and the one before it, but the Legislature did not have this meaning in putting the words into this statute. Clark v. Lancaster County, 96 N. W. 593, 599, 69 Neb. 717.

"Calendar year" means the year from January 1st to December 31st, inclusive, and not a period of 12 months commencing at any fixed or designated month, and terminating with the day of the corresponding month in the next succeeding year under a law requiring liquor licensees to pay a designated sum for each calendar year or part thereof. Carroll v. Wright, 68 S. E. 269, 267, 131 Ga. 728.

Act March 20, 1909, § 1, requires that every fire insurance company shall, before obtaining certificate of authority, etc., file the prescribed bond. Section 3 requires that before any company shall issue any policy it shall first have filed, "during the calendar year in which such policy may issue, a bond," etc. By practice and by statutory provision, the state department did not issue the certificates to insurance companies until March. Held, that the words "calendar year," as used in section 3, would be read in connection with section 1, and construed to mean the year in which the certificate is to run, since it was obvious that the Legislature considered that the certificate was to run a calendar year, and since any other construction would leave an interval between January and March, during which time a policy issued by the company would not be preceded by a bond "filed during the calendar year." Aetna Ins. Co. v. Hawkins, 125 S. W. 318, 316, 103 Tex. 195.

CALF

See Japanned Calfskins.

CALIBRATION

The reduction of the cross-section of the metal in an electric safety fuse, which insures quicker disruption at the place where such reduction is found, is called "calibration." Johns-Pratt Co. v. Sachs Co., 175 Fed. 70, 74, 99 C. C. A. 92.

CALL

See, also, PUTS.

A contract looking to the sale and future delivery of wheat known as a "call," is not an option for a purchase, but is only a contract for a contract for the purchase and sale of wheat, and is not within Rev. St. 1909, § 4780, prohibiting all purchases and sales or contracts for the purchase and sale of grain, either on margin or otherwise without any intention of receiving and paying for the property bought or of delivering the property sold. Taylor v. Sebastian, 138 S. W. 549, 550, 158 Mo. App. 147.

An "option" in the peculiar language of dealers in grain may consist of a "put" or a "call." A "put" is the privilege of delivering or not delivering the thing sold, and a "call" is the privilege of calling for or not calling for the article bought. Optional contracts in this sense are usually settled by adjusting the market values as the party having the option may elect. It is simply a mode adopted for speculating in differences in market value of grains or other commodities, and it was in this sense that the term "option" was used in Cr. Code Ill. (Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 38) § 130, declaring that whoever contracts to have or give to himself or another the option to sell or buy at a future time any grain or other commodity shall be subject to a fine. Zeller v. Lelter, 99 N. Y. Supp. 624, 626, 627, 114 App. Div. 148 (citing Pearce v. Foote, 113 Ill. 228, 55 Am. Rep. 414).

For stock subscriptions

A "call" is an official declaration by the proper corporate authorities that the whole or a specified part of a subscription for stock is required to be paid. Campbell v. American Alkali Co., 125 Fed. 207, 209, 61 C. U. A. 817 (quoting and adopting definition in Cook, Corp. § 104).

The word "assessment" and the words "call" or "installments" are used interchangeably in the statute; yet, strictly speaking, the word "assessment" means a demand upon stockholders for payments above the par value of their stock to meet the money demands of creditors of the corporation, while the word "call" or "installments" means the action of the board of directors of the corporation demanding the payment of all or a portion of unpaid subscriptions. The word "assessments," as used in Rev. Codes, § 2769, granting power to a corporation to admit stockholders or members, and to sell the stock or shares for the payment of assessments or installments, is distinguished from "calls" or "installments," and means assessments upon full-paid stock, as distinguished from calls or installments for portions of unpaid subscriptions. Wall v. Basin Mining Co., 101 Pac. 733, 736, 18 Idaho, 313, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1013.

"An assessment is a term often used to designate the same thing as a 'call,' but sometimes refers to a payment sought to be recovered from stockholders above and in addition to the par value of their stock." Omo v. Bernart, 65 N. W. 622, 623, 108 Mich. 43 (quoting Cook, Stock, Stockh. & Corp. Law, § 104).

CALL A POLICEMAN

To "call a policeman" generally signifies that an arrest is to be made. Grayson v. St. Louis Transit Co., 71 S. W. 730, 734, 100 Mo. App. 60.

CALL PATENT

Where nothing appeared in a "call patent"—that is, one whose corners are all stakes, or all but one, or whose lines were not run out and marked at the time—except a discrepancy between the figure made by platting the patent calls and the surveyor's plat, it is not proof of a mistake in the patent, and the plat does not control the call of the patent. Hall v. Pratt, 134 S. W. 900, 901, 142 Ky. 561.

CALL SURVEY

A "call survey" is a survey by protraction. Bramblet v. Davis, 141 Fed. 776, 780, 72 C. C. A. 204.

CALLED

See Duly Called and Held.

CALLED FOR TRIAL

Under Pen. Code, § 1368, providing that when an action is called for trial, if a doubt arises as to the defendant's sanity, the court may submit the question to a jury and the trial must be suspended until the question is determined, a case was not "called for trial" where accused was brought into court for arraignment, but was not arraigned, and at that stage of the proceedings his insanity was adjudged and he was committed to the state hospital. The language "when an action is called for trial" cannot be construed to mean "at any time during the pendency of a criminal charge." Napa State Hospital v. Solano County, 88 Pac. 501, 502, 4 Cal. App. 510.

CALLED IN QUESTION

Under Const. art. 5, § 22, giving justices jurisdiction unless "the boundaries or title to any real property shall be called in question," and Rev. St. 1887, § 3852, providing that a justice shall not have jurisdiction where possession of real property "is put in issue," the phrases "called in question" and "put in issue" have the same meaning, and justices' courts have no jurisdiction of actions, where the boundaries or title to real estate are called in question. Hammer v. Garrett, 99 Pac. 124, 126, 15 Idaho, 657.

CALLED MEETING

A meeting of the city council, not had on a regular meeting date, at which the mayor and all aldermen were present, was a valid "called meeting," within the city charter and an ordinance providing that called meetings may be had at any time at the pleasure of the mayor, by written notice designating the time and place, or on application of two aldermen, notwithstanding such a notice may not have been given. Ryan v. City of Tuscaloosa, 48 South. 638, 640, 155 Ala. 479.

CALLING

See Dangerous Calling; Ordinary Calling; Practice a Calling; Public Calling.

"The words 'calling' and 'business' are evidently used in the Constitution in a very broad sense when taken together, but the signification of each one is uncertain; yet we are to infer that they were not used to designate the same thing. Taken together, they certainly embrace every legitimate avocation in life by which an honest support for a family may be obtained. The former was probably used in the sense of 'profession' or 'trade,' which would embrace all such employments as by course of study or apprenticeship in any of the learned professions, liberal arts, or mechanical occupations, a person has acquired skill or ability to follow, and which has become practically a matter of personal skill, in its nature not temporary in existence." Semple v. Schwarz, 109 S. W. 633, 637, 130 Mo. App. 65 (quoting and adopting definition in Shryock v. Latimer, 57 Tex. 677).

The Constitution protects a homestead consisting of lots not exceeding $5,000 in value, provided the same shall be used as a place to exercise the "calling" or "business" of the head of the family. A debtor purchased land worth $3,000, on which a two-story dwelling stood. He moved and remained away two years, although he intended to return. He returned when the dwelling was occupied by a tenant, and he built a one-story house on a part of the land. On the two-story house being vacated, he moved into it and rented the small house. He also rented out rooms in the two-story house. He had no income except from his rents. Held, that the renting of the rooms of the house and of the small house was not the pursuit of a calling or business within the Constitution, though the words "calling" and "business" taken together embrace every legitimate avocation of life by which an honest support for a family may be obtained. Lyon v. Files, 110 S. W. 999, 1001, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 630.

CALVINISM

The name "Presbyterianism" indicates primarily a system of church government through chosen representatives, consisting of the church session as the governing body in each congregation, and a presbytery consisting of all the ministers, in number not less than five, and one ruling elder from each congregation, within a certain district, and a synod embracing at least three presbyteries, and consisting of ministers and ruling elders from the local churches, and the General Assembly, which is a representative body composed of ministers and ruling elders selected by each of the presbyteries, and the name also indicates a doctrine commonly known as "Calvinism." Ramsey v. Hicks, 91 N. E. 844, 346, 174 Ind. 428, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 665.

CAMORRA

By "camorra," as used in a libelous publication charging plaintiff with having been paid by "the camorra" to libel and vilify certain people, is understood to have meant a clique, ring, cabal, or confederation of Italians in the city, banded together for dishonest and dishonorable purposes. People v. Crespi, 46 Pac. 863, 864, 115 Cal. 50.

CAMP MEETING

P. S. 496, subd. 6, exempts from taxation real and personal estate sequestered or used for public, pious, or charitable uses. Plaintiff, a Methodist evangelist, acquired full title to two lots of land, one of which he set apart and used exclusively for camp meeting purposes, under the auspices of no particular denomination, but open to persons of such denominations as he wished to have there, and on which, with the aid of voluntary contributions of labor and money, he erected cottages, a boarding hall, preacher's stand and seats, a dormitory for preachers, several church tents, and a barn, and during camp meeting, as an incident thereto and without profit, he charged for the use of cottages, including board, for meals, and for feed and shelter of horses, the income from which was used for carrying on the camp meetings. From the other tract, not connected with the camp ground, he sold timber in payment of a note for money borrowed for improvements upon the camp ground. Held, that the word "sequester" meant to set apart, to put aside, to separate, and that a "camp meeting" meant a religious gathering, held usually by Methodists, for conducting a series of religious services in the open air or in a tent, lasting for several days, during which those present lodged in tents or temporary houses; and that the lot not connected with the camp ground was taxable, but that the camp meeting ground and its improvements were exempt; the charges for board, etc., not operating to deprive the property of such exemption. Johnson v. Jones (Vt.) 83 Atl. 1085, 1086.

CAMPHOR, CRUDE

The classification of synthetic camphor should be determined by the same considerations as of natural camphor, and where, measured by the principal tests, it still retains impurities that bring it far below the standard of refined camphor, and closely resembles the crude natural product, it is subject to classification as "camphor, crude," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 515, 30 Stat. 197, rather than as "camphor refined," under section 1, Schedule A, par. 12, 30 Stat. 152. United States v. Schering & Glatz, 163 Fed. 246, 247, 90 C. C. A. 192.

CAN

Defendant's roadmaster wired plaintiff "can offer you extra force at $65 a month. Will want you at once." Held, that a contention that, by using the potential foria "can offer," the roadmaster did not make a positive offer of employment, but only intended to open negotiations, was unsound, especially as plaintiff accepted the offer, reported for duty, was placed in charge of the work, and prosecuted it for several days until discharged. King v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co., 53 S. E. 287, 238, 140 N. C. 433.

It has been held that a statement that the debtor will pay when he "can" is valid as a promise, even without the proof of ability. The word as thus used has been held too indefinite to constitute a condition, and hence that a promise to pay when the debtor "can" is an absolute promise. Letters written by a debtor to his creditor's attorney, in which, referring to the note sued on, he says, "will pay as soon as I can," and in which, after offering a certain amount in compromise, he adds, "It's that or wait until I get it," is a sufficient admission that the debt is unpaid to revive the cause of action, under Comp. Laws, § 2926, providing that causes of action founded upon contract shall be revived by admission that the debt is unpaid. Cleveland v. Hostetter, 79 Pac. 801, 808, 13 N. M. 43.

As is

The word "can," as used in an oil lease for a term of three years "and as much longer as oil and gas can be found in paying quantities," has the same meaning as the word "is," commonly used. Lowther Oil Co. v. Miller-Sibley Oil Co., 44 S. E. 433, 436, 53 W. Va. 501, 97 Am. St. Rep. 1027.

As may

A fidelity policy, stipulating that insurer will reimburse insured, a bank, for losses sustained by the fraud of an assistant cashier, and that the employé "can" perform other duties without notice to insurer, covers a loss occasioned by the fraud of the employé, while acting as cashier, without notice to insurer; the word "can" meaning "may." Farmers' & Merchants' State Bank of Verdon v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 183 N. W. 247, 248, 28 S. D. 315, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1152.

CANNOT STATE

In an action against a railway for damages for destruction of property by fire set from a locomotive, the defendant had a finding that the locomotive was equipped with approved devices to arrest sparks; but there was no finding as to the condition of said appliances save that the jury had, in answer to interrogatories thereon, answered, "We cannot state," and "We do not know." There was a finding that the inspection was not thorough, and the charge of negligence in respect to management of the locomotive was not negatived. Held, such answers were not equivalent to a finding of no evidence, and that defendant was not entitled to judgment in its favor on the answers. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Hayes, 79 N. E. 448, 449, 167 Ind. 454.

Ship canal as county purpose, see County Purpose.

Under Revisal 1905, § 4026, which provides for proceedings to assess among persons benefited, the cost of maintenance of a drainage canal, dug along any natural depression or waterway and maintained for seven years, an artificial drain of from two to five feet in width is a "canal," though, in the proceeding to assess the cost of maintenance, the evidence refers to it both as a "ditch" and a "canal." Ange & Forest v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 75 S. E. 796, 797, 159 N. C. 547.

A conduit through which a water power company conducts the water from its dam across a river to the place of use is not strictly a ditch or a "canal," but is a conduit through which water is diverted from the natural channel in which it would flow if left unobstructed, and the company is liable for the fees imposed by Act March 11, 1908 (Sess. Laws 1903, p. 283), § 10, providing that upon the issuance of a certificate by the state engineer in relation to the completion of any canal, ditch, or other works, a fee to cover the expense of the examination of such works shall be paid to the state engineer. Idaho Power & Transp. Co. v. Stephenson, 101 Pac. 821, 824, 16 Idaho, 418.

CANARY SEED

"Canary seed," which is a botanical grass seed, but is used principally as a bird seed and which is not known commercially as grass seed, is not free of duty under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 656, providing for grass seeds not specially provided, but is dutiable under section 1, Schedule G, par. 254, 30 Stat. 171, covering "seeds of all kinds not specially enumerated." Nordlinger v. United States, 127 Fed. 688, 684, 62 O. C. A. 409.

CANCEL—CANCELLATION

The word "cancel," within a provision requiring trustees to make payments to canal obligations, means to "render null and void." Babbitt v. Fidelity Trust Co., 66 Atl. 1076, 1078, 72 N. J. Eq. 745.

A cancellation means the forgiving and obliteration of a debt. It is in no sense a payment, but excludes the idea of payment, for it is the very thing that makes payment unnecessary. As used in a codicil directing cancellation of certain debts owing by legatees to testatrix, it implied a forgiveness and obliteration of the debt. Brown v. Gibson's Ex'r, 59 S. E. 384, 386, 107 Va. 383.

The term "repeal" is synonymous with "annul," "cancel," "reverse," and "abolish," so that a statute or ordinance is repealed when it is destroyed, abolished, abrogated, canceled, annulled, recalled, or rescinded by a later one. City of St. Louis v. Kellman, 139 S. W. 443, 445, 235 Mo. 687; Wilson v. People, 85 Pac. 187, 189, 36 Colo. 418.

Dismiss synonyms

"Dismiss" is the equivalent of "cancel" within the meaning of a contract to "cancel" a suit. A contract by a plaintiff to cancel a suit implies his payment of costs up to that time. Klitzke v. Smith, 91 N. E. 748, 749, 46 Ind. App. 26.

Effect

To "cancel" is to annul and destroy. Cancellation of a contract necessarily implies a waiver of all rights thereunder by the parties. Whedon v. Lancaster County, 114 N. W. 1102, 1104, 80 Neb. 682. After a contract is discharged either by rescission or substitution of a new contract, no action can be maintained on the original contract; but, for any benefits accruing to either party by part performance of the contract unless expressly released, an action on quantum meruit or quantum valebat may be maintained. Lipschutz v. Weatherly & Twiddy, 53 S. E. 132, 134, 140 N. C. 365 (citing Drefus v. Columbian Exposition Salvage Co., 45 Atl. 370, 194 Pa. 475, 75 Am. St. Rep. 704).

Where an actor agreed to perform for defendant in vaudeville, at four certain cities, and the contract provided that it might be canceled by either party on written notice, a letter from defendant stating that, on account of vaudeville having proved a failure in three of the named cities, defendant was obliged to cancel the dates, amounted to a cancellation of the contract as to all the cities. Fagan v. Aborn, 99 N. Y. Supp. 479, 480, 50 Misc. Rep. 666.

Agreement

Under the rule that the effect of a pleading is not necessarily determined by the technical definition of a single word, but that words used in a pleading must be construed with reference to the context, and when it is apparent that a word is not used in its statutory sense it will be interpreted in relation to the pleading as a whole, in an action to recover sums paid under a contract of conditional sale on the retaking of possession by the seller, where the answer alleged that the seller rescinded and canceled the contract on default in payment of the price by the buyer, the words "rescind" and "cancel" are not used to indicate a statutory rescission of the contract. Pfeiffer v. Norman, 133 N. W. 97, 98, 22 N. D. 168, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 891.

Evidence that plaintiff, who had entered into a written contract with a corporation, told the secretary that he wanted the contract destroyed, and the secretary had said that it was not there, but that he could get it, and plaintiff told him to do so, and destroy the signatures and send it to him, which the secretary did, did not show a valid "cancellation," within Civ. Code, § 1699; there being nothing to show any authority on the part of the secretary to release plaintiff. Blair v. Brownstone Oil & Refining Co., 120 Pac. 41; 42, 17 Cal. App. 471.

Capital stock

The words "retirement" and "cancellation," in connection with the capital stock of corporations, wherever used in the franchise act or in the amendment of that act (P. L. 1906, p. 31), mean permanent retirement and actual cancellation by the method and in full compliance with the provisions of the statute. Knickerbocker Importation Co. v. State Board of Assessors, 65 Atl. 918-919, 74 N. J. Law, 588, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 885.

Insurance policy

As used in a declaration alleging that defendant insurance company, in violation of its agreement, modified a policy so that it covered a part only of the goods insured and thereby canceled the policy as to the other goods, the words "modified" and "canceled" plainly referred to the physical changes made and to the effect which those changes would have had if authorized. Goodhue v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 55 N. E. 1089, 1040, 175 Mass. 187, 189.

Mortgage

A written demand on a mortgagee, signed by the mortgagor, whose debt has been paid, to "please cancel all mortgages against me on the record," is a sufficient notice under Code 1896, § 1066, to require the mortgagee to enter "the fact of payment or satisfaction on the margin of the record." Partridge v. Wilson, 37 South. 441, 442, 141 Ala. 164.

Will

Testator, after executing his will, took a red pencil and wrote the words null and void, with his name and the date, across the face of each sentence containing any disposition of property. Held, that there being no extrinsic evidence of the transaction, except that the paper was in testator's custody at his death, such act constituted a "cancellation" requiring a denial of probate. In re Barnes' Will, 136 N. Y. Supp. 940, 941, 76 Misc. Rep. 382.

Code Supp. 1907, § 3276, provides that wills can only be revoked, in whole or in part, by cancellation or destruction, by the direction of testator, with the intention of revoking them, or by the execution of subsequent wills, and when done by cancellation requires the revoking will to be witnessed in the same manner as the making of a new will. Held, that the cancellation may be merely by an instrument of cancellation, or by a part of another will containing an express revocation clause, or by the execution of an inconsistent will without such clause, the word "cancellation" meaning a revocation of a written instrument; and there may also be a revocation by physical destruction. Blackett v. Ziegler, 133 N. W. 901, 904, 153 Iowa, 844, 87 L. R. A. (N. S.) 201.

Webster's International Dictionary defines "cancellation" as to revoke or recall. Blackstone says that cancellation means to have lines drawn through it in the form of lattice work, but that the phrase is now used figuratively for any manner of obliterating or defacing it. Burrill's Law Dictionary defines "canceling" as the defacing or obliterating a deed, will, or other instrument so as to destroy its legal effect. Bouvier says "cancellation" is the act of crossing a writing, and it is used sometimes to signify the manual operation of tearing or destroying the instrument itself. 2 Rev. St. (1st Ed.) p. 64, § 42, provides that a will may be revoked by writing made for that purpose, and by certain acts, to wit, burning, tearing, canceling. Held, that the word "canceled" indicated an act in contradistinction to a writing, and that a will cannot be revoked by an indorsement on its back in writing signed by the testator to the effect that it was revoked. In re Miller's Estate, 100 N. Y. Supp. 346, 347, 50 Misc. Rep. 70.

Drawing black lines through and over words in a will is sufficient as a physical fact to constitute a "cancellation" of the words over which they appear, within the meaning of Civ. Code, § 1192, subd. 2, providing that wills may be revoked in whole or in part by being canceled or obliterated, with the intent of revoking the same, by the testator himself or by some person in his presence and by his direction, notwithstanding the words were not entirely obliterated, providing that they are put there by the testator or at his direction for the purpose of cancellation. In re Wikman's Estate, 84 Pac. 212, 213, 148 Cal. 642.

CANDIDATE

Primary Election Law, § 24, provides that no person shall, to aid or promote his nomination to an office under the act, expend any money or valuable thing except for personal expenses, and that no candidate for nomination under the act shall expend to aid his nomination more than 15 per cent. of the yearly compensation attached to the office. Held, that one is a candidate for nomination within the act when he is expending his money in employing and sending out workers or perfecting an organization advertising or exploiting himself, and influencing public opinion in his favor or against an opponent, though he has not yet filed his nomination paper. Adams v. Lansdon, 110 Pac. 280, 290, 18 Idaho, 483.

Acts 1908, c. 122, § 168, as amended by Acts 1910, c. 427, requiring all candidates for public office to file statements of their expenses in connection with primary elections, does not apply to members of party committees elected at such primary elections; they not being candidates for public office. Usliton v. Bramble, 82 Atl. 661, 663, 117 Md. 10.

A political aspirant becomes a candidate at the time of filing his affidavit of intention of becoming a candidate for a specified office, in accordance with Rev. Laws 1905, § 184, within the meaning of the corrupt practice act, requiring every person who shall be a candidate to file an affidavit setting forth in detail all sums of money expended in endeavoring to secure his nomination or election, and is not required thereby to include in such affidavit of expense items anterior to the time of filing his affidavit of intention to become a candidate. State ex rel. Brady v. Bates, 112 N. W. 1026, 1027, 102 Minn. 104, 12 Ann. Cas. 105.

Comp. St. 1908, c. 26, § 32, provides that in no case shall the candidate of any political party be entitled to be designated on the official election ballot as the candidate of more than one political party, and shall be designated on the "official ballot" as the "nominee of the party" in whose nomination his name appears as the political party with which he affiliates. Held, that the words "candidate of any political party" and the "nominee of the party" mean a person who has been selected by a party as its candidate for public office, and do not refer to one who is desirous of becoming a candidate and whose name is submitted to the choice of the voters at a primary election. A party's candidate and its nominee cannot be determined until after a choice has been made at a primary. State ex rel. Adair v. Drexel, 105 N. W. 174, 177, 74 Neb. 776.

CANNING PURPOSES

Under Pub. Laws Me. 1901, c. 240, imposing a penalty for catching, packing, preserving, selling, or offering for sale within certain dates any herring for "canning purposes" less than eight inches in length, the words "for canning purposes" simply modify the limitation of the taking of herring under eight inches in length, which are principally used for sardines, and do not imply a license to take herring of larger size for canning purposes in close time. State v. Kaufman, 57 Atl. 886, 888, 98 Me. 546.

CANOE

CANT HOOK

A "cant hook," consisting of a large handle of wood, over which an iron cuff is slipped and fastened a few inches from the bottom, into which cuff a hook is fastened by a bolt, and which is operated by hand by the operator catching hold of the handle, and placing the hook on a log, and using the implement as a lever, is not a "simple tool"; and the servant is not negligent in using it, unless he knows of defects therein, or ought to have known thereof by the use of ordinary care. Parker v. W. C. Wood Lumber Co., 54 South. 252, 98 Miss. 750, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 832.

CANVASS

See, also, Proceedings of County Board.

Webster's New International Dictionary defines the word "canvass": "(2) To solicit or seek orders, contributions, support, subscriptions, votes, or political support before an election, etc.; to solicit; commonly followed by 'for,' as to canvass for a seat in Parliament; to 'canvass' for a book, a publisher, or in behalf of a charity." And defines "solicit": "To ask earnestly; to make a petition to; to appeal to (for something), as, to 'solicit' a man for alms. (2) To endeavor to obtain by asking or pleading; to plead for, as, to 'solicit' an office, a favor, alms." Where a grocer maintains a delivery wagon, and an employé delivers goods previously ordered from him when making a former delivery, or which have been ordered by letter or telephone from the customer direct to the store, the fact that a patron receiving goods orders others from the person delivering, not being asked, solicited, or requested so to do by him, does not establish the fact of "canvassing or soliciting orders for any article, goods, or merchandise," under the provisions of an ordinance imposing a license tax on such occupation, so as to render either the agent or his principal liable for the tax. Village of Scribner v. Mohr, 132 N. W. 734, 735, 90 Neb. 21, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1287.

Election

The "canvass" by the judges of election is merely their count. Graham v. Peters, 93 N. E. 315, 316, 248 Ill. 50.

That accused as an election officer made marks on a tally sheet as another officer called off the votes warranted a finding that accused "counted" and "canvassed" the votes; it being unnecessary that he handle each ballot. Commonwealth v. Edgerton, 86 N. E. 768, 771, 200 Mass. 318.

An order of the State Board of Canvassers committing to the county board of canvassers of a county the entire record, with instructions to the county board to recanvass the vote of the county and hear and consider the ground of protest filed by the attorney for a contestant, and to take such testimony as may be competent in support and rebuttal thereof, and to determine the result, etc., authorizes the county board to consider testimony in support of another contestant; the word "canvassing" implying investigation; examination. State ex rel. Davis v. State Board of Canvassers, 68 S. E. 876, 879, 86 S. C. 451.

CANVASSEROf elections

Under P. L. 1898, p. 312, § 164, providing that the term "incumbent" means the person whom the "canvassers" declare elected the word "canvassers" means the board who originally canvass and estimate the votes. The county board, on a recount, does not declare the result of the election nor issue a certificate, and does not, on a recount, necessarily canvass the votes; its duties generally being limited to a recount of only part of the votes, and, though the Justice of the Supreme Court, on a recount may declare who is elected, he in no sense canvasses the votes, but merely decides disputed questions which the board fails to decide by a majority vote. The only canvassers who declare the result of an election are the boards of election. Darling v. Murphy, 57 Atl. 263, 264, 70 N. J. Law, 485.

CAPABLE

See Incapable.

The amount due under a contract to convey, at an agreed price per acre, land valuable principally for its timber, was "capable of being made certain by calculation," within the meaning of Civ. Code, § 3287, providing that persons entitled to damages certain or capable of being made certain by calculation may recover interest, though there was a deduction to be made as a mere matter of calculation for timber cut by the vendor from an ascertained number of acres. McCowen v. Pew, 123 Pac. 354, 355, 18 Cal. App. 482.

CAPACITY

See Corporate Capacity; Criminal Capacity; Diminished Capacity; Earning Capacity; Fiduciary Capacity; Incapacity; Individual and Corporate Capacity; Lessened Capacity; Mental Capacity; Private Capacity; Professional Capacity; Public Capacity; Rated Capacity; Representative Capacity; Testamentary Capacity.

"Capacity to" is a synonym of "can," as used in a statute declaring that a witness to a will may attest by his mark, "provided he can swear to the same." Gillis v. Gillis, 23 S. E. 107, 110, 96 Ga. 1, 80 L. R. A. 143, 51 Am. St. Rep. 121.

"Capacity to" perform a duty includes not only technical skill, but also proper disposition to use the same. A competent captain of a ship sailing on waters unknown to him must not only be adept in the part of navigation, and capable of making practical use of his acquirements, but he must also be a man who studies diligently to learn what conditions beset his progress, and thereupon make use of the information obtained. The Fri, 140 Fed. 123, 124.

"Capacity" means size, space, or compass. It means power or force; it means intellectual capability, both to receive and to perform; but its primary significance is passive. It is the ability to receive. Its secondary meaning is active. It is the ability to do or to resist. A contract by a dealer to furnish to a purchaser a definite pump of known manufacture, "having a capacity of 300 gallons per minute against a head of 350 feet," which has been selected by the purchaser and is to be built by the manufacturer, is not a warranty of the size, design, construction, materials, efficiency, and endurance of the pump, but is, like its name, descriptive and limited in effect to a warranty of the quality of size. Reynolds v. General Electric Co., 141 Fed. 551, 554, 73 C. C. A. 23 (citing Cent. Dict. "Capacity").

The term "capacity," in Mills' Ann. St. § 2408, providing that reservoirs in a water district may be awarded priorities to the extent of capacity for storage purposes, means, not the amount of water needed in the reservoir to irrigate lands of the owner, but the amount the reservoir will hold when filled once. Windsor Reservoir & Canal Co. v. Lake Supply Ditch Co., 98 Pac. 729, 733, 44 Colo. 214.

Demurrage Act, April 12, 1905, gives shippers or consignees 48 hours for loading or unloading cars of less than 60,000 pounds capacity, and 72 hours for cars of 60,000 pounds or greater capacity, and imposes a demurrage of not more than $1 per car per day on all cars not tendered to the company within those periods. Rev. St. 1899, § 1193, classifying freight, became effective the same time as the demurrage law, and places lumber, laths, etc., in class G, and section 1194, Rev. St. 1899, as amended by Sess. Acts 1905, p. 102, fixes a rate for freight in class G in car load lots of 30,000 pounds minimum weight, not exceeding five cents per 100 pounds for the first 25 miles; one-half cent per 100 pounds for the second 25 miles, etc. Held, construing the demurrage act in connection with the statute, that the word "capacity" in the demurrage act did not refer to the estimated carrying capacity of the car, but to the weight of the load, so that the consignee of lumber weighing less than 60,000 pounds in a 60,000 pound capacity car, would be entitled to only 48 hours free time in which to unload. E. R. Darlington Lumber Co. v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 116 S. W. 530, 534, 216 Mo. 658.

CAPACITY TO EARN MONEY

The phrase "capacity to earn money," as used in Pub. St. 1901, c. 191, § 12, declaring that, in assessing damages for the death of a person, the jury shall consider his probable duration of life and capacity to earn money, must be understood to mean capacity to earn money for the estate of the person killed; and hence an instruction should be given, in an action for negligence causing the death of the child, that deceased would have been incapable of earning money for his estate during his minority. Carney v. Concord St. Ry., 57 Atl. 213, 224, 72 N. H. 364.

CAPACITY TO SUE

See Legal Capacity.

CAPERS

Dutiable as pickles, see Pickles.

CAPIAS

The term "capias," in the statute providing a punishment for the escape of prisoners confined under sentence of imprisonment or under a capias, is used in a broad sense and includes a writ for the holding of the person. The mere verbal directions of the circuit judge to the jailer to take charge of defendants fined for an offense will not warrant a conviction under the statute. Saylor v. Commonwealth, 98 S. W. 48, 49, 122 Ky. 776.

CAPIAS AD RESPONDENDUM

The writ of capias ad respondendum, by which Comp. Laws 1897, § 9998, permits personal actions to be commenced in certain cases where an order for bail shall be indorsed on the writ by a judge of the court from which the writ issues, directing the amount in which bail is to be taken, is in form both a summons addressed to defendant to appear and defend the suit, and a command to the sheriff to take defendant into custody, and keep him until discharged according to law. People ex rel. McCallum v. Gebhardt, 118 N. W. 16, 17, 154 Mich. 504.

The writ is noneffective as authority to make an arrest, and is not issued until, upon affidavit showing the nature of plaintiff's claim, the order directing the amount of bail is indorsed upon the writ; and hence the fact that the writ is dated the day before the making of the affidavit does not constitute premature issuance. Stevens v. Ottawa Probate Judge, 118 N. W. 17, 154 Mich. 509.

CAPIAS UTLAGATUM

The sale in case of an outlawry was made by the sheriff under a writ called "capias utlagatum" and is distinguished from a sale made on an execution, upon the ground that the sheriff, in the case of a capias utlagatum, is not bound to sell the property levied upon by him, but only to keep it for the king's use, whereas on an execution he is bound to sell, and has the power to pass the title, and by sale does pass it. It was upon the theory that the title had not passed that restitution of the goods themselves was made in outlawry cases, while restitution of the money only was made in the case of valid sales on execution. August v. Gilmer, 44 S. E. 148, 148, 53 W. Va. 65.

CAPITAL

See Authorized Capital; Average Capital; Capital Stock; Moneyed Capital; Share Capital; Working Capital.
Fully paid in, see Fully Paid In.

"Capital" is defined as "affecting the head or life; incurring or involving the forfeiture of life; punishable with death; as treason or murder are capital offenses or crimes; capital trials; capital punishment." Caesar v. State, 57 S. E. 66, 67, 127 Ga. 710 (quoting and adopting the definition in Cent. Dict. and Webster's International Dict.).

"Capital," as used in Code 1887, § 2878, providing that persons forming a partnership association by contributing capital thereto, which capital only shall be liable for its debts, must record a statement setting forth "the total amount of capital of the association; when and how to be paid; and the amount to be subscribed by each member"—is used in the restricted sense of cash or its equivalent. Deckert v. Chesapeake Western Co., 45 S. E. 800, 801, 101 Va. 804 (citing Van Horn v. Corcoran, 18 Atl. 16, 127 Pa. 255, 4 L. R. A. 386).

An agreement that a company should "raise the amount of working capital" meant the "raising of money," and not the acquiring of material. Janney v. Pancoast International Ventilator Co., 122 Fed. 535, 538.

The word "capital," as used in Revision 1888, § 3836, as amended by Pub. Acts 1889, p. 36, c. 63, providing that shares of capital stock shall be set in the list returned by the owner for assessment at their market value, but so much of the capital as shall be invested in real estate shall be deducted, describes the surplus over the company's liabilities, representing the fund in which the shareholder is equitably interested, and to which he would look for his final dividend, were the company to be wound up. Appeal of Bulkeley, 58 Atl. 8, 77 Conn. 45.

The "capital" of a corporation is the sum total of its stock whether common or preferred. Where a corporation issued both common and preferred stock, the latter being subject to redemption by the company, and that any holder of such stock might five years after the organization of the corporation have it redeemed at par upon six months' notice, a preferred stockholder cannot enforce this agreement to the prejudice of creditors, for the capital of a corporation is the sum total of its stock, whether common or preferred, and is subject to the payment of creditors, and certificates of stock being mere evidences that the holders have invested in the enterprise cannot give the holders rights against creditors. Rider v. John G. Delker & Sons Co., 146 S. W. 1011-1013, 145 Ky. 634, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1007.

Under the provisions of the banking act of 1866, p. 129, c. 102, § 1, that no tax shall be assessed on the "capital" of any bank, the word "capital" applies to one or another of three different mental conceptions: First, to the shares or interest which the stockholders have in the corporation; secondly, to the money or property which the incorporators contribute and transfer to the corporation as "capital," and which thus becomes its property; and, thirdly, the word is often used as a mere measure or size of the corporation as a test for graduating taxes, usually by way of license. First Nat. Bank of City of Superior v. Douglas County, 102 N. W. 315, 316, 124 Wis. 15, 4 Ann. Cas. 34.

The term "capital," as used in the provisions of the Tax Acts which relate to the return for taxation of property of a corporation by its president (Acts 1886, p. 24; Acts 1888, p. 29), means the same as all the property of the corporation. Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Wright, 54 S. E. 52, 56, 125 Ga. 589.

In subjecting all classes of bankers to taxation upon their capital, the statute does not discriminate in favor of any class, and the term "capital" should be read as meaning the same thing in respect to a corporation that it does in respect to an individual banker. In other words, whatever comprises capital in the business of an individual banker likewise comprises capital in the business of a banking corporation, for the purposes of the statute. Leather Manufacturers' Nat. Bank v. Treat, 128 Fed. 262, 264, 62 C. C. A. 644.

"Capital" is a term which, as applied to private corporations as ordinarily constituted, is used with widely varying significations. In one sense—the strict sense—it is employed to designate specifically the fund, property, or other means contributed or agreed to be contributed by the share owners as the financial basis for the prosecution of the business of the corporation; such contribution being made either directly through stock subscriptions, or indirectly through the declaration of stock dividends. As thus used, the term signifies these resources whose dedication to the uses of the corporation is made the foundation for the issuance of certificates of 'capital' stock, and which, as the result of the dedication, become irrevocably devoted to the satisfaction of all the obligations of the corporation. Sometimes the term 'capital' is used when what is meant to be designated is that portion of the assets of a corporation, regardless of its source, which is utilized for the conduct of the corporate business and for the purpose of deriving therefrom gains and profits. Frequently the term is employed in a still wider sense as descriptive of all the assets, gross or net, of a corporation whatever their source, investment, or employment." Smith v. Dana, 60 Atl. 117, 121, 77 Conn. 543, 69 L. R. A. 76, 107 Am. St. Rep. 51 (citing State v. Norwich & W. R. Co., 30 Conn. 290; Bailey v. Clark, 88 U. S. [21 Wall.] 284, 22 L. Ed. 651; Christensen v. Eno, 12 N. E. 648, 106 N. Y. 97, 60 Am. Rep. 429; Iron Ry. Co. v. Lawrence Furnace Co., 30 N. E. 616, 49 Ohio St. 102; Reid v. Eatonton Mfg. Co., 40 Ga. 103, 2 Am. Rep. 563; Commonwealth v. Charlottesville Perpetual Bldg. & Loan Co., 20 S. E. 364, 90 Va. 790, 44 Am. St. Rep. 950; Thompson's Comm. Corp. § 1660; Iowa State Sav. Bank v. City Council of Burlington, 61 N. W. 851, 98 Iowa, 739; People ex rel. Lemmon v. Feltner, 67 N. Y. Supp. 893, 56 App. Div. 280; Hemenway v. Hemenway, 63 N. E. 919, 181 Mass. 406; Security Co. v. Town of Hartford, 23 Atl. 699, 61 Conn. 89; Appeal of Batterson, 72 Conn. 374, 44 Atl. 546; People ex rel. Union Trust Co. v. Coleman, 27 N. E. 818, 126 N. Y. 433, 12 L. R. A. 762; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Weber, 96 Ill. 443; State ex rel. Batz v. Lewis, 95 N. W. 388, 118 Wis. 432).

Where testator directed that his business should be continued for five years, and that so much of the net profits as could be spared without injury to the business should be divided among his children, and that when the business was closed up the "capital" should be distributed among them, and that his daughters' shares should be held in trust with remainders for their children, it was held that the profits were to be divided among the children, though some of them during the five years were used in enlarging the plant, which improvement increased the price for which the property was sold. The total amount realized from the sale of the plant was "capital" within the meaning of the will. In re Weschler's Estate, 61 Atl. 1091, 1092, 212 Pa. 508.

In an action by an administrator for wrongful death for the benefit of the widow and next of kin, plaintiff is entitled to recover a "capital fund" which shall represent the present value of all the peculiar loss which will fall upon the widow and next of kin by the premature death of intestate, to be ascertained by taking into account all the possibilities. Hackney v. Delaware & A. Tel- graph & Telephone Co., 55 Atl. 252, 253, 69 N. J. Law, 335.

As capital stock

"Capital stock" and "capital" are practically the equivalent of each other, when considered as the basis of a franchise tax." People ex rel. Commercial Cable Co. v. Morgan, 70 N. E. 967, 969, 178 N. Y. 433, 67 L. R. A. 960.

Capital stock distinguished

There is a well-understood distinction between the "capital" or property of incorporated companies and their "capital stock." The term "capital" is often used interchangeably with "capital stock," and both are frequently used to designate the property and assets of the corporation, but this use is improper. The "capital stock" of a corporation is the amount subscribed and paid in by the shareholders or the security to be paid in and upon which the corporation is to conduct its operations, and the amount of the "capital stock" remains the same, irrespective of gains or losses. The term "capital," however, properly means, not the "capital stock" in this sense, but the actual property or estate of the corporation whether in money or property. "Capital" is the aggregate of the sums subscribed and paid in or secured to be paid in by shareholders with the addition that all gains or profits realized in the use and investment of these sums or, if losses have been incurred, then, it is the residue after deducting such losses. Person & Riegel Co. v. Lapps, 67 Atl. 1031, 1063, 1084, 219 Pa. 99 (citing Clark & M. Corp. 1140; 2 Beach, Corp. § 466).

"Capital" and "capital stock," while sometimes interchangeable, are not one and the same thing. "Capital" includes the entire assets of the bank, whether represented by the money paid in for the issuance of the stock, surplus, undivided profits, or other property of the bank, and may vary from time to time according to its profits or losses; while "capital stock" is fixed and definite, and represents only the total amount derived from the issuance of the shares of stock. Hence a city ordinance imposing a tax on the capital stock of banks located within a city is not in violation of Acts 1902-04, p. 163, § 17, providing that no tax shall be assessed on the capital of any bank. West v. City of Newport News, 51 S. E. 206, 208, 104 Va. 21.

Income distinguished

The increase in the value of a fund held in trust to pay the income to one for life, and on his death to transfer the same to others, is a part of the capital, and is not income, and the remaindermen are entitled thereto. Carpenter v. Perkins, 74 Atl. 1062, 1065, 83 Conn. 11.

What is "income" from capital stock, to which a life tenant is entitled under a will, as distinguished from "principal," to which the remainderman is entitled, depends largely on testator's presumed intention. Where corporate stock is given to one for life, remainder to another, the "income" shall be distinguished from the capital in accordance with the testator's intention, and declarations and acts of the company in declaring what shall be income and what shall be capital govern. In re Bunker's Estate, 137 N. Y. Supp. 104, 108, 77 Misc. Rep. 320.

As between a life tenant, who is entitled to the income from certain stock in a corporation, and a remainderman, who will receive the corpus of the estate after the death of the life tenant, stock dividends declared out of surplus earnings, after the death of testator, are income, and belong to the life tenant as a part of the earnings of the original stock, and, if the funds out of which the dividends are declared have accrued or been earned before the life estate arose, the dividends will be held to be principal and belong to the remainderman. Goodwin v. McGaughey, 122 N. W. 6, 9, 108 Minn. 248.

Where corporate stock was held in trust, the "income" to be paid to the beneficiaries, and the corporation went out of business and its assets were sold, that proportionate part of the price received on such sale represented by the shares of stock and items of increased amount of material, betterments, and good will of the company constituted a part of the "capital" of the trust estate, and not "income." Where a will creates a trust and authorizes the trustees to sell corporate stock constituting the trust estate and to invest the proceeds, and exempts them from liability for losses, showing that testatrix realized that the value of the estate might fluctuate, and profits on investments are credited to capital, premiums paid on bonds purchased will be charged to "capital" and not to "income." In re Stevens, 95 N. Y. Supp. 297, 312, 46 Misc. Rep. 623.

Testator had corporate stock which after his death declared an extra cash dividend out of its accumulated surplus, and, under a plan to increase its capital stock, the corporation gave the stockholders a right to take at par new stock to equal 40 per cent. of the stock held, and it was stipulated that each stockholder covenanted to take that amount of the stock and upon paying the extra cash dividend it should be applied in payment of such subscription. Held, that the shares of the stock so received by testamentary trustees under testator's will did not become part of the "capital" of the trust fund, but were income. In re Carey, 118 N. Y. Supp. 504, 506, 63 Misc. Rep. 489.

As a general rule, as between life tenants of corporate stock held in trust and remaindermen, a cash dividend on the stock is to be regarded as income, and stock dividends as "capital." The fact that undistributed profits of a corporation, or surplus in any form, have been invested by the corporation in permanent work, improvements, or extensions, does not render a cash dividend declared by the corporation out of proceeds of a sale of such improvements capital, instead of income. The general rule that, as between life tenants of corporate stock held in trust and remaindermen, a cash dividend declared on corporate stock is to be regarded as income, and a stock dividend as "capital," is not a rule yielding whenever an investigation appears to indicate its failure in a given case to accomplish what might be conceived as exact justice, on the basis of a theoretical view of ultimate rights. Where a corporation withdrew from certain incidental branches of its business, and converted its investment in such branches into cash, which was distributed as a dividend, the amount of the corporation's capital remaining unchanged, there was no partial liquidation, so as to warrant a holding that the dividend was "capital" rather than income, as between life tenants and remaindermen. A disposition of a dividend on corporate stock as income for life tenants, instead of as capital for the remaindermen, could not be regarded as operating to the injury of the remaindermen, where it appeared that the capital stock constituting the corpus of the estate remained worth three times what it was when the trust took effect. Smith v. Dana, 60 Atl. 117, 121, 77 Conn. 543, 69 L. R. A. 76, 107 Am. St. Rep. 51.

Where a corporation declared a cash dividend from earnings, and voted an increase of capital stock to a like amount on the same day, giving every stockholder the right to subscribe to the new stock, the proceeds of the sale of the rights to subscribe to the new stock constitute capital, and belong to remaindermen as against a life tenant. Hyde v. Holmes, 84 N. E. 318, 319, 198 Mass. 287.

Shares of stock distinguished

The "capital" on which the privilege-taxes on cotton seed oil mills are based, under Code 1906, § 3801, is the property or assets invested in the business, rather than the corporate stock. Orenshaw Oil Co. v. Johnson, 48 South. 5, 94 Miss. 773.

As stock

See Stock (In Corporation Law).

CAPITAL CASE

See Capital Crime or Offense.

A "capital case" is a case in which a person is tried for a capital crime. Adams v. State, 48 South. 219, 224, 56 Fla. 1.

Under Rev. St. 1909, § 5204, providing that no appeal in a criminal case shall stay any case, unless the Supreme Court or the court rendering the judgment shall for probable cause make an order staying the proceedings, except in "capital cases," where the granting, of an appeal shall operate as a stay, an appeal stays only those cases in which the sentence is that of capital punishment, and not all cases where the indictment charged a capital offense. Ex parte Dipley, 135 S. W. 56, 57, 233 Mo. 235; Ex parte Smith, 135 S. W. 58, 233 Mo. 241.

Rev. St. 1899, § 1837, provides that rape shall be punishable by death or imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term of years, and section 2698 declares that in capital cases the order granting an appeal shall operate as a stay absolutely. Held, that where petitioner was convicted of rape, but was sentenced to the penitentiary for a term of 50 years, his case was not a "capital case," and his imprisonment under the sentence was therefore not suspended by an order granting an appeal. In re Vickers, 100 S. W. 585, 201 Mo. 643.

CAPITAL CRIME OR OFFENSE

See Capital Case; Capital Felony.

A conviction in a federal District Court of murder in the second degree, punishable only by imprisonment, is not reviewable in the Supreme Court under Act March 3, 1891, c. 517, § 5, 26 Stat. 827, as amended by Act Jan. 20, 1897, c. 68, 29 Stat. 492, as a case of "conviction of capital crime" although accused could have been convicted of a capital offense. Rakes v. United States, 29 Sup. Ct. 244, 245, 212 U. S. 55, 53 L. Ed. 401.

A "capital crime" is one for which the punishment of death is inflicted. Adams v. State, 48 South. 219, 224, 56 Fla. 1; Commonwealth v. Ibrahim, 68 N. E. 231, 232, 184 Mass. 255.

CAPITAL EMPLOYED

Where a foreign corporation was organized with a paid-in capital stock invested in improved real estate previously owned by the several stockholders in common, dividends being derived from rentals of such property, the capital so invested was "the capital employed within the state," within Tax Law, Laws 1896, p. 856, c. 908, §§ 181, 182; and hence the corporation was properly taxable thereunder. People ex rel. Wall & Hanover St. Realty Co. v. Miller, 90 N. Y. Supp. 755, 756, 98 App. Div. 584.

A foreign corporation has its "capital employed within the state," under statutes imposing taxes on capital so employed, where its charter authorized unlimited dealings in real estate of every description anywhere in the United States and in all kinds of personal property, where the corporation has no surplus, and all of its capital is invested in a single office building and employed in the care and management of the same and in the collection of rents; the net income being devoted to the payment of dividends. People ex rel. Wall & H. St. Realty Co. v. Miller, 73 N. E. 1102, 1105, 181 N. Y. 828.

The capital of a corporation is "capital employed," within the meaning of Laws 1896, c. 908, § 182, providing that the tax on domestic corporations shall be computed on the basis of the amount of its capital stock employed within the state, when its stock is devoted to the purpose for which the corporation was formed. A corporation is liable to be taxed though it is merely a holding corporation for an individual. People ex rel. Waclark Realty Co. v. Williams, 91 N. E. 266, 267, 198 N. Y. 54, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 371.

Money of a foreign corporation invested in structures on leased ground is "capital employed within this state," under the corporation tax law, although the structures may become in law the property of the owner of the ground. People ex rel. Long Dock Mills & Elevator v. Wilson, 106 N. Y. Supp. 1, 2, 121 App. Div. 376.

The cash on hand and notes owned by a foreign corporation, doing business in the state as importers, which are the proceeds of the sale of imported goods in the unbroken original packages, may be taxed under Laws N. Y. 1896, p. 800, c. 908, § 7, as "capital employed in business within the state," without infringing the prohibition of Const. U. S. art. 1, § 10, against taxing imports, although the bulk of the proceeds of such sales are remitted to the home office in Ireland, where it is customary to hold the notes in New York for collection, and to retain there sufficient sums to meet the local expenses of the business, and to pay the duties on subsequent importations. People of State of New York v. Wells, 28 Sup. Ct. 193, 196, 208 U. S. 14, 52 L. Ed. 370.

CAPITAL FELONY

See Capital Crime or Offense.

The expression "capital felony," when used in our law, is merely descriptive of those felonies to which the death penalty is affixed as a punishment under given circumstances, to distinguish such felonies from that class in which under no circumstances would death ever be inflicted as a penalty for the violation of the same. Felonies in the Penal Code are thus divided into two classes—capital felonies, and felonies not capital. If under any circumstances the penalty of death can be inflicted, the offense is "capital," whether it is actually inflicted in a particular case or not. If under no circumstances the death penalty can be inflicted, the offense is not capital. When a person on trial for murder is found guilty of that offense, but with a recommendation by the jury that he be imprisoned for life in the penitentiary, he is convicted of a "capital felony," and a writ of error sued out to review a judgment overruling a motion for a new trial in such a case is properly returnable to the Supreme Court. Caesar v. State, 57 S. E. 66, 67, 127 Ga. 710.

CAPITAL INVESTED

An assessment for taxation of a waterworks company for "capital invested in merchandise and manufacturing" included its pipes, hydrants, etc., but did not include "solvent credits" of the corporation; they being a separate kind of property, which should have been listed separately. Adams v. Vicksburg Waterworks Co. (Miss.) 47 South. 530, 531; Same v. City Waterworks & Light Co., Id. 531. Nor did it include a corporate franchise to construct waterworks in a city and use the streets therefor; the franchise being personality of a different kind, which was taxable by itself. Adams v. Bullock, 47 South. 527, 530, 94 Miss. 27, 19 Ann. Cas. 165.

The amount of capital invested in a business ordinarily is the whole amount of money used in carrying on that business. The average capital of a grain dealer is defined by Revenue Act, § 66, Laws 1903, p. 407, c. 73, Comp. St. 1905, § 4987, to be the average amount which the total investment in the business exceeds the tangible property which can be separately assessed. Held that the assessor must find what capital, if any, from time to time there was, not including in the computation the tangible property, and the average or mean of the capital so found is to be assessed in addition to the tangible property. Judgment (1906) 109 N. W. 385, reversed on rehearing. Central Granaries Co. v. Lancaster County, 113 N. W. 199, 201, 77 Neb. 319.

Credits or bills receivable of a person are taxable as capital invested in the state, within Tax Law, Laws 1896, p. 800, c. 908, § 7, though the credits are the proceeds of sales of imported goods in original packages; the tax not being on imports, and so not contravening Const. U. S. art. 1, § 10. People ex rel. Burke v. Wells, 95 N. Y. Supp. 100, 107 App. Div. 15.

CAPITAL STOCK

See Value of Capital Stock.

Diminishing capital stock, see Diminish.

The words "capital stock" may mean either the capital subscribed, the share capital, or the capital paid in, the actual assets with which the company does business, and in P. L. 1904, p. 275, providing that the directors of a corporation shall not divide, withdraw, or pay to the stockholders any part of the "capital stock of such corporation, or reduce its capital stock except as authorized by law," they seem to be used in both senses, and when the Legislature forbids the dividing, withdrawing, or paying to the stockholders any part of the capital stock, it means the capital actually invested; when it forbids the reduction of the "capital stock," it means the share capital subscribed or the authorized capital. Goodnow v. Amer- ican Writing Paper Co., 69 Atl. 1014, 1016, 73 N. J. Eq. 692.

Under the provisions of the banking act of 1866, p. 129, c. 102, § 1, that no tax shall be assessed on the capital of any bank, the words "capital stock" apply to one or another of three different mental conceptions: First, to the shares or interest which the stockholders have in the corporation; secondly, to the money or property which the incorporators contribute and transfer to the corporation as capital, and which thus becomes its property; and, thirdly, the word is often used as a mere measure or size of the corporation as a test for graduating taxes, usually by way of license. First Nat. Bank of City of Superior v. Douglas County, 102 N. W. 815, 816, 124 Wis. 15, 4 Ann. Cas. 34.

"Capital stock" and "capital and property" mean practically the same thing. Primarily, the "capital stock" is money paid in by the stockholders in compliance with the terms of their subscriptions. It soon, however, takes the form of real estate or personal property, or both, including machinery, buildings, credits, rights of action, etc., so that it may be taken to mean personal property and such real estate as may be necessary to the daily operations of the company and its moneys and credits." Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co. v. Bowland, 25 Sup. Ct. 345, 350, 196 U. S. 611, 49 L. Ed. 619 (citing Lee v. Sturges, 19 N. E. 560, 564, 46 Ohio St. 153, 160, 2 L. R. A. 556, 558).

Accumulated earnings

"The stock or 'capital stock' of a corporation is the fund or capital, consisting of money or goods, employed in conducting the business of the company"; and a fund possessed by a mutual insurance company arising from premiums earned on fire and marine policies of insurance, which was invested, pursuant to an authority contained in the charter, in bonds and mortgages and stocks so as to yield an income to be divided among the members, the fund itself being forbidden to be so distributed, constitutes the capital stock of the company. Mut. Ins. Co. of Buffalo v. Board of Sup'rs of Erie County, 4 N. Y. 442, 445.

As authorized amount

Laws 1907, p. 237, c. 140, § 23, requiring payment of certain fees upon increase in the capital stock of a corporation, refers to an increase in the authorized capital, and such fees are payable whenever there is an increase in the power of the corporation to issue stock, regardless of whether any part of the new stock is actually issued or subscribed. The fact that such section provides that the fee exacted when the capital stock of a corporation is increased shall be paid at the time the certificate thereof is filed with the Secretary of State, does not enable a corporation, which has effected a valid increase, to defeat or postpone the right of the state to such fee by omitting to file a certificate. State v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 105 Pac. 685, 687, 81 Kan. 404.

The capital stock of a national bank is the sum on which it is authorized to do business constituting the permanent basis of its credit, and does not include the deposits of the bank. State v. Clement Nat. Bank, 78 Atl. 944, 950, 84 Vt. 167, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 22.

As amount subscribed

"Capital stock" of a corporation, in its primary sense, means the fund, property, or other means contributed, or agreed to be contributed, by the share owners as the financial basis for the corporation's business, either directly through stock subscriptions, or indirectly through the declaration of stock dividends. The term signifies those resources, the dedication of which to the uses of the corporation is made the foundation for the issuance of certificates of capital stock, and which, as a result of the dedication, becomes irrevocably devoted to the satisfaction of all obligations of the corporation. Stamford Trust Co. v. Yale & Towne Mfg. Co., 75 Atl. 90, 92, 83 Conn. 43.

The words "capital stock," in Laws 1907, p. 744, requiring foreign corporations seeking to do business in the state to pay for filing the articles of incorporation a fee of $25 where the capital stock is $50,000 or under, $75 where the capital stock is over $50,000 and not more than $100,000, and $25 additional for each additional $100,000 of capital stock, do not include authorized stock not subscribed, but include unpaid subscribed stock, and a foreign corporation must pay fees on a basis of its authorized and unpaid subscribed stock. London & L. Fire Ins. Co. v. Ludwig, 112 S. W. 197, 198, 86 Ark. 581.

The phrase "capital stock," as employed in acts of incorporation, is never used to indicate the value of the property of the company, but to designate the amount of capital stock contributed by the stockholders for the purposes of the corporation, and, though the value of the stock may be increased by surplus profits or diminished by losses, the amount of capital stock remains the same. The term, as used in an act supplemental to a charter empowering an association to raise by tax any sum not exceeding $500, provided that the "capital stock" shall not exceed $4,000, is not as a restriction of the value of the property to be held at any one time by the association, but a limitation of the sum it may raise by taxation. State v. Morristown Fire Ass'n, 23 N. J. Law, 195, 196, 197.

"Capital stock," within Civ. Code, § 309, relating to the distribution of the capital stock of corporations, refers to the actual property of the corporation contributed by the shareholders. Tapscott v. Mexican Colorado River Land Co., 96 Pac. 271, 273, 153 Cal. 664.

As assets

"The 'capital stock' of a corporation is a trust fund for creditors, and hence it cannot employ its funds to purchase its own shares." Maryland Trust Co. v. National Mechanics' Bank, 63 Atl. 70, 76, 102 Md. 608 (quoting and adopting the definition in 2 Thomp. Corp. §§ 20, 54).

The amount of the "capital stock" of a corporation is the amount contributed by the shareholders for the prosecution of the business, and as the term is used in the revenue act it includes the assets of the corporation, and the value of the capital stock depends upon the assets and property of the corporation and their amount; but as the term is used in Laws 1871-72, p. 300, § 16, making the directors and officers of a corporation assenting to an indebtedness exceeding the amount of the capital stock liable therefor, it does not include the assets of the corporation. Slater v. Taylor, 89 N. E. 271, 272, 241 Ill. 102.

As capital

Under General Corporation Act (P. L. 1896, p. 286) § 30, providing that no corporation shall withdraw or pay to the stockholders any part of its capital stock except according to the act and on violation of the provisions making the directors jointly and separately liable to the full amount of the stock so withdrawn and paid out with interest thereon, the words "capital stock" mean such part of the property of the company as represents its capital for which the stock was issued, and, if defendant as a director withdraws a portion of the assets of the company, he would be liable to the creditors for the amount placed beyond their reach. Audenreid v. East Coast Milling Co., 59 Atl. 577, 585, 68 N. J. Eq. 450.

Civ. Code, § 309, prohibits corporate directors from dividing, withdrawing, or paying to stockholders any part of the capital stock, but provides that nothing therein shall prevent a division or distribution of capital stock remaining after paying all debts on dissolution of the corporation. Held that, while the stockholders could not authorize anything the directors could not do, and the term "capital stock" meant the actual capital or property used in the business, and not the nominal capital, an agreement, made upon plaintiff's alleged discovery of fraud by defendant in inducing plaintiff to purchase half the capital stock of a corporation, and demand for rescission of the contract of sale, by which defendant agreed to sell the corporate property and return to plaintiff the purchase price, keeping the remainder himself, could be legally carried out under the latter part of the section by dissolving the corporation after paying all debts, winding up its affairs, and dividing the proceeds under the agreement; and hence it would be assumed that such method was contemplated by the agreement. Burne v. Lee, 104 Pac. 438, 441, 156 Cal. 221.

In Comp. Laws 1907, § 4411, making it a misdemeanor "to divide, withdraw or in any manner except as provided by law, pay to any stockholders or any of them any part of the capital stock of the corporation," the term "capital stock" means the capital of the corporation on which it transacts business, whether such capital consists of money, property, or other valuable commodities. Cooper v. Utah Light & R. Co., 102 Pac. 202, 209, 35 Utah, 570, 136 Am. St. Rep. 1075.

Capital synonymous

See Capital.

As capital paid in

The capital stock of a business corporation is the sum fixed by the corporate charter as the amount paid in or to be paid in by the stockholders for the prosecution of the business and for the benefit of the creditors, and belongs to the corporation as a legal entity, and is distinguished from the amount of property owned by it. Capital stock is a liability of the corporation to its shareholders after creditors' claims have been liquidated. Markle v. Burgess, 95 N. E. 308, 309, 176 Ind. 25.

Franchises

The term "capital stock," when applied to the capital stock of a corporation, embraces the franchise of the corporation, as well as its physical property. Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Wright, 132 Fed. 912, 919.

As property belonging to corporation

The capital stock of a corporation is the money contributed by the corporators to the capital, and belongs to the corporation. Consolidated Coal Co. of St. Louis v. Miller, 86 N. E. 205, 206, 236 Ill. 140.

The term "capital stock," as used in the provisions of the Tax Acts, which relate to the return for taxation of property of a corporation by its president (Acts 1886, p. 24; Acts 1888, p. 29), means the same as all the property of the corporation. Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Wright, 54 S. E. 52, 56, 125 Ga. 589.

The roadbed, machinery, depots, and other property used by a railroad company in operating its road are not literally a part of the "capital stock," taking these words in their usual acceptation. "Capital stock" exists only nominally, while the money or property which it represents is the tangible reality. The legislature has, however, given a legislative interpretation of the words "capital stock," so far as applied to the various railroad companies of this state, and "capital stock" as used in the general revenue act, subjecting to taxation all property owned by incorporated companies over and above their capital stock, includes the roadbed, machinery, and depots. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Shacklett, 30 Mo. 550, 558.

As affecting the liability of corporate property to taxation, the kind of property denominated as "capital stock" does not mean shares of stock, either separately or in the aggregate, but designates the property of the corporation subject to taxation as a homogeneous unit, partaking of the nature of personality, and subject to the burdens imposed upon it at the domicile of the owner. Keokuk & Hamilton Bridge Co. v. People ex rel. County Treasurer, 43 N. E. 691, 695, 161 Ill. 132.

"Capital stock" of a corporation in a state statute imposing a tax on the capital stock of a corporation refers to property which the corporation has received and presumably holds. It is not the individual property of the shareholders which is contemplated by that which is in the treasury of the corporation or included in its assets. Powers v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 26 Sup. Ct. 558, 559, 201 U. S. 543, 50 L. Ed. 860.

As property

See Personal Property.

Shares of stock distinguished

A tax on the "shares of stock" of a bank owned by the stockholders is not a tax on the "capital stock" of the bank. Second Ward Sav. Bank v. City of Milwaukee, 69 N. W. 359, 361, 94 Wis. 587.

The "capital stock" of a corporation is the money or property put into the corporate funds by the subscribers for their stock, which fund becomes the property of the corporation. A share of said capital stock is the right to partake, according to the amount put into the fund, of the surplus profits, and, upon dissolution of the corporation, of the fund remaining after payment of debts. Rev. St. 1898, § 1751, enacts that the capital stock of a corporation, divided into shares, shall be deemed personality, and, when certificates thereof are issued, such shares may be transferred by indorsement and delivery of the certificate. Section 1753 (Laws 1899, c. 193, § 1) provides that no corporation shall issue any stock or certificate of stock, except in consideration for money, labor, or property actually received, equal to the par value thereof, and that all stocks issued contrary to such provision shall be void. Section 1773 contemplates the transaction of business by a corporation with its stockholders before it is at liberty to do so with others, and section 4436 punishes the issuance of a false certificate of stock. Held, that the words "issue any stock" and "all stocks issued," in section 1753, referred to certificates of stock as distinguished from the stock itself, and that hence the section did not deprive stockholders for less than par from having equitable relief against promoters who had defrauded the corporation. Pietsch v. Krause, 93 N. W. 9, 11, 116 Wis. 844 (quoting and adopting definition in Burrall v. Bushwick R. Co., 75 N. Y. 211).

"Capital stock" is the aggregate of the money invested in a corporate enterprise by the subscriber thereto, and may consist in cash or be represented by the realty or personality in which the cash has been invested. "Shares" of stock represent the holder's right to vote at corporate meetings and to receive his portion of the dividends and of the residue of the corporation's property upon its dissolution. Hence, since capital stock and shares of capital stock represent different property rights, the corporation's and the shareholders' both may be lawfully taxed. Judy v. Beckwith, 114 N. W. 565, 569, 137 Iowa, 24, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 142, 15 Ann. Cas. 890.

The term "capital stock," as used in the tax law, does not mean share stock, but is limited to the actual money or property paid in and possessed by a corporation as such. People ex rel. Twenty-Third St. R. Co. v. Feitner, 87 N. Y. Supp. 304, 306, 92 App. Div. 518 (citing People ex rel. Union Trust Co. v. Coleman, 27 N. E. 818, 126 N. Y. 433, 12 L. R. A. 762; People ex rel. Manhattan Ry. Co. v. Barker, 40 N. E. 996, 146 N. Y. 804).

"The term 'capital stock' of a corporation, as used in statutes taxing franchises of corporations, means, not share stock, but the property of the corporation contributed by its stockholders or otherwise obtained by it, to the extent required by its charter. The term 'capital stock' is often loosely used in speech, and sometimes in statutory phraseology, to denote capital and nothing more. It is defined as money or property which is put in a single corporate fund by those who, by subscription therefor, become members of a corporate body. 'Capital stock' and 'capital' are practically the equivalent of each other when considered as a basis for a franchise tax." People ex rel. Consolidated Ginseng Co. of America v. Kelsey, 93 N. Y. Supp. 369, 371, 105 App. Div. 175 (quoting and adopting definition in People ex rel. Commercial Cable Co. v. Morgan, 70 N. E. 967, 178 N. Y. 433, 67 L. R. A. 960).

The words "capital stock," as used in Corporation Tax Law (Laws 1896, c. 908) § 182, providing that every corporation organized under the law of the state shall pay an annual tax, computed on the basis of the amount of its capital stock employed within the state, does not mean the share stock held by individuals, but the capital stock which it represents, so employed; and, so construing the term "capital stock," United States bonds should, in the absence of proof that they were bought by the corporation with its surplus, be treated as capital, and as part of the basis on which the franchise tax is to be computed. People ex rel. Commercial Cable Co. v. Morgan, 70 N. E. 967, 969, 178 N. Y. 433, 67 L. R. A. 960.

The phrase "capital stock employed in this state," as used in Laws 1896, c. 908, as amended by Laws 1901, c. 558, imposing a license tax on foreign corporations, means that part of the corporation's corporate fund with which it does business within the state, regardless of the amount of its share stock. People ex rel. Consolidated Ginseng Co. of America v. Kelsey, 93 N. Y. Supp. 369, 371, 105 App. Div. 175.

CAPPING

The "capping" of a stick of dynamite consists of inserting into the stick an exploder and fastening it there by wires wound about the end of the stick. Hall v. Cayuga Lake Cement Co., 97 N. Y. Supp. 955, 957, 111 App. Div. 801.

CAPTAIN

See Brevet Captain.

The officer commanding a company is a "captain." Campbell v. Gilkyson, 75 Atl. 160, 161, 78 N. J. Law, 327.

Under a statute making the captain or owner of a steamer liable to a penalty for making a voyage without a licensed first or principal engineer in charge of the engines, it is held that one who was in command when the law was violated, though but for a single voyage, was liable to the penalty, even though another was regularly employed as captain. Leonard v. Board of Engineers, 10 Ala. 52, 55.

CAPTION

Of indictment

The "caption" of an indictment may be used, as declared by Code 1907, § 7181, to describe a part of the indictment itself, or in a technical sense as descriptive of that entry of record showing when and where the court was held, who presided as judge, the venire of the grand jury, and who were summoned and sworn as grand jurors. Thornton v. State, 59 South. 234, 235, 4 Ala. App. 205.

The "caption" of an indictment is not merely the marginal statement at the head of the indictment and venire, but is the entry of record showing when and where the court is held, who presided as judge, the complete venire and indorsements, and who were summoned and sworn as grand jurors, which record entries may be looked to, to supply any defect or clerical error in the special caption or heading of the indictment. Collins v. State, 58 South. 80, 82, 3 Ala. App. 64.

The "caption" of an indictment is the preamble, which is designed to indicate in a general way the kind of a crime alleged to have been committed, and to show that the trial court has jurisdiction thereof, and a mistake therein in designating the correct name of the offense is not a fatal defect, for it is the sufficiency of the averments of the charging part of an indictment that is the gist of the accusation. State v. Emmons, 106 Pac. 451, 452, 55 Or. 352.

The caption, which is that entry of record, showing when and where the court is held, who presided as judge, the venire, and who were summoned and sworn as grand jurors, is an essential part of an indictment. Williams v. State, 54 South. 535, 536, 171 Ala. 56.

CAPTIVE

CAPTURED PROPERTY

Property is "captured" on land when seized or taken from hostile possession by military forces under orders from a commanding officer. Lamar v. Browne, 92 U. S. 187-194, 23 L. Ed. 650.

"Captured property," under Act March 12, 1863, defining it as property which had been taken or seized when in hostile possession, by the military and naval forces of the United States, is property which has been actually seized by such forces. United States v. Padelford, 76 U. S. (9 Wall.) 531-540, 19 L. Ed. 788.

A vestibule curtain on a sleeping car is a part of the "car" within a contract binding the sleeping car company to furnish "cars" to a railway company and keep the same in repair. Pullman Co. v. Norton (Tex.) 91 S. W. 841, 845.

"The term 'cars,' when employed in an employer's liability act, may be taken to mean any kind of a vehicle other than a locomotive or tender, used by a railroad company for the transportation of passengers, employes, or property upon and along its tracks. The term is not confined to coaches nor to freight cars, but embraces all kinds of cars." A tram car used on a tram railroad operated by a railroad company for the purpose of transporting cross-ties and other freight or material to its creosote plant, where its cross-ties were treated, was a "car" within Acts 25th Leg. approved June 18, 1897 (Laws 1897, p. 14, c. 6), making a railroad liable for injuries to a servant while engaged in operating "cars" by reason of the negligence of any other servant. Missouri, K. &

T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Smith, 90 S. W. 743, 744, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 128 (quoting and adopting definition in 3 Elliott, Railroads, § 1354).

A shovel car is a "car" within the meaning of Act March 2, 1893, c. 196, § 2, 27 Stat. 531, requiring any car used in moving interstate traffic to be equipped with an automatic coupler. Schlemmer v. Buffalo, B. & P. Ry. Co., 27 Sup. Ct. 407, 408, 205 U. S. 1, 51 L. Ed. 681.

The word "car," in the statute punishing every person who shall willfully break or injure any car which now is or which may hereafter be in use on any railroad in the state, refers to passenger and freight cars on railroads where locomotives, roundhouses, and water stations are essential in their operation, and does not include a street car, and the willful breaking of the window of a street car in use on a street railway is not a violation of the statute. State v. Cain, 76 Pac. 443, 444, 69 Kan. 186.

Engine and tender

The word "car," in its ordinary use and acceptance, does not include the tender of a locomotive. The tender of a locomotive is not a "car" within St. 1895, p. 412, c. 362, § 2 (Rev. Laws, c. 111, § 203), providing "no railroad corporation shall haul or permit to be hauled or used on its lines * * * any car which is not equipped with couplers," etc., and act March 2, 1898, c. 196, § 8, 27 Stat. 532, providing "any employe of such corporation who may be injured by any locomotive, car, or train in use contrary to the provisions of this act shall not be deemed thereby to have assumed the risk," etc. Larabee v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 66 N. E. 1032, 1033, 182 Mass. 348.

As an engine is a "car" within the safety appliance statute, when such engine is engaged in interstate commerce, any car or cars attached to that engine are used in connection with the car engaged in interstate commerce, and consequently come within the amendment of the safety appliance act (Act March 2, 1903, c. 976, 32 Stat. 943). United States v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 157 Fed. 616, 619.

Hand car

A hand car is a "car" within a statute providing that, when a person shall die from an injury received through the negligence of any employe while running any "car" or train of cars, the railroad company shall be subject to a certain penalty. Boyd v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 139 S. W. 561, 566, 236 Mo. 54 (citing Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Artery, 11 Sup. Ct. 129, 137 U. S. 507, 34 L. Ed. 747; Perez v. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co., 67 S. W. 137, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 255; Benson v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co., 77 N. W. 798, 75 Minn. 163, 74 Am. St. Rep. 444; Kansas City, M. & B. R. Co. v. Crocker, 11 South. 262, 95 Ala. 412).

Removing a hand car from a railway track is the operation of a "car" within the Fellow Servant Statute, Rev. St. 1895, art. 4560f. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Hervey (Tex.) 89 S. W. 1095, 1096.

Under a statute making railroad companies liable for injuries to servants caused by negligence of fellow servants in the operation of cars, a section crew, placing a hand car on the track, is engaged in the operation of a "car," within the statute. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Jennings, 81 S. W. 822, 823, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 375.

Passenger car

Under Act Feb. 20, 1911 (St. 1911, p. 65) § 1, requiring common carriers to provide two brakemen on passenger trains consisting of four or more passenger coaches or cars, two brakemen are not required on passenger trains of four or more cars where less than four are passenger coaches or passenger cars, the word "passenger" in the statute qualifying "cars" as well as "coaches"; the words "coaches," and "cars" including all cars used for transportation of passengers. Ex parte Galivan, 122 Pac. 961, 162 Cal. 331.

The requirement of the safety appliance act that it shall be unlawful for any railroad company to use "any car in interstate commerce that is not provided with secure grabirons or handholds in the ends and sides of each car, for greater security to men in coupling and uncoupling cars," applies to passenger cars, and a failure to comply herewith is not excused by the fact that the cars in question were equipped with air hose, steam hose or other appliances affording some measure of protection to employees. United States v. Norfolk & W. Ry. Co., 184 Fed. 99, 101.

Push car

A push car, used for transporting ballast for the repair of a track, is a "car," within the meaning of a statute providing that a railway company shall be liable for injuries to a servant in operating a car through the negligence of any other servant. *Seery v. CAR LOAD

Where defendants, dealers in live stock, wired plaintiffs, who were in the banking business, "Will honor J's $500 draft car load steers, bill lading attached," the defendants could not be permitted to show what would be understood among dealers in and shippers and carriers of cattle by the use of the term "car load," as found in the telegram, and also that the animals shipped to defendants did not in weight constitute a "car load," according to the understanding and custom existing among such dealers, shippers, and carriers. The testimony might have been admissible had a controversy arisen between J. and these defendants, or between either of the parties just mentioned and the common carrier. It might well be inferred in such an action that the parties dealt and contracted with reference to prevailing usages and customs. Keavy v. Thuett, 50 N. W. 126, 127, 47 Minn. 266.

CAR PULLER

An appliance which was used in the basement of an elevator to draw cars along a track was known as a "car puller," and consisted of a drum to which power was applied by means of certain levers causing it to revolve and wind about it a rope, the end of which was attached by means of a hook to such cars as it was desired to move. Dill v. Marmon (Ind.) 71 N. E. 669.

CARBOLINEUM

"Carbolineum," or "Carbolineum Avenarius," consists of dead oil modified by subjection to the action of chlorine gas, and is dutiable under the provision in paragraph 15, Schedule A, § 1, c. 11, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. 152, as "preparations of coal tar not colors or dyes, and not medicinal, not specially provided for," rather than under the provision for "chemical compounds" in paragraph 3 of said act, 30 Stat. 151, or free of duty as "dead or creosote oil" in paragraph 524 of said act, Free List, § 2, c. 11, 30 Stat. 197. *Downing v. CARBONIC ACID

"Carbonic acid" is a gaseous compound of carbon and oxygen, and aerated beverages, like artificial mineral waters, champagne, and beer, are charged with it, and owe their sparkle and effervescence to it." There being no proof that the process of charging a glass bottle, protected by wicker work, with carbonic acid gas to a pressure of about 200 pounds to the square inch, is essentially dangerous, a druggist selling such bottles and carbonic acid capsules to be discharged therein for aerating liquid was not liable for injuries caused to a purchaser by the explosion of one of the bottles. Bruckel v. J. Milhau's Son, 102 N. Y. Supp. 395, 397, 116 App. Div. 832.

CARDED SILK

In construing the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 660, for "silk, raw, or as reeled from the cocoon, but not * * * advanced in manufacture in any way," held: (1) That the provision does not cover any form of raw silk advanced beyond the condition of skeins; (2) that silk known as "singles," or "silk on tubes," which has been wound from the skeins onto tubes, the effect of this process being to advance the silk a stage in preparation for its ultimate use, has been "advanced in manufacture"; and (8) that silk in this form is not free of duty under this provision, but dutiable under paragraph 884, § 1, Schedule L, of said act, as "silk * * * not further advanced or manufactured than carded or combed silk." Klots v. United States, 139 Fed. 606, 607, 71 C. C. A. 590.

CARE

All possible care, see All.

"Care" is defined: responsibility, care, or oversight; watchful regard and attention." Hewey v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 62 Atl. 600, 602, 100 Me. 528.

"Care" and "carefulness" are antonyms for "neglect" and "negligence." Statements in answer to interrogatories submitted to the jury that work causing the injury was carefully done, and that the men engaged therein exercised ordinary and reasonable care, are conclusions. Avery v. Nordyke & Marmon Co., 70 N. E. 888, 893, 34 Ind. App. 541.

An instruction, "that the term 'negligence' means the want of that care and prudence which a man of ordinary 'intelligence' would exercise under all the circumstances of the situation," is erroneous, where the case is bottomed on negligence and defended on the ground of contributory negligence, since it does not correctly define the term. "Intelligence" is not a synonym for either "caution," "prudence," or "care." Van Cleve v. St. Louis, M. & S. E. R. Co., 101 S. W. 632, 634, 124 Mo. App. 224.

The improper unloading of a ship by stevedores causing it to roll over and sink amounts to the "care or delivery of cargo," as used in section 1 of Act Feb. 13, 1893, c. 109, 27 Stat. 445, rather than "management of a vessel," within section 3 of such act, which provides for the exemption of the ship-owners from liability resulting from faults or error in navigation of the vessel. The Germanic, 124 Fed. 1, 3, 9, 59 C. C. A. 521.

Laws 1898, c. 321, § 4, as amended by Laws 1901, c. 666, § 2, provides that the board of supervisors of Oneida county shall allow the sheriff's bills for the "care, supervision, and maintenance" of prisoners in the county jails; such care, provision, and maintenance being defined to include board, washing, and every charge of any nature, which can legally be made in connection with the prisoners. Held, that the provision applies to the things and services which the sheriff is to furnish of a similar nature to the things specified, and does not include drugs, medicines, and medical and surgical supplies furnished by the order of the jail physician; the sheriff not being liable for such articles. People ex rel. Nugent v. Board of Sup'rs of Oneida County, 121 N. Y. Supp. 372, 373, 65 Misc. Rep. 327.

As custody

There is no distinction between the words "care" and "possession," as used in Code 1906, § 1136, making it a crime for any agent, clerk, officer, etc., to embezzle money which shall have come to his "care or possession," so that an indictment charging that defendant had the money under his "care" is sufficient, as is also one charging that he had the same in his "possession." Richburger v. State, 44 South. 772, 774, 90 Miss. 806.

As diligence

"Care" means more than mere mechanical skill. It includes circumspection and foresight with regard to reasonably probable contingencies." The rule as to the degree of care in the use of electricity is the same as in the use of steam and other agencies. The care must be proportionate to the danger. In determining the danger, it is the duty of those in control to have in view all the surroundings, including the contingency of other wires and their liability to fall and come in contact with the dangerously charged wire. Youmans v. Moore & Barnes, 48 S. E. 283, 285, 69 S. C. 350 (quoting Anderson v. Jersey City Electric Light Co., 43 Atl. 654, 655, 63 N. J. Law, 387).

"Care and foresight" is the reasonably practicable degree of care and diligence, in view of all the facts and circumstances shown in evidence, that a very prudent and careful person engaged in a like business would ordinarily and reasonably take and exercise, or would be fairly and reasonably expected to use under like or similar cir-circumstances. Logan v. Metropolitan, St. Ry. Co., 82 S. W. 126, 128, 183 Mo. 582.

A passenger carrier's duty to exercise the utmost "care, diligence, and foresight" relates to future events, since no amount of care, diligence, or foresight can avoid what has already happened. Wheaton v. North Beach & M. R. Co., 36 Cal. 590, 594.

As maintenance

The word "care" in Civ. Code, § 138, authorizing the court in an action for divorce, before or after judgment, to give such directions for the custody, care, and education of the children as may be proper, etc., is, if not synonymous with "maintenance," a broader term, and, when combined with "custody" and "education," it includes every element of provision for the physical, moral, and mental well-being of the children, and an order for the benefit of the children is within the jurisdiction of the court, whether it uses the term "maintenance and support" or the broader expression "custody, care and education." Harlan v. Harlan, 98 Pac. 32, 36, 154 Cal. 341.

CARE AND CUSTODY

Acts Jan. 28, 1905 (Acts 29th Leg. c. 7), which provided that upon the state's receipt of title to the so-called "Alamo property" the Governor should deliver it, together with the Alamo church property already owned by the state, to the custody and care of the Daughters of the Republic of Texas, a private corporation, to be maintained by them in good order and repair without charge to the state, and to be remodeled only upon plans adopted by the corporation and approved by the Governor, and that all the property should be subject to future legislation, by the use of the words "care and custody" placed the corporation in the exclusive and absolute control within the conditions prescribed by the act; the "care and custody" of persons or property carrying the idea of exclusive possession. Conley v. Daughters of the Republic of Texas (Tex.) 151 S. W. 877, 880.

CAREFUL

In an action for negligent personal injuries, the use of the word "careful" in the court's charge, wherein he defined negligence to be the failure to use that degree of care which an ordinarily careful and prudent person would exercise, could not have misled the jury; the words "careful" and "prudent" being often used to express the same idea. Southwestern Telegraph & Telephone Co. v. Sanders (Tex.) 188 S. W. 1181, 1184.

CAREFUL MINING

See Skillful and Careful Mining.

CARELESS

See Grossly Careless; Reckless—Recklessly—Recklessness.

The word "careless," as used in a complaint for negligence, does not impute willfulness or intention; it means nothing more than simple negligence. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Baker (Ind. T.) 104 S. W. 1182, 1192 (quoting and adopting definition in Jacquín v. Grand Ave. Cable Co., 57 Mo. App. 320).

"Carelessly" and "negligently" are synonymous terms. Mascott Coal Co. v. Garrett, 47 South. 149, 151, 156 Ala. 290 (citing Words and Phrases, vol. 1, p. 974); Southern Ry. Co. v. Horine, 49 S. E. 285, 121 Ga. 386.

In an instruction as to punitive damages, to the effect that plaintiff claimed that defendant intentionally injured her, that it injured her "carelessly," that it did not care whether she suffered injury or not, and that that was what was meant by willfulness, the use of the word "carelessly" was not fortunate, since "carelessly" is more nearly synonymous with "negligently" and "inadvertently" than with "willfully" or "wantonly"; but, taking the instruction as a whole, its use was not reversible error. Horn v. Southern Ry., 58 S. E. 963, 965, 78 S. C. 67.

Under an allegation in a petition against a railroad company for negligent treatment of plaintiff employé at the company's hospital, stating that the surgeon furnished "carelessly and negligently and unnecessarily" performed a specified operation, the words "carelessly and negligently" are not synonymous with "unnecessarily"; the latter term negating necessity for the operation, while the other terms refer to the manner of performing the operation. Williams v. Union Pac. R. Co. (Wyo.) 124 Pac. 505, 508.

As willful or willfully

See Willful—Willfully.

CARELESS STATEMENT

In Derry v. Peek, 14 App. Cas. 337, Lord Herschell thus explained what is meant by a "statement made recklessly or without care": "To make a statement careless, whether it be true or false, and therefore without any real belief, its truth appears to me to be an essentially different thing from making through want of care a false statement which is nevertheless honestly believed to be true." Donnelly v. Baltimore Trust & Guaranty Co., 61 Atl. 301, 306, 102 Md. 1.

CARELESSNESS

"Carelessness" is a relative term and is a lack of due care. Breeden v. Frankfort

Marine, Accident & Plate Glass Ins. Co., 119 S. W. 576, 586, 220 Mo. 327.

While "carelessness" does not necessarily imply wantonness, wantonness may include negligence, since wantonness exists without an intent to injure. Kramm v. Stockton Electric R. Co., 86 Pac. 903, 904, 3 Cal. App. 616.

"Negligence" implies an omission to do a thing which a person ought to do, while "carelessness" implies heedlessness or inattention. Larkin v. Taylor, 5 Kan. 433, 445.

"Negligence" and "carelessness" are generally esteemed as not only not willfulness but rather the opposite. Schooler v. Arrington, 81 S. W. 468, 469, 106 Mo. App. 607 (following Gibeline v. Smith, 80 S. W. 961, 106 Mo. App. 545).

CARETAKER

"Caretakers" accompanying cattle shipped, who follow the cattle when they have been unloaded in the yards to be fed, watered, and rested, are not to be regarded as mere volunteers or trespassers. While the railroad company, its agents and managers, are charged with the duty of feeding and caring for the cattle while in the yards, the accompanying caretaker has a right to follow and inspect the cattle and see that they are receiving proper care. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Allen, 88 Pac. 906, 967, 75 Kan. 190, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 576.

Where plaintiff, who was shipping a stallion over defendant's road, paid his fare and was permitted to ride in the car with the horse, with the knowledge and acquiescence of defendant's servants in charge of the train, and he was injured there by the unusually violent switching of the car, plaintiff was a passenger in practically the same situation as a "caretaker," and was therefore not bound to alight at the station when the train arrived at destination, but was entitled to be carried to the stockyards where the horse was to be unloaded. Indianapolis Southern R. Co. v. Tucker (Ind.) 98 N. E. 431, 435.

CARING

The word "caring," in an instruction in an action by a parent for injuries to his minor child authorizing a recovery for the services of his wife in nursing and medical attendance made necessary by the injury, is synonymous with "nursing," and means the usual attendance on sick persons, and the use thereof does not render the instruction misleading. Johnson v. St. Paul & W. Coal Co., 111 N. W. 722, 723, 131 Wis. 627.

Nursing synonymous

See Nursing.

CARGO

See Another Cargo.

A caisson lashed to a vessel for transportation to another place may be considered cargo, though not actually on board, and therefore the subject of a salvage claim. Gonzales v. United States, 42 Ct. Cl. 299, 313.

"Cargo" is the lading of a ship or vessel, and may be prize when the vessel is not, or the vessel may be when the cargo is not. United States v. Dewey, 23 Sup. Ct. 415, 420, 188 U. S. 254, 47 L. Ed. 463.

CARGO RUN

Where bananas are taken on board a vessel at various ports and placed according to grades in various compartments, and unloaded in the inverse order of loading, and carried directly to cars, or thrown on the dock if unfit for shipment, and such fruit is sold by the importer, who refuses to select it, to a buyer who agrees to take "regular cargo run," the term "cargo run" does not mean the same as average of the cargo, or imply that the fruit placed in a particular car will be as good as that placed in some other car, and is not significant of quality, condition, or class of fruit, and in such contract has no meaning other than taking the fruit of the grade or class ordered as it comes from the vessel, with such inspection as is given the fruit, generally, at the dock. Fruit Dispatch Co. v. Le Seno, 110 N. W. 526, 528, 147 Mich. 149.

CARNAL ABUSE

See, also, Abuse of Female Child; Carnal Knowledge.

The prosecution will not be required to elect between offenses charged in an indictment alleging that defendant did "carnally know and abuse" prosecutrix, as "carnal knowledge" and "carnal abuse" thus used are synonymous terms. Curtis v. State, 117 S. W. 521, 523, 89 Ark. 394.

"Carnal knowledge" is "carnal abuse," as used in section 115, Crimes Act 1898 (P. L. p. 826), providing that "any person who shall have carnal knowledge of a woman against her will, * * * or who, being of the age of sixteen years or over, shall unlawfully and carnally abuse a woman under the age of sixteen years with or without her consent, shall be guilty of a high misdemeanor." So an indictment thereunder for abuse of a woman child under 16 is not vitiated by adding to the words, "did unlawfully and carnally abuse," the words, "and then and there did unlawfully have carnal knowledge of the body" of the said child. They may be rejected as surplusage. State v. Cannon, 60 Atl. 177, 72 N. J. Law, 46.

"Carnal abuse" or "criminal abuse" is an act of assault or debauchery of the female sexual organs by the genital organs of the male and falls short of knowledge with its accompanying penetration. Under a statute providing that any person having carnal knowledge of a woman forcibly against her will, or who being 16 years old shall car-nally abuse a woman under that age, etc., it is not accurate as a general proposition to say that carnal knowledge is carnal abuse. State v. Hummer, 65 Atl. 249, 251, 73 N. J. Law, 714 (Bishop, Stat. Crimes [2d Ed.] p. 361, § 489).

CARNAL INTERCOURSE

See Habitual Carnal Intercourse.

CARNAL KNOWLEDGE

See Carnal Abuse; Carnaliter Cognovit. As rapuit, see Rapuit.

See, also, Sexual Intercourse.

"Carnal knowledge" means sexual intercourse. Under a statute providing that any person having carnal knowledge of a woman forcibly against her will, or who being 16 years old shall carnally abuse a woman under that age, etc., it is not accurate as a general proposition to say that carnal knowledge is carnal abuse. State v. Hummer, 65 Atl. 249, 251, 73 N. J. Law, 714.

The words "carnal knowledge" mean sexual intercourse, and hence an information charging accused with having carnal knowledge with another was insufficient to charge sodomy, where there were no allegations showing such other was a male. People v. Carroll, 81 Pac. 680, 681, 1 Cal. App. 2.

"Carnal knowledge" includes what is meant by "carnal abuse," if not synonymous therewith, as used in Gen. St. 1902, § 1148, directed against a person who shall carnally know and abuse a female under 16, and to "abuse," within the meaning of that section, is not to injure the genital organs of the female, and to an extent not naturally resulting from an act of normal intercourse with a fully developed female. State v. Sebastian, 69 Atl. 1054, 1057, 81 Conn. 1.

In a prosecution for having had carnal knowledge of a female of previous chaste character it is unnecessary for the court to define "carnal knowledge" in its charge; and, if such definition is necessary, a treatment of it as equivalent to and interchangeable with "sexual intercourse" is sufficient. State v. De Witt, 84 S. W. 956, 957, 186 Mo. 61 (distinguishing State v. Grubb, 41 Pac. 951, 55 Kan. 678; Davis v. State, 43 Tex. 189).

In a prosecution under Gen. St. 1902, § 1148, providing that any person who shall carnally know and abuse any female under 16 years of age shall be punished, etc., the terms "carnal knowledge" and "abuse," in the statute, mean carnal knowledge, and "carnal knowledge" means sexual bodily intercourse, and the term "abuse" should not be construed independently, as requiring proof of injury to the genital organs in addition to intercourse. State v. Ferris, 70 Atl. 587, 81 Conn. 97.

Having "carnal knowledge" is but a euphemism of the expression "commit adultery." United States v. Griego, 72 Pac. 20, 22, 11 N. M. 392 (citing Helfrich v. Commonwealth, 33 Pa. 68, 75 Am. Dec. 579).

Penetration

"Carnal knowledge" is complete, upon proof of an actual penetration, without emission. State v. Williams (Del.) 80 Atl. 1004, 1006; State v. Sigerella (Del.) 82 Atl. 31, 7 Pennewill, 811.

An information for rape, alleging that accused did ravish and carnally know, etc., was sufficient, under Rev. Pen. Code, § 325, defining rape as an act of sexual intercourse, etc.; the words "carnal knowledge" meaning sexual bodily connection between man and woman. State v. La Mont, 120 N. W. 1104, 1105, 23 S. D. 174.

As ravish

See Ravish.

CARNALITER COGNOVIT

To carnally know. An essential allegation in an indictment for rape. Such term, however, is not synonymous with "rapuit," nor does it take the place of an allegation that the connection was against the woman's will. Beard v. State, 97 S. W. 667, 671, 79 Ark. 293, 9 Ann. Cas. 409.

CARPENTER

For county as holding an office, see Officer.

CARPENTER'S WORK

A subcontract for woodwork according to specifications, which, under titles "architectural iron," and "general iron work," called for all cast and wrought iron work, not included under structural steel and architectural iron work, to complete the building according to the drawings, and which, under the title "carpenter's work," required the contractor to furnish all the window frames, the material for which for portions not exposed to the weather should be kiln-dried and free from defects impairing its durability, was ambiguous on the question whether the contractor must furnish iron frames for windows and exterior doors, or need only furnish the woodwork, and evidence of the preliminary negotiations and conduct of the parties after the contract was executed was admissible to define the meaning of the terms employed, for ordinarily "carpenter's work" of itself does not cover the furnishing of iron door frames. Derby Desk Co. v. Connors Bros. Const. Co., 90 N. E. 543, 544, 204 Mass. 461.

"Carrageen," "Irish moss," or "sea moss," is a species of seaweed whose gelatinuous qualities render it valuable as an article of food. It is a marine plant of the genera corallina. It is a seaweed (Chondrus crispus) which grows abundantly along the rocky parts of the Atlantic coasts of Europe and North America. It is collected for commercial purposes on the west and northwest of Ireland and in very large quantities on the coast of Plymouth county, Mass., U. S. It is used for food, medicine, and a thickener for printing calico and for finning beer. "Sea grass" used for making mattresses and upholstering purposes is an entirely different article from sea moss and is not known commercially as sea moss and is not dutiable as such under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 81, 30 Stat. 151, but is entitled to free entry under section 2, Free List, par. 617, 30 Stat. 199, which covers "moss, seaweeds, and vegetable substances, crude or unmanufactured, not otherwise specially provided for." In re F. W. Myers & Co., 123 Fed. 952, 955 (quoting and adopting definition in Worcester's Dict., Imperial Dict., and Ency. Brit.).

CARRIAGE

See Contract of Carriage; Shotgun Carriage.

The phrase "carriages and vehicles used for transportation," in statutes empowering municipalities to license and regulate carriages and vehicles used for the transportation of passengers, is restricted to those of hackmen, public cartmen, and the like, and to permit city authorities to exact a license fee and exercise supervisory jurisdiction over the transportation by private persons of their own property in their own wagons is so unreasonable that no such construction should be given to the statutes unless the intent is perfectly clear. Kellam v. City of Newark, 75 Atl. 548, 550, 79 N. J. Law, 884.

Automobile

Automobiles are not included in Rev. Laws, c. 208, § 55, punishing refusal to pay for use of a "carriage." Commonwealth v. Goldman, 91 N. E. 392, 205 Mass. 400.

An automobile is a carriage within the meaning of a covenant in a deed reserving a strip of land for a carriageway forever. Diocese of Trenton v. Toman, 70 Atl. 606, 610, 611, 74 N. J. Eq. 702.

Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 2395, exempting to the head of a family one carriage, an automobile is a carriage. Parker v. Sweet (Tex.) 127 S. W. 881.

An automobile is not a carriage, within the statute providing that highways shall, unless otherwise provided, be kept in repair at the expense of the city or town in which they are situated, so that they may be reasonably safe and convenient for travelers with their horses, teams, and carriages, since the carriages referred to are those drawn by animal power. Doherty v. Inhabitants of Ayer, 83 N. E. 677, 679, 197 Mass. 241, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 816, 125 Am. St. Rep. 355.

Rev. Laws, c. 81, § 1, provides that highways shall be kept in a reasonably safe condition for travelers with horses, teams, and "carriages." Held, that an "automobile" is a vehicle which can carry passengers or inanimate matter, and so is a "carriage" within the meaning of the statute. Baker v. City of Fall River, 72 N. E. 336, 337, 187 Mass. 53.

Act April 29, 1874, under which defendant turnpike company was organized, provides on page 86, cl. 6, § 30, that it may appoint toll gatherers to collect from every person using the road tolls and rates mentioned for any coach, sulky, chaise, phaeton, wagon, or any other carriage of burden or pleasure, and clause 9 declares that, if any person owning, riding in, or driving any sulky, chaise, or other carriage of burden or pleasure shall pass through the toll gate with intent to defraud the company, they shall be liable to a penalty. Held, that since by Act April 19, 1905 (P. L. 217) § 1, automobiles and motor vehicles are recognized as "carriages of burden or pleasure," the act providing that they shall not be operated on any street or highway until the operator shall have procured a license, defendant turnpike company could not exclude automobiles from passage over its road. Scranton v. Laurel Run Turnpike Co., 73 Atl. 1063, 1064, 225 Pa. 82.

Bicycle

It has been established by judicial decisions that, so far as its use on the highway is concerned, the bicycle is to be regarded as a "carriage or vehicle" and subject to the same burdens as other vehicles. Simpson v. Whatcom, 74 Pac. 577, 578, 83 Wash. 392, 63 L. R. A. 815, 99 Am. St. Rep. 951.

The word "carriage" may be broad enough to include a bicycle within a statute forbidding any person to drive any sort of carriage so as to endanger the life or limb of any passenger, and the person who rides a bicycle may be said to "drive" it. A statute declaring a fine for every person who shall ride or drive faster than a common pace covers a town ordinance imposing a penalty for driving an automobile on the public streets at a greater speed than fifteen miles an hour, so that the ordinance is void. State v. Thurston, 66 Atl. 580, 582, 28 R. I. 265.

The word "carriages," as used in Gen. Laws 1896, c. 72, § 1, imposing on towns the duty of keeping highways in repair, "so that the same may be safe and convenient for travelers with their teams, carts, and carriages," does not include a bicycle; and hence a bicycle rider is not entitled to recover for injuries sustained by reason of a defect in the street, where the defect would not have caused injury to an ordinary traveler.

Service of carrier, see Service.

A bill of lading provided that "no carrier shall be liable for loss or damage not accruing on its portion of the route, nor after said property is ready for delivery to the consignee." Held that, the stipulation being intended to qualify or limit the common-law liability and therefore to be strictly construed against the carrier and in favor of the shipper, the term "carrier" should be taken as referring, not merely to the transportative capacity of the company, but to the contracting entity in its dual capacity of common carrier and warehouseman. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. A. F. Merrill & Co., 45 South. 628, 629, 153 Ala. 277.

In making a contract of carriage, a ticket agent is the "carrier corporation," as is the conductor on the train in carrying the contract out. Cornell v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 128 S. W. 1021, 1023, 143 Mo. App. 598.

See Warehouseman.

CARRIER OF PASSENGERS

See, also, Passengers.

Persons operating elevators are carriers of passengers. Anderson Art Co. v. Greenburg, 118 Ill. App. 220, 224.

A merchant who operates an elevator in his store for the transportation of his customers sustains the relation of carrier to a customer who is directed by him to take the elevator, and is consequently bound to exercise the highest degree of care for the customer's safety while the latter is actually aboard or is entering the elevator. Morgan v. Saks, 38 South. 848, 849, 143 Ala. 139.

The relation of "carrier and passenger" continues until the passenger has left the carrier's premises or has been allowed a reasonable time to leave. Atlantic City R. Co. v. Kiefer, 68 Atl. 980, 982, 75 N. J. Law, 54 (citing Hansley v. Jamesville & W. R. Co., 20 S. E. 528, 115 N. C. 602, 32 L. R. A. 548, 44 Am. St. Rep. 474).

A lumber company operating an engine and flat cars to haul timber and transport its employees to and from their work is not a carrier of passengers, and its employees while being transported are not passengers. Self v. Adel Lumber Co., 64 S. E. 112, 5 Ga. App. 846.

Street car companies are "carriers of passengers," and are held to the same degree of care and vigilance in preventing injuries to their passengers as is required of other railroads carrying passengers for hire. Redmon v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 84 S. W. 26, 28, 185 Mo. 1, 105 Am. St. Rep. 558 (citing Jackson v. Grand Ave. Ry. Co., 24 S. W. 192, 118 Mo. 199; O'Connell v. St. Louis Cable & W. Ry. Co., 17 S. W. 494, 106 Mo. 482; Clark v. Chicago & A. Ry. Co., 29 S. W. 1013, 127 Mo. 197; Lemon v. Chanslor, 68 Mo. 340, 30 Am. Rep. 799); Schloemer v. St. Louis Transit Co., 102 S. W. 565, 568, 204 Mo. 99.

"The relation of 'carrier and passenger' commences when a person with the good-faith intention of taking passage and with the express or implied consent of the carrier, places himself in a situation to avail himself of the facilities for transportation which the carrier offers. In the case of a railroad, this relation arises not merely when the passenger enters the train with a ticket already purchased, giving him a contract right to ride, but when he enters upon the premises of the carrier with intention to take a train in due course." Hence a railroad is liable for injuries to a woman from being forced to stand in the cold for a long time by reason of the obstruction of the entrance to the station, where she was going to take a train, by defendant's train of freight cars. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Daugherty (Ky.) 108 S. W. 336, 337, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 740 (quoting and adopting definition in 6 Cyc. p. 536).

One who conducted a hotel and sanitarium, in connection with which he used an automobile to carry patrons to and from the railroad station, for which a fare was charged, was guilty of "carrying passengers for hire in an automobile" without having obtained a license therefor as prescribed by ordinance for such carriage. Galen Hall Co. v. Atlantic City, 68 Atl. 1002, 76 N. J. Law, 20.

CARRIER'S LIEN

A "carrier's lien" is nothing more than the right to retain the goods until the charge for carriage is paid, "and there is in this respect an analogy between this so-called lien and the right which a seller has who sells goods for cash." Lembeck v. Jarvis Terminal Cold Storage Co., 59 Atl. 360, 362, 68 N. J. Eq. 492.

CARROMS

The word "carroms," as applied to a game to be played with disks, where the object is not to strike the disks together, but to drive a single one into a pocket, or to the boards on which it is played, is used in a popular sense to describe one object hitting and glancing away from another, and is not so descriptive that it may not be used as a trade-mark. Ludington Novelty Co. v. Leonard, 119 Fed. 937, 940.

CARRY

The term "carry," as used in a contract by which one of the parties to a contract for the purchase of a patent right agreed to "carry" the interest of another party who was to have a part interest therein, means "advance" the money to pay his interest. Mann v. Urquhart, 116 S. W. 219, 222, 89 Ark. 239.

CARRY INTO INDIAN TERRITORY

The words "to carry or have carried into," as used in act of Cong. of March 1, 1895 (28 Stat. 697, c. 145, § 8), punishing any person who shall carry or in any manner have carried into the Indian Territory any intoxicating liquors, etc., is synonymous with the word "introduce" in an indictment alleging that accused "did * * * introduce" within the limits of the Indian Territory intoxicating liquors. United States v. Buckles, 97 S. W. 1022, 1024, 6 Ind. T. 319.

CARRY ON

"Carried on," as used in the constitutional requirement that a prosecution shall be carried on in the name and by the authority of the state, means and refers to the prosecution which is by a written complaint. Ex parte Jackson (Tex.) 96 S. W. 924, 925.

CARRY ON BUSINESS

See Continue to Carry On Business; Transacting Business.

Exercising any power as synonymous, see Exercising Any Power.

Exercising corporate franchises synonymous, see Exercising Corporate Franchises.

See, also, Doing Business; Engaged.

The phrase "carry on," when applied to business, means to prosecute; to help forward; to continue. Trozzo v. People, 117 Pac. 150, 154, 51 Colo. 323 (quoting and adopting the definition in Worcester's Dict. as contained in Florsheim Bros. Dry Goods Co. v. Lester, 29 S. W. 34, 60 Ark. 120, 27 L. R. A. 505, 46 Am. St. Rep. 162).

To "carry on" is defined as meaning "to prosecute, to help forward, to continue, as to carry on business;" and also as meaning "to continue, as to carry on a design; to manage or prosecute, as to carry on husbandry or trade." The making in one state of a contract by which one party agrees to complete and deliver in another state certain machinery, and the other party to pay for it, does not constitute a carrying on of business in the state where the contract is made. Cooper Mfg. Co. v. Ferguson, 5 Sup. Ct. 739, 742, 115 U. S. 727, 28 L. Ed. 1137 (citing Worcester's Dict. and Webster's Dict.).

Under a statute providing for the licensing of persons "to carry on the business" of pawnbroking, there may be one or more acts of receiving articles on pawn without engaging in the business, or there may be the occupation of pawnbroking without the completion of an actual contract of pawnbroking. Commonwealth v. Schwartz, 83 N. E. 326, 327, 197 Mass. 107.

Greater New York Charter, Laws 1901, p. 605, c. 466, § 1416, forbids a justice of the Court of Special Sessions to "carry on any business," but he shall devote his whole time and capacity, so far as public interests demand, to the duties of his office. Held, that to "carry on a business" implies such a relation to the business as identifies a person with it, and imposes upon him some duty or responsibility in connection with its management, and the prohibition is not violated by one acting as vice president of a corporation where the incumbent of that office has no specific duties in relation to it, and is not actively engaged in the conduct of the business of the corporation, and is not responsible either to the corporation or its stockholders for the conduct or management of the business, and does not actively interfere in any way in relation to it. In re Deuel, 111 N. Y. Supp. 969, 972, 127 App. Div. 640.

In the English partnership act, defining a partnership as the relation subsisting between persons carrying on a business in common with a view of profit, the words "carrying on a business" imply a relation entirely different from the enforced relation of tenants in common, as the owners of a ship or of a house, who must either let the property lie idle or keep it in some way occupied or used, deriving a return from such occupation or use. Manson v. Williams, 153 Fed. 525, 531, 82 C. C. A. 475.

The conducting of a social club is not the "carrying on of a business," trade, or occupation in the sense of the license statutes of Louisiana. Consequently a social club is not subject to license taxes except in so far as it engages in the sale of intoxicating liquors to its members. State v. New Orleans Chess, Checkers & Whist Club, 40 South. 526, 528, 116 La. 46 (following State v. Boston Club, 12 South. 895, 45 La. Ann. 586, 20 L. R. A. 185).

Since a conviction of a violation of Act April 26, 1909 (Laws 1909, c. 196), punishing one who shall engage or assist in operating or managing any house of prostitution, cannot be had unless it is shown that accused had control of and conducted or assisted in the management and operation of the affairs of the house in some manner, or that he was able to bring about or assist in bringing about prostitution, a charge that if accused in any manner aided or abetted a third person in the management of the house he is guilty is erroneous; the word "management" meaning the act of managing; the manner of treating, directing, carrying on, or using for a purpose; and the word "operate" meaning to put into or to continue in operation or activity; the word "manager" meaning one who has the conduct or direction of anything; and the phrase "to carry on," when applied to business, meaning to prosecute, to help forward, to continue, etc. Trozso v. People, 117 Pac. 150, 154, 51 Colo. 323.

One who was selling strawberries, pineapples, and bananas out of a push cart in a street, but not blocking the highway or making any disturbance but going from place to place disposing of fruit to whoever desired to purchase, acted in violation of an ordinance providing that no persons should in any part of a public street "carry on any trade or business" unless especially authorized. State v. Barbelais, 64 Atl. 881, 882, 101 Me. 512.

Fixed place

The expression "carrying on business," as used in Code, art. 75, § 132, rendering one liable to be sued in a county in which his business is carried on, relates to a fixed occupation, connected with some of the branches of trade, industry, or commerce, or the continuous pursuit of some calling or profession such as is ordinarily engaged in as a means of livelihood, or for the purpose of gain or profit. It does not consist in the mere transaction of one's own private affairs. Nor does the making of a single transaction with another person in the line of a particular business constitute a carrying on of that business. A nonresident of a county owned property there, which he managed and received the rents from, and also collected rent from property which he owned as cotenant with another, receiving a commission from his cotenant for collecting the latter's share. He was not engaged in regular business, within the meaning of the section. State, to Use of Gemundt, v. Shipley, 57 Atl. 12, 13, 98 Md. 657, 1 Ann. Cas. 742.

Foreign corporations

R. I. Gen. Laws 1896, c. 253, as amended by Pub. Laws 1902, c. 980, provides that no foreign corporation shall carry on within the state the business for which it was incorporated or enforce in the courts of the state any contract made herein unless it complies with the following sections. Held, that the "carrying on business" referred to in the first clause was not the same thing as the making of a contract within the state, and a compliance with the statute after the making of a contract, but before the commencement of an action for its breach, was a sufficient compliance authorizing the corporation to maintain an action thereon. Swift & Co. v. Little, 65 Atl. 615, 28 R. I. 108.

That a foreign brewing corporation shipped beer into Montana, and sold the same to defendant, a domestic corporation operating a distributing agency, did not constitute "carrying on business" within the state. Uihlein v. Caplice Commercial Co., 102 Pac. 564, 567, 39 Mont. 327.

To "carry on" means, according to lexicographers, to "promote," "advance," or "help forward" (Webster). Under Act Feb. 18, 1901, 31 Stat. 794, which provides that, "before any foreign corporation shall begin to carry on business in the Indian Territory," it shall file a certificate designating a resident agent on whom process may be served, and also stating its principal place of business in the territory, and that if it fails to comply with such provisions all of its contracts with citizens and residents of the territory shall be void and shall not be enforced in its favor by any of the courts therein, proof that a foreign corporation, having no place of business in the territory, in a single instance completed an executory contract of sale therein by delivery of the property and taking notes and a mortgage for the purchase price through a local bank acting as its agent, is not sufficient to subject it to the penalty for "carrying on business" by rendering its notes and mortgage nonenforceable, though it never filed the statutory certificate. Ammons v. Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co., 141 Fed. 570, 575, 72 C. O. A. 614.

Single transaction

Isolated transactions do not constitute carrying on business by a foreign corporation. Hunter W. Finch & Co. v. Zenith Furnace Co., 92 N. E. 521, 523, 245 Ill. 586.

Ordinarily it takes more than a single transaction to constitute "carrying on business." Williams v. City of Tifton, 60 S. E. 113, 114, 3 Ga. App. 445 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 979; 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2155).

The doing by a foreign corporation of a single act of business in the Indian Territory, without appointing a resident agent on whom summons may be served, is not a violation of an act of Congress providing that, before any foreign corporation shall begin to carry on business in the Indian Territory, it shall designate an agent on whom summons or other process may be served, etc. Ammons v. Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co., 82 S. W. 937, 940, 5 Ind. T. 636.

CARRYING ARMS OR WEAPONS

"Coming into possession of a pistol while at a public gathering is not carrying a pistol to a public gathering." A conviction cannot be had under an accusation charging accused with carrying a pistol about his person to a place of public worship, the same being a designated church where a congregation was then assembled for public worship, on proof that accused came into possession of the pistol at a spring from which the congregation was using water, and which was so near the church as to be in legal contemplation a church. Culberson v. State, 47 S. E. 175, 176, 119 Ga. 805 (quoting Modesette v. State, 41 S. E. 992, 115 Ga. 582).

On a trial for unlawfully carrying a pistol, where the evidence merely showed that two witnesses saw accused put a pistol in a pan, and did not see where he got it but only saw it while it was in his hand, it was error to give the general charge against accused since "carry" in Acts 1909, p. 258, § 2, is synonymous with "bear," and it was for the jury to say whether accused carried the pistol in the sense of bearing arms. Nichols v. State, 58 South. 681, 682, 4 Ala. App. 115.

Defendant was guilty of "carrying a pistol," where he got out of the vehicle he was driving and at the point of a pistol, theretofore kept under the seat of the vehicle, forced another party to desist from a difficulty with the latter's wife. Hill v. State, 100 S. W. 384, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 619.

One placing a pistol on some cotton in a wagon driven by him, about halfway between the seat and the rear end of the wagon, is not guilty of "carrying the pistol on and about his person." Thompson v. State, 86 S. W. 1083, 1084, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 146.

CARRYING CONCEALED WEAPONS

See, also, Concealed Weapons; Unlawfully Carrying.

Shannon's Code, § 6641, providing that "it shall not be lawful for any person to carry publicly or privately any dirk, razor, concealed about his person, sword cane, * * * or any kind of pistol except the army or navy pistol, usually carried in warfare, which shall be carried openly in the hand," is violated by a hack driver carrying a pistol under the driver's seat of his hack, for the law may be violated just as fully and completely by the carrying of a weapon in a handbag as in a pocket, for it is the carrying with the purpose of going armed that is the offense and not the concealment about the person, with the single exception of the razor, which must be concealed about the person in order to constitute a violation of the statute. It is the practice of going armed that is proposed to be prohibited by the act. Kendall v. State, 101 S. W. 189, 118 Tenn. 156, 121 Am. St. Rep. 994, 11 Ann. Cas. 1104.

Though under Rev. St. 1899, § 1863, declaring it a good defense to the charge of carrying a concealed deadly weapon, if defendant show that his life had been threatened, or that he had good reason to carry it in the necessary defense of his person, home, or property, it is necessary, to justify the carrying of a concealed weapon by one whose life has been threatened, that he believed there was danger of the threat being executed, yet he has not the burden of showing that he had good reason to believe and did believe that the carrying of the weapon was necessary to his defense, further than to show that his life was threatened, and that he consequently armed himself with the weapon to defend himself against the danger of such threat. One is not guilty of "carrying a concealed weapon" in contravention of Rev. St. 1899, § 1263, where he is carrying a pistol because the mainspring was broken and he could not find a machinist with whom to leave it for repairs. State v. Casto, 95 S. W. 961, 963, 119 Mo. App. 265 (citing State v. Venable, 93 S. W. 356, 117 Mo. App. 501; Wharton's Crim. Ev. § 322).

CARTED

It is not usual to speak of goods delivered upon and carried by a dray, as "shipped"; the usual expression being "carted or hauled." And hence a quotation of prices on goods to be shipped from a factory was ambiguous as to whether they were sold f. o. b. cars. Crystal Case Co. v. Arnett, 85 Pac. 302, 303, 73 Kan. 774.

CARTING

A decree in partition in 1817, when steam railroads were unknown, giving each tenant the right of "carting" timber across the other's land, does not authorize a present owner of a tract of the land to construct a steam railroad over an adjoining tract, especially since the privilege was not incorporated in conveyances subsequent to the decree and which the parties claimed. Roper Lumber Co. v. Richmond Cedar Works, 73 S. E. 902, 904, 158 N. C. 161.

CARTON

"By 'cartons' * * * we understand those encasements which are not usually of permanent value, and such as are ordinarily used for the convenient transportation of their contents." United States v. Nicholls, 22 Sup. Ct. 918, 919, 186 U. S. 300, 46 L. Ed. 1173.

CARTWAY

Cartways are quasi public roads in which the public has a direct personal interest. Barber v. Griffin, 74 S. E. 110, 111, 158 N. C. 348.

A private railroad extending from a station on a railway company's line to the owner of standing timber, constructed and exclusively operated by the owner of the timber for the transportation thereof, is not a cartway, within Code, §§ 2056, 2057, authorizing the laying out of cartways by persons settled on or cultivating any land, which cartways shall be open for the free passage of all persons. Cozard v. Kanawha Hardwood Co., 51 S. E. 932, 933, 139 N. C. 283, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 969, 111 Am. St. Rep. 779.

CASE

"By * * * 'cases' * * * we understand those encasements which are not usually of permanent value, and such as are ordinarily used for the convenient transportation of their contents." United States v. Nicholls, 22 Sup. Ct. 918, 919, 186 U. S. 300, 46 L. Ed. 1173.

Customs Administrative Act June 10, 1890, c. 407, § 19, 26 Stat. 139, providing that the value of "cases" and similar coverings shall be added to the dutiable value of their contents, includes tin cans and stoneware receptacles. Austin, Nichols & Co. v. United States, 171 Fed. 79, 96 C. C. A. 183.

Kirby's Dig. § 3490, allowing the clerk of the circuit court 10 cents "for indexing each case, each item," does not refer to indexing orders of court relating to commissioners of accounts, petit jurors, and grand jurors; their entry and indexing being a part of the burden of the office. Hempstead County v. Harkness, 84 S. W. 799, 73 Ark. 600 (citing Kirby's Dig. § 3490, distinguishing Trimble v. Railway Co., 19 S. W. 839, 56 Ark. 249; Logan County v. Trimm, 22 S. W. 164, 57 Ark. 487).

The word "case," as used in the second section of the third article of the Constitution of the United States, is a subject on which the judicial power is capable of acting and which has been submitted to it by a party in the forms required by law. Lake v. Lake, 30 Pac. 878, 880, 17 Nev. 230 (adopting definition in Osborn v. Bank of United States, 22 U. S. [9 Wheat.] 738, 6 L. Ed. 204).

An affidavit of merits on a motion for change of venue read, "Deponent has fully and fairly stated his defense to said 'action' and all the facts relative 'thereto' to his counsel." Held, that the word "thereto" refers to "action," and that "action" is synonymous to "case"; hence the clause should be construed to read "and all the facts relative to the 'action,' i. e., 'case.'" Larocque v. Conhaim, 92 N. Y. Supp. 99, 101, 45 Misc. Rep. 234 (citing Bouv. Law Dict. and Black's Law Dict., sub verba "Case").

The word "cases," in Code Civ. Proc. § 615, requiring the court to change the place of trial "in the following cases, etc.," means contingencies, chances, conditions, or state of circumstances; in other words, whenever any of the grounds enumerated in that section is made to appear. State ex rel. Carleton v. District Court of Lewis and Clarke County, 82 Pac. 789, 790, 33 Mont. 138, 8 Ann. Cas. 752.

Code Civ. Proc. § 3251, subd. 3, provides that "upon a motion for a new trial, upon a case," the same sum shall be allowed as costs "as upon appeal as prescribed in subdivision 4 of this section." Subdivision 4, before its amendment, provided that either party, upon an appeal to the Supreme Court from an inferior court, should be entitled to a taxation of $20 before argument and $40 for argument. Subdivision 4 was amended by Laws 1902, c. 515, by inserting, after the words "an inferior court," the words "excepting upon appeal to the Supreme Court from the City Court of the City of New York." Held, that a motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence was one upon a "case," and where such motion was made in respect to a judgment of the City Court of the City of New York the prevailing party on the motion was entitled to $20 before argument and $40 for argument; but such allowances should not be made as upon appeal, as by such subdivision 4 the costs in such a case on appeal are limited to $10. Brennan v. Joline, 127 N. Y. Supp. 676, 678, 70 Misc. Rep. 537.

As action, cause, or suit

The primary meaning of "case" is "cause," when applied to legal proceedings. It imports a state of facts which furnishes occasion for the exercise of the jurisdiction of a court of justice. In its generic sense, the word includes all causes, special or otherwise. A "case" is a contested question before a court of justice; a suit or action; a "cause"; a state of facts involving a question for discussion or decision, especially a "cause" or suit in court. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 1674, giving the circuit court appellate jurisdiction from judgments of the county courts in all cases not expressly prohibited by law, and section 1788 providing that appeals from the county court shall be prosecuted in the same manner as is provided for the regulation of appeals from justices of the peace to circuit courts, and shall be de-terminated anew without regarding any error or informality in proceedings of the county court, an appeal lies from the county to the circuit court only in judicial cases involving life, liberty, and property, and not in a "case" wherein the county court acts in an administrative and ministerial capacity, as in revoking a liquor license for the causes and in the manner prescribed by Rev. St. 1899, § 3012, in which no right of life, liberty, or property is involved. Barnett v. Pemiscott County Court, 86 S. W. 575, 576, 111 Mo. App. 693 (quoting and adopting the definition in Black's Law Dict., and citing Robertson v. Baldwin, 17 Sup. Ct. 828, 165 U. S. 275, 41 L. Ed. 715; Calderwood v. Peyser, 42 Cal. 115; Home Ins. Co. v. North Western Packet Co., 32 Iowa, 223, 7 Am. Rep. 183; Ex parte Towles, 48 Tex. 483; Kundolf v. Thalheimer, 12 N. Y. 596).

"The primary meaning of the word 'case,' according to lexicographers, is 'cause.' When applied to legal proceedings it imports a state of facts which furnishes occasion for the exercise of the jurisdiction of a court of justice." Gibson v. Sidney, 69 N. W. 314, 315, 50 Neb. 12.

The word "cases," in Rev. St. 1857, c. 82, § 83, excluding the operation of section 78, making parties and other persons interested in suits competent as witnesses in "cases" prosecuted or defended by executors or administrators, is not synonymous with the word "suits," in section 78, but is restricted in its signification to the particular question of the competency of any witness offered. Gunnison v. Lane, 45 Me. 165, 166.

Rev. St. c. 79, § 46, provides that questions of law arising on reports of cases may come before the Supreme Judicial Court as a court of law. Held, that the word "case" is used in its unrestricted sense, as a contested question before a court or justice, a suit or action, a cause, and the phrase "reports of cases" contemplates a method of submitting questions involving both law and fact, in the most comprehensive manner, to the decision of the court so that a report of a case under the statute must submit the whole controversy for final decision unless some question is reserved, and hence, upon a report without restriction, the law court may pass upon the question of costs in a probate case (quoting Words and Phrases, vol. 1, p. 985). Mather v. Cunningham, 78 Atl. 102, 103, 107 Me. 242.

In ordinary phraseology the word "case" means event, happening, incidents, condition, and the like, but in a legal sense it means "cause, suits, action, or a contested question before a court of justice." Const. art. 14, § 1, provides that all county officers shall be paid salaries to be fixed by the Legislature. Section 2 provides for fees to be collected by the sheriff and an accounting therefor, and that, in addition to the salary of the sheriff, he shall be entitled to receive from the party for whom the services are rendered in "civil cases" such fees as may be prescribed by law. By section 3, the salaries of county officers are to be fixed by law within stated maximum limits. Rev. St. 1899, § 1112, fixed the salaries of sheriffs, and by section 1113 declared that the sheriff in addition to his salary might receive from the party for whom the service is rendered in civil cases certain stated fees. By section 1232, county officers receiving money for any county were required to pay the same into the county treasury. Laws 1901, c. 79, § 1, provided for an inspection of horses about to be transported or driven out of the state. Section 3 made the sheriff of each county an inspector, and required that he keep a record of inspections and file certain reports. Section 8 provided for a fee of 15 cents per head on all horses inspected, in full compensation for all inspection. Held, in an action by a sheriff to recover inspection fees paid into the county treasury pending a judicial determination, that the word "case" was to be construed as synonymous with "cause," "suit," "action," a "contested question" before a court of justice; that the term "civil cases," as used in the Constitution, was in contradistinction to criminal cases, and was to be broadly construed as inclusive of all cases not criminal, and that it was used as meaning a legal proceeding of some nature for the protection of a private right or the redress of a private wrong; and that the services of the sheriff as inspector were not rendered in civil cases, and hence that he was not entitled to the fees collected. Messenger v. Board of Com'rs of Converse County, 117 Pac. 126, 130, 19 Wyo. 309 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.; Calderwood v. Peyser, 42 Cal. 115; United States v. Dolla, 177 Fed. 101, 100 C. C. A. 521, 21 Ann. Cas. 665; In re Account of District Attorney, 28 Fed. 26; United States v. Volz, 28 Fed. Cas. 384; Dickey v. Smith, 26 S. E. 373, 42 W. Va. 803; Kundolf v. Thalheimer, 12 N. Y. 593; Gold v. Vermont Cent. R. Co., 19 Vt. 478; Crum v. Johnson, 3 Neb. [Unof.] 826, 92 N. W. 1054).

The term "case," within the provisions of the federal Constitution, extending the judicial powers to all cases in law and equity arising under the Constitution, laws, and treaties, etc., means a suit instituted according to the regular course of judicial procedure. Congress could not, as was attempted by the act of March 1, 1907 (34 Stat. 1015, c. 2285), confer jurisdiction upon the court of claims, and by appeal, upon the federal Supreme Court of suits against the United States, to be brought by certain named Cherokee Indians, for themselves and others similarly situated, to determine the validity of acts of Congress passed since the act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat. 716, c. 1375), so far as such acts purport to increase or extend the restrictions upon alienation, incumbrance, or the right to lease the allotments of lands of Cherokee citizens, or to increase the number of persons entitled to share in the final distribution of the Cherokee lands and funds, since this is nothing more than an attempt to provide for a final judicial determination in the Supreme Court of the constitutional validity of congressional legislation, without a "case" or "controversy" to which, under the federal Constitution, the judicial power alone extends. Muskrat v. United States, 31 Sup. Ct. 250, 253, 219 U. S. 346, 55 L. Ed. 246 (quoting and adopting definition in Marbury v. Madison, 5 U. S. [1 Cranch] 137, 2 L. Ed. 60).

All proceedings in action included

The clause "on any issue in the case" as used in Rev. St. 1899, § 1549, providing that "if a verdict shall be found on any issue in the case for plaintiff, costs shall be given at the discretion of the court," is very comprehensive, and the term "case" includes all the issues presented by the parties for judicial inquiry and determination and embraces issues tendered by defendant's counterclaim as well as those tendered by the petition. Ozias v. Haley, 125 S. W. 556, 557, 141 Mo. App. 637.

A commission from the department of justice to an attorney, appointing him a special assistant to a district attorney, is not to be construed with technical nicety; and such a commission, appointing an attorney as special assistant to a district attorney to assist in the preparation and trial of "cases" in the United States against the officers of an insolvent national bank, against some of whom indictments had previously been returned, is to be construed as having been given under Rev. St. § 363, and to authorize the person so commissioned to assist in the performance of any duties of the district attorney, including appearance before the grand jury to present evidence for new indictments. United States v. Twining, 132 Fed. 129, 132.

As employed in Code of Criminal Procedure, art. 494, requiring that the court shall give a written charge distinctly setting forth the "law applicable to the case," means the law applicable to the case as made by the parties; that is, the law applicable to the pleadings and the evidence. Lister v. State, 3 Tex. App. 17, 25.

As cause of action

The word "case," when considered alone, means the facts or state of facts which constitute the rights of the individual or his cause of action, which the "proceeding," "action," or "suit" protects or enforces. State ex rel. Kochtitzky v. Riley, 101 S. W. 567, 569, 203 Mo. 175, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 900.

Controversy or question distinguished

By "cases" and "controversies," as used in the Constitution limiting the judicial power, was intended the claims of litigants brought before the courts for determination by such regular proceedings as are established by law or custom for the protection or enforcement of rights or the prevention, repression, or punishment of wrongs. Whenever the claim of a party under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States takes such form that the judicial power is capable of acting upon it, then it has become a "case." The term implies the existence of present or possible adverse parties whose contentions are submitted to the court for adjudication. "Controversies," if distinguishable at all from "cases," is so in that it is less comprehensive and includes only suits of a civil nature. Muskrat v. United States, 31 Sup. Ct. 250, 254, 219 U. S. 346, 55 L. Ed. 246 (quoting and adopting definition by Chief Justice Marshall in Marbury v. Madison, 5 U. S. [1 Cranch] 137, 2 L. Ed. 60).

Election contests

The statute providing that circuit courts shall have appellate jurisdiction from the judgments and orders of county courts in all "cases" not expressly prohibited by law allows appeals in all "cases"; that is, in all suits where there are parties and a subject-matter between them, or where there is a contested question before a court of justice, a suit or action, a cause. An ex parte proceeding to hold an election under the local option law, in which there is no contest, and in which persons seeking an appeal from an order for holding such election are not parties, and in which they have no more interest than the general public, is not a "case" within the meaning of the statute. Haynes v. Cass County Court, 115 S. W. 1034, 1085, 135 Mo. App. 108 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, p. 993).

As pending suit

The term "cases," when used in connection with the courts, refers only to matters pending before them. (Concurring opinion by McCarty, J.). Gibbs v. Gibbs, 73 Pac. 641, 646, 26 Utah, 382.

"The word 'case' usually conveys the idea of a controversy or issue already before the court and not a preliminary proceeding before a magistrate, commissioner, or grand jury." United States v. Rosenthal, 121 Fed. 862, 866.

Special proceedings

An application for a family allowance for infant beneficiaries of an estate is a "proceeding" and a "case," within Code Civ. Proc. § 372, providing that a guardian ad litem may be appointed in any case, etc. In re Snowball's Estate, 104 Pac. 446, 447, 156 Cal. 235.

Rev. St. 1909, § 4063, which disqualifies a judge of probate to sit in a case in which he is interested, etc., applies to an insanity inquiry; the term "case" in the statute including any matter pending before him which is the subject of judicial investigation. State ex rel. Morris v. Montgomery, 142 S. W. 474, 475, 160 Mo. App. 724.

The words "the case," as used in Customs Administrative Act June 10, 1890, c. 407, 26 Stat. 187, requiring the board of general appraisers to "examine and try the case" submitted to it by a collector of customs, literally require the board, first of all, to determine its own jurisdiction, so far, at least, as to ascertain whether there is a protest, or whether the protest is apparently valid. This involves the question whether it was made in time, because, if not made in time, it is not a protest. United States v. Brown, Durrell & Co., 127 Fed. 793, 797, 62 C. C. A. 473.

A proceeding for naturalization under Act June 29, 1906, c. 3592, 3 Stat. 596, is not a "case" within the meaning of Act March 3, 1891, c. 517, § 6, 26 Stat. 828, which provides that Circuit Courts of Appeals "shall exercise appellate jurisdiction to review by appeal or by writ of error final decision in the District Court and the existing Circuit Courts in all cases other than those provided for in the preceding section of this act, unless otherwise provided by law," and there being no provision for direct review in the naturalization act a Circuit Court of Appeals is without jurisdiction to review the decision of a District or Circuit Court in such a proceeding. Moreover, the admission of an alien to citizenship is a political, and not a judicial, act, and, having been vested by Congress in the courts to be exercised on proof "to the satisfaction of the court," its exercise is discretionary, and not reviewable. United States v. Dolla, 177 Fed. 101, 103, 100 C. C. A. 521, 21 Ann. Cas. 665.

CASE (Action On)

An action setting forth an injury resulting from an action which was not caused by direct force, but which was consequential, or an injury resulting indirectly from the act complained of, was an "action on the case." Welch v. Seattle & M. R. Co., 105 Pac. 166, 167, 56 Wash. 97, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1047.

The distinction between "assumpsit" and "case" is that the one is a breach of a contract, and the other a breach of a duty growing out of a contract express or implied. Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Norris, 52 South. 891, 892, 167 Ala. 311.

CASE (On Appeal)

The "case on appeal" is part of the transcript on appeal and is a narrative of such matters which took place at the trial as are pertinent to the exceptions taken. It is no part of the record proper. State v. Matthews, 55 S. E. 342, 343, 142 N. C. 621.

In Smith v. Grant, 15 N. Y. 590, it is said that a case is now in substance very nearly, if not identically, what a bill of exceptions always was in legal practice, except as to the formal statement of facts which is now required to be inserted. In Bissel v. Hamlin, 20 N. Y. 519, it is said the office of a case is simply to present the questions which are to be examined in the appellate court. It should present those questions with legal and logical precision. Griggs v. Day, 45 N. Y. Supp. 309, 319.

CASE ARISING UNDER LAWS OF UNITED STATES

"A suit against an officer of the United States for acts done in the performance of official duties is a 'case arising under the laws of the United States.'" Bryant Bros. Co. v. Robinson, 149 Fed. 321, 323, 79 C. C. A. 259 (quoting and adopting definition in Bachrack v. Norton, 10 Sup. Ct. 106, 132 U. S. 337, 33 L. Ed. 377; Sonnentheil v. Christian Moerlein Brew. Co., 19 Sup. Ct. 233, 172 U. S. 401, 43 L. Ed. 492).

Where the United States marshal in his official capacity levied on real estate under an execution issued out of the federal court, an injunction issued by a state court restraining the marshal from proceeding further under the writ was removable to the United States Circuit Court as a "case arising under the laws of the United States," though the marshal was joined as a defendant with one over whom jurisdiction was dependent on other considerations, it being immaterial that there was no diversity of citizenship. Frank v. Leopold & Feron Co., 169 Fed. 922, 923.

CASE AT LAW

A petition for letters of administration is not a "case at law," as that term is understood and construed by the courts. Under Const. art. 6, § 6, declaring that the right of trial by jury shall extend to all cases at law, petitioners for letters of administration had no constitutional right to a jury trial. In re McClellan's Estate, 107 N. W. 681, 685, 20 S. D. 498.

CASE AT LAW AND EQUITY

Proceedings in probate and guardianship matters are not "cases" at law and equity under Const. art. 5, § 20. Idaho Trust Co. v. Miller, 102 Pac. 360, 361, 16 Idaho, 308.

The writ of quo warranto was a common-law remedy included in Rev. St. 1887, §§ 4612-4619, which provided for quo warranto to inquire into the authority by which a person holds or exercises an office, and those provisions of the statute are still in force, and the jurisdiction to be exercised under these provisions falls within the category of "cases both at law and equity," as used in Const. art. 5, § 20, relating to the jurisdiction of district courts. Toncray v. Budge, 95 Pac. 26, 30, 14 Idaho, 621.

A "case in law" or equity consists of the right of one party, as well as of the other, and may be said to arise under the Constitution or a law of the United States whenever its correct decision depends on the construction of either. Macon Grocery Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 30 Sup. Ct. 184, 186, 215 U. S. 501, 506, 507, 54 L. Ed. 800 (quoting and adopting the language of Chief Justice Marshall in Cohens v. Virginia, 19 U. S. [6 Wheat.] 264, 379, 5 L. Ed. 257, 285, as quoted in Patton v. Brady, 22 Sup. Ct. 493, 184 U. S. 608, 46 L. Ed. 713).

CASE IN WHICH STATE IS A PARTY

The phrase "in which a state shall be party," used in Const. art. 3, § 2, providing that the Supreme Court shall have jurisdiction in all such cases, does not embrace original suits of a civil nature brought by the state to enforce a judgment rendered for violation in its penal or criminal laws. State of Oklahoma v. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co., 31 Sup. Ct. 437, 440, 220 U. S. 290, 55 L. Ed. 469, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 524.

CASE-MADE

"A 'case-made' is not a part of the record of the cause, and the certificate of a trial judge that a 'case-made' is correct as such has no force beyond the function assigned to it by the statute. It cannot take rank with the sworn evidence of the official stenographer whose duty it is to take and reproduce the testimony." Girard Life Insurance, Annuity & Trust Co. v. Loving, 81 Pac. 200, 201, 71 Kan. 558.

A "case-made" on a writ of error should contain nothing but that which is necessary to enable the appellate court to pass on the question involved; and where, at the conclusion of a trial before the court without a jury, the court orally reviews the evidence and expresses his opinion on the law and the facts, and there are no special findings of fact and conclusions of law asked for, and the findings and judgment of the court are embodied in a journal entry, the oral opinion of the court cannot be considered as a part of the case-made. Guss v. Nelson, 78 Pac. 170, 172, 14 Okl. 296.

A "case-made," otherwise called a "case settled," or a "case agreed upon," or, more frequently, a "case," is a statutory method of preparing a "record" for appellate review. It is a written statement of the facts in a case, agreed to by the parties, and duly authenticated by the judge who tried the case, and submitted to an appellate court for the purpose of obtaining a review of the alleged errors of law occurring in the proceedings of the court below, as shown in the record thus presented. Thompson v. Fulton, 119 Pac. 244, 245, 29 Okl. 700.

CASES OF FELONY

Under Kirby's Dig. § 2469, providing that fees in criminal cases shall be paid by defendant, but, if sufficient property cannot be found, they shall be paid by the county, "except in such cases of misdemeanor," where the county is not to be liable, and section 2470, providing that in cases of felony, where defendant shall be convicted and shall not have property to pay the costs, the same shall be paid by the county, one who is indicted for a felony, and who is convicted of a misdemeanor included therein, and who has no property to pay the costs, cannot be imprisoned or hired out to pay such costs, but the county must pay them; the words "cases of felony" in section 2470 referring to cases where the indictment and trial is for a felony, including a misdemeanor of the same generic class as the felony. Smith v. State (Ark.) 150 S. W. 149, 150.

CASES OF MISDEMEANOR

Under Kirby's Dig. § 2469, providing that fees in criminal cases shall be paid by defendant, but, if sufficient property cannot be found, they shall be paid by the county, "except in such cases of misdemeanor," where the county is not to be liable, and section 2470, providing that in cases of felony, where defendant shall be convicted and shall not have property to pay the costs, the same shall be paid by the county, one who is indicted for a felony, and who is convicted of a misdemeanor included therein, and who has no property to pay the costs, cannot be imprisoned or hired out to pay such costs, but the county must pay them; the term "cases of misdemeanor" in section 2469 meaning cases where parties are charged solely with a misdemeanor and tried and convicted. Smith v. State (Ark.) 150 S. W. 149, 150.

CASEIN INDUSTRIELLE

So-called casein industrielle, which is produced by drying the substance left after drawing off the whey from skimmed milk that has been allowed to sour, held to be "lactarene," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 594, 30 Stat. 199. B. P. Ducas Co. v. United States, 143 Fed. 362, 363.

CASH

"Cash" will not be construed to include real estate, in the absence of a clear intent to use it for that purpose. Watson v. Martin, 77 Atl. 450, 228 Pa. 248, 20 Ann. Cas. 1288.

"Cash" ordinarily means money which the owner has on hand or subject to his right of immediate possession, and a certificate of deposit, the sum to remain on deposit for a time stated, is not ordinarily treated as "cash on hand or in bank." Offutt v. Troll, 139 S. W. 487, 488, 159 Mo. App. 90.

CASH BASIS

In a contract for the sale of cotton, stating the terms as "'cash basis,' note at sixty days from date of shipment of each one hundred bales, interest added," the words, used as they stand by themselves, may be understood to mean that the parties have provided for alternative methods of payment, either of which will be accepted as equivalent to the other, but it is not beyond doubt whether such is the intended meaning. The term "cash basis" is sufficiently ambiguous to be susceptible of another meaning, and, if it has acquired a general settled and commonly understood meaning which the parties must be presumed to have used, it was error to reject evidence of such trade meaning. Morris v. Supplee, 57 Atl. 566, 567, 208 Pa. 253.

CASH DIVIDEND

A dividend on the capital stock of a corporation payable in stock of another corporation which the first corporation had purchased out of earnings and held as an asset and distributed so that it passed from its control and ownership, has all the characteristics of a "cash dividend," defining that term to include all distributions of surplus assets, whether in the form of cash or property taken from the body of the assets to become the property of the shareholder. Union & New Haven Trust Co. v. Taintor, 83 Atl. 697, 699, 85 Conn. 452.

"Cash dividends" within the rule entitling life beneficiaries under testamentary trusts thereto when the trust funds are invested in stocks include all distributions of the surplus assets of a corporation, whether cash or property, made to shareholders pro rata through dividend declarations in such manner that the assets so distributed are separated from the body of the corporate assets to become the shareholders' property. Bishop v. Bishop, 71 Atl. 583, 590, 81 Conn. 509.

CASH ITEM

See Proper Cash Item.

CASH MARKET VALUE

In the absence of a qualification, a sale on the market being presumed to be for cash, the terms "market value" and "cash market value" are deemed equivalent. Hetland v. Bilstad, 118 N. W. 422, 423, 140 Iowa, 411.

In condemnation proceedings, the only way to arrive at the cash market value of the land sought to be condemned is to estimate the specific identical land taken, by placing a value upon it; and this can only be done by a statement of facts, and by opinions and estimates of parties acquainted with the land. Upon such facts, opinions, and estimates of the land must the valuation be based. Wray v. Knoxville, L. F. & J. R. Co., 82 S. W. 471, 473, 113 Tenn. 544.

CASH ON HAND

A bond insuring a fraternal order against the dishonesty of its treasurer required insured's auditing committee once quarterly to make a full and complete examination of the treasurer's books and accounts, and verify the bank balance by comparison of the cash on hand with the check book and bank book. It also required all moneys coming into his custody to be deposited immediately on the next succeeding business day in a bank. It further required insured to give notice of anything of which it had knowledge likely to cause a claim on or loss to the insurer or of any dishonest act or default. Held, that the "cash on hand" which the auditing committee was required to verify was the cash on deposit in the bank as shown by the books of the bank, and, where the committee merely examined the treasurer's bank book and check book without making any inquiry at the bank and thus failed to discover a defalcation, the insurer was not liable. Atlantic City Aerie No. 64, Fraternal Order of Eagles, v. International Fidelity Ins. Co., 85 Atl. 325, 328, 88 N. J. Law, 583.

CASH PAYMENT

In the provision of a corporate charter that stock "may be paid for in cash or in monthly installments," the word "cash" is not used to designate the medium of payment, but as the opposite of credit, and does not prevent payment for corporate stock by the transfer of property to, or the performance of services for, the corporation. Lee v. Cutrer, 51 South. 808, 809, 96 Miss. 355, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 315, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 478 (citing 1 Words and Phrases, pp. 996, 997; 6 Cyc. 700).

Ten per cent. of the capital stock of a railroad company was deposited with a bank to the credit of the company, subject to be drawn out only on checks signed by the officers of the company. The bank in which the deposit was made was interested in the company but was absolutely responsible. The money was paid in in good faith within Railroad Laws (Laws 1890, c. 565, § 2, as amended by Laws 1892, c. 672), requiring payment in good faith in cash of at least 10 per cent. of the minimum amount of the capital stock as a condition precedent to a valid corporation. In re Wood, 91 N. Y. Supp. 225, 228, 99 App. Div. 334.

Where a village obligation provides for payment in cash, payment in the legal warrant of the village is sufficient. Hart v. Village of Wyndmere, 131 N. W. 271, 278, 21 N. D. 333.

The statement required in the affidavit accompanying the certificate, by the filing of which a limited partnership is created, that the sum specified in the certificate has been "actually and in good faith paid in in cash" is held to have been substantially true when it appears that the amount was contributed by a delivery for that purpose by the special partner to the general partner of a certified check, and even by the delivery of an uncertified check when it appears that his account in the bank upon which it was drawn was good for the amount, and that the check was paid upon presentation immediately after the formation of the partnership. On the other hand, it is held that the statement was not substantially true when it appears that the contribution was in the form of goods or credits, or anything else which is not in substance and effect a cash payment. The requirement of the statement in the affidavit that the amount of the special capital has been "actually and in good faith paid in" is designed to inform prospective creditors not only that the capital has been actually paid in cash but also that it has not been paid collusively, and that there is no secret or illicit arrangement between the general partners and the special partners whereby it is in effect a fictitious payment, or one which will not practically inure to the use of the partnership. If the amount has been paid in cash, so that it becomes a part of the capital, for use as capital may ordinarily be used by a partnership, the requirement is satisfied. Webster v. Lanum, 137 Fed. 376, 379, 70 C. C. A. 56.

Plaintiff's decedent, defendant, and another were sole shareholders in a trust carrying on a wholesale liquor business under a firm name. At the expiration of the trust they continued the same and, in the agreement, authorized plaintiff's decedent to issue to himself 1,000 additional shares on paying into the trust $100 in cash for each share so issued. At the date of such continuing agreement, decedent had to his credit in the trust $67,978.27, defendant had $8,082.27, and the other trustee had $10,000, which last-named credits were transferred to decedent, the transferees being indebted to him, and were by him transferred to the trust, together with $13,988.46 borrowed from a bank on his individual note. Such transferred credits and a check on the bank from which he had borrowed amounted to $100,000, which he owed for the stock which he had transferred to himself. Held, the transferred credits and check were a payment in cash and fulfilled the terms of the agreement under which decedent transferred the stock to himself. The payment by check was a "payment in cash," notwithstanding the fact that the note given the bank on which the check was drawn was afterwards paid by the trust out of credits standing in favor of plaintiff's decedent. A payment of a stock subscription in a trust, out of credits due from the trust, is a "payment in cash," though the credits result from a running account, and include unascertained profits. Breck v. Barney, 66 N. E. 643, 645, 183 Mass. 183.

A contract for the sale of standing timber requiring payment in cash "or vendor's option of equivalent value" means only that payment is to be in cash unless vendor chose to accept something of equivalent value if offered him, and did not render the contract uncertain as to the price, as giving the vendor the right to demand something other than money in satisfaction. Lee Lumber Co. v. Hotard, 48 South. 286, 288, 122 La. 850, 129 Am. St. Rep. 368.

CASH SALE

A "cash sale" is a sale conditioned on payment concurrent with delivery and not a sale on credit. Berlinsky v. Rosenthal, 71 Atl. 69, 70, 104 Me. 62.

In order to constitute a cash sale, it must be understood between the parties that the sale is for cash, and this agreement may either be expressed or implied from the circumstances of the transaction. Hill v. Butler, Stevens & Co., 70 S. E. 34, 35, 8 Ga. App. 669.

"A 'cash sale' and a 'sale upon subsequent condition' are entirely different. In the first the payment of the purchase money and delivery of the property are concurrent acts, one and the same transaction, while the latter is a sale and delivery of the thing sold on condition subsequent, subject to be defeated by failure of the purchaser to comply with the terms of the contract of purchase. The former may be avoided by the vendor upon the failure by the vendee to pay the purchase money while the property is in his hands or in the hands of any other purchaser, unless the payment of the purchase price has been waived." Strother v. McMullen Lumber Co., 98 S. W. 34, 36, 200 Mo. 647 (quoting with approval from Johnson-Brinkman Commission Co. v. Central Bank of Kansas City, 22 S. W. 813, 116 Mo. 570, 38 Am. St. Rep. 615).

Under Civ. Code 1910, § 4126, providing that the title to cotton and certain other agricultural products sold under cash sale does not pass by delivery until the cash is in fact paid, a sale is no less a cash sale, when so intended by the parties, because the money is not paid concurrently with the delivery, and the actual paying over of the cash is temporarily deferred in meeting the convenience of the parties in making a settlement. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. W. W. Gordon & Co., 73 S. E. 594, 595, 10 Ga. App. 311.

"A 'sale for cash on delivery' may be entirely consistent with the investment of title, though the purchase money be not paid at the time of delivery of the property. In such case 'the buyer, though he has title, is not entitled to possession until he pays the price, for payment and delivery in such case are presumed to be concurrent acts, and, until payment is made, the seller may retain the goods by virtue of his vendor's lien, but he retains the goods, and not the title'" (citing and approving Austin v. Welch, 72 S. W. 881, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 526). "And such, I understand, is the doctrine applied to C. O. D. shipments by the authorities." (Concurring opinion of Henderson, J.) Keller v. State (Tex.) 87 S. W. 669, 688, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 489.

Civ. Code 1895, § 3546, provides that products sold by planters and commission merchants "on cash sale" shall not be considered the property of the buyer until fully paid for, though they may have been delivered to the buyer. Held, that the term "on cash sale" is not confined to sales where the payment of actual money is to be made immediately, but includes sales where it is expressly understood that the payment of actual money shall not be delayed for any longer than necessary in the ordinary course of business to reduce negotiable paper to actual cash, and also includes such time as may be necessary and may be agreed upon to be necessary to enable the buyer, when the seller wishes to afford that convenience, to make immediate arrangements to procure the necessary cash. McCall v. Hunter, Pearce & Batty, 70 S. E. 59, 61, 8 Ga. App. 612.

As affected by custom

A custom among commission merchants will not render a sale, where the money is not to be paid for several days, a "cash sale." Bliss v. Arnold, 8 Vt. 252, 254, 30 Am. Dec. 467; Catlin v. Smith, 24 Vt. 85.

The merchants and traders of Boston and other cities had got up an arrangement by which they agreed that a sale or purchase on 30 days' indulgence should not be regarded as upon credit but a cash transaction. Held, impossible that a 30-day sale could be a "cash sale." Chapman v. Devereux, 32 Vt. 618, 622.

As authorizing credit

A "cash sale" of cotton delivered on Saturday is not converted into a credit sale because, on the Monday following, the commission merchant receives a check for the purchase money, deposits the same in bank, draws against the account thus increased, and marks the bill "paid." Charleston & W. C. Ry. Co. v. Pope & Fleming, 50 S. E. 374, 376, 122 Ga. 577.

In the language of the commercial world, sales, where it is intended that the purchaser is to have a short credit, as, for example, 10 days, or even 30 days, are often termed "cash sales," while the strict legal significance of a cash sale is undoubtedly one where delivery and payment are to be concurrent acts and be performed at the same instant of time. Eau Claire Canning Co. v. Western Brokerage Co., 73 N. E. 480, 440, 213 Ill. 561.

CASH SURRENDER VALUE

"The term 'cash surrender value' means the cash value, ascertainable by known rules, of a contract of insurance abandoned and given up for cancellation by the insured to the owner, having contract right to do so." Van Kirk v. Vermont Slate Co., 140 Fed. 38, 45 (quoting and adopting the definition in Re Welling, 7 Am. Bankr. Rep. 340, 344, 345, 113 Fed. 189, 192, 51 C. C. A. 151, 154).

A policy of life insurance has no "cash surrender value" unless it is so provided in the policy. In re Mertens, 131 Fed. 972, 975.

The words "cash surrender value," as used in the proviso of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 70, 30 Stat. 565, which permits a bankrupt to redeem a policy of insurance on his life from the claims of creditors by paying or securing to the trustees the cash surrender value, embrace policies which, by their terms, or by the practice or concession of the company issuing them, have such value. Hiscock v. Mertens, 27 Sup. Ct. 488, 491, 205 U. S. 202, 51 L. Ed. 771.

See Net Value.

CASH VALUE

See Full and Fair Cash Value; Full Cash Value.

The cash value of an article is the amount of cash for which it will exchange in fact. That amount depends on the opinion of the public, of possible buyers, or of that part of it which will pay the most. Ankeny v. Blakley, 74 Pac. 485, 489, 44 Or. 78 (citing National Bank of Commerce v. City of New Bedford, 29 N. E. 532, 155 Mass. 313).

Where common stock, when issued, had no value, and the persons owning it were required to be actively engaged in the management of the corporation, and the common stock had never been sold on the market, and the preferred stock was subject to redemption at any time, the "cash value" of the assets of the common stock is shown by the value of the assets applicable to it when an appraisement of such stock was made. Boggs v. Boggs & Buhl, 66 Atl. 105, 107, 217 Pa. 10.

A policy on whisky provided that the company should not be liable beyond the actual "cash value" at the time of any loss, and that the loss should be estimated according to such value, with proper deduction for depreciation, and should not exceed what it would then cost the insured to repair or replace the same with material of the like kind. The whisky was of different ages.

Held, that the "cash value," within the meaning of the policy, as applicable to the whisky, was the market value in the wholesale liquor market at the time it was destroyed, and could not be determined by taking the cost of the material, the expense of manufacturing, the charges of carrying it in bond, insurance, and interest. Frick v. United Firemen's Ins. Co., 67 Atl. 743, 746, 218 Pa. 409.

The words "cash value of the property," in Rev. St. 1898, § 1943a, providing that no fire insurance company shall issue any policy limiting the amount to be paid in case of loss below the actual cash value of the property if within the amount of the insurance for which premium is paid, evidently refer to the property destroyed, not the property insured. Newton v. Theresa Village Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 104 N. W. 107, 109, 125 Wis. 289.

In an action for the destruction of a house by fire from a railroad engine, the court instructed that, as to the dwelling house, plaintiff's measure of damages was the "reasonable cash value" of the dwelling when destroyed, and the measure of damages for destruction of the household goods was the "reasonable value" of said goods at the time of the destruction. Held, that the instruction was not erroneous for using the words "cash value" instead of "market cash value"; "market value" being the cash value for which an article will sell for in cash on the market, and reasonable "cash value" being equivalent to reasonable "market cash value." Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Murray (Tex.) 150 S. W. 217, 218.

In tax law

Though the constitutional provisions that all property not exempt shall be taxed in proportion to its value to be ascertained as provided by law, and defining "property" as including corporate stock, are not self-executing, any deficiency was supplied by Pol. Code, § 3627, requiring property to be assessed at its full cash value, and section 3617 defining that cash value to be the amount at which the property would be taken in payment of a just debt from a solvent debtor. Chesborough v. City and County of San Francisco, 96 Pac. 288, 291, 153 Cal. 559.

Allegations as to the "cash value," "fair value," or "true value" of the property do not come within Sess. Laws 1902, p. 238, § 10, requiring all taxable property to be assessed at its "full cash value." Humbird Lumber Co. v. Thompson, 83 Pac. 941, 945, 11 Idaho, 614.

The "cash value" of a railroad for purposes of taxation must be determined mainly by its net earnings capitalized at the current rate of interest, taken in consideration with any immediate prospect of increase or decrease in earning capacity; and if the utility of the road, as so determined, is not equal to its cost, which is prima facie its value, then the value must be determined by utility alone. State v. Nevada Cent. R. Co., 81 Pac. 99, 102, 28 Nev. 186, 118 Am. St. Rep. 834.

CASHIER

The "cashier" of a bank is its agent. His acts within his official sphere are binding on the bank, and he may borrow money in the regular course of the bank's business and pledge its property for its payment. Citizens' Bank v. Bank of Waddy, 103 S. W. 249, 250, 126 Ky. 169, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 598, 128 Am. St. Rep. 282 (citing 5 Cyc. p. 579; 4 Thomp. Corp. § 4748; 1 Moss, Banking, §§ 158, 160; Davenport v. Stone, 62 N. W. 722, 104 Mich. 521, 53 Am. St. Rep. 467; Chemical Nat. Bank v. City Bank of Portage, 16 Sup. Ct. 417, 160 U. S. 653, 40 L. Ed. 568; Auten v. United States Nat. Bank, 19 Sup. Ct. 628, 174 U. S. 143, 43 L. Ed. 920; Aldrich v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 20 Sup. Ct. 498, 176 U. S. 618, 44 L. Ed. 611).

In an information charging embezzlement, the allegation that defendant was "cashier" at the time he converted the money to his own use was as much a charge that the money was in his possession and under his custody and control by virtue of his office as though the charge was inserted in express terms. People v. Messer, 111 N. W. 854, 857, 148 Mich. 188.

The "cashier" of a bank is an executive officer by whom its debts are received and paid and its securities taken and transferred, and his acts, to be binding, must be done within the ordinary course of his duties. Sponberg v. First Nat. Bank of Montpelier, 110 Pac. 716, 718, 18 Idaho, 524, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 736, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 95 (quoting and adopting the definition in United States v. City Bank of Columbus, 62 U. S. [21 How.] 356, 16 L. Ed. 130).

"The court defines the 'cashier' of a bank to be an executive officer by whom its debts are received and paid and its securities taken and transferred. * * * His ordinary duties are to keep all the funds of the bank, its notes, bills, and other choses in action, to be used from time to time for the ordinary and extraordinary exigencies of the bank. He usually receives, directly or through subordinate officers, all moneys and notes of the bank, delivers up all discounted notes and securities when they have been paid, draws checks to withdraw the funds of the bank where they have been deposited, and, as the executive officer of the bank, transacts most of its business." A cashier has no implied power merely by virtue of his office to give away, surrender, or release the bank's securities, and hence no implied power to accept money for interest in advance on a note held by the bank with an agreement to extend the time of payment, and thus discharge an indorser from his liability. Bank of Ravenswood v. Wetzel, 50 S. E. 886, 888, 58 W. Va. 1, 70 L. R. A. 305, 6 Ann. Cas. 48 (quoting and adopting United States v. City Bank of Columbus, 62 U. S. [21 How.] 356, 16 L. Ed. 130).

One who received the money of a foreign insurance company and handled all its cash in its office in the state was a "cashier" or "treasurer," as used in a statute providing for the service on such officers of process against the corporation. Russell v. Pittsburgh Life Ins. & Trust Co., 115 N. Y. Supp. 950, 954, 62 Misc. Rep. 409.

An employé of a corporation, whose duties are confined to bookkeeping and to the receipt of money when defendant's superintendent is not in the office, and who does not indorse its checks, is not a "cashier," upon whom service of summons may be had, by which officer is meant the financial agent of a corporation, who has charge of its funds and has the right to take charge of such funds to the exclusion of every other person. Van Damm v. New York Cent. Storage Co., 132 N. Y. Supp. 394, 395.

The uniform Negotiable Instruments Law provides that, when an instrument is "indorsed to a person as 'cashier,'" it is deemed prima facie to be payable to the bank of which he is such officer and may be negotiated by the indorsement either of the bank or of the officer (B. & C. Comp. § 4444). First Nat. Bank v. McCullough, 93 Pac. 366, 368, 50 Or. 508, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1105, 126 Am. St. Rep. 758.

CASINO

A building called a "casino," built by a city in a public park, is one, the use of which may vary from time to time, irrespective of how the word may be defined. Ross v. City of Long Branch, 63 Atl. 609, 78 N. J. Law, 292.

CASK

The term "cask" is generally understood to be a receptacle for liquids, either larger or smaller than the usual barrel, and, as employed in the statute respecting the manufacture and sale of spirituous liquors, pertaining to wholesale dealers, has a well-recognized import as a vessel containing not less than 20, 10, or 5 gallons wine measure, as provided by Rev. St. §§ 3287, 3323, 3244. Williams v. United States, 158 Fed. 30, 32, 88 C. C. A. 296.

CAST

CAST OF SCULPTURE

The phrase "casts of sculpture," as used in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, par. 649, 30 Stats. 151, 201, providing when casts of sculpture are entitled to free entry, is not confined in its meaning to casts of those clay figures which were fashioned by the hands of genius, while excluding those of inferior artists or workmen. Plaster casts of clay models, though painted and gilded and produced in unlimited quantities, are casts of sculpture within the meaning of this act. Benziger v. United States, 24 Sup. Ct. 189, 193, 192 U. S. 38, 48 L. Ed. 331.

CASTING VOTE

As determining majority, see Majority.

There was no acceptance of street improvements by the board of public works, as required by Code, § 870, where the question was never considered or deliberated upon together by the two members of the board, one of whom merely approved the tentative schedule of assessments prepared by the engineer, while the other refused to assent thereto, nor did the approval of the schedule by the engineer constitute a "casting vote" under Laws 32d Gen. Assem. c. 26, providing that he shall give the casting vote in case of a disagreement, since there can be no acceptance without meeting, consultation, and deliberation by the members of the board. Gilcrest & Co. v. City of Des Moines (Iowa) 137 N. W. 1072, 1075.

CASTINGS

As machinery, see Machinery.

As materials, see Materials.

Iron castings, which by careful additional work have been fitted as parts of machines, are no longer dutiable as "castings," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C. par. 148, 30 Stat. 162, but have been advanced to the condition of "articles * * * of iron * * * partly * * * manufactured," under paragraph 193. John Bromley & Sons v. United States, 156 Fed. 958, 959, 84 C. C. A. 458.

The provision for "castings" in such act does not include cast-iron machinery parts, which have been drilled, bored, planed, fitted, and finished. Lehigh Mfg. Co. v. United States, 153 Fed. 596, 597.

CASTLE

CASUAL AND INVOLUNTARY

"The act (relating to trespassing on state timber lands) very wisely makes a distinction between trespasses committed involuntarily and those committed willfully. The definition of 'casual and involuntary' should not be restricted. The words are intended to convey the idea that, when an illegal cutting of state timber lacks the elements of willfulness and intention, then the damage shall be double the value only. One who, through mistake or inadvertence, passes beyond his own boundary line and cuts and carries away timber of another is not guilty of willful trespass. * * * Willful, in the present case, is not determined by the mere fact that appellant knowingly and purposely entered upon the land in question and cut the state timber thereon. * * * To determine what is meant by 'willful' we must ascertain the purpose with which the act was performed. Did appellant intend to commit a wrong against the state and appropriate the timber without regard to the rights of the state? * * * The finding of the trial court that appellant was guilty of the willful trespass is not sustained by the evidence. On the contrary, the record conclusively shows that appellant had reasonable ground for believing that authority had been granted and honestly acted on such belief." State v. Shevlin-Carpenter Co., 113 N. W. 634, 637, 102 Minn. 470.

CASUAL DEFICIENCY

The term "casual deficiencies," in Ga. Const., forbidding any county to incur a debt without submission to a popular vote, except loans to supply casual deficiencies of revenue, means some unforeseen or unexpected deficiency, or an insufficiency of funds to meet some unforeseen and necessary expense, and does not include the borrowing of money to meet current expenses. Hall v. Greene County, 46 S. E. 69, 119 Ga. 253 (quoting and adopting Lewis v. Lofley, 19 S. E. 57, 92 Ga. 804).

CASUAL EJECTOR

The person who by prearrangement was present for the purpose of ousting the nominal lessee, in ancient ejectment proceedings, was termed the "casual ejector"; the action being commenced by the nominal lessee for the benefit of the actual claimant and the defendant being ordinarily the "casual ejector." Mt. Pleasant Cemetery Co. v. Erie R. Co., 65 Atl. 192, 193, 74 N. J. Law, 131.

CASUAL VACANCY

Where a county commissioner elect refuses to qualify, there is a "casual vacancy," which may be filled as provided by Const. art. 14, § 7, declaring that any casual vacancy in such office may be filled by the court of common pleas. Commonwealth v. Wise, 65 Atl. 535, 540, 216 Pa. 314.

CASUALTY

See Unavoidable Casualty; Unforeseen Casualty.

Other casualty, see Other.

See, also, Accident—Accidental.

A "casualty" is an unforeseen accident; a misfortune. Gill v. Fugate, 78 S. W. 188, 191, 117 Ky. 257.

"Casualty" means inevitable accident, or what Civ. Code, art. 1933, calls a "fortuitous event." A cause beyond human control may be a "fortuitous event" or "irresistible force." Cook & Laurie Contracting Co. v. Denis, 49 South. 1014, 1015, 124 La. 161.

"Casualty" is a word of quite frequent use, yet it cannot be said that its definition has been very accurately settled by the courts. Strictly and literally "casualty" is perhaps to be limited to injuries which arise solely from accident without any element of conscious human design or intentional human agency; or, as it is sometimes expressed, inevitable accident, something not to be foreseen or guarded against. But in ordinary usage "casualty," like "accident," is quite commonly applied to losses and injuries which happen suddenly, unexpectedly, not in the usual course of events, and without any design on part of the person suffering from the injury. Bankers' Mut. Casualty Co. v. First Nat. Bank of Council Bluffs, 108 N. W. 1046, 1048, 131 Iowa, 456.

That one was accidentally shot, preventing his appearing at court, is ground for setting aside judgment on his forfeited bail, within Civ. Code Prac. § 518, empowering the court rendering a judgment to vacate it, after the term, "for unavoidable casualty or misfortune, preventing the party from appearing or defending"; "casualty" being that which happens without design or without being foreseen. Hargis v. Begley, 112 S. W. 602, 603, 129 Ky. 477, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 136.

A "casualty," within Act March 4, 1907, c. 2939, § 3, 34 Stat. 1415, exempting railway companies from penalty for working employees overtime in case of "casualty," etc., is an act proceeding from an unknown cause or an unusual effect of a known cause. United States v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., 189 Fed. 471, 477.

Rev. St. § 3221, provides that when any spirits are destroyed by accidental fire or other "casualty" without any fraud, collusion, or negligence of the owner, after they should have been drawn off by the gauger and placed in the distillery warehouse, no tax shall be collected thereon, or, if collected, it shall be refunded. Held, that spirits lost after seizure by an internal revenue officer, through the latter's mere negligence, were not lost by reason of "casualty," within such section. United States v. Sisk, 176 Fed. 885, 889, 100 C. C. A. 355.

An instruction in an action for damages for negligently destroying plaintiff's wheat stacks by fire that if the jury believed that the fire which destroyed plaintiff's grain was the result of "mere accident or casualty," and not of negligence by defendant, they should find for defendant was not erroneous; the word "casualty" being synonymous with "accident." Webb v. Baldwin, 147 S. W. 849, 851, 165 Mo. App. 240.

Result of lawful act

The word "casualty," as used in Civ. Code 1895, § 3125, providing that the destruction of a tenement by fire or the loss of possession by any casualty not caused by the landlord shall not abate the rent contracted to be paid, does not include an effect arising from legislative action. Lawrence v. White, 63 S. E. 631, 634, 131 Ga. 840, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 966, 15 Ann. Cas. 1097.

CASUALTY INSURANCE

"Casualty insurance" are words of quite frequent use, yet it cannot be said that their definition has been very accurately settled by the courts. Strictly and literally "casualty" is perhaps to be limited to injuries which arise solely from accident without any element of conscious human design or intentional human agency; or, as it is sometimes expressed, inevitable accident, something not to be foreseen or guarded against. But in ordinary usage "casualty," like "accident," is quite commonly applied to losses and injuries which happen suddenly, unexpectedly, not in the usual course of events, and without any design on part of the person suffering from the injury. Bankers' Mut. Casualty Co. v. First Nat. Bank of Council Bluffs, 108 N. W. 1046, 1048, 131 Iowa, 456.

CASUALTY OCCURRING BEFORE JUDGMENT

Where the cause was submitted almost a year before judgment, the illness of the reporter before its rendition, culminating in his death after its rendition, and without certification or translation of his notes, was not a casualty occurring before judgment, within Code, § 4091, authorizing granting of new trials at terms subsequent to judgment. Dumbarton Realty Co. v. Erickson, 120 N. W. 1025, 1026, 143 Iowa, 677, 136 Am. St. Rep. 778, 21 Ann. Cas. 258.

CASUS OMISSUS.

A case omitted and when used with reference to statutes is within the maxim, "A case omitted is to be held as intentionally omitted." "Where a 'casus omissus' does really occur in the statute * * * through the inadvertence of the Legislature, * * * the rule is that the particular case thus left unprovided for must be disposed of according to the law as it existed prior to such statute. * * * 'A casus omissus,' observes Buller, J., 'can in no case be supplied by a court of law, for that would be to make laws.'" Estes v. Terrell, 92 S. W. 407, 409, 99 Tex. 622 (quoting and adopting definition in 6 Cyc. p. 702; Broom, Leg. Max.).

While it might be argued from the fact that the Legislature limited the power of county courts respecting the county levy, the powers of school boards respecting school levies, and the powers of municipal corporations respecting their levies, and cut down the state tax, that it was also its intention to limit the power of the county courts in respect to road levies, there being nothing in the statute carrying this intention into execution, there exists what is termed a "casus omissus," which the court cannot supply. State v. Wirt County Court, 59 S. E. 884, 888, 63 W. Va. 230.

CAT FACES

"Cat faces," as the term is used in saw-mills, are scars on logs. Moses v. Grant Lumber Co., 38 South. 684, 685, 114 La. 933.

CATALOGUE SYSTEM OR METHOD

The chief element of a "catalogue system or method" of doing business consists in dealing directly with the customer or consumer by means of placing in his hands a printed catalogue containing a description of the articles of merchandise offered for sale and the price thereof. Montgomery Ward & Co. v. South Dakota Retail Merchants' & Hardware Dealers' Ass'n, 150 Fed. 413, 415.

CATCH-BASIN

As paving, see Pave—Pavement.

CATGUT

"'Catgut' is prepared from the small intestine of the sheep by a process of cutting and cleaning and drying. In fact, the intestine of the sheep has not become the 'catgut' of commerce until it has been subjected to this process. After, it, has gone through a further sterilization, increasing its value ten to one-hundred fold, it becomes the manufactured article known as 'surgical antiseptic catgut.'" Davies, Turner & Co. v. United States, 115 Fed. 232.

CATHERINE

Kate and Kittle are the same name; one being a nickname and the other a pet name for "Catherine." Corr v. Sun Printing & Publishing Ass'n, 69 N. E. 288, 290, 177 N. Y. 131.

CATHOLIC BISHOP

CATTLE

See Common Carriers of Cattle; Hides of Cattle; Stock Cattle.

"Cattle" is a generic term and may embrace a number of animals and different kinds of stock. State v. Jackson, 105 N. W. 51, 52, 128 Iowa, 543.

The word "cattle" usually includes horses and sheep (Louisville, & F. R. Co. v. Ballard, 59 Ky. [2 Metc.] 177, 183), as well as a cow, steer, or ox. Robertson v. State, 1 Tex. App. 311.

The word "cattle" includes all domestic quadrupeds, such as horses, mules, etc., as well as oxen, cows, etc. Newark & S. O. H. C. R. Co. v. Hunt, 12 Atl. 697, 699, 50 N. J. Law, 308, 311 (citing Worcester Dict. tit. "Cattle").

"In its limited sense the word 'cattle' is used to designate the different varieties of horned animals, but it is also frequently used with a broader signification as embracing animals in general which serve as food for man." Decatur Bank v. St. Louis Bank, 88 U. S. (21 Wall.) 294, 299, 22 L. Ed. 560.

As bovine species only

The term "hides of cattle," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 437, 30 Stat. 192, is not used in a commercial sense, but according to the ordinary dictionary meaning of the words, and refers to the hides of domesticated animals of the bovine species, including those of the East India buffalo. "Cattle" are "domesticated bovine animals, as oxen, cows, bulls, and calves," or "live stock; domestic quadrupeds which serve for tillage and other labor or as food for man." In popular speech the term "cattle" is used in the United States in a restricted sense and is more specially applied to the group of so-called straight back "cattle" (cows, oxen, steers, and bulls), as distinguished from the hump cattle of India and Africa. United States v. Schmoll, 154 Fed. 784, 785 (citing Rosbach v. United States, 116 Fed. 781; Id., 122 Fed. 1020, 57 C. C. A. 678; United States v. Winter & Smillie, 134 Fed. 841, 67 C. C. A. 437).

Buffalo

Singapore buffaloes are not "cattle," because they are not domesticated, and their hides are therefore not within the provision for hides of "cattle," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 437, 30 Stat. 192. Furthermore, the presence in the same paragraph of a drawback provision with respect to leather indicates an intention to include therein only such hides as can be tanned into leather, a use of which these Singapore hides are not susceptible. United States v. Wadleigh, 172 Fed. 169, 170.

Hogs

"In England, even in a criminal case, where there is a greater strictness of construction than in a civil controversy, pigs are held to be included within the words 'any cattle.' And in other cases in that country involving life and liberty, the word has been construed so as to embrace animals not used for food." Decatur Bank v. St. Louis Bank, 88 U. S. (21 Wall.) 294, 300, 22 L. Ed. 560.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 1988, making it a misdemeanor to willfully and maliciously or cruelly maim, wound, beat, or torture any horse, ox, or other "cattle," an information charging that accused unlawfully, maliciously, and cruelly did maim, wound, and torture to death three hogs is sufficient. State v. Prater, 109 S. W. 1047, 1049, 130 Mo. App. 348.

Horses

The word "cattle," as used in Mansf. Dig. Ark. § 1655, providing that a person converting unbranded cattle shall not be deemed guilty of larceny, does not include horses. Keys v. United States, 103 Pac. 874, 875, 2 Okl. Cr. 647.

The term "cattle," as used in a statute making it a criminal offense to willfully and maliciously kill, maim, or wound any cattle of another, includes horses and mares. State v. Taylor, 85 S. W. 564, 566, 186 Mo. 608.

CATTLE GUARD

The term "cattle guard," as employed in Ky. St. 1793, providing that all corporations and persons owning and operating railroads shall erect and maintain cattle guards at all terminal points and fences constructed along their lines, means such an appliance as will prevent animals from escaping from inclosures in which they are confined over the railroad track and going upon land of others adjoining the right of way. The cattle guard need not be so constructed as that under no condition can cattle pass over it, but must be reasonably sufficient for the purpose intended. Nashville, etc., R. Co. v. Russell, 110 S. W. 317, 318, 129 Ky. 14 (quoting and adopting the definition in Louisville, H. & St. L. R. Co. v. Beauchamp, 55 S. W. 716, 108 Ky. 47).

Acts 1885, c. 91, imposing on every railroad company the duty of providing at all highway crossings "cattle guards" sufficient to prevent cattle from getting on the railroad, requires a guard sufficient to turn the cattle off from the road, and the construction of a cattle guard shown to be of the kind in general use by first-class railroads is not necessarily a compliance with the statute if it in fact is insufficient to turn cattle. Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Newsom, 74 N. E. 21, 22, 35 Ind. App. 299.

CATTLE OR WAGON PASS

A deed requiring the construction of a "cattle or wagon pass" means a pass sufficient for cattle and farm wagons, whether loaded or unloaded. It is common knowledge that some farm products which are taken by wagon through a farm or from one field to another will need a space of 12 feet in width and 10 feet in height to pass through. Owens v. Carthage & W. Ry. Co., 85 S. W. 987, 988, 110 Mo. App. 320.

CAUSA CAUSANS

Where a street car conductor, while handling the trolley rope from a position on the ground behind the car as it was entering the bar, was through the sudden starting of the car by the motorman, caught by the rope and dragged into a repair pit, the "causa causans" was the conduct of the motorman although the pit was the "causa sine qua non" of the injuries. Dulfer v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 101 N. Y. Supp. 207, 208, 115 App. Div. 670 (citing Trapp v. McClellan, 74 N. Y. Supp. 130, 68 App. Div. 362; Laidlaw v. Sage, 52 N. E. 679, 158 N. Y. 73, 44 L. R. A. 216; Leeds v. New York Telephone Co., 70 N. E. 219, 178 N. Y. 118-122).

CAUSA MORTIS

CAUSA SINE QUA NON

Where a street car conductor, while handling the trolley rope from a position on the ground behind the car as it was entering the barn, was, through the sudden starting of the car by the motorman, caught by the rope and dragged into a repair pit, the "causa causans" was the conduct of the motorman although the pit was the "causa sine qua non" of the injuries. Dulfer v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 101 N. Y. Supp. 207, 115 App. Div. 670 (citing Trapp v. McClellan, 74 N. Y. Supp. 130, 68 App. Div. 362; Laidlaw v. Sage, 52 N. E. 679, 158 N. Y. 73, 44 L. R. A cause sufficient to justify expulsion of a member of a corporation, formed for social purposes and conferring on its directors power to expel members for cause, is conduct which in some way or to some degree tends to injure the corporation materially, or in reputation, or is contrary to and destructive of the purpose of its organization, and a member may not be expelled arbitrarily and on insufficient grounds. *Barry v. On trial of an action by a wife for permanent alimony, it is not error to refuse a request by defendant for an instruction that, if plaintiff left her husband without cause, she would not be entitled to alimony, and that the word "cause" means some unlawful act or unlawful doing. Parker v. Parker, 67 S. E. 812, 134 Ga. 316.

That the reduction of the coal deposits in the mine so that the required minimum tonnage could not be produced by the usual and customary method of mining in the district, as claimed by defendant, was not a cause within the terms of the saving clause which would relieve defendant from payment of the specified minimum royalty. New York Coal Co. v. New Pittsburgh Coal Co., 99 N. E. 198, 207, 86 Ohio St. 140.

In a declaration of law in an action by a trustee in bankruptcy to recover an alleged preference, the phrase "ground to believe" is equivalent to the phrase "cause to believe," used in Bankrupt Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 60, subd. "b," 30 Stat. 562, providing that, if a bankrupt shall have given a preference and the person receiving it shall have had reasonable "cause to believe" that it was intended thereby to give preference, it shall be voidable by the trustee. Edwards v. Carondelet Milling Co., 83 S. W. 764, 766, 108 Mo. App. 275 (citing Benedict v. Deshel, 68 N. E. 999, 177 N. Y. 1, 11 Am. Bankr. Rep. 20).

Delay in the discharge of vessels laden with coal, due to the arrival at the same port at about the same time of a large number of such vessels, each under a separate charter to the same party, was not the result of "causes or accidents beyond the charterer's control," within a provision of the charter parties exempting it from liability for demurrage in such case. W. K. Niver Coal Co. v. Cheronea S. S. Co., 142 Fed. 402, 412, 73 C. C. A. 502, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 126.

Under a building contract requiring the contractor to pay the owner a stated sum per day for delay in completing the building beyond the time fixed by the contract, but further providing that the penalty should be suspended, should the work be delayed "by causes beyond the control of the contractor," such provision must be construed with regard to the circumstances and to the ordinary course of business at the time of the contract. The bare fact that materials were ordered and delayed in manufacture or transit does not show a cause beyond the control of the contractor; nor does the failure to get material from a particular man, unless it was of such peculiar character as not to be procurable elsewhere; and, even when shown that there was unavoidable delay in obtaining material, it must be further shown that the delay in completion of the building was in fact due to that cause. Simpson Bros. Corporation v. John R. White & Son, 187 Fed. 418, 423.

For removal from office

Under a municipal board's power to remove an officer for "cause," the "cause" intended is just cause, and the power may be exerted only after he has had opportunity for defense. State ex rel. Haight v. Love, 39 N. J. Law, 14, 22, affirmed 39 N. J. Law, 476.

Under a statute authorizing street commissioners to appoint regular policemen who "shall be subject to removal for cause," the term "for cause" does not mean the arbitrary will of the appointing power, for that might be the outgrowth of mere whim, caprice, prejudice, or passion, which would in reality be no cause at all, but must mean some cause affecting or concerning the ability or fitness of the incumbent to perform the duties imposed upon him, such as inefficiency, incompetency, or other kindred disqualification. Board of Street Com'rs v. Williams, 53 Atl. 923, 925, 96 Md. 232.

That one elected treasurer of a city had, while formerly serving as revenue collector, embezzled money from the city which was due at the time of his election was not a "cause" for his removal from office, within Rev. St. 1899, § 5761, which provides that the mayor may, with the consent of the city council, remove from office, for cause shown, any elective officer of the city, as the statute contemplates official misconduct rather than a defect in title for which the remedy is quo warranto. State ex rel. Schulz v. Patton, 110 S. W. 636, 640, 131 Mo. App. 628.

The powers of the mayor and aldermen, under Laws 1901, p. 797, c. 283, § 2, permitting the mayor of the city of Nashua, with the advice and consent of a majority of the board of aldermen, to remove any member of the board of public works for cause, are judicial; the word "cause" meaning legal cause, after notice and hearing, so that certiorari would lie to review and set aside the proceeding. Hagerty v. Shedd, 74 Atl. 1055, 1057, 75 N. H. 393.

Improper judicial determinations or mistakes based merely upon errors of judgment, and without corrupt or improper motives, do not constitute "cause" for which a city magistrate may be removed from office by the Supreme Court under Const. art. 6, § 17, and New York Charter, § 1401a, but he may be removed for such conduct as satisfies the court that he has been actuated by unworthy or illegal motives in the exercise of his judicial duties, or if he has committed such acts as to justify the inference that either from gross ignorance or from a perverted character, or from a lack of judicial qualities, he has so administered the power conferred upon him as to show that he should not be continued in office. Hence, where it appeared that a magistrate's discharge of a prisoner committed to the workhouse was granted in violation of the plain provisions of the statute and was the result of a solicitation of his associate, occupying offices with him, who had received a fee for his interference, and that he had granted similar discharges without examination or investigation, and had paid $250 to suppress the publication of a story in relation to his official conduct, it was sufficient to justify the conclusion that his conduct had been such that the orderly administration of justice required his removal. In re Droege, 114 N. Y. Supp. 375, 385, 129 App. Div. 866.

Of accident or injury

The term "cause," as it relates to an injury, applies only to proximate or immediate, and not to remote, causes, and, in ascertaining which is proximate and which remote, the law refuses to indulge in metaphysical niceties. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Calhoun, 29 Sup. Ct. 321, 322, 213 U. S. 1, 53 L. Ed. 671.

Every effect is the result of a combination of causes, in the broad sense of the word "cause"; but the legal meaning of the word is somewhat different, the law having adopted as its normal standard that course of conduct in which the acts of all persons concerned are legal and conducted with common prudence, and, if hurt is occasioned to some individual without this standard course of affairs being disturbed, it is considered as having happened from no juridic cause, but is attributed to an accident; but if a hurt occurs which would not have occurred, according to the laws of ordinary human probabilities, if some wrongful or negligent act had not disturbed the normal course, the law considers the normal and prudent activities of such persons as were concerned in the transaction as conditions, and not as causes, and regards the wrong as operating through the innocuous medium, which is therefore deemed the legal cause of the hurt. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Daniels, 70 S. E. 208, 205, 8 Ga. App. 775.

Under Employers' Liability Act (Laws 1902, c. 600), providing that no action for injury shall be sustained by an employé unless notice of the time and place and "cause" of the injury is given, the word "cause" does not mean a conclusion of the injured person but a statement of the facts out of which the injury arose. Bovi v. Hess, 107 N. Y. Supp. 1001, 1004, 123 App. Div. 389. The word "cause," as used in such act, may refer to the physical cause, or to the particular act of omission or commission, which, under the law of master and servant, is a breach of the master's duty; and, since the statute contemplates that the notice shall be given by the injured person himself, it will be sufficient if it contains an honest and fairly accurate statement of the physical cause of the injury. A notice of injury to a servant under such act recited that plaintiff received painful and permanent injuries to his left hand from which two fingers and a part of the third were amputated while he was working on a machine provided by the master; that such injuries were sustained by the plaintiff solely by the negligence and carelessness of the person notified, as plaintiff's master, in providing plaintiff with an unsafe and defective machine or implement with which to do his work; and that the machine was not properly safe-guarded and protected, so as to prevent such injury. Held that, since Labor Law (Laws 1897, c. 415) § 81, requires that all machinery shall be properly guarded, and a violation of this provision may be evidence of negligence, the notice sufficiently specified the physical cause of injury, and was not objectionable for failure to state the part of the machine inflicting the injury and that it was improperly guarded. Valentino v. Garvin Mach. Co., 123 N. Y. Supp. 959, 961, 139 App. Div. 139. In such act the word "cause" does not mean the person responsible for the injury, or the possession or nonpossession of authority of any designated individual. Kallsher v. Brown-ing, King & Co., 116 N. Y. Supp. 856, 857, 63 Misc. Rep. 67.

The words "caused" and "contributed" in an instruction in an action for personal injury to an employé, stating that the jury should find for defendant if plaintiff's negligence "caused or contributed" to the injury, were synonymous. Fourche River Valley & I. T. R. Co. v. Tippet, 142 S. W. 520, 524, 525, 101 Ark. 376.

Under Employers' Liability Act (Laws 1902, c. 662), providing that no action under the act shall be maintained unless notice of the time, place, and cause of the injury is given to the employer within a specified time, the "cause" of the injury relates to the particulars of the accident by which the employé sustained the injuries, to enable the employer to make the necessary investigation as to what caused the accident, etc., and a notice of injury to the employé causing his death, stating that the injuries were caused solely by reason of the negligence of the employer in that he, as employer, failed to furnish the employé with a safe place in which to work and suitable tools, does not state the "cause" of the injury and is insufficient. Finnigan v. New York Contracting Co., 107 N. Y. Supp. 855, 858, 122 App. Div. 712.

Interstate Commerce Act, providing that a carrier issuing a bill of lading shall be liable to the owner thereof for any injury to the property "caused" by it or any connecting carrier, and that no contract shall exempt the carrier from such liability, prohibits a carrier from limiting its liability; the word "caused" being coextensive with the measure of the carrier's liability at common law. Holland v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 123 S. W. 987, 994, 139 Mo. App. 702.

Interstate Commerce Act, making the initial carrier liable for any loss, damage, or injury caused by it or a connecting carrier, creates a liability for all loss or damage for which the carrier would be liable at common law. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Warfield & Lee, 65 S. E. 308, 310, 6 Ga. App. 550.

CAUSE (Verb)

The word "cause," in Rev. St. 1899, § 5989, providing that, when a city of the fourth class desires to pave its streets, the board of aldermen shall by resolution declare such improvement to be necessary and "cause" the resolution to be published in some newspaper, etc., is used in its common meaning, "to effect," "to produce," "to bring about," and the mode in which publication is to be effected, produced, or brought about is not specifically designated. Webb v. Strobach, 127 S. W. 680, 682, 143 Mo. App. 459.

To "cause" means to act as a cause or agent in producing; to effect, bring about, be the occasion of, make, force, or compel; to effect as an agent; to produce or bring into existence. The power given to the county dispensary board, before permitting any dispensary to offer liquor for sale, to cause it to be put into packages of specified quantities involves the power of bottling it through such agencies as they deem best and authorized it to establish a bottling plant of its own for that purpose. State ex rel. Watts v. Cain, 58 S. E. 937, 938, 78 S. C. 348 (quoting Cent. Dict. and Webster's International Dict.).

In Rev. Codes 1906, § 869, requiring the State Superintendent of Public Instruction to examine or cause to be examined all teachers' answer papers submitted to him, the phrase "cause to be examined" is, as regards official action, the equivalent of the individual performance of it by the officer, State v. Stockwell, 184 N. W. 767, 779, 23 N. D. 70 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1012).

The word "cause," as used in the school law, requiring every person having the custody of a child to cause the child to attend public school, does not require a person having the custody or control of a child and living at a distance from the school, unreasonable for the child to walk, to convey the child to school. State v. Hall, 64 Atl. 1102, 1104, 74 N. H. 61.

A policy insured property against all direct loss or damage by fire, except as otherwise provided in the policy; one of the exceptions being against loss caused directly or indirectly by earthquake. The property located in San Francisco was destroyed by fire on April 19, 1906, but the insurer pleaded that the loss would have been prevented by the use of the city's water supply had not such use been rendered unavailable by the breaking of the water mains by an earthquake shock on the preceding day. Held, that the loss was not "caused directly or indirectly by earthquake," within the exception, and that the fire, and not the earthquake, was the proximate cause thereof. Commercial Union Assur. Co. v. Pacific Union Club, 169 Fed. 776, 777, 95 C. C. A. 242; Norwich Union Fire Ins. Society of Norwich & London, Eng., v. Same, 169 Fed. 778, 95 C. C. A. 244.

A policy insuring the owner of property "against all direct loss or damage by fire except as hereinafter provided" contained a provision that the company should "not be liable for loss caused directly or indirectly by invasion, * * * or for loss or damage occasioned by or through any * * * earthquakes." Held, that the words "directly or indirectly" did not apply to the provision respecting earthquakes; that, construing such provision most strongly against the insurer in accordance with the settled rule, and giving the words their common, ordinary meaning, the word "occasioned" was equivalent to "caused," and the phrase "by or through" was but a repetition of words meaning the same thing, so that the provision excepted only loss or damage caused directly by earthquake, and that a loss indirectly caused by the progress of a fire from a distance, although originally started by an earthquake, was not within the exemption. Williamsburgh City Fire Ins. Co. of Brooklyn v. Willard, 184 Fed. 404, 406, 90 C. C. A. 392, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 103.

A fire insurance policy provided that the company should "not be liable for loss caused, directly or indirectly, by invasion, * * * or by order of any civil authority, or for loss or damage occasioned by or through * * * earthquake." Held, that the words "directly or indirectly" did not apply to the provision respecting earthquake; that, construing such provision most strongly against the insurer, in accordance with the established rule, the word "occasioned" was equivalent to "caused," and related to the origin of the fire; and the provision exempted the company from liability for a loss only where an earthquake was the immediate, direct, and proximate cause of the fire which destroyed the property. Baker & Hamilton v. Williamsburgh City Fire Ins. Co. of Brooklyn, 157 Fed. 280, 284.

Where a garnishment bond recited that plaintiffs in a pending suit caused writs of garnishment to issue, the use of the word "caused" is not conclusive that the issuance of the writs had preceded the execution and filing of the bond, but merely served to identify the suit out of which the garnishment proceedings arose. Geisler Mfg. Co. v. Watkins (Tex.) 126 S. W. 611.

A declaration, averring that plaintiff owned bales of cotton near the railroad, and that defendant negligently "caused or allowed" said cotton to be damaged by fire communicated by means of said locomotives, was not equivocal because of the alternative averment, as the words as so used were synonymous. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith, 50 South. 241, 244, 163 Ala. 141.

An allegation in the complaint that defendant "caused" the affidavits charging the offense to be filed, and plaintiff to be arrested and prosecuted, is a sufficient charge that defendant initiated the prosecution. Stainer v. San Luis Valley Land & Mining Co., 166 Fed. 220, 227, 92 C. C. A. 128.

The lessee of land agreed by the terms of the lease to erect a building thereon, and took possession and made contracts with general contractors for its erection, under which the work was done. The lessor in no way contracted with the general contractor, or authorized the furnishing of material, and the work was not done at its expense or request, and when the building was partly completed the land and improvements reverted to the lessor. Code 1904, § 2483, provides that, if any person who shall "cause" a building to be erected owns less than a fee-simple estate in the land, then only his interest therein shall be subject to mechanics' liens. Held, that the lessor did not "cause" it to be erected. Atlas Portland Cement Co. v. Main Line Realty Corp., 70 S. E. 536, 538, 112 Va. 7.

An allegation that defendant published or "caused to be published" a libel is sufficient, though the libel was in a foreign language. If defendant caused the libel to be published, it is immaterial whether he did so by sending it to one who did not himself understand it, or by some other means. Sending it to such a person would not of itself be a publication, but it might be the means of causing the publication. Haase v. State, 20 Atl. 751, 752, 53 N. J. Law, 34.

Under Rev. Civ. Code, arts. 1581, 1582, requiring that the testator must either dictate or, in the absence of dictation, present the instrument which he has "caused to be written" and declare that it contains his last intentions, it was formerly held that the term "caused to be written" meant that testator must have dictated the words reduced to writing by another, but this has been expressly overruled, and a nuncupative will is not invalid because written in the presence of witnesses without formal dictation. Succession of Reems, 38 South. 930, 931, 115 La. 102 (citing Bordelon's Heirs v. Baron's Heirs, 11 La. Ann. 876; Prendergast v. Prendergast, 16 La. Ann. 219, 79 Am. Dec. 575; Succession of Morales, 16 La. Ann. 267).

Where, in the execution of their joint enterprise, one partner deposits a nonmailable circular in the mail by the authorization of another, or with his knowledge and acquiescence, the latter "causes" the circular to be so deposited within the meaning of U. Consolidation Act (Laws 1882, c. 410) § 474, provides that, whenever an excavation for building or other purposes shall be carried to more than 10 feet below the curb, the person causing such excavation shall preserve the adjoining walls and structures from injury. Held that, where a landowner directed either his servants, agents, or an independent contractor to make an excavation, such owner is the "person causing it to be made," and if the excavation exceeds the 10-foot depth and injures the buildings of an adjoining owner, it is no defense that the work was done by an independent contractor, without interference by the owner of the land on which it was being made. Rosenstock v. Laue, 125 N. Y. Supp. 361, 362, 140 App. Div. 467.

"Wholly within the rule of the common law, a person may, by giving a bond of indemnity, in fact wrongfully contribute to the death of another and therefore be held responsible as a 'person causing the death,' for which damages may be recovered." Rev. Codes Mont. § 6486, creating a right of action for wrongful death against the person causing the death, imposes responsibility upon all whose actual wrongdoing contributes to the death of another, whether they be employés or employers, indemnitees or indemnitors. Northam v. Casualty Co. of America, 177 Fed. 981, 985.

CAUSE (In Practice)

The word "cause," used in Act No. 40 of 1880, providing that any judge may be recused if interested in the cause, but that in all civil and criminal causes it shall not be sufficient cause to challenge the judge that he is a citizen or inhabitant of the state or parish, does not mean merely civil causes. State v. Banta, 47 South. 538, 539, 122 La. 235.

Where "issue" and "cause," as used in the definition of perjury as false swearing in a matter material to the issue or cause in question, are synonymous, as in a divorce action based upon a single specific act of adultery, evidence could not be material on the "cause" and not on the "issue." People v. Teal, 89 N. E. 1088, 1089, 196 N. Y. 372, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 120, 17 Ann. Cas. 1175.

Comp. Laws 1909, § 1974, providing that the judge of the district court of a county in which a superior court is created, upon motion of plaintiff in any cause pending in the district court or which may thereafter be filed in such district court, shall transfer such cause by order to the superior court of the county where it shall stand for trial as if it had been originally filed therein, applies to criminal as well as civil cases; the word "cause" being defined to be any suit or action, or any question, civil or criminal, contested before a court or justice. Ex parte Copeland, 115 Pac. 627, 5 Okl. Cr. 551.

Code Civ. Proc. § 46, forbidding a judge to sit or take part in the decision of a "cause or matter" in which he has been an attorney or counsel, refers only to actions or special proceedings in which a judge might take part; the word "cause" meaning a cause of action, and the word "matter" referring to some judicial proceeding which, under the Code, is included in special proceedings for the enforcement of civil rights. Keeffe v. Third Nat. Bank of Syracuse, 69 N. E. 598, 594, 177 N. Y. 305.

Hepburn Act (Act June 29, 1909, c. 3591, § 10), relating to rates of interstate carriers, and providing that laws in conflict with the act are repealed, but the amendments provided for shall not affect "causes now pending" in courts of the United States, but such causes shall be prosecuted to conclusion, does not relieve offenders under Elkins Act Feb. 19, 1903, c. 708, § 1, from subsequent indictment and prosecution for such offense, though there is much force in the contention that the words "causes now pending" refer only to civil causes. United States v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. R. Co., 151 Fed. 84, 100.

Code Civ. Proc. § 46, forbidding a judge to sit or take part in the decision of a "cause or matter" in which he has been an attorney or counsel, refers only to actions or special proceedings in which a judge might take part; the word "cause" meaning a cause of action, and the word "matter" referring to some judicial proceeding which, under the Code, is included in special proceedings for the enforcement of civil rights. Keeffe v. Third Nat. Bank of Syracuse, 69 N. E. 593, 594, 177 N. Y. 305.

Hepburn Act (Act June 29, 1909, c. 3591, § 10), relating to rates of interstate carriers, and providing that laws in conflict with the act are repealed, but the amendments provided for shall not affect "causes now pending" in courts of the United States, but such causes shall be prosecuted to conclusion, does not relieve offenders under Elkins Act Feb. 19, 1903, c. 708, § 1, from subsequent indictment and prosecution for such offense, though there is much force in the contention that the words "causes now pending" refer only to civil causes. United States v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. R. Co., 151 Fed. 84, 100.

As action, case, or suit

"The word 'cause' is defined as a suit or action." In re Oliver's Guardianship, 83 N. E. 795, 796, 77 Ohio St. 474.

In any legal sense, "action," "suit," and "cause" are convertible terms. Tillamook County v. Wilson River Road Co., 89 Pac. 958, 959, 49 Or. 309 (citing Bouv. Law Dict. and Anderson's Law Dict.).

A "cause" is a suit, action, or any question, civil or criminal, contested before a court of justice. A probate proceeding is a cause within a constitutional provision providing that, in all "causes" in the district courts, plaintiff or defendant shall, upon application made in open court, have the right to a jury trial. Tolle v. Tolle, 104 S. W. 1049, 1050, 101 Tex. 33.

Under Rev. St. U. S. § 629, relating to removal of causes and providing that it shall then be the duty of the state court to accept said petition and bond and proceed no further in such "suit," and, the said copy being entered as aforesaid in the said circuit court of the United States, the "cause" shall then proceed in the same manner as if it had been originally commenced in the circuit court, the word "suit" and "cause" mean the same thing, since in common usage, and very often in statutes and decrees, the words "suit," "action," "case," and "cause" are used interchangeably to indicate the same thing. As defined by Bouvier, a "cause" is a contested question before a court of justice; it is a suit or action. Young v. Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co., 55 S. E. 765, 767, 75 S. C. 326, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 501, 9 Ann. Cas. 940.

A "cause" is a case or contested question for a court of justice. United States v. Dola, 177 Fed. 101, 103, 100 C. C. A. 521, 21 Ann. Cas. 665.

The words "case" and "cause" are constantly used as synonymous in statutes and judicial decisions, each meaning a proceeding in court, a suit or action; and a sheriff's fees as inspector of horses, about to be taken out of the state, are not earned in a civil case, within Rev. St. 1899, § 1113, allowing a sheriff certain fees in civil cases from the party to whom the services were rendered. Messenger v. Board of Com'rs of Converse County, 117 Pac. 126, 130, 19 Wyo. 309.

The primary meaning of "case" is "cause" when applied to legal proceedings. It imports a state of facts which furnishes occasion for the exercise of the jurisdiction of a court of justice. In its generic sense, the word includes all causes, special or otherwise. A "case" is a contested question before a court of justice; a suit or action; a "cause"; a state of facts involving a question for discussion or decision, especially a "cause" or suit in court. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 1674, giving the circuit court appellate jurisdiction from judgments of the county courts in all cases not expressly prohibited by law, and section 1788, providing that appeals from the county court shall be prosecuted in the same manner as is provided for the regulation of appeals from justices of the peace to circuit courts, and shall be determined anew without regarding any error or informality in proceedings of the county court, an appeal lies from the county to the circuit court only in judicial cases involving life, liberty, and property, and not in a "case" wherein the county courts acts in an administrative and ministerial capacity, as in revoking a liquor license for the causes and in the manner prescribed by Rev. St. 1899, § 3012, in which no right of life, liberty, or property is involved. Barnett v. Pemiscot County Court, 86 S. W. 575, 576, 111 Mo. App. 693 (quoting and adopting the definition in Black's Law Dict., and citing Robertson v. Baldwin, 17 Sup. Ct. 326, 165 U. S. 275, 41 L. Ed. 715; Calderwood v. Peyser, 42 Cal. 115; Home Ins. Co. v. N. W. Packet Co., 32 Iowa, 223, 7 Am. Rep. 183; Ex parte Towles, 48 Tex. 413; Kundolf v. Thalheimer, 12 N. Y. 596).

The term "cause," in Rev. St. § 828, subd. 10, providing for charging a fee for making dockets, etc., "on the trial or argument of a cause," is synonymous with "case" or "suit," and indicates a proceeding in court. Keatley v. United States, 41 Ct. Cl. 384, 388.

Election contest

The "cause," as used in a statute requiring notice stating the cause of an election contest, is the contestor's "cause of action"—the wrong committed. It is the fact or combination of the facts which gives rise to his right of contest or of action. A notice stating that the contestor made contest on the ground that there were many illegal and fraudulent votes cast for contestee, the names of the voters and precincts wherein they voted being unknown, and that there were many legal votes cast for contestor and not counted for him, the name and precinct being unknown, is insufficient for indefiniteness. Hale v. Stimson, 95 S. W. 885, 888, 198 Mo. 134 (quoting Whitney v. Blackburn, 21 Pac. 874, 17 Or. 564, 11 Am. St. Rep. 857).

Const. art. 5, § 10, providing for a jury trial of all causes in the district court, does not give the right to a trial by a jury in a contest of a local option election, as such a contest is not a "cause" within the meaning of the section. McCormick v. Jester, 115 S. W. 278, 286, 53 Tex. Civ. App. 306.

A contested primary election for the office of sheriff of which the district court is given final jurisdiction is not a "cause" within Const. art. 5, § 10, providing that, in the trial of all causes in the district court, the plaintiff or defendant shall have the right to trial by jury, and hence the right to trial by jury does not obtain as to such contest. Hammond v. Ashe, 131 S. W. 539, 103 Tex. 503.

Habeas corpus

Bouvier's Law Dictionary defines a "cause" as a suit or an action; any question, civil or criminal, contested before a court of justice. Const. Bill of Rights, art. 1 § 15, providing that the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate, and Const. art. 5, § 10, providing that in the trial of all causes in the district court either party shall on application have the right of trial by jury, do not entitle a party to a jury trial in habeas corpus proceeding as a constitutional right. Pittman v. Byars, 112 S. W. 102, 106, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 88.

Issue synonymous

See Issue (In Practice).

Special proceedings

A summary proceeding for the dispossession of a tenant is a "cause" in which equitable defenses and counterclaims may be interposed. Maier v. Edwards, 110 N. Y. Supp. 1083, 1085, 59 Misc. Rep. 488.

An appeal from an order of distribution entered by the court of probate is a "cause" within the meaning of section 16 of the Practice Act (Rev. St. 1903, p. 1402). Ford v. Ford, 117 Ill. App. 502, 508.

Proceedings for the deportation of Chinese persons are not "causes," within Rev. St. § 566, declaring that the trial of issues of fact in the United States District Courts in all causes except cases in equity and cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, etc., shall be by jury. Toy Tong v. United States, 146 Fed. 343-347, 76 C. C. A. 621.

CAUSE AND EFFECT

"Sound philosophy attributes effects to their approximate causes." Osborn v. Bank of United States, 22 U. S. (9 Wheat.) 738, 890, 6 L. Ed. 204.

"It [the word 'effect'] is often used in the sense of acting injuriously upon persons and things." Ryan v. Carter, 93 U. S. 78, 84, 23 L. Ed. 807.

"The consequence of a man's acts are not his acts. Between the consequence and the disclosure that lead to it there may be * * * immediate agencies." Shuey v. United States, 92 U. S. 73, 76, 23 L. Ed. 697.

"Cause" and "consequence" are correlative terms. One implies the other. When an event is followed in natural sequence by a result it is adapted to produce or aid in producing, that result is a consequence of the event, and the event is the result of the cause. Monroe v. Hartford St. Ry. Co., 56 Atl. 498, 501, 76 Conn. 201.

La. Civ. Code, art. 1893, provides that an obligation without a cause can have no effect, and article 1896 defines the word "cause" as the consideration or motive for a contract. Held, that a gratuitous option, by which the grantor agreed, until a certain date, to sell certain land to plaintiff for a specified price, was a mere nudum pactum, and insufficient to sustain an action for breach both under such sections and at common law. Kirby-Carpenter Co. v. Burnett, 144 Fed. 635, 638, 75 C. C. A. 437.

CAUSE OF ACTION

See Claim; Foundation of Action; Inconsistent Causes of Action; Joint Cause of Action; Judgment; New Cause of Action; No Cause of Action; Right of Action; Same Cause of Action; Substantial Cause of Action. Cause of action arising, see Arise—Arising.

Jurists have found it difficult to define the term "cause of action." It is defined as "the right which a party has to institute and carry through a proceeding; the act on the part of the defendant which gives the plaintiff his cause of complaint; a wrong committed or threatened; matter for which an action may be brought; the entire state of facts that give rise to an enforceable claim. The phrase comprises every fact which, if traversed, the plaintiff must prove in order to obtain judgment." Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Wright, 53 S. E. 251, 256, 124 Ga. 596 (quoting 1 Bouv. Law Dict. 295; 1 Stroud, Jud. Dict. [2d Ed.] 275; citing City of Columbus v. Anglin, 48 S. E. 318, 120 Ga. 785).

A "cause of action" is the particular matter for which suit is brought. Rochester Borough v. Kennedy, 78 Atl. 183, 186, 229 Pa. 251.

A "cause of action" consists of the right of the plaintiff, as well as of the injury to that right. Mangum v. Lane City Rice Milling Co. (Tex.) 95 S. W. 605, 606. It signifies plaintiff's primary right, and defendant's wrongful violation thereof. Rice v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 131 S. W. 374, 378, 153 Mo. App. 35; Hales v. Raines, 141 S. W. 917, 162 Mo. App. 46. It is inconceivable separately from the rights which it invades. Telulah Paper Co. v. Patten Paper Co., 112 N. W. 522, 524, 132 Wis. 425. And is not limited to a mere ground on which a recovery may be based. Hales v. Raines, 141 S. W. 917, 920, 162 Mo. App. 46. It accrues where there exists a claim capable of present enforcement, a suable party against whom it may be enforced, and a party who has a present right to enforce it. Barry v. Minahan, 107 N. W. 488, 490, 127 Wis. 570.

A "cause of action" is made up of the contract and its breach. Bay City Iron Works v. Reeves & Co., 95 S. W. 739, 740, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 254.

Strictly "a cause of action" is the wrongful invasion of a private right for which law or equity affords the injured person redress against the wrongdoer; and, whether it be ex contractu or ex delicto, the cause cannot accrue until a wrong has been committed. Sperry v. Cook, 120 S. W. 654, 655, 138 Mo. App. 296.

A "cause of action" cannot exist without the concurrence of a right, a duty, and a default; or, stated differently, an obligation must exist upon one party in favor of the other, the performance of which is refused. Bruner v. Martin, 93 Pac. 165, 166, 76 Kan. 862, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 775, 123 Am. St. Rep. 172, 14 Ann. Cas. 89.

A "cause of action" is the right claimed or wrong suffered by the plaintiff on the one hand and the duty or delict of the defendant on the other. It is not the prayer which constitutes the cause of action, but the facts which authorize relief. In a general sense, the term means a claim which may be enforced; the right to prosecute an action with effect. As thus used it is distinguished from the subject of an action which is what was formerly understood as the subject-matter of the action. Bremen Min. & Mill. Co. v. Bremen, 79 Pac. 806, 812, 13 N. M. 111.

The cause of the injury upon which the right of action is founded is not the "cause of action" itself but is only one element in the cause of action. Parris v. Atlanta, K. & N. Ry. Co., 57 S. E. 692, 694, 128 Ga. 434.

Laws 1911, p. 195, amending Code 1907, § 470, so as to give the circuit court jurisdiction over an election contest as to the office of sheriff, and repealing conflicting laws and going into effect immediately, enacted pending a sheriff election contest before the judge of probate as authorized by Code 1907, § 471, terminates the contest notwithstanding Const. 1901, § 95, providing that, after suit has been commenced on any "cause of action," the Legislature may not take away such cause of action or destroy any existing defense, since a "cause of action" comes into existence when there is an invasion of a legal right without justification or sufficient excuse, while an "action" is a means of redress of the legal wrong described by the words "cause of action" and a "cause of action" within the Constitution, comprehends only causes of action arising out of the violation of vested rights, and does not include the right to a public office; a "public office" being a personal public trust created for the benefit of the state without any element of property. Scheuling v. State (Ala.) 59 So. 160, 161.

In section 5623 of the statute (Comp. Laws 1909), which provides that several causes of action may be united in the same petition, where they arise out of the same transaction, or transactions connected with the same subject of action, the term "cause of action" means a redressible wrong. Its elements being the wrong and the relief provided. The "subject of action" is a primary right and its infringement. The term "transaction" is used in the first clause with reference to, and expressive of, all the acts, or groups of related acts, which go to make up one entire project, system, or deal, referred to as a "transaction," and in the latter clause it is used to include and encompass only such acts, or groups of acts, as in themselves constitute separate, redressible wrongs; and such wrongs (transactions) are connected with the same "subject of action" whenever they affect, grow out of, or constitute separate infringements of, the same primary right. Stone v. Case, 124 Pac. 960, 963, 34 Okl. 5, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1168.

By Rev. St. 1890, § 3622, a homestead is subject to levy on all causes of action existing when it was acquired, etc., and for this purpose such time shall be the date of filing the deed in the proper office for record. Held, that the term "causes of action," as relating to causes founded on contract, refers rather to the contractual obligation than to its breach, the test being whether the obligation was contracted before the filing, and where defendant promised to marry plaintiff in June, 1903, fixing February 24, 1904, as the date of the wedding and purchased a farm in October, 1903, filing the deed for record on February 11, 1904, and six days later married another woman and occupied the farm as a homestead, plaintiff's cause of action for breach of promise accrued within the statute in June, 1903, and not at date of the wedding, and an execution on a judgment obtained by her was leviable on the homestead, even if occupation as such related back to filing the deed. Sperry v. Cook, 120 S. W. 654, 656, 138 Mo. App. 296.

Rev. St. 1909, §§ 6704, 6711, subjects a homestead to levy of execution on all causes of action existing at the time of its acquisition, which is the date of the filing of the homestead deed in the proper office for the record of deeds. Defendant who, in June, 1903, promised to marry plaintiff, and set February 24, 1904, for the wedding, purchased a farm in October, 1903, and filed his deed for record February 11, 1904, and six days later married another woman, and in March occupied the farm as his homestead, and a judgment against him in plaintiff's action for breach of marriage promise was obtained in May following. Held, that while the word "debt," as used in the homestead law, extended its operation to include indebtedness arising out of money obligations not due, a "debt" was an unconditional promise to pay a fixed sum at some specified time, differing from a contract to be performed in the future upon a condition precedent which might never happen; that the term "cause of action" meant matter for which an action might be brought, and accrued when a person first had the right to bring an action; that, even though the property did not become a homestead until after the cause of action upon which process was founded had accrued, plaintiff's cause of action did not accrue when the promise of marriage was made; and hence that the homestead was not subject to execution on her judgment. Sperry v. Cook, 152 S. W. 318, 320, 247 Mo. 132.

A pure accident will not supply a "cause of action." Nave v. Flack, 90 Ind. 205, 210, 46 Am. Rep. 205.

The phrase "cause of action" means the matter for which an action may be brought. The "cause of action" is the wrong. Excelsior Clay Works v. De Camp, 80 N. E. 981, 982, 40 Ind. App. 26 (citing Bonv. Dict. Bliss, Code Pl. § 113).

A "cause of action" is "matter for which an action may be brought. A 'cause of action' is said to accrue to any person when that person first comes to a right to bring an action." Jacobs v. Mexican Sugar Refining Co., 93 N. Y. Supp. 776, 782, 104 App. Div. 242 (quoting Bouv. Law Dict.).

The "cause of action," in suits for damage arising from negligence, is the act done or omitted to be done by the defendant, affecting plaintiff, which causes a grievance for which the law gives a remedy. Lee v. Republic Iron & Steel Co., 89 N. E. 655, 656, 241 Ill. 372.

A "cause of action" is a wrong. It may arise from the refusal to respond to an obligation. It is also defined as a matter for which an action may be brought; the ground on which an action may be sustained and the fact, or combination of facts, which give rise to a right of action. Jerome v. Rust, 122 N. W. 344, 345, 23 S. D. 409.

A "cause of action" arises out of an antecedent primary right and corresponding duty and the breach of the right and duty by the person on whom the duty rests; the primary right and duty and the wrong together constituting the cause of action in the legal sense. McKee v. Dodd, 93 Pac. 854, 855, 152 Cal. 637, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 780, 125 Am. St. Rep. 82.

A "cause of action" arising out of a modification of the contract sued on by plaintiff is within Mills' Ann. St. § 57, subd. 1, providing that a counterclaim may be on a "cause of action" arising out of the transaction set forth in the complaint. Bannerot v. McClure, 90 Pac. 70, 73, 39 Colo. 472, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 126.

An erroneous ruling by the trial court cannot be held to furnish a "cause of action," as that phrase is commonly understood. Act Cong. July 20, 1892, c. 209, 27 Stat. 252, providing that any citizens entitled to commence any action or suit in any court of the United States may commence and prosecute to conclusion any such suit or action, refers to a legal demand by one against another, and not to the rulings of any trial court. Bristol v. United States, 129 Fed. 87, 89, 63 C. C. A. 529.

Where, in an action for injuries to a servant run down by an engine, the complaint alleged that the railroad was negligent in running the engine at an unnecessarily high speed, and in negligently failing to give any signal of the danger or the approach of the engine, the allowance during the trial of an amendment, alleging that the railroad negligently failed to keep a sufficient, or any, lookout for persons on the track, did not change the original cause of action, but merely made the averments of negligence more definite and certain; a "cause of action" being that which produces the necessity for bringing action. Doyle v. Southern Pac. Co., 108 Pac. 201, 211, 58 Or. 495 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1015).

The term "cause of action," in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 4220, providing that where the "cause of action" has arisen in another state or country between nonresidents of the territory, and by the laws of the state or country where the cause of action arose an action cannot be maintained thereon by reason of lapse of time, no action can be maintained thereon in the territory, means "matter for which an action may be brought," "the whole cause of action, * * * every fact which it is necessary to establish in order to support the right to judicial relief." Doughty v. Funk, 84 Pac. 484, 486, 15 Okl. 643, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1029.

A "cause of action" is composed of the right of plaintiff and obligation, duty, or wrong of defendant, and these combined constitute a "cause of action." A "cause of action" set forth in an amended complaint is not a new cause of action where a judgment on the original complaint will bar a judgment on the amended complaint, and where a complaint is bad, and the cause is tried on an amended complaint, the action relates to the time of the commencement of the original suit, and a plea of limitations must be determined as of that date unless the amended pleading states a new cause of action. Ft. Wayne Iron & Steel Co. v. Parsell, 94 N. E. 770, 776, 49 Ind. App. 565.

A "cause of action" is that which produces or affects the results complained of, and the phrase, as used in the statutes fixing the jurisdiction of the courts according to where the cause of action arises, means that which creates the necessity for bringing the action, and arises when that is not done which should have been done, and that is done which should not be done. In re Shaffer's Estate, 76 Atl. 716, 717, 228 Pa. 36.

"The meaning of the phrase 'cause of action' is not so well settled that it is used always in the same sense or with a precise understanding of its significance in modern Codes. Each of several counts in a petition is called a separate cause of action, even when, properly speaking, they all state the same cause of action in different ways to meet the facts as they may be developed on the trial. In such instances there is only one cause of action in the true meaning of the term and a general verdict is good, whereas, when there are several distinct causes of action, it would not be. * * * Various definitions of 'cause of action' are collected in the notes of Pom. Code Proc. (4th Ed.) p. 459, § 346 et seq. The author says in substance, that the term signifies a plaintiff's primary right and the defendant's wrongful violation of that right. This elucidation is the outcome of much thought and analysis of the authorities and looks sound." Litton v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 85 S. W. 978, 981, 111 Mo. App. 140 (citing Campbell v. King, 32 Mo. App. 38; Brownell v. Pacific R. Co., 47 Mo. 239; Owens v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 58 Mo. 394).

Plaintiff, from its office in G. county, by telephone, agreed with defendant's manager at its office in F. county to sell cotton seed delivered f. o. b. in G. county, payable in F. county by draft with bill of lading attached, the seller to pay the freight and to sell cotton seed from other points and divert it to F. county. Rev. St. 1895, art. 1194, subd. 23, provides that a suit against a private corporation may be commenced in any county in which the cause of action arose. Held, that the "cause of action" comprehended the agreement between the parties, its performance by one, and its breach by the other, and that the acts to be done under the agreement constituted a performance in F. county, so that no cause of action "arose" in G. county; and hence that the defendant was entitled to a change of venue. Planters' Cotton Oil Co. v. Whitesboro Cotton Oil Co. (Tex.) 146 S. W. 225, 226.

Within the statute of limitations, an amended complaint sets up a new cause of action composed of the right of plaintiff and the obligation, duty, or wrong of defendant, where the new allegation deprives defendant of any defense he had to the original action, where the evidence that would have proved the original complaint will not prove the new, where the new allegations, if in reply, would have amounted to a departure, where the amended complaint sets up a title not before asserted, or where a judgment on the first complaint would be no bar to a judgment on the amended complaint. Raley v. Evansville Gas & Electric Light Co., 90 N. E. 783, 784, 45 Ind. App. 649.

A "cause of action," as used in Code 1899, c. 50, § 16, providing that the jurisdiction of justices of the peace shall not extend to any action unless the cause of action arose in his county, or the defendant or one of the defendants resides therein or, being a non-resident of the state, is found or has property or effects within the county, means the breach of duty by the defendant complained of as the basis of the action. Roberts v. Hickory Camp Coal & Coke Co., 52 S. E. 182, 184, 53 W. Va. 276 (citing Harvey v. Parkersburg Ins. Co., 16 S. E. 580, 37 W. Va. 272).

Under P. S. 1503, which provides that counts in trespass may be joined with counts in trespass on the case, if for the same cause of action, counts for malicious prosecution and for abuse of process, while distinguishable, stand alike, where joined with a count in trespass and met by demurrer for misjoinder, and a count which alleges in substance that the defendant without cause maliciously sued out a body writ against the plaintiff, and caused him to be arrested thereon and imprisoned, may be joined with a count in trespass for imprisonment, where the injury complained of in each count is the same imprisonment; the "cause of action" referred to in the statute being the fact or facts which give rise to a right of action—the matter for which an action may be brought; and a joinder of counts is not to be tested by the gist of the respective counts joined, but by the gravamen thereof, and, where the substance of the claim made under different counts is the same, identity is sufficiently established, though not alleged, and though the gist of one differs from that of the others. Slayton v. Davis, 81 Atl. 232, 233, 85 Vt. 87.

As facts giving right of action

All the facts which taken together are necessary to fix the responsibility for an injury constitute the "cause of action." Johnson v. American Smelting & Refining Co., 116 N. W. 517, 518, 80 Neb. 255; McAndrews v. Chicago, L. S. & E. Ry. Co., 162 Fed. 856, 858, 89 C. C. A. 546; United States v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 66 Atl. 809, 810, 80 Vt. 84.

"The expression 'cause of action' means the whole cause of action; that is, all the facts which together constitute the plaintiff's right to maintain the action." Parris v. Atlanta, K. & N. Ry. Co., 57 S. E. 692, 694, 128 Ga. 434.

"The cause of action is the statement of facts, upon the happening or nonhappening of which the plaintiff bases his action." Lasalter v. Norfolk & C. R. Co., 48 S. E. 642, 643, 136 N. C. 89, 1 Ann. Cas. 456.

The term "cause of action" signifies the situation or state of facts, entitling one to sustain an action; a right of recovery. Ritter v. Hoy, 55 South. 1034, 1 Ala. App. 643.

A cause of action is the fact or combination of facts which give rise to a grant of action, the existence of which affords a party a right to judicial interference in his behalf. A suit is the pursuit in a court of justice of the remedy to which the party by reason of the existence of the supposed facts believes himself to be entitled. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Larwill, 93 N. E. 619, 621, 83 Ohio St. 106, 84 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1195.

A "cause of action," as the term is used in pleading, is not the name under which a list of facts may be classed, but it consists of the facts giving rise to the action. Where the cause of action set up in an amended bill is wholly distinct from the cause of action set up in the original bill, and the bar of limitations has become complete in the interval between the filing of the two, no relief can be had on the new cause of action set up in the amended bill. In an action to redeem land sold under a trust deed, an amendment alleging that the sale was conducted by a person not authorized in writing by the acting trustee, as required by the deed of trust, which allegation was not included in the original bill, stated a new cause of action. Cox v. American Freehold & Land Mortgage Co. of London, 40 South. 739, 742, 88 Miss. 88 (quoting and adopting definition in Box v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 78 N. W. 604, 107 Iowa, 600).

Under a statute authorizing the joinder of different causes of action in the same complaint, where they arise out of the same transaction or transactions, connected with the same subject of action, the phrase "cause of action" embraces the facts necessary to be pleaded and proved to establish defendant's liability to plaintiff, including the facts which show plaintiff's right, and those which show defendant's violation of that right. McArthur v. Moffett, 128 N. W. 445, 447, 143 Wis. 564, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 264.

"Cause of action" includes every fact necessary for plaintiff to prove to entitle him to succeed, every fact that defendant would have a right to traverse. The terms "right of action" and "cause of action" are equivalents. The term "cause of action" comprehends the right to sue, and implies that there is some person in existence who can assert, and also one who can lawfully be sued, and if one has no legal right to sue, he has no cause of action and not merely a bad cause of action. Walters v. City of Ottawa, 88 N. E. 651, 653, 240 Ill. 259.

A cause of action consists of the facts from which plaintiff's primary right and the defendant's corresponding duty have arisen, together with the facts showing defendant's wrong. American Can Co. v. Stare, 138 N. W. 67, 68, 150 Wis. 627.

Proceedings in error

"Lord Coke defined 'action' to be 'a legal demand of one's right,' and 'cause of action' comprises every fact a plaintiff is obliged to prove in order to obtain judgment, or conversely every fact the defendant would have the right to traverse (Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Dixon, 21 Sup. Ct. 67, 179 U. S. 131, 139, 45 L. Ed. 121, 125). The words 'action' and 'cause of action' are not ordinarily applicable to writs of error." The right to prosecute a writ of error from a Circuit Court of Appeals without giving security for costs is not given by Act July 20, 1892, 27 Stat. 252, c. 200, providing for the prosecution of suits or "actions" in forma pauperis, as that act does not apply to appellate proceedings. Bradford v. Southern Ry. Co., 25 S. Ct. 55, 57, 195 U. S. 243, 49 L. Ed. 178.

Remedy distinguished

A "cause of action" is distinguished from the "remedy," which is simply the means by which the obligation or corresponding action is effectuated, and also from the "relief" sought. Lemon v. Hubbard, 102 Pac. 554, 556, 10 Cal. App. 471.

"Mr. Pomeroy, in his work on Code Remedies, in defining the term 'cause of action' and in distinguishing it from 'the remedy,' at sections 347 and 348 (4th Ed.) says: 'Every judicial action must therefore involve the following elements: A primary right possessed by the plaintiff, and a corresponding primary duty devolving upon the defendant; a delict or wrong done by the defendant which consisted in a breach of such primary right and duty; a remedial right in favor of the plaintiff, and a remedial duty resting on the defendant springing from this delict; and finally the remedy or relief itself. Every action, however complicated or however simple, must contain these essential elements. Of these elements the primary right and duty and the delict or wrong combined constitute the 'cause of action,' in the legal sense of the term, and as it is used in the Codes of the several states. They are the legal cause or foundation whence the right of action springs; this right of action being identical with the 'remedial right,' as designated in my analysis. In accordance with the principles of pleading adopted in the new American system, the existence of a legal right in an abstract form is never alleged by the plaintiff; but, instead thereof, the facts from which that right arises are set forth, and the right itself is inferred therefrom. The 'cause of action,' as it appears in the complaint when properly pleaded, will therefore always be the facts from which the plaintiff's primary right and the defendant's corresponding primary duty have arisen, together with the facts which constitute the defendant's delict or act of wrong. The 'cause of action' thus defined is plainly different from the remedial right and from the remedy or relief itself. The remedial right is the consequence, the secondary right, which springs into being from the breach of the plaintiff's primary right by the defendant's wrong, while the remedy is the satisfaction of this remedial right." Where a complaint alleged the facts in respect to a contract, the performance of services thereunder and breach by defendant, an amendment merely adding a statement as to the reasonable value of the services rendered does not change the cause of action or add a new cause of action, though it allows a recovery on a quantum meruit instead of on an express contract. Casady v. Casady, 88 Pac. 32, 34, 31 Utah, 394.

As right of action

A "cause of action" is the right one has to institute a judicial proceeding. Dillon v. Great Northern R. Co., 100 Pac. 960, 963, 38 Mont. 485; Cohen v. Clark, 119 Pac. 775, 777, 44 Mont. 151.

A cause of action is neither the circumstances that occasioned the suit nor the remedy employed, but a legal right of action. Anderson v. Wetter, 69 Atl. 105, 109, 103 Me. 257, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1003.

The term "cause of action," as used in the statute of limitations, is synonymous with the term "right of action." Paine v. Dodds, 108 N. W. 931, 933, 14 N. D. 189, 116 Am. St. Rep. 674.

The "capacity to sue" is the right to come into court, and differs from a "cause of action," which is the right to relief in court. Howell v. Iola Portland Cement Co., 121 Pac. 346, 347, 86 Kan. 450.

The "accrual of a cause" of action, within the statute of limitations, means the right to sue, and when one person may sue another a cause of action has accrued; a "cause of action" existing in a legal sense when there is such a mature right as may be declared on and maintained, subject only to such valid defenses by which it may be defeated. Port Arthur Rice Mill. Co. v. Beaumont Rice Mills (Tex.) 143 S. W. 926, 928.

The term "cause of action," as used in the statute of limitations, is used, not in the technical sense, but in the popular sense of the right to maintain a particular action against which the statute is invoked; and a cause of action accrues when the holder thereof first obtains the right to resort to that particular form of action for relief. Colonial & U. S. Mortgage Co. v. Northwest Thresher Co., 103 N. W. 915, 920, 14 N. D. 147, 70 L. R. A. 814, 116 Am. St. Rep. 642, 8 Ann. Cas. 1160.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 483, which requires that, when a complaint sets forth two or more causes of action, the statement of facts constituting each cause of action must be separate and numbered, the term "cause of action" is synonymous with the right to bring a suit, and means that where the facts alleged show one primary right of the plaintiff, and one wrong done to him by the defendant which involves that right, that the plaintiff has stated only one cause of action, and hence, in an action by a brakeman against his employer for personal injuries, it is proper for the plaintiff to plead in his complaint as one cause of action facts constituting negligence under the common law, facts constituting negligence under the employer's liability act of the state of New Jersey, and facts constituting negligence under the act of Congress known as the federal employer's liability act, or any two of those grounds of liability. Payne v. New York, S. & W. R. Co., 95 N. E. 19, 21, 201 N. Y. 436.

As separate property

See Separate Property.

As subject-matter

Subject-matter distinguished, see Subject-Matter.

Within the rule that the test of the plaintiff's right to amend his petition is whether the identity of the cause of action is preserved, the phrase "cause of action" means the subject-matter on which the plaintiff grounds his right of recovery, and not the formal statement of facts set forth in the petition. Myers v. Moore, 110 N. W. 989, 990, 78 Neb. 448.

The expression "cause of action" indicates the subject or subject-matter of the action but is meaningless as showing a particular cause of action. A "cause of action," as the term is used in pleading, consists of the facts giving rise to the action. Cox v. American Freehold & Land Mortgage Co., 40 South. 739, 742, 88 Miss. 88 (quoting and adopting definition in Box v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 78 N. W. 694, 107 Iowa, 660).

Subject of action distinguished

See Subject (Of Action).

CAUSE OF DEFENSE

A demurrer that an answer does not state facts sufficient to constitute a ground of defense is sufficient, though the language of the statutes (Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 349) is "cause of defense." Durbin v. Northwestern Scraper Co., 73 N. E. 297, 301, 36 Ind. App. 123.

CAUSE OF INJURY

The "cause of injury" upon which the right of action is founded is not the cause of action itself but is only one element in the cause of action. Parris v. Atlanta, K. & N. Ry. Co., 57 S. E. 692, 694, 128 Ga. 434.

The term "cause of the injury," in N. Y. Laws 1902, c. 600, § 2, providing that no action for recovery of compensation for injury or death shall be maintained unless notice of the time, place, and "cause of the injury" is given to the employer within 120 days, does not mean the same as the cause of the negligent act resulting in the occurrence of the accident but means a definite and precise statement of the cause of the injury. A notice stating that on a certain day, while in defendant's employ on a certain building, two steel columns were placed in a careless position on the temporary bridge two feet above the fourteenth floor, seventeenth tier, that the top one rolled or was pushed off onto plaintiff's leg, breaking it four inches above the knee, was sufficient notice of the "cause of the injury," as well as the cause of the accident, if that be necessary. Hurley v. Olcott, 119 N. Y. Supp. 433, 434, 134 App. Div. 631.

CAUSE OF PROCEEDING

The right to file a petition in error on leave granted to reverse a judgment of the district court is a "cause of proceeding" and is saved by Rev. St. § 79, notwithstanding the act to revise and consolidate the statutes relating to circuit and other courts passed February 7, 1885. O'Donnell v. Downing, 1 N. E. 438, 48 Ohio St. 62 (citing Lafferty v. Shinn, 38 Ohio St. 49; Bode v. Welch, 29 Ohio St. 19, 22).

CAUSE SHOWN

Statutory authority to set aside a decree for "cause shown" does not authorize the vacation of a decree entered by consent. Hyde v. Superior Court, 66 Atl. 292, 296, 28 R. I. 204.

CAUSE TO THE CONTRARY

Where a surviving partner claims and alleges that property claimed by the administrator of the partnership estate is his individual property and does not belong to the partnership, and when cited to appear sets up title to himself, it is showing "cause to the contrary" within B. & C. Comp. § 1134, providing that a surviving partner shall be required by the county court or judge to deliver partnership property to the administrator of the partnership estate, unless he shows cause to the contrary. Harrington v. Jones, 99 Pac. 935, 936, 58 Or. 237.

CAUSING INJURY

Event causing injury, see Event.

CAUSEWAY

Under a statute authorizing a railroad company to erect a bridge or causeway across any navigable rivers, streams, or tidewaters, an embankment across a tidewater creek raised for a passageway over the stream may properly be denominated a "causeway." Rogers v. Kennebec & P. R. R. Co., 35 Me. 319, 324.

CAUTION

See Due Care and Caution; Due Caution; Juratory Caution; Ordinary Caution.

To "caution" means to give notice of danger; to warn against danger. To "caution," as used in the statute, making it unlawful for a minor to enter a place in a coal mine against "caution," or to do any other act whereby lives or the security of the mine, etc., means to give notice of, or warn against, danger. Koppala & Lampe v. State, 93 Pac. 662, 663, 15 Wyo. 398.

An instruction "that the term 'negligence' means the want of that care and prudence which a man of ordinary 'intelligence' would exercise under all the circumstances of the situation" is erroneous, where the case is bottomed on negligence and defended on the ground of contributory negligence, since it does not correctly define the term. "Intelligence" is not a synonym for either "caution," "prudence," or "care." Van Cleve v. St. Louis, M. & S. E. R. Co., 101 S. W. 632, 634, 124 Mo. App. 224.

"If one attempts to pass over a place of danger, the law requires him to exercise 'caution commensurate with the obvious peril'; but this means that the law only requires of the party to exercise ordinary care, the danger and his knowledge thereof considered." Vertrees v. Gage County, 115 N. W. 863, 864, 81 Neb. 213 (quoting and approving City of Beatrice v. Reid, 59 N. W. 770, 41 Neb. 214).

CAUTIOUS

The standard by which the conduct of defendant, in an action for malicious prosecution, should be tested is that of an ordinary cautions and prudent man. The word "cautious," when not so limited, may suggest the idea of timidity, or, as defined secondarily by Webster, "overprudent; fearful; timorous." Jenkins v. Gilligan, 108 N. W. 237-238, 131 Iowa, 176, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1087.

CAVE

As building, see Building (In Criminal Law).

CAVEAT

The "caveat" may be filed by any person who would be injured by the probate of a will, and its function is to prevent probate without the caveator's having an opportunity to be heard. In re Myer's Estate, 64 Atl. 138, 140, 69 N. J. Eq. 798 (citing In re Coursen's Will, 4 N. J. Eq. 409).

"The 'caveat' is a remedy given to prevent a patent from issuing in certain cases where the directions of the law have been violated to the injury of the commonwealth, or where some other person hath a better right." Wilson v. Mason, 5 U. S. (1 Cranch) 45, 101, 2 L. Ed. 29.

The act of April 22, 1858, providing "that the probate by the register of the proper county of any will devising real estate shall be conclusive as to such realty, unless with five years from the date of such probate those interested to controvert it shall by caveat and action at law, duly pursued, contest the validity of such will as to such realty," is badly worded, and hence difficult of comprehension. The framer of the act knew that it would not do to make the probate absolutely conclusive of the execution of the will, that some time must be given within which to contest that execution, but he evidently was not acquainted with the legal forms necessary to reach that end. This is evident from the manner in which he has used the word "caveat," and also that in which he has connected it with the words "and action at law." He evidently regarded a caveat as a means or process for contesting a will, and an action or issue at law as a continuation thereof. Taking this view of the matter—and it is the only one that can be adopted without the rejection of a word which was evidently deemed material by the framer of the act—and the difficulty is of easy solution. Thus, the caveat will then mean the initiatory process, or notice preceding a contest before the register, and the action at law an issue triable in the common pleas, directed by the orphans' court, after an appeal thereto from the decree of the register, and this appeal may be taken, in the ordinary form, at any time within five years. Wilson v. Gaston, 92 Pa. 207, 213, 215 (cited and approved in Appeal of McCort, 98 Pa. 33, 37).

CAVEAT EMPTOR

The maxim of "caveat emptor," based upon the mutuality of the opportunity of investigation by vendor and vendee, is inapplicable to the case of hermetically sealed goods. Tomlinson v. Arnour & Co., 65 Atl. 883, 884, 74 N. J. Law, 274.

The doctrine of "caveat emptor" has no application to cases of actual fraud in representations made by a vendor to a vendee respecting material facts and in the belief of and upon the faith of which the vendee acts. Kell v. Trenchard, 142 Fed. 16, 17, 73 C. C. A. 202.

The maxim "caveat emptor" applies exclusively to a purchaser. He must take care and make due inquiries, or he may not be a bona fide purchaser. He is bound not only by actual, but also by constructive, notice, which is the same in its effect as actual notice. He must look to the title papers under which he buys, and is charged with notice of all the facts appearing upon their face, or to knowledge of which anything there appearing will conduct him. He has no right to shut his eyes or ears to the inlet of information and then say he is a bona fide purchaser without notice. Dennis v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 55 Pac. 210, 215, 20 Wash. 320 (citing Burwell's Adm'r's v. Fauber, 62 Va. [21 Gratt.] 446, Coal Co. v. Doran, 12 Sup. Ct. 239, 142 U. S. 417, 35 L. Ed. 1063); Moore v. Sawyer, 167 Fed. 826, 843 (quoting Simmons Creek Coal Co. v. Doran, 12 Sup. Ct. 246, 142 U. S. 417, 35 L. Ed. 1063, quoting the Virginia Court of Appeals).

The rule of "caveat emptor" applies where the buyer of dairy cows was a competent judge of such property and had full opportunity and ample time for inspection before buying and where there was no express warranty of the fitness of the animals for dairy purposes. Dorsey v. Watkins, 151 Fed. 340, 345.

Where an assignment of certain patents was granted with a condition that, if default was made in payment of any of the installments of the consideration therefor, it should become null and void, and after the assignee granted a license to a third party to use the patents a default was made and a reassignment taken, the license was not a defense to a charge of infringement, since the rule of "caveat emptor" applied, and it was the licensee's duty to inquire into the assignee's right to grant such license. Abbett v. Zusi, 1 Fed. Cas. 9.

The rule of "caveat emptor" applies to sales of choses in action as in other sales of personal property. Hence, if the seller has sold the thing to one person, and therefore has no title to pass to a second, the latter takes nothing by his purchase. The assignee's right of action is without prejudice to any discount, set off, or defense the debtor has before notice of the assignment. Columbia Finance & Trust Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 76 S. W. 156, 158, 116 Ky. 304 (citing Ky. St. § 474; Civ. Code Prac. § 19).

The rule of "caveat emptor" applies with full force and vigor to purchasers of property from trustees, executors, and other persons acting in any fiduciary capacities. Neary v. Neary, 97 N. W. 302, 304, 70 Neb. 319.

The maxim "caveat emptor" applies in the sale of provisions by one dealer to another in the course of general commercial transactions, and hence there is no implied warranty or representation of quality or fitness. Nelson v. Armour Packing Co., 90 S. W. 288, 289, 76 Ark. 352, 6 Ann. Cas. 237 (citing Howard v. Emerson, 110 Mass. 320, 14 Am. Rep. 608; Giroux v. Stedman, 14 N. E. 538, 145 Mass. 439, 1 Am. St. Rep. 472; Benj. Sales [Bennett's 7th Ed.] pp. 661, 661; 2 Mechem, Sales, §§ 1356, 1357; Tiedeman, Sales, § 191).

The maxim "caveat emptor" will apply as to patent defects if the purchaser has full means of knowledge thereof by the exercise of ordinary attention to his business, which requires him to at least look at what he buys as it comes into his possession, or when it is offered to him or within a reasonable time thereafter, so as to observe patent imperfections if there are such. A person is chargeable with knowledge of all that under the circumstances of the case he ought to know, and he is also chargeable with such knowledge as he in fact possesses, whether such possession is the result of the exercise of mere ordinary care or not. Northern Supply Co. v. Wangard, 94 N. W. 785, 786, 117 Wis. 624, 98 Am. St. Rep. 963.

The doctrine of "caveat emptor" rests upon the principle that the purchaser sees, or may see, and know what he buys; and, not demanding an express warranty, it will be conclusively held that he was content to rely upon his own judgment, and, if the goods prove inferior in quality, the purchaser has no remedy, but must bear the loss himself. It may be said, however, that when chattels are sold generally for all purposes to which they are adapted, and the seller is not the manufacturer or producer, and the property is in existence and may be inspected by the buyer, and there is no fraud on the part of the seller, the maxim "caveat emptor" applies, even though defects exist in the goods which are not discoverable on examination. Oil Well Supply Co. v. Watson, 80

N. E. 157, 158, 168 Ind. 608, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 868.

Under the doctrine of "caveat emptor," which applies to purchases in open market, one who purchases in open market does so at his own risk and peril and is liable to the true owner of the property purchased, if the seller and ostensible owner is not the true owner. Schmidt v. Rankin, 91 S. W. 78, 84, 193 Mo. 254.

In judicial sales

A purchaser at a sheriff's sale or a commissioner's sale is a "purchaser in invitum," and the doctrine of caveat emptor applies in its full force. Wells v. Gay, 46 South. 497, 98 Miss. 268.

The rule of caveat emptor applies with full force to purchases at judicial or quasi judicial sales, and the purchaser acquires only the title of defendant to the process. Winter, Loeb & Co. v. Montgomery Cooperage Co., 53 South. 905, 907, 169 Ala. 628.

The rule of "caveat emptor" applies to judicial sales. A sheriff's deed made in pursuance of a sale of a debtor's homestead, which at the time of the levy is occupied as such by the debtor and his family, the judgment running against the husband individually, will not divest the debtor of his title to the homestead nor invest the purchaser with any title thereto. Van Doren v. Weideman, 94 N. W. 124, 127, 68 Neb. 243, 110 Am. St. Rep. 419.

"The maxim of 'caveat emptor' unquestionably applies to a sale under execution, and the purchaser ordinarily acquires no better title than the debtor could have conveyed at the time the lien attached." Rippe v. Badger, 101 N. W. 642, 125 Iowa, 725, 106 Am. St. Rep. 836.

"Caveat emptor" means "let the purchaser beware." The doctrine is applicable to its full extent to a purchaser of land for taxes. State Finance Co. v. Beck, 109 N. W. 357, 359, 15 N. D. 374.

The maxim "caveat emptor" applies to the purchaser at a tax sale, and, in the absence of statute in terms giving him a remedy for the recovery of his investment, he cannot recover the taxes paid from the taxpayer. Mitchell v. Minnequa Town Co., 92 Pac. 678, 41 Colo. 367.

"A purchaser at a court sale purchases under the rule 'caveat emptor' (look out, buyer)." On a summary proceeding to sell an infant's interest in land, the rule applies. The court sold only such title as the infants had. The purchasers purchased at their own risk and were held to know the source and condition of the title. Headley v. Hoopen-garner, 55 S. E. 744, 750, 60 W. Va. 626.

The maxim "caveat emptor" is usually applied with strictness to the purchases of goods at execution sale. Hancock v. Shockman, 69 S. W. 826, 828, 4 Ind. T. 138 (quoting and adopting definition in Rodgers v. Smith, 2 Ind. 526).

In sales of land

The maxim "caveat emptor" did not prevent a purchaser of land, who did not know the extent of an acre as it appears on the ground, from relying on the vendor's representation as to the number of acres in the tract. Sipola v. Winship, 66 Atl. 962, 967, 74 N. H. 240.

CAVIAR

Dutiable as an article preserved for food, see Preservation—Preserved.

CAVING

The falling of a "nigger-head," which is a large hard substance found in coal, or partly in the coal, and partly in the walls, is such a "caving in" as the statute requires mine owners or operators to furnish timbers to guard against. Pachko v. Wilkeson Coal & Coke Co., 90 Pac. 436, 437, 46 Wash. 422.

CEASE

CEASE TO ACT

By refusing to act in a particular case, an attorney does not "cease to act" as such, within a statute which provides that, where an attorney dies, or is removed, or suspended, or ceases to act as such, his client should be entitled to appoint another attorney within 30 days before further proceeding in the case. People ex rel. Coon v. Plymouth Plank Road Co., 32 Mich. 248, 250.

CEASE TO BE OPERATED

A fire policy covering a mill plant for the manufacture of flour and other feed products stipulated that the entire policy should be void if the manufacturing establishment ceased to be operated for more than 10 consecutive days. The mill was not operated for the manufacture of flour when the policy was issued and for a longer period than 10 days thereafter, but was, at the issuance of the policy and afterward until the property was destroyed, operated in the manufacture of meal, bran, and other feed products. Held, that the establishment had not ceased operation within the meaning of the policy. Capital Fire Ins. Co. v. Carroll, 109 Pac. 535, 538, 26 Okl. 286.

CEASE TO EMPLOY

In a contract between an employer and a labor union, whereby the employer agreed to employ for a certain period only members of a union in good standing and "cease to employ any one and all those employes who are not in good standing" in such union, the phrase "cease to employ" is merely a euphemism for the word "discharge." Jacobs v. Cohen, 76 N. E. 5, 11, 183 N. Y. 207.

2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 292, 111 Am. St. Rep. 730, 5 Ann. Cas. 280.

CEASE TO OCCUPY

Where the owner of a homestead left it from November 10th to May 10th, leaving the house furnished substantially as it was when he and his wife were living therein, and the house during their absence was left in charge of a neighbor, who took care of it, and the owner acquired no other home during his absence, he did not cease to occupy his homestead, within Rev. Laws 1905, § 3458. Jaenicke v. Fountain City Drill Co., 119 N. W. 60, 106 Minn. 442.

CEDE

As purchase, see Purchase.

CELESTIAL MARRIAGE

Under the doctrine of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, commonly known as the Mormon Church, marriages celebrated and solemnized by mere civil authority and with only the sanction of the law are regarded as marriages for time only, while a marriage solemnized by a duly constituted church authority or "by the Holy and Eternal Priesthood of the Saints" is designated a "celestial or patriarchal marriage" binding not only during this life but throughout the life to come. As used in Const. art. 6, § 3, disqualifying as voters, jurors, or officers, among others, one who is a bigamist, polygamist, or living in what is known as patriarchal or celestial marriage, the words "bigamous," "polygamous," "plural," "celestial," and "patriarchal" marriages were meant and intended to prohibit and forbid any man having more than one wife at one time under whatever name or designation he might choose to style his marriage; and the use of each of these words was directed against bigamous and polygamous marriages. The "celestial" or "patriarchal" marriage, in order to come within the prohibition of the Constitution, must be "bigamous" or "polygamous." One who teaches or practices having more than one wife at any one time or belonging to an organization teaching such doctrine is disqualified for the duties of an elector, and consequently for holding any civil office within the laws of the state, but it is not intended by the Constitution to interfere with the religious beliefs and opinions of any one. Toncray v. Budge, 95 Pac. 26, 38, 14 Idaho, 621.

CELLAR

As building, see Building (In Criminal Law).

The "cellar" on the truck of a railway car or engine is a receptacle placed underneath the bearing of the axle for the purpose of keeping the bearing properly oiled while in motion. Crow v. Houck's Missouri & A. Ry. Co., 111 S. W. 583, 585, 212 Mo. 589.

Tenement House Act (4 Comp. St. 1910, p. 5321) § 10, defines a "cellar" as a storeroom more than one-half below the level of the curb. Board of Tenement House Supervision of New Jersey v. Schlechter, 83 Atl. 783, 784, 83 N. J. Law, 88.

Under N. Y. Tenement House Act (Laws 1901, c. 334, § 91, subd. 8), defining a "cellar" as a story more than one-half below the level of the curb, rooms which are more than one-half below the level of the curb are contained in a "cellar" although they are more than one-half above the surface of an adjoining sunken court. People ex rel. Cohen v. Butler, 109 N. Y. Supp. 900, 904, 125 App. Div. 384.

CELLULAR BOX

A "cellular box," used in photographers' cameras, is one containing several cells, in each of which a separate exposure may be made. Mahoney v. Jenkins, 138 Fed. 404, 405, 70 C. C. A. 662.

CEMENT

See Asphaltic Cement; Natural Cement.

Portland cement is the slow-setting product of a high temperature kiln burning, a pulverized cement rock or mixture of clay and limestone of a very exact and regular composition. Natural cement is the quick-setting product of a low temperature kiln burning, a cement rock of irregular composition. Donaldson v. Roksament Stone Co., 170 Fed. 192, 193.

CEMETERY

Actually used for cemetery, see Actually Used.

As graveyard, see Graveyard.

As purely public charity, see Purely Public Charity.

CEMETERY ASSOCIATION

As business corporation, see Business Corporation.

As charity, see Charity.

CEMETERY CORPORATION

As charitable institution, see Charitable Institution.

CEMETERY LAND

A statute exempting from sale under execution the "cemetery lands" and property of cemetery associations applies only to land of the association actually brought into use as a cemetery, though another act authorizes the holding of 125 acres for cemetery purposes. Spear v. Locust Wood Cemetery Co., 66 Atl. 1068, 1070, 72 N. J. Eq. 821.

CEMETERY PURPOSES

A tract of land purchased by an incorporated cemetery association for cemetery purposes and platted into lots for such purposes is "used exclusively for cemetery purposes," within the statute exempting from taxation the property used exclusively for cemetery purposes belonging to a cemetery association organized upon a basis whereby the association cannot derive pecuniary profit. Oak Hill Cemetery Co. v. Wells, 78 N. E. 350, 351, 38 Ind. App. 479.

The phrase "cemetery and burial purposes only" in a certificate of incorporation of a cemetery company did not warrant making a gift of money to a church organization whose members, or some of them, were also members of the company. Clark v. Rahway Cemetery Co., 61 Atl. 261, 262, 69 N. J. Eq. 631.

CENSUS

See Subsequent Census.

A "census" of a city is an official enumeration of inhabitants with details of sexes, age, and family. It is a public document to be preserved in the archives of the city rather than a mere sum total of inhabitants. The census required by Rev. St. 1899, § 3028, 6300, providing for taking the census of cities, means an official enumeration of the inhabitants and a public record thereof. State ex rel. Ryan v. Wooten, 122 S. W. 1101, 1103, 139 Mo. App. 221 (quoting and adopting the definition in 6 Cyc. p. 725).

CENTAVO

The Spanish word "centavo" is said to be in Spanish and in South American countries a copper cent or nickel coin in value six-tenths of a cent (actual) and one cent (nominal); the one-hundredth of a peso. Serralles' Succession v. Esbri, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 176, 179, 200 U. S. 103, 50 L. Ed. 391.

CENTER

See Wood Centers.

See, also, Middle.

Under a deed calling to the "center of the lake," every abutting property owner on the lake is entitled to the land under water of the land in front of his premises to the thread of the lake which passes through the center of the lake, along its longest diameter, if there be no outlet or inlet. Calkins v. Hart, 118 N. Y. Supp. 1049, 64 Misc. Rep. 149.

CENTER LINE

"Public roads and highways, also railroads, are regarded as having three lines: The 'center line,' which is usually the line surveyed when the road is laid out, and on each side of which the road is laid; the two side lines, at equal distances from the center line, and between which lies the territory covered by the road. When, in a conveyance of real estate adjoining a highway, such highway is referred to as constituting a boundary, the center line will be held to be the boundary so referred to, unless the language used in so referring to it shows clearly that a side line, instead of the center, was intended." Couch v. Texas & P. Ry. Co., 107 S. W. 872, 873, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 188 (quoting and adopting definition in Maynard v. Weeks, 41 Vt. 617).

CENTIMETER-GRAM-SECOND SYSTEM

Units of electrical force and volume have been fixed by law with reference to what is known as the "centimeter-gram-second system," generally referred to as the "C. G. S. system." This system was adopted with reference to length, expressed by the centimeter, mass, expressed by the gram, and time, expressed by the second. These are the fundamental units of scientific work. Peoria Waterworks Co. v. Peoria Ry. Co., 181 Fed. 990, 1001.

CENTRAL

The term "central" means at or near the center. A bicycle bell described as centrally pivoted in an application for a patent does not necessarily mean that it is pivoted in the exact center. Nutter v. Mossberg, 128 Fed. 55, 57.

CENTRAL LINE OF ROADWAY

The rule declared in an ordinance requiring vehicles to turn to the right to enable each other to pass without collision is the same as that prescribed in Rev. St. 1899, § 9458, and means that when two vehicles meet, going in opposite directions, the driver of each must drive to the right of the "central line of the roadway," which line is the one that bisects the middle line of the usable road, and is not necessarily the middle line of a paved or dedicated street, and where, on account of obstructions, a part thereof is made impassable, the statute refers to the remaining passable way. Harmon v. Fowler Packing Co., 108 S. W. 610, 611, 129 Mo. App. 715.

CENTRALLY

The word "centrally" does not necessarily mean in the exact center. Bredin v. Solmson, 132 Fed. 161, 162. And a claim for a patented weather strip is not infringed because it described a rib as located centrally with reference to the base, while in the other device the rib is either more to one side of the center of the base, on one side, or sometimes may be omitted altogether. M. Solmson & Co. v. Bredin, 136 Fed. 187, 189, 69 C. C. A. 203.

CERTAIN

See Reasonably Certain; Uncertain.

The word "certain," as used in Cr. Code 1902, § 1, providing that, upon view of felony committed or upon certain information that a felony has been committed, any person may arrest the felon and take him to a judge or magistrate, is used in the sense of trustworthy, capable of being depended upon, credible, positive, or reliable, and has reference to the evidence or information upon which the person making the arrest is allowed to act and not to the actual fact that a felony has been committed. State v. Griffin, 54 S. E. 603, 604, 74 S. C. 412.

"Certain" is defined in Webster's Dictionary as meaning free from doubt. A charge that if a passenger's sickness was not the result of her being put off the train, and that it was "reasonably certain" to have resulted from other causes, the carrier is not liable is erroneous as requiring proof beyond reasonable doubt. St. Louis, A. & T. Ry. Co. v. Burns, 9 S. W. 467, 468, 71 Tex. 479, 481.

As capable of being rendered certain

"The law regards that as 'certain' which is capable of being ascertained and definitely fixed. Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Tennessee, 14 Sup. Ct. 968, 972, 153 U. S. 497, 38 L. Ed. 793.

"That is 'certain' which is by necessary reference made certain." United States v. Smith, 18 U. S. (5 Wheat.) 153, 159, 5 L. Ed. 57.

CERTAIN ASCERTAINED MEMBERSHIP

The meaning of a finding that a society has had at all said times "a certain ascertained membership" is that an organization exists sufficiently formed to take; i. e., the number at any time could be determined, not necessarily the same persons, but as "having at all times a certain ascertained membership." In re Merchant's Estate, 77 Pac. 475, 476, 143 Cal. 537.

CERTAIN, DEFINITE, AND ASCERTAINED AMOUNT

A judgment for a specified sum, with interest from a designated date, and costs taxed at a specified amount, is a judgment for a "certain, definite, and ascertained amount." Thomas v. Mariner, 66 Atl. 99, 100, 5 Pennewill, 571.

CERTAINTY

See Moral Certainty; Reasonable Certainty.

"Certainty" is the quality of being established beyond doubt, and the phrases "to a moral and reasonable certainty" and "beyond a reasonable doubt," as applied to the quality of proof in a case, are identical in meaning. Austin v. State, 64 S. E. 670, 6 Ga. App. 211.

The certainty required in an award is certainty to a common intent, not to a certain intent in general, or in every particular, but certainty which is attained by giving to the words their ordinary sense; not excluding, however, any meaning derived from fair argument or inference. Clark Millinery Co. v. National Union Fire Ins. Co., 75 S. E. 944, 948, 160 N. C. 130.

"Certainty," as applied to the law of damages, means freedom from doubt, and as "reasonable certainty" and "reasonable probability" bear no resemblance to each other, plaintiff, in an action for personal injuries, while entitled to recover for such future suffering and injury as she proves to be reasonably probable, is not required to prove such future injuries and suffering by testimony reasonably certain or free from doubt. Johnson v. Connecticut Co., 83 Atl. 530, 531, 85 Conn. 438.

"'Certainty' means the absence of doubt," and reasonable "certainty" is not to be required in an instruction as to the future pain and suffering which plaintiff can recover for; a reasonable probability being all that is necessary. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. of Texas v. Hawkins, 108 S. W. 736, 741, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 545 (quoting and adopting definition in Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. v. Harriett, 15 S. W. 558, 80 Tex. 73).

A contract that is incomplete, uncertain, or indefinite in its material terms will not be specifically enforced in equity. Following the general principles of equity, there is required a greater degree of "certainty" and definiteness for specific performance than to obtain damages at law. For specific performance is required that degree of "certainty" which leaves in the mind of the chancellor or court no reasonable doubt as to what the parties intended and no reasonable doubt of the specific thing equity is to compel done. The element of completeness denotes that the contract embraces all the material terms; that of "certainty" denotes that each one of these terms is expressed in a sufficiently exact and definite manner. An incomplete contract, therefore, is one from which one or more material terms have been entirely omitted. An uncertain contract is one which may, indeed, embrace all the material terms, but one or more of them is expressed in so inexact, indefinite, or obscure language that the intent of the parties cannot be sufficiently ascertained to enable the court to carry it into effect. Van Dyke v. Norfolk So. R. Co., 72 S. E. 659, 665, 112 Va. 835 (citing 6 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 764).

The "certainty" required in declaration, or plea, is such a statement of the facts constituting the cause of action or ground of defense as will enable them to be understood by the party answering them, the jury, and the court, and Code 1907, § 5321, enjoining brevity consistent with perspicuity, and the presentation of facts so intelligibly that a material issue in law or fact can be taken thereon by the adverse party, does not impair the substance of this requirement. Weller & Co. v. Camp, 52 South. 929, 930, 169 Ala. 275, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1106.

"Certainty in an indictment" means that the facts constituting the basis of the prosecution must be stated with such a degree of explicitness and detail that the accused may understand without reasonable hesitation exactly what charge he is called upon to meet and may prepare his defense with a view thereto; that he may be entitled to plead the judgment in bar of a second prosecution for the same offense; and that the court may be informed of the facts alleged so as to determine whether they are sufficient in law to support a conviction, should one be had. These objections being general, there is no difference in respect to the "certainty" required between the common-law offenses and statutory crimes, though in the forms of pleading there may be important differences. An indictment under Code 1890, c. 32, § 19, for keeping and maintaining a common and public nuisance, which alleges merely that the defendant "in the house and building in said city knowingly and unlawfully permitted intoxicating liquors to be sold and vended contrary to law," was insufficient. State v. Parkersburg Brewing Co., 45 S. E. 924, 925, 53 W. Va. 591 (quoting and adopting Black, Intox. Liq. § 437).

CERTIFICATE

See Beneficiary Certificate; False Certificate; Fraudulent Certificate; Gold Certificate; Improvement Certificate; Land Certificate; Patent Certificate; Registration Certificate; Tax Certificate; Without a Certificate.

A "certificate" is "a writing giving assurance that a thing has or has not been done; * * * that a fact exists or does not exist." Cook v. Ziff Colored Masonic Lodge, No. 119, 96 S. W. 618, 620, 80 Ark. 31 (quoting and approving definition in Anderson's Law Dict.).

A "certificate" is defined as "a written testimony to the truth of any fact; a written declaration legally authenticated"; and as "a writing giving assurance that a thing has or has not been done, that an act has or has not been performed." Popularly the term "certificate" would import a document in which the officer issuing the same purports to state on his own authority that certain acts have been done. Dolan v. United States, 133 Fed. 441, 449, 69 C. C. A. 274 (quoting and adopting the definitions in Webster's and Anderson's Law Dict.).

A "certificate" is, strictly speaking, a certain assurance of that which it states. A writing certifying that a person therein named is competent to pay a certain sum and recommending him as possessing credit to that extent is as to the competency of the person to pay a certificate and as to his credit a recommendation. Lord v. Colley, 6 N. H. 99, 103, 25 Am. Dec. 445.

Under Civ. Code 1895, §§ 5526, 5541, providing that exceptions pendente lite must be not only tendered within the time prescribed by statute but, if allowed in the trial court, also "certified" to be true by the judge and ordered to be placed on the record, merely granting leave to file a paper or ordering that it be made a part of the record does not amount to a "certificate" verifying the case. Binyard v. State, 55 S. E. 498, 126 Ga. 635 (citing Howard v. Chamberlin, 64 Ga. 684, 694, and Nacoochee Hydraulic Mining Co. v. Davis, 40 Ga. 309).

A document made by a deputy surveyor, which is usually called a survey, is in fact a certificate under his hand that he has surveyed such and such a tract for the person named, and such a document is properly termed a "certificate." General Proprietors Eastern Division of New Jersey v. Force, 68 Atl. 914, 928, 72 N. J. Eq. 56.

An instrument issued by a lodge and denominated therein a "certificate," but which was a perfectly plain written engagement to pay a certain sum of money, absolutely and unconditionally, within a specified time, contained all the requisites of a promissory note and should be deemed such. Greenwood Lodge No. 135, Ancient and Accepted Masons, v. Priebsatsch, 35 South. 427, 83 Miss. 120.

A certificate in shorthand attached to the shorthand report of a trial, signed by the judge and reporter, and filed with the clerk, is not a certificate within Code, §§ 3675, 3749, 3752, 3753, requiring the report of trial to be certified by the judge and reporter, etc., shorthand characters not being "writing." Howerton v. Augustine, 132 N. W. 814, 815, 153 Iowa, 17.

The word "certificate," as used in Act March 11, 1903, relating to the appropriation of public waters, and regulating the issuance of a certificate and license after inspection by the state engineer, applies to the paper to be issued upon proof of the completion of the works. Idaho Power & Transp. Co. v. Stephenson, 101 Pac. 821, 823, 16 Idaho, 418.

"A 'certificate' under seal, when invested with legal force and effect, is a solemn instrument, and ought to be complete, certain, and final in itself, without any collateral addition or commentary. Its very form and character as a certificate presuppose that it has the verification and protection of the authenticating signature and seal. Any matter extraneous, that is, not contained in the body of the instrument, has not this verification and protection." Merrell v. Tice, 104 U. S. 557, 561, 26 L. Ed. 854.

A "certificate" of a justice of an acknowledgment by the mortgagee of an instrument reciting payment and satisfaction of a mortgage canceling and discharging the same and releasing and quitclaiming to the mortgagor the premises conveyed, is a "certificate" in relation to a matter wherein such certificate may be received as legal proof within the meaning of Gen. St. 1860, c. 162, §§ 1, 2, making the forging and uttering of such certificate a punishable offense. Meserve v. Commonwealth, 137 Mass. 109, 111.

A map on which a deceased surveyor, who was not acting in any public station or interest, had stated in writing the measurements of a mill dam has no validity as a "certificate" so as to be admissible as original evidence in a private controversy, and the calling it a certificate cannot change its character or clothe it with official solemnity. Runk v. Ten Eyck, 24 N. J. Law, 756, 761, 762.

A United States Land Office receiver's receipt for purchase money of lands preempted is a sufficient "certificate" under Code Civ. Proc. § 1925, to constitute prima facie evidence of title, though it does not contain the word "certify." Witcher v. Conklin, 24 Pac. 302, 84 Cal. 499.

Laws 1841, c. 44, § 6, required every notary public to record at length all acts, protests, and other things by him noted or done in his official capacity, and required that all copies or certificates by him granted should be under his hand and notarial seal. Section 12 made the protest of any foreign or inland bill or note, duly certified by any notary under his hand and official seal, legal evidence of the facts stated in such protest, etc. Held, that the word "certificate" in section 6 is equivalent to the word "protest" in section 12, when it is under the hand and seal of the notary. Ticonic Bank v. Stackpole, 41 Me. 302, 305.

The warehouse receipts authorized to be issued under the State Warehouse Act (Laws 1912, p. 707) are not "scrip, certificates, or other evidence of state indebtedness" within the meaning of Const. art. 10, § 7, restricting the issuance of such paper. State ex rel. Lyon v. State Warehouse Commission, 75 S. E. 392, 396, 92 S. C. 81.

Clearing house certificate as personal property, see Personal Property.

Land certificate as personal property, see Personal Property.

Warrant

A mere "warrant" locatable on any public land cannot be considered as the equivalent of a "certificate of entry" or receiver's receipt showing that the applicant has paid for a particular tract of land and is entitled to a patent therefor. J. W. Frellsen & Co. v. Crandall, 45 South. 558, 559, 120 La. 712.

Under Sand. & H. Dig. Ark. § 5273, which provides that each city council shall cause to be provided for its clerk's office a seal, which seal shall be affixed to all transcripts, orders, or certificates which it may be necessary or proper to authenticate under the provisions of this act, a city warrant is not a "certificate." Condon v. City of Eureka Springs, 185 Fed. 566, 571.

CERTIFICATE HOLDER

In a certificate in an Illinois Mutual Benefit Society authorizing the "certificate holder" to surrender his certificate by paying the association all claims thereunder and returning the same to the secretary, the term "certificate holder" represented the member and not the beneficiary. Hence the beneficiary had no vested interest in the certificate under the Illinois law. Franklin Life Ins. Co. v. Morrell, 106 S. W. 680, 681, 84 Ark. 511.

CERTIFICATE OF CITIZENSHIP

A certified copy of the record of a court showing the admission of an alien to citizenship constitutes a "certificate of citizenship," within the meaning of Rev. St. §§ 5425, 5427, making it a crime to use, or aid and abet another in using, false certificates of citizenship for purposes therein specified. Dolan v. United States, 133 Fed. 440, 447, 69 C. C. A. 274.

CERTIFICATE OF DEPOSIT

A "certificate of deposit" is a subsisting chose in action, and represents the fund it describes, so that a delivery of it, as a gift, constitutes an equitable assignment of the fund. Philpot v. Temple Banking Co., 60 S. E. 480, 483, 3 Ga. App. 742.

As negotiable instrument

A certificate of deposit in ordinary form is a "negotiable instrument," within the provisions of the Pennsylvania negotiable instrument act of 1901 (P. L. 194). Forrest v. Safety Banking & Trust Co., 174 Fed. 345, 347.

Under Laws 1906, p. 243, providing that an instrument, to be negotiable, must be in writing and signed by the maker or drawer, contain an unconditional promise or order to pay a sum certain in money, be payable on demand or at a fixed future time, be payable to order or to bearer, and where the instrument is addressed to a drawee he must be indicated with reasonable certainty, a certificate of deposit issued by a bank, payable to the order of the payee, is a "negotiable instrument." Dickey v. Adler, 127 S. W. 593, 594, 143 Mo. App. 328.

As promissory note

See Promissory Note.

CERTIFICATE OF ELECTION

The term "commission," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 1127, providing that whenever an election is annulled or set aside by the judgment of a superior court, and no appeal has been taken within ten days thereafter, the commission, if any is issued, is void and the office vacant, included a "certificate of election" issued to petitioner as superintendent of schools, so that, on no appeal being taken within ten days after judgment, declaring petitioner's certificate of election invalid in a contest regularly instituted, as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1111-1127, the judgment rendered petitioner's certificate finally ineffectual as evidence of title to the office. Wilson v. Fisher, 82 Pac. 421, 442, 148 Cal. 13 (citing People ex rel. Finigan v. Perkins, 28 Pac. 245, 85 Cal. 509, 512; People ex rel. Barker v. Shaver, 59 Pac. 784, 127 Cal. 347, 350; Bledsoe v. Colgan, 70 Pac. 924, 138 Cal. 34, 86, 89).

CERTIFICATE OF IDENTIFICATION

The certificate of the trial judge certifying to the different papers and documents used upon a motion to dismiss an appeal from a justice's court, though incorporated in the record and designated as a bill of exceptions, is not strictly a bill of exceptions, but is a certificate of identification under the statute as to the papers used upon the motion, and being such, it was unnecessary to serve the same upon counsel for respondent. Libby v. Spokane Valley Land & Water Co., 98 Pac. 715, 717, 15 Idaho, 487.

CERTIFICATE OF INSURANCE

In benefit society as life insurance contract, see Life Insurance.

As property, see Property.

CERTIFICATE OF NOMINATION

The phrase "certificate of nomination for a new party," as used in Laws 1907, c. 52, § 40, providing for the filing of "certificate of nomination for a new party," construed to mean the necessary certificate when nominated by convention and not by direct primary. Morrissey v. Wait, 138 N. W. 186, 188, 92 Neb. 271.

An act incorporating a city providing for caucuses for the selection of candidates to be voted for at the first election, and that all "certificates of nomination" of candidates shall be filed at least nine days before the first election, merely provides for the filing of certificates of nomination at caucuses; and Gen. Laws 1909, c. 11, § 18, providing for the filing of "certificates of nomination" and "nomination papers," governs as to the filing of nomination papers, since the statutes by long usage make certificates of nomination refer to nominations by caucuses, while nomination papers, relate to nominations by individual voters. Greenough v. Waterman, 75 Atl. 865, 868, 30 R. I. 447.

CERTIFICATE OF ORDER OF TRANSFER

As used in a statute relating to appeals requiring "certificate of the order of transfer," those words probably meant a certified copy of transfer. Finley v. Chamberlin, 35 South. 1, 3, 46 Fla. 581.

CERTIFICATE OF PROBABLE CAUSE

"Originally a supersedeas was a writ directed to an officer commanding him to desist from enforcing the execution of another writ which he was about to execute or which might come into his hands. In modern times the term is often used synonymous with a stay of proceedings which of itself suspends the enforcement of a judgment." In Oregon a writ of supersedeas is unknown, though a "certificate of probable cause" issued by the trial judge or by a justice of the Supreme Court is tantamount thereto, the effect of which is to suspend the enforcement of the judgment until it can be reviewed on appeal. State v. Small, 90 Pac. 1110, 1111, 49 Or. 595 (quoting Dulin v. Pac. Wood & Coal Co., 33 Pac. 123, 98 Cal. 304, 306; citing State v. Armstrong, 74 Pac. 1025, 45 Or. 25).

CERTIFICATE OF SALE

The informal instruments executed by the tax collector under La. Act No. 42 of 1871, § 62, are known in the law of tax sales as "certificates of sale" in contradistinction to "deeds of sale." Such an instrument was not a title but was mere inchoate title. Gauthreaux v. Theriot, 46 South. 892, 898 121 La. 871, 126 Am. St. Rep. 328 (citing Cooley, Tax, [3d Ed.] p. 992).

CERTIFICATE OF STOCK

"Certificates of stock" are the evidence representing shares of stock which are chosen in action. Talbot v. Talbot, 78 Atl. 535, 543, 32 R. I. 72, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1221.

"Certificates of stock" are mere evidences that the holders thereof have invested the sums called for in the certificates in the enterprise. Rider v. John G. Delker & Sons Co., 140 S. W. 1011, 1012, 145 Ky. 634, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1007.

A stock certificate is merely evidence, and does not itself constitute the right of a stockholder. New York & Eastern Telegraph & Telephone Co. v. Great Eastern Telephone Co., 69 Atl. 528, 531, 74 N. J. Eq. 221.

A "certificate of stock" is the written evidence of the right of a party to a pro rata share of the net profits of a corporation when declared, or to a like share of the assets after payment of its debts in case of dissolution of the corporation. Beckwith v. Galice Mines Co., 93 Pac. 453, 456, 50 Or. 542, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 723.

"Shares of stock" represent an interest in the earnings and property of the corporation and a "certificate" is not stock itself, but only a convenient representation of it, as one may be a stockholder without having a certificate issued to him. In re Culver's Estate, 123 N. W. 743, 744, 145 Iowa, 1, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 384.

A "stock certificate" is merely a muniment or representative of title. The stock which it represents exists apart from the certificate, and its existence is contemplated to endure so long as the corporation continues. Zander v. New York Security & Trust Co., 70 N. E. 449, 451, 178 N. Y. 208, 102 Am. St. Rep. 492.

A "stock certificate" is merely evidence and does not itself constitute the right of a stockholder. New York & Eastern Telegraph & Telephone Co. v. Great Eastern Telephone Co., 69 Atl. 528, 531, 74 N. J. Eq. 221.

A stock certificate is a written acknowledgment by a corporation of the interest of the shareholder in the corporate property, and is evidence of his ratable share in the distribution of the assets of the corporation on the winding up of its business. Markle v. Burgess, 95 N. E. 308, 309, 178 Ind. 25.

A "certificate of stock" representing the share of the owner may be in the hands of some person other than the debtor or the corporation, but the certificate is not the share itself. For most purposes it is not regarded as property but only as evidence of the existence and ownership of the shares. Lipscomb's Adm'r v. Condon, 49 S. E. 392, 393, 395, 56 W. Va. 416, 67 L. R. A. 670, 107 Am. St. Rep. 938 (citing 10 Cyc. 588; Cecil Nat. Bank v. Watontown Bank, 105 U. S. 217, 222, 26 L. Ed. 1039; Crumlish's Adm'r v. Shenandoah Val. R. Co., 22 S. E. 90, 40 W. Va. 627; Pacific Nat. Bank v. Eaton, 11 Sup. Ct. 984, 141 U. S. 227, 234, 35 L. Ed. 702; First Nat. Bank of Davenport v. Gifford, 47 Iowa, 575; Brigham v. Mead, 92 Mass. [10 Allen] 245; Curtis v. Crossley, 45 Atl. 905, 59 N. J. Eq. 358, 361; Agricultural Bank v. Burr, 24 Me. 256; Rio Grande Cattle Co. v. Burns, Walker & Co., 17 S. W. 1043, 82 Tex. 50, 56).

A "certificate of stock" is tangible personal property. Hence it may be recovered by an action in replevin. Opperman v. Citizens' Bank, 85 N. E. 991, 992, 44 Ind. App. 401 (citing Smith v. Downey, 34 N. E. 823, 35 N. E. 568, 8 Ind. App. 179, 52 Am. St. Rep. 467; Read v. Brayton, 38 N. E. 261, 143 N. Y. 342; 2 Cook, Corp. [4th Ed.] § 577).

A "certificate of stock" is, from one point of view, a mere muniment of title like a title deed. It is not the stock itself but evidence of the ownership of the stock; that is to say, it is a written acknowledgement by the corporation of the interest of the shareholder in the corporate property and franchises. It operates to transfer nothing from the corporation to the shareholders but merely affords to the latter evidence of his rights. It should be clearly apprehended that the certificate is not the stock but merely written evidence of the ownership of shares. The certificate, therefore, has value in itself only as evidence, and, apart from the shares which it represents, it is utterly worthless. St. 1898, § 1751, enacts that the capital stock of a corporation, divided into shares, shall be deemed personalty, and, when certificates thereof are issued, such shares may be transferred by indorsement and delivery of the certificate. Section 1753 (Laws 1899, c. 193, § 1) provides that no corporation shall issue any stock or certificate of stock, except in consideration for money, labor, or property actually received equal to the par value thereof, and that all stocks issued contrary to such provision shall be void. Section 1773 contemplates the transaction of business by a corporation with its stockholders before it is at liberty to do so with others; and section 4436 punishes the issuance of a false certificate of stock. Held, that the words "issue any stock" and "all stocks issued," in section 1753, referred to certificates of stock as distinguished from the stock itself, and that hence the section did not deprive stock subscribers for less than par from having equitable relief against promoters who had defrauded the corporation. Pietsch v. Krause, 93 N. W. 9, 11, 116 Wis. 344 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Cook, Stock, Stockh. & Corp. Law, § 14).

A certificate of corporate stock is merely evidence of ownership, and the situs of the interest which it represents must for the purposes of administration be in the state in which the corporation is organized and has its place of business. Warrior Coal & Coke Co. v. National Bank of Augusta, Ga. (Ala.) 53 South. 997, 1000.

As negotiable instruments

A "certificate of stock" is not a "negotiable instrument." Talcott v. Standard Oil Co., 134 N. Y. Supp. 617, 623, 149 App. Div. 694.

"Certificates of stock" passing from hand to hand, like negotiable paper, have the character of negotiability. Bassett v. Perkins, 119 N. Y. Supp. 354, 355, 359, 65 Misc. Rep. 103 (citing Am. Exch. Nat. Bank v. Woodlawn Cemetery, 87 N. E. 107, 194 N. Y. 126; American Exch. Nat. Bank v. Woodlawn Cemetery, 87 N. E. 107, 194 N. Y. 116; 1 Dos Passos, Stockbrokers, 705).

"Certificates of stock" in a corporation are but mere evidences of the holder's right to a given share in the franchises and property of the corporation and are not negotiable instruments." Stock represented by certificates is subject to assessment for subscription calls, though in the hands of purchasers having no knowledge that the subscription is unpaid. O'Dea v. Hollywood Cemetery Assn., 97 Pac. 1, 8, 154 Cal. 53 (quoting and adopting definition in Barstow v. Savage Min. Co., 1 Pac. 349, 64 Cal. 388, 49 Am. Rep. 705; Graves v. Mono Lake Hydraulic Mining Co., 22 Pac. 665, 81 Cal. 304; Craig v. Hesperia L. & W. Co., 45 Pac. 10, 113 Cal. 7, 35 L. R. A. 306, 54 Am. St. Rep. 316).

CERTIFICATE TO BILL OF EXCEPTIONS

According to Civ. Code 1895, § 5533, the certificate to the bill of exceptions is the writ of error, and after the trial judge has signed the certificate he loses jurisdiction of the case and is without power to correct the same or give an additional certificate. Jones v. State, 56 S. E. 453, 454, 127 Ga. 281 (citing Woolf v. State, 30 S. E. 796, 104 Ga. 536).

CERTIFY

See Duly Certified.

"To 'certify' is to testify to in writing; to make known or establish as a fact. The word is not essential to a certificate." Cook v. Ziff Colored Masonic Lodge, No. 119, 96 S. W. 618, 620, 80 Ark. 31 (quoting and approving definition in Anderson's Law Dict.); Chadbourne v. Hartz, 101 N. W. 68, 69, 93 Minn. 233.

As used in Rev. St. 1895, art. 2284, as amended by Acts 30th Leg. 1907, c. 91, requiring the officer before whom a deposition has been taken to certify on the envelope inclosing the deposition for its return that he in person deposited same in the mail for transmission, the word "certify" means that the certificate indorsed on the envelope must be authenticated by the officer's seal. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Becton, 125 S. W. 883, 884, 103 Tex. 236.

The word "certify," as used in a paper reciting, "This is to certify that the notes held by me against A. shall be null and void after my death and noncollectible," seems quite clearly to indicate absence of idea of dealing, one man with another, contractually, but instead a purpose to proclaim to whom it may concern that the declarant then had a certain intention, namely, that his son's notes should be void after his death; and hence such paper was testamentary merely in character and was accordingly revoked by will of later date, disposing of testator's entire property. Templeton v. Butler, 94 N. W. 306, 307, 117 Wis. 435.

The condition of a bond was that the principal should obey all orders and regulations of a voluntary association of which he was a member. The bond further provided for a service upon the principal of a copy of any decision, order, or regulation of which he was declared to be in default. The principal was expelled from the association in proceedings regularly conducted against him. The surety paid the penalty of the bond, and brought an action against the principal to recover the amount thus paid. The principal claimed in this action that a certified copy of the proceedings had not been served upon him as provided in the bond. An official notification in writing had been given to him of the action of the board of governors signed by the secretary. Held, that the notice was sufficient under the terms of the bond, inasmuch as to certify means to testify in writing; to make a declaration about in writing; to make attestation in writing; to give certain information of a fact in writing. Title Guaranty & Trust Co. of Scranton v. Hildebrand, 41 Pa. Super. Ct. 136, 140.

The words to be "certified by some officer authorized to administer oaths," as used in Rev. St. 1895, art. 4218j, requiring the purchasers of school lands to make proof of occupancy by affidavit, corroborated by the affidavits of three disinterested and credible persons to be "certified by some officer authorized to administer oaths," mean that the officer is to certify that the corroborating affiants are "disinterested and credible persons." Logan v. Curry, 69 S. W. 129, 131, 95 Tex. 664.

Under an ordinance requiring that the street committee of a village should "certify" to a bill of costs for the construction of a public improvement, the marking of the bill of costs "approved" did not amount to a certification of the bill. People v. Patton, 79 N. E. 51, 52, 223 Ill. 379.

CERTIFIED CHECK

A "certified check" is one drawn by a depositor upon funds to his credit in a bank, which a proper officer of the bank certifies will be paid when duly presented for payment. Holland v. Mutual Fertilizer Co., 70 S. E. 151, 153, 8 Ga. App. 714.

Under the conditions of a street improvement contract requiring bidders to deposit a "certified check" with the bid, the deposit by a bidder of a cashier's check on an accredited bank to the order of the town, indorsed by the bidder, is a substantial compliance; there being no substantial distinction between a cashier's check so indorsed and a certified check for the purpose of qualifying the bidder. Hornung v. Town of West New York, 81 Atl. 1116, 82 N. J. Law, 266.

The word "certify," as applied to bank checks, indicates that certain words have been written or printed on a check, and that the check has passed from the custody of the bank into the hands of some other party, and that thereby the person certifying created an obligation of the bank. United States v. Heinze, 161 Fed. 425, 427.

The "certifying of a check" is equivalent to an acceptance of a bill of exchange payable on demand, whereby the sum so specified is immediately transferred from the drawer's account, thereby making the bank primarily liable to a bona fide holder of the check for value. State v. Miller, 85 Pac. 81, 82, 47 Or. 562, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 365.

In the transaction of the business of a bank, and in the transaction of the business of a depositor, it sometimes becomes desirable that the depositor, in addition to drawing this order or check against the fund to his credit in the bank, desires that the person to whom the check may be delivered shall be authoritatively advised and informed by the bank that the depositor has to his credit in the bank an amount of money equal to the amount of the check which he thus draws. This act of authoritative information that the maker of the check has such funds to his credit in the bank is, according to the custom of banks, usually evidenced by an indorsement on the face of the check, signed by some competent officer of the bank, declaring that the check is good. This proceeding is called the "certification" or "certifying" of the check and operates to add to the liability of the maker of the check for its amount the liability of the bank for a like amount, for it is a contractual assurance by the bank that funds to that amount are on deposit in the bank to the credit of the maker, and that the bank will hold such funds, equaling the amount of the check, to be used solely for the satisfaction and payment of the check. Chadwick v. United States, 141 Fed. 225, 229, 72 C. C. A. 343.

The "certification" of a check is to indicate the assent of the certifying bank to the request of the drawer of the check that the drawee will pay to the holder the sum mentioned. Security Bank of New York v. National Bank of the Republic, 67 N. Y. 458, 462, 23 Am. Rep. 129.

CERTIFIED COPY

Copy as meaning, see Copy.

To "certify" is to testify in writing. A sheriff leaving with the holder of property a copy of a warrant of attachment with the title of the action and the words "a copy" "warrant of attachment" indorsed thereon complied with Code Civ. Proc. § 649, providing that property may be attached by leaving a certified copy of the warrant, etc. Courtney v. Eighth Ward Bank, 85 N. Y. Supp. 1049, 1050, 14 Misc. Rep. 386.

Since the town recorder is the official custodian of the town records, his certificate to the correctness of a copy of a resolution is sufficient, in view of Code, §§ 4630, 4635, relating to the effect of documents as evidence which are duly authenticated and certified by public officers, and section 4643, raising a presumption of genuineness of the signature of such officers, and the copy of the resolution filed was sufficiently certified by the town recorder; to "certify" a document being to affirm or assert in writing its correctness or identity, and to "attest" being to affirm to be true or genuine. Sawyer v. Lorenzen & Weise, 127 N. W. 1091, 1093, 149 Iowa, 87, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 940 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1033).

CERTIORARI

The "writ of certiorari," as known in Delaware, was a common-law writ issued from a superior court, directed to one of inferior jurisdiction, commanding the latter to certify and return to the former the record in the particular case. Rash v. Allen, 76 Atl. 370, 374, 1 Boyce (Del.) 444.

"Certiorari" at common law was an original writ issuing out of Chancery, or the King's Bench, commanding agents or officers of inferior courts to return the record of a cause pending before them, so as to give the party more sure and speedy justice. Cushman v. Commissioners' Court of Blount County, 49 South. 311, 312, 160 Ala. 227.

A writ of "certiorari" is essentially the commencement of a proceeding independent of that to be reviewed. It is a remedy afforded by law to enable one who has been, or may be, injured by a determination of a judicial nature, good merely in form, but void for jurisdictional error to vacate it. State ex rel. Milwaukee Medical College v. Chittenden, 107 N. W. 500, 507, 127 Wis. 468.

"Certiorari" has several offices, among which is that of supplying defects of justice in cases obviously entitled to redress, and yet unprovided for by the ordinary forms of proceedings. It is especially applicable in cases where inferior boards, officers, or tribunals exceed their authority, and no method of appeal has been provided by statute. It has been repeatedly invoked in this state for the review of acts of boards of supervisors and is appropriate where the board of supervisors of a county exceeds its power providing for the construction of a bridge over a stream or on the boundary between it and the adjacent county. Bremer County v. Walstead, 106 N. W. 352, 354, 130 Iowa, 164 (citing 4 Encyc. Pl. & Pr. 9, Lamansky v. Williams, 101 N. W. 445, 125 Iowa, 578; Way v. Fox, 80 N. W. 405, 109 Iowa, 340; Hildreth v. Crawford, 21 N. W. 687, 65 Iowa, 339; Goetzman v. Whitaker, 48 N. W. 1058, 81 Iowa, 527; Richman v. Board, 26 N. W. 24, 70 Iowa, 627; Herrick v. Carpenter, 6 N. W. 574, 54 Iowa, 340).

"Certiorari" is the great corrective writ by which the superior courts exercise a supervisory power over inferior courts, tribunals, and boards which exercise judicial functions and by which their records and proceedings are brought under review, to the end that all abuses of power may be corrected, and that they may be held strictly to the jurisdiction marked out for them and prevented from transcending the powers by law conferred upon them. The State Railroad Commission is an inferior tribunal within the contemplation of Rev. Code 1892, § 90, and is subject to the supervision and control of the superior courts of the state through the writ of "certiorari." Gulf & S. I. R. Co. v. Adams, 88 South. 848, 849, 85 Miss. 772 (citing Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Adams, 25 South. 355, 77 Miss. 777).

The writ of certiorari lies only to correct errors in law, and not to review the decision of a subordinate tribunal of a question of fact submitted to it for judgment. Nelson v. Board of Engineers of Portland Fire Department, 75 Atl. 64, 66, 106 Me. 551.

"Certiorari, except as it has been enlarged and extended by statute, is a common-law writ. In its office it is confined to reviewing proceedings of inferior courts, officers, boards and tribunals, where there is no other remedy provided by statute. The writ in terms directs inferior courts, officers, boards, or tribunals to certify to the superior court the record of their proceedings for inspection and review, and the writ can run only to persons or tribunals that have acted judicially in making the determination sought to be reviewed." People ex rel. Rochester Tel. Co. v. Priest, 88 N. Y. Supp. 11, 95 App. Div. 44.

The office of the writ of certiorari is to provide for a review of the judicial action of inferior courts, special tribunals, public officers, and bodies exercising judicial functions. People ex rel. Republican & Journal Co. v. Wiggins, 92 N. E. 789, 790, 199 N. Y. 382.

Where the record on an appeal from a justice's court to the superior court contained a statement of the case, the superior court was necessarily called upon to determine the nature of the appeal (that is, as to whether it was on both the law and facts or on the law alone and whether a trial de novo was warranted); and, the superior court having jurisdiction to decide that question, "certiorari" will not lie to review the conclusion reached. "Such writ cannot be converted into a writ of error merely because there is no appeal. 'It may not be used to correct errors or irregularities within the jurisdiction of the inferior tribunal. It is too well settled to require the citation of authorities that the writ of review runs to inferior tribunals, boards, or officers exercising judicial functions solely to correct errors in excess of jurisdiction, or, in other words, to confine such tribunals and officers exercising judicial functions to their proper jurisdiction.'" Smith v. Superior Court of Napa County, 84 Pac. 54-56, 2 Cal. App. 529 (quoting and adopting Borchard v. Supr's of Ventura county, 77 Pac. 708, 144 Cal. 10).

Certiorari is a prerogative writ by which the Supreme Court exercises a jurisdiction to supervise the proceedings of inferior tribunals and governmental establishments, including municipal corporations, and the adjudication of the Supreme Court setting aside municipal proceedings operates in rem to nullify what has been unlawfully done to obliterate the record thereof, and to deprive all parties of any justification afforded by the record; the parties being the state on one hand and the municipality or other custodian of the record on the other. Specht v. Central Passenger Ry. Co. (N. J.) 68 Atl. 785, 788.

"Certiorari" will not lie where title to office and its emoluments are involved. State ex rel. Rawlinson v. Ansel, 57 S. E. 185, 186, 76 S. C. 395, 11 Ann. Cas. 613.

The office of the writ of certiorari is to review proceedings and judgments of inferior courts or tribunals acting judicially, where no appeal or other adequate remedy is afforded. State ex rel. Ross v. Posz, 118 N. W. 1014, 1015, 106 Minn. 197.

The writ of certiorari is simply the medium through which the judgment in a case pending before an inferior judicatory may be reviewed in the superior court. Where the judgment of a judge of a city court, awarding the custody of a minor child, is carried to the superior court by "certiorari," the case is still "a habeas corpus" case in the latter court, and the judgment of that court can be reviewed in this court only upon a "fast" bill of exceptions. The decision in Mansfield v. State, 20 S. E. 249, 94 Ga. 74, is in principle controlling. Weaver v. Thompson, 74 S. E. 901, 11 Ga. App. 132.

"The office of the writ of 'certiorari' is to review erroneous verdicts and judgments by some inferior judicatory or person lawfully exercising judicial power. It does not lie to review either a void judgment by a court legally constituted or any pretended judgment by an individual or body of individuals assuming to exercise judicial powers without lawful authority." W. D. Simpkins & Co. v. Hester, 59 S. E. 322, 8 Ga. App. 160.

Except where altered by statute, "certiorari" is an extraordinary common-law remedy. Originally it could be invoked only to review judicial proceedings and to correct errors of law apparent on admitted and established facts. The office of the writ is to bring to the superior court for review the record and proceedings of an inferior court.

an officer, or tribunal, exercising judicial functions, to the end that the validity of the proceedings may be determined, excesses of jurisdiction restrained, and errors, if any, corrected. It is not essential that the proceedings should be strictly and technically judicial in the sense in which that word is used when applied to courts of justice, but it is sufficient if they are quasi judicial. It is enough if the officer or tribunal whose act is sought to be reviewed, acts judicially in making the decision, whatever may be the public character of the officer or tribunal. Wheeling & E. G. R. Co. v. Town of Triadelphia, 52 S. E. 499, 503, 58 W. Va. 487, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 321.

Authority to issue a writ of "certiorari" as an original and independent proceeding to review a conviction in an inferior federal court is not found in the grant to the Circuit Courts of Appeals by Act March 3, 1891, c. 517, § 12, 26 Stat. 826, of the powers specified in Rev. St. § 716, which authorizes certain federal courts to "issue all writs not specially provided for by statute, which may be necessary for the exercise of their respective jurisdictions," where the only question in the case was whether the punishment of the offense charged was within the jurisdiction of the federal courts, and the case was put in proper condition for a review on writ of error. Whitney v. Dick, 26 Sup. Ct. 584, 586, 202 U. S. 132, 50 L. Ed. 963.

As discretionary writ

Duty of "certiorari" is not a writ of right but is reached only in the discretion of the court as an extraordinary process when other and ordinary remedies are inadequate. State ex rel. Skogstad v. Anderson, 109 N. W. 981, 982, 180 Wis. 227 (citing Harris, Certiorari, § 43).

A "writ of certiorari" is not a writ of right, and whether it should be issued upon the presentation of a petition therefor is in a large measure discretionary with the court. While this is not an arbitrary discretion, to justify issuing the writ good cause must be shown by the petition, otherwise the writ should be denied. City of Chicago v. Condell, 79 N. E. 954, 955, 224 Ill. 595 (citing Board of Sup'rs v. Magoon, 109 Ill. 142; Trustees of Schools of Township 21 v. School Directors of Union District, 88 Ill. 100; Commissioners of Mason & Tazewell Special Drainage Dist. v. Griffin, 25 N. E. 995, 134 Ill. 330; Hyslop v. Finch, 99 Ill. 171).

A "writ of certiorari" is not a writ of right but will be granted only in the discretion of the court, where it appears that the inferior tribunal has committed some error of law that has caused substantial harm to the petitioner, who has not been guilty of laches in seeking his remedy; Bennett v. Randall, 67 Atl. 525, 526, 28 R. I. 360, 125

Am. St. Rep. 743 (citing McAloon v. License Com'rs of Pawtucket, 46 Atl. 1047, 1048, 22 R. I. 191, 193; 4 Ency. Pl. & Pr. 84, footnote 1; 2 Spelling, Extr. Ed. § 1897; Knapp v. Heller, 32 Wis. 467; Ex parte Buckley, 53 Ala. 42; State ex rel. Grady v. Lockhart, 52 Pac. 315, 18 Wash. 531, 535; People v. Mayor, etc., of City of New York, 5 Barb. [N. Y.] 43, 49).

"Certiorari" is not a writ of right and is only sustainable where there is no other adequate remedy. State ex rel. Fairbanks v. Ayers, 91 S. W. 398, 116 Mo. App. 90.

Limited to jurisdictional questions

Certiorari is not limited to reviewing questions of jurisdiction, but lies to review any error appearing on the face of the record which cannot be reached by appeal or writ of error. State ex rel. Iba v. Mosman, 133 S. W. 38, 41, 231 Mo. 474.

Certiorari runs against individual tribunals not to review their proceedings, but only to determine whether they have acquired, and have not exercised, their jurisdiction. Conover v. Gatton, 96 N. E. 522, 524, 251 Ill. 587.

A writ of "certiorari" reaches only jurisdictional errors, when sued out to test the validity of some judicial or quasi judicial proceeding. It has no other use except to bring before the court a record material to be considered in exercising jurisdiction in deciding a matter presented by some other writ. Certiorari teaches and requires the production of a judicial or quasi judicial record, but never the body of any person, while a writ of habeas corpus reaches the latter but not the former. Gaster v. State, 94 N. W. 787, 788, 117 Wis. 668, 98 Am. St. Rep. 968.

The office of the writ of "certiorari" is not so much to determine the valid existence of the tribunal, board, or officer, while acting in a judicial capacity, as it is to determine whether the jurisdiction of such tribunal, board, or officer has been exceeded. "The character of the act or determination sought to be reviewed, rather than the tribunal or officer by which the act or determination is made, is the test for determining whether the writ should be issued, for it is only a determination which is made 'when exercising judicial functions' that can be reviewed." Beaumont v. Samson, 90 Pac. 839, 840, 5 Cal. App. 491 (quoting and adopting definition in Quinchard v. Board of Trustees, 45 Pac. 856, 113 Cal. 664, 668).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1068, providing that "certiorari" may issue where the inferior court has exceeded its jurisdiction, an order of the superior court canceling an order admitting to citizenship cannot be reviewed by certiorari, if the lower court had jurisdiction, even though the order was rendered upon insufficient evidence or in some irregular method not going to the jurisdiction, but under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, authorizing a motion to set aside a judgment only in case it is made within ten months after judgment is taken, where a motion to annul an order admitting an alien to citizenship was made more than three years after the original order, the appearance of the naturalized citizen and his consent to the granting of the motion would not give the court jurisdiction. In re Tinn, 84 Pac. 152, 148 Cal. 773, 113 Am. St. Rep. 354.

Mandamus distinguished

Mandamus and "certiorari" rest on distinct and opposite principles. The former compels an unperformed ministerial duty, the latter reviews a performed judicial duty, while neither operates to control discretion. The former never goes to control judgment, while the latter never goes except to review and control judicial judgment. State ex rel. Rawlinson v. Ansel, 57 S. E. 185, 192, 76 S. E. 395, 11 Ann. Cas. 618.

Removes record only

The writ of "certiorari" in our system of jurisprudence brings up only the record proper of the tribunal to which it is addressed. It does not bring up the evidence on which the judgment of the trial court was founded. The office of a writ of certiorari is to give relief to an injured party in a cause when the trial court has acted without jurisdiction or in excess of its jurisdiction, or where it appears on the face of the record proper that the trial court rendered a judgment which it had no right in law to render. But the writ cannot be used as the substitute for an appeal or writ of error. State ex rel. Bentley v. Reynolds, 89 S. W. 877, 880, 190 Mo. 578 (citing State v. Kansas City, 14 S. W. 515, 89 Mo. 34; State ex rel. Harrison County Bank v. Springer, 35 S. W. 589, 134 Mo. 212; State ex rel. Kansas & T. Coal Ry. v. Shelton, 55 S. W. 1008, 154 Mo. 670, 50 L. R. A. 798; State ex rel. Ballew v. Woodson, 61 S. W. 252, 161 Mo. 444; State ex rel. Wabash R. Co. v. Bland, 67 S. W. 580, 168 Mo. 1).

"Certiorari" reviews only the legal aspect of facts appearing in the record. It does not permit an investigation into the matters outside of the record, or their consideration. Nor does it enable the court to give a full and complete hearing to all parties interested, and then by a proper mandate to carry its findings into effect. It is not the appropriate remedy to prevent anticipated wrong or injury. Bilsborrow v. Pierce, 112 N. W. 274, 275, 101 Minn. 271.

"The writ of 'certiorari' brings up nothing but the record of the tribunal to which it is directed and whose proceedings it is sought to review. It does not bring up the evidence taken by it, nor can such evidence be considered, though included in the return." School Dist. No. 2 v. Pace, 87 S. W. 580, 582, 113 Mo. App. 124 (citing Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. State Board of Equalization, 64 Mo. 294; State ex rel. Brennan v. Wallbridge, 62 Mo. App. 162).

As substitute for appeal

"Certiorari" cannot be used as a substitute for appeal, except in instances where the right of appeal has been unavoidably lost through no fault of the petitioner. It can only correct excess in jurisdiction, or an illegal proceeding, not reviewable otherwise, and like matters, and does not reach to the question of an alleged excessive punishment within limits of the penalty. Phillips v. State, 96 S. W. 742, 80 Ark. 200 (citing Burgett v. Apperson, 12 S. W. 559, 52 Ark. 213; McKay v. Jones, 30 Ark. 148; Carolan v. Carolan, 2 S. W. 105, 47 Ark. 511; Reese v. Cannon, 84 S. W. 798, 73 Ark. 605; Harris, Certiorari, § 44).

"Certiorari" is to give relief to an injured party when the court or a body charged to have acted has proceeded without jurisdiction or has exceeded its jurisdiction or has rendered a judgment or made an order not authorized by law; but this writ cannot be used as a substitute for appeal or writ of error. State ex rel. Smith v. Dykeman, 134 S. W. 120, 121, 153 Mo. App. 416.

"Certiorari" is a common-law writ, which issues, in the sound judicial discretion of the court, to an inferior court, not to take the place of a writ of error or an appeal, but to cause the entire record of the inferior court to be brought up for inspection in order that the superior court may determine from the record whether the inferior court has exceeded its jurisdiction, or has not proceeded according to the essential requirements of the law, in cases where no direct appellate proceedings are provided by law. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co. v. Ray, 42 South. 714, 715, 52 Fla. 634.

A "writ of certiorari" will not issue for the purpose of aiding a petition for a rehearing or for the purpose of correcting the record in any manner or form after decision on appeal, but under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 680, it will only issue to compel any inferior court, board, or officer exercising judicial functions, or other person, to certify to such court a full and complete transcript of the record and proceedings of any such tribunal, board, officer, or person, and the production of any paper, whenever it shall be necessary for the proper determination of any cause or proceeding pending before the Appellate Court. The writ cannot be used as a substitute for appeal. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Stryker, 78 N. E. 968, 78 N. E. 822, 78 N. E. 245, 38 Ind. App. 312 (citing Board of Com'rs of Marion County v. Center Tp., 2 N. E. 368, 7 N. E. 189, 105 Ind. 422, 444; Manser v. Churchman, 84 Ind. 573).

CERTIORARI BILL

"A 'certiorari bill' derives its name from a special writ of certiorari being prayed for the purpose of removing a cause already commenced in an inferior court of equity from that into the court of chancery. And the prayer of this bill is grounded upon a suggestion necessarily arising from one or some of the following circumstances: That by means of the limited jurisdictions of the court, or by reason that the cause is without the jurisdiction of the inferior courts, or that the witnesses live out of the jurisdiction, or that the defendants do and are not able by age or infirmity, or the distance of place, to follow the suit, or that upon some substantial reasons shown equal and impartial justice to the parties is not likely to be obtained in the inferior court—and for this purpose the bill should state the proceedings in the court below, the incompetency of that court to decide between and administer justice to the parties, and pray the writ of certiorari." Hyde v. Superior Court, 66 Atl. 292, 298, 28 R. I. 204 (quoting Harrison, Chan. pp. 100, 101).

CESSANTE RATIONE LEGIS, CESSAT ET IPSA LEX

The maxim, "Cessante ratione legis, cessat et ipsa lex," is especially true of rules grown up in jurisprudence. These rules are binding by authority of reason rather than by reason of authority. Hence, when the reason ceases, so also does the rule. Succession of Baker, 55 South. 714, 719, 129 La. 74, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1181.

In Arkansas, where the common-law doctrine of livery of seisin is abolished by Kirby's Dig. §§ 736, 737, authorizing a conveyance of land whether held in possession or not, a deed executed by an original grantor after condition broken is equivalent to re-entry and is effectual to declare a forfeiture and to vest the title in the subsequent grantee; the case being a proper one for the application of the maxim "cessante ratione cessat ipsa lex." Moore v. Sharpe, 121 S. W. 341, 344, 91 Ark. 407, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 937.

"The maxim, 'Cessante ratione legis, cessat ipsa lex,' is of frequent application and is a sound rule of interpretation." It follows from applying this rule that a patient who, by failure to object to the testimony of physicians on the trial of a civil action, has waived his privilege cannot thereafter invoke the privilege on the trial of a criminal action against him. People v. Bloom, 85 N. E. 824, 826, 193 N. Y. 1, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 896, 127 Am. St. Rep. 931, 15 Ann. Cas. 932 (citing to quotation Whart. Max., 17, p. 49).

CESSATION FROM LABOR

Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, as amended by Laws 1897, c. 141, requiring the owner within 40 days after cessation from labor on any unfinished contract or unfinished structure to file a notice of cessation, giving the date on which cessation actually occurred, etc., relates to structures on which work ceases while in an unfinished condition, and continuous cessation from labor for 30 days sets in motion the requirement of notice, and where the owner files the notice of cessation the original contractor and other lien claimants have specified times within which to file their claims of liens. Robison v. Mitchell, 114 Pac. 984, 986, 159 Cal. 581.

CESSATION OF DEALINGS

"Cessation of the dealings," as used in Code 1891, p. 728, § 6, providing that "an action by one partner against his copartner for a settlement of the partnership accounts . . . may be brought until the expiration of five years from a cessation of the dealings in which they are interested together, but not after," means that after there has been a dissolution of the partnership more than five years must have elapsed before the institution of a suit, during which time there were no valid claims of debt or credit against or in favor of the firm, paid or received or outstanding. Smith v. Zumbro, 24 S. E. 653, 657, 41 W. Va. 623.

CESTUI QUE TRUST

"Cestuis que trust" are those for whose benefit others are seised of real or personal property. They are the real, substantial, and beneficial owners of an estate which is held in trust as distinguished from the trustee in whom the legal title is vested. Larkin v. Wikoff, 72 Atl. 98, 102, 75 N. J. Eq. 462.

CHAFFER

As applied to hatch covers, a "chafer" is a third cover, ordinarily an old one, used for the purpose of protecting the others from wear and not with a view of affording additional security save as it may so serve. The Hyades, 118 Fed. 85, 86.

CHAIN OF TITLE

See Regular Chain of Title.

It appearing that the chain of title to the several lots was the same from the government down to 1863, at which time the chain was broken, the transfers of property in one subdivision constituting one chain of title and those in another subdivision separated from the first subdivision by a street constituting another chain, the lots did not have the same chain of title within the act, the ordinary meaning of the word "chain" being "identical," and the legislative intent being that the lots sought to be registered should either be one compact piece of property, or, if not, that all should have an identical chain of title, to be included in one application. Culver v. Waters, 93 N. E. 747, 748, 248 Ill. 163.

CHAIR

A dentist's chair is not exempt from levy and sale as a "chair sufficient for the use of the family," under an exemption statute. Burt v. Stocks Coal Co., 46 S. E. 828, 829, 119 Ga. 629, 100 Am. St. Rep. 203.

CHAIRMAN

As holding office of trust, see Office of Trust.

B. & C. Comp. § 3380, provides that all regular and special school meetings must be convened by a written call stating the objects of such meetings, signed by the chairman of the district board and district clerk, or a majority of the school board. Section 3388 provides that the director who has served the longest time shall act as chairman of the board meetings, and, in the absence of the chairman, the other members of the board in the order of their seniority may act as chairman. The statute does not expressly create the office of "chairman of the school board," but such office was impliedly recognized by section 3389, subd. 16, providing that school warrants must be drawn and signed by the chairman of the board, and subdivision 21 permitting the board to authorize the chairman to draw warrants for the payment of salaries, and subdivision 31 providing that all bonds issued shall be signed by the chairman of the board of directors, and section 3409 providing that meetings of the board may be convened by written notice issued on the order of the chairman. Held, that the various sections of the statute construed together recognized the permanent and separate existence of the office of "chairman of the board," and by section 3388 the oldest in service of the directors was chairman of the board, and hence a special meeting called under section 3380 signed by the next oldest member of the board was not signed by "the chairman of the board," as required thereby, and bonds issued at such a meeting were invalid. Riggs v. Polk County, 95 Pac. 5, 7, 51 Or. 400.

CHALK

Manufactures of, see Manufactures—Manufactured Articles.

"Chalk" is a soft mineral substance consisting almost entirely of carbonate of lime. "Whiting" is "chalk" which has been dried and afterwards ground, levigated, and again dried. United States v. Tiffany, 117 Fed. 367.

A witness may use to illustrate his meaning and the counsel to illustrate his case any "chalk," whether engraved or more roughly sketched, whether made with a pen, a pencil, a paint brush, a coal, or a piece of chalk. An engraving may be as good a chalk as anything, but it should not be attached to or contained in any book, nor should the jury be told from what book it was taken or that it ever was in any book, and nothing should be said about it only that it is to be used as a sketch or chalk to illustrate the case. Whether a plan or sketch may be shown to the jury as a chalk is within the discretion of the court. Ordway v. Haynes, 50 N. H. 159, 164.

"Chalk" as used in court practice, means a rough representation, such, for instance, as a witness might make in outline upon a blackboard in the presence of the jury as illustrating his evidence, and not arising to the dignity of a scientifically accurate representation. Everson v. Casualty Co. of America, 94 N. E. 459, 461, 208 Mass. 214.

CHALLENGE

Primarily the meaning of "challenge" is to call one out to answer for something. Thus in dueling "to call a man out" is synonymous with "to challenge" him. Other familiar examples of the use of the word are the challenge of a voter, a challenge by a sentry, or even the challenge of the accuracy of a statement. The matter common to these uses of the word is that of formally directing the attention of some one to a matter that requires his action or decision. In this sense the word is aptly descriptive of the procedure by which the attention of the court is called to the fact that, on account of old age or the like, a grand juror should be discharged from the public service. On the other hand, the use of the word that has grown up in law with respect to the petit jury is both technical and special, namely, "the demand of a party that a certain person shall not sit in trial upon him or his cause." This special meaning may apply in a measure to the case of a grand juror who is challenged upon common-law grounds, but, as has already been pointed out, the challenge of grand jurors upon statutory grounds, if sustained results, not as at common law in his refraining from sitting upon the case of the challenger, but in his absolute discharge from the public service. Too much stress, therefore, must not be laid on the mere employment of this word without regard to whether its context calls for its general meaning or for its special and technical sense. State v. Lang, 68 Atl. 210, 214, 75 N. J. Law, 502.

St. 1909, § 1269 (Russell's St. § 8190), imposes a punishment upon one challenging another to fight in single combat or otherwise, with a deadly weapon, and Const. § 239, prohibits one from holding office who shall directly or indirectly give a challenge to another to fight in single combat with a deadly weapon. Accused, while partially intoxicated, went up to another, and, drawing or partly drawing a gun, said: "God damn you, you started to draw a gun this morning, now, God damn you, shoot." Held that, since a duel was a combat with a deadly weapon fought under prescribed rules according to a precedent formal agreement without sudden heat or passion, accused's conduct did not amount to a challenge. Ward v. Commonwealth, 116 S. W. 786, 787, 132 Ky. 636, 19 Ann. Cas. 71.

CHALLENGE (In Practice)

See Peremptory Challenge; Principal Challenge.

An objection to the qualification of a juror is available only upon a "challenge." There are two kinds of "challenges," to the panel and to the individual juror, and, where a challenge is to the individual juror, it must be taken when he appears and before he is sworn. People v. Thayer, 115 N. Y. Supp. 855, 856, 61 Misc. Rep. 573 (quoting and adopting the definitions in Code Civ. Proc. § 1180; Code Cr. Proc. §§ 359, 369, 371).

Under B. & C. Comp. §§ 117-123, abolishing a challenge to the panel, defining a challenge as an objection to an individual juror, either peremptory or for cause, and declaring that a challenge for cause is either that the juror is disqualified from serving in any action or that he is disqualified from serving in the particular action on account of bias, a litigant cannot object to jurors summoned in the manner prescribed by law and accepted by the court as legal jurors, on the ground that the law is unconstitutional, for a jury, though selected in pursuance of a void law, is selected under color of law and is a de facto jury, and where the particular jurors so drawn are competent and qualified, a challenge cannot be interposed. State v. Ju Nun, 97 Pac. 96, 98, 53 Or. 1.

At the common law the "challenges" to jurors for affection or partiality were of two kinds: (1) "For principal cause;" (2) "to the favor." A challenge is called principal "because, if it be founded on truth, it standeth sufficient of itself, without leaving anything to the conscience and discretion of the triers." Relationship to one of the parties or interest in the subject-matter of the litigation furnish illustrations of grounds for challenges for principal cause. Challenge to the favor is when the party alleges any such exception against one or more of the jurors, which is not forthwith sufficient upon acknowledgment of the truth thereof, but rather arbitrable and considerable by the rest of the jurors. It sheweth causes of the favor which must be left to the conscience and discretion of the triers, upon hearing their evidence, to find him favorable or not favorable. In this form of challenge probable circumstances of suspicion, such as great intimacy with one party, or strife or quarrels with the other, any acts or sayings indicating affection for one or malevolence towards the other, in short, anything tending to show a motive on the part of the juror to favor one party or wrong the other, may be alleged and proved. The question raised by this challenge was not that a juror had knowledge or opinions which would prevent his deciding the case according to the evidence, but it was that because of affection toward one party or of hatred toward the other, or because of some other similar motives, he would not decide the case according to the truth. Where several defendants were charged with bribery arising out of the same conspiracy, and the same evidence was relied on to sustain a conviction against each, jurors who had sat in the trial of certain of the conspirators previously indicted were subject to challenge for cause. People v. Mol, 100 N. W. 913, 914, 137 Mich. 692, 68 L. R. A. 871, 4 Ann. Cas. 960 (quoting and adopting definition in Co. Litt. 156b; Stephens v. People, 38 Mich. 739; State v. Sawtelle, 82 Atl. 831, 66 N. H. 503).

CHALLENGE FOR CAUSE

A "challenge for cause" is an objection to a particular juror and is of two kinds; general, to the effect that the juror is disqualified from serving in any case, and particular, that he is disqualified from serving in the case on trial. People v. Thayer, 115 N. Y. Supp. 855, 857, 61 Misc. Rep. 573 (quoting and adopting the definition in Code Cr. Proc. § 374).

A "challenge for cause" is an objection to a particular juror and is either general or special. General causes for challenge are conviction for felony, want of prescribed qualifications, unsoundness of mind, or such defect in the faculties as renders one incapable of performing the duties of a juror. Particular causes of challenge are bias and the existence of a state of mind on the part of the juror, in reference to the case or to either party, which satisfies the court that he cannot try the issue impartially. Robinson v. Territory, 85 P. 451, 453, 16 Okl. 241.

A "challenge for cause" is an objection to a juror on the ground that he is not qualified under the provisions of the statute fixing the qualification of jurors, or upon some ground which, in the opinion of the court, renders him unfit to serve as a juror. When the objection is made upon a ground other than those mentioned in the statute, the exercise by the trial judge of his discretion in passing on such objection will not be revised unless it appears that his ruling has resulted in preventing a fair and impartial trial. Stone v. Pettus, 108 S. W. 413, 414, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 14.

Comp. Laws, par. 726, declares that a "challenge" to an individual juror is either peremptory or for cause. Pen. Code, § 910, defines the causes for which challenges to individual jurors may be made, using the term "challenge to an individual juror" as synonymous with "challenge for cause." Section 913 declares that challenges to individual jurors shall be tried by the court; and section 918 provides that challenges to the panel or to an individual juror shall be oral and shall be entered on the minutes of the court, together with the court's decision thereon. Comp. Laws, par. 714, as amended, declares that, when several defendants are tried together, they are not allowed to sever their challenges but must join therein, "except a challenge to an individual juror." Held that, where two defendants jointly indicted for murder in the first degree made no application for severance, as authorized by Pen. Code, § 925, they were only entitled to the number of peremptory challenges each would have been entitled to if separately tried. Booth v. Territory, 80 Pac. 354, 355, 9 Ariz. 204.

That a juror has an erroneous idea of the law governing the case does not make him subject to "challenge for cause," within Rev. St. 1898, § 3144, providing that a "challenge for cause" may be taken on the ground that a state of mind exists on the part of the juror which will prevent his acting without prejudice to the rights of a party; no disposition being shown by the juror to be governed by his own ideas rather than by the declaration of the court as to the law. Johnson v. Park City, 76 Pac. 216, 217, 27 Utah, 420.

CHALLENGE TO THE ARRAY

A "challenge to the array" is an objection to all the jurors collectively because of some defect in the panel as a whole. Bryan v. State, 52 S. E. 298, 124 Ga. 79.

CHALLENGES TO THE FAVOR

"All 'challenges to the favor' are grounded on some facts or circumstances showing a probability that the juror is favorable to the one party or the other but not amounting to ground of principal challenge. O'Donnell v. Weller, 59 Atl. 1055, 72 N. J. Law, 142 (quoting State v. Spencer, 21 N. J. Law, 197).

A "challenge to the favor" or because a juror is "favorable" to a party "is when the party alleges any such exception against one or more of the jurors, which is not forthwith sufficient upon acknowledgment of the truth thereof but rather arbitrable and considerable by the rest of the jurors." "In this form of challenge probable circumstances of suspicion, such as great intimacy with one party, or strife or quarrels with the other, any acts or sayings indicating affection for one or malevolence towards the other, in short, anything tending to show a motive on the part of the juror to favor one party or wrong the other, may be alleged and proved." People v. Mol, 100 N. W. 913, 914, 137 Mich. 692, 68 L. R. A. 871, 4 Ann. Cas. 960 (quoting State v. Sawtelle, 32 Atl. 831, 66 N. H. 508).

CHAMBER

See Containing Chamber.

A deed, executed in 1818, granted a lot "with the store thereon standing, * * * with a privilege in the passage of the adjoining store for the purpose of passing and repassing to the chambers of the store conveyed"; both stores then being two-story structures. Long after the store conveyed was torn down by defendant and an office building erected on its site, with the same lateral dimensions and so that the second floor connected by a door with the passageway of the adjoining store building, which remained as it was at the time of the conveyance, with the intention of preserving the right of passageway through that building as appurtenant to the new building. Held, in view of the intention of the parties, as shown by the use of the word "chambers," which then commonly meant sleeping apartments, that the intention was not to grant a perpetual easement in the adjoining store for the benefit of such a building as that erected by defendant, so that the destruction of the building granted destroyed the easement in the adjoining building. Cotting v. City of Boston, 87 N. E. 205, 206, 201 Mass. 97.

An open space beneath an ore roasting furnace, supported by posts, is not a "chamber" within the terms of a previous patent for a furnace. Lanyon Zinc Co. v. Brown, 129 Fed. 912, 915, 64 C. C. A. 344.

CHAMBER BUSINESS

Though Laws 1895, c. 115, § 6, Comp. St. 1910, § 922, provides that the district court commissioners shall hear, try, and determine issues whenever an application shall have been made for a change of judge, a district court commissioner, under Const. art. 5, § 14, providing that the Legislature shall provide for the appointment by the several district courts of one or more district court commissioners, learned in the law, and with authority to perform such chamber business, in the absence of a district judge, or upon his written statement that it is improper for him to act, as may be prescribed by law, is without authority to determine on the merits the issues in an action where the judge has been disqualified; the expression "chamber business" referring to such proceedings as might be conducted by the judge at chambers, and not to the trial on the merits, and his judgment in such case is invalid for want of jurisdiction. Huhn v. Quinn (Wyo.) 128 Pac. 514, 516.

CHAMBERS

The "chambers" of a judge means the office or private room of a judge where parties are heard and orders made and other business transacted in matters which are not required to be done in open court. The chambers of a judge of the district court, when performing judicial acts in connection with the court of that district, must be in that district. Kirby v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 116 Pac. 150, 151, 51 Colo. 82 (citing Rap. & L. Law Dict., Bouvier).

The term "chambers" is defined as the office or private rooms of a judge, where parties are heard, and orders made in matters not requiring to be brought before the full court, and where costs are taxed, judgments signed, and similar business transacted. Morehead v. Allen, 63 S. E. 507, 510, 181 Ga. 807.

The term "chambers" is thus defined, "The office or private rooms of a judge, where parties are heard, and orders made, in matters not requiring to be brought before the full court, and where costs are taxed, judgments signed, and similar business transacted;" and thus, "When a judge decides some interlocutory matter, which has arisen in the course of the cause, out of court, he is said to make such decision at his 'chambers.'" Under Const. art. 4, § 18, providing that the several judges of the Supreme Court shall have and exercise such power and jurisdiction, at chambers or otherwise, as may be directed by law, the General Assembly cannot confer on a judge of that court jurisdiction at chambers to grant or dissolve an injunction in a cause pending in another court. Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Hurd, 17 Ohio St. 144, 146 (quoting and adopting the definitions in Bur. Law Dict. and Bouvier's Law Dict.).

"Orders are often passed in 'chambers' and chambers proceedings had between the beginning of a term of court and its adjournment. Thus application for interlocutory injunctions, the appointment of ad interim receivers, and the like take place at chambers, although during term of court. Nor does the fact that the proceedings were entered on the minutes fix their status as having transpired in open court. Orders granted in vacation may likewise appear on the minutes. * * * 'When an order appears in the transcript of the record which could be regularly and properly granted by the superior court in term time only, and there is nothing to show that it was in fact granted at chambers or in vacation, the presumption is that it was granted in term.'" Morehead v. Allen, 56 S. E. 745, 747, 748, 127 Ga. 669 (citing Civ. Code 1895, §§ 3172, 4864; McGowan v. Lufborrow, 9 S. E. 427, 82 Ga. 523, 14 Am. St. Rep. 178; Skinner v. Roberts, 17 S. E. 353, 92 Ga. 366).

CHAMOTTE

The term "chamotte," as used in the arts, has a broader meaning technically than ordinary fire brick crushed, or fire clay, and means, when used to describe an element in a patented combination, a clay which has been burned to an extent which deprives it of further shrinkage on being again subjected to heat. Panzl v. Battle Island Paper & Pulp Co., 132 Fed. 607, 609.

The term "chamotte," as used in the arts and in the Panzl patent, No. 644,367, as an ingredient used in making an acid-resisting composition for lining pulp digesters, denotes a species of specially pure calcined clay, which must be silicate of alumina, and is not the equivalent of crushed fire brick, used in prior preparations, which may or may not have the chemical composition and properties of chamotte. Panzl v. Battle Island Paper Co., 138 Fed. 48, 50, 70 C. C. A. 474.

CHAMPERTY

See Maintenance (Of Suits).

"Champerty" at common law consisted in supporting or maintaining a suit for some one else in consideration of agreement to have a part of the thing in dispute, or some profit out of the result of the litigation, or an agreement to divide the receipts from the suit or action. Merchants' Protective Ass'n v. Jacobsen, 127 Pac. 315, 318, 22 Idaho, 636.

"Champerty" is the unlawful maintenance of a suit in consideration of some bargain to have part of the thing in dispute or some profit out of it. Gelo v. Pfister & Vogel Leather Co., 113 N. W. 69, 70, 132 Wis. 575 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1045).

"Champerty" is an affirmative defense and must be pleaded. Comstock v. Flower, 84 S. W. 207, 212, 109 Mo. App. 275 (citing Moore v. Ringo, 82 Mo. 468; Pike v. Martindale, 1 S. W. 858, 91 Mo. 268; Bick v. Overfelt, 88 Mo. App. 139).

"Champerty" is so closely allied to maintenance and possesses so many elements in common with it, and is so frequently considered and discussed together, that we can more readily and clearly understand the authorities if we briefly state the law of champerty in this same connection. Champerty is the species of which maintenance is the genus and is defined by Blackstone as "a bargain with a plaintiff or defendant campum partire to divide the land or other matter sued for between them if they prevail at law, whereupon the champertor is to carry on the party's suit at his own expense." "Champerty" differs from maintenance in this: That in the latter the person assisting a suitor is to receive no part of the benefits resulting from the action, while in the former he agrees to assist in the prosecution of the suit, and as a consideration therefor to share subsequently in the possible fruits or proceeds of the litigation. It therefore necessarily follows that, if the offense in question does not amount to maintenance, there can be no champerty in it. The gist of the offense is the same in each, the difference being only in the mode of compensation." "The distinction between maintenance and champerty seems to be this: Where there is no agreement to divide the thing in suit, the party intermeddling is guilty of maintenance only; but, where he stipulates to receive part of the thing in suit, he is guilty of champerty." "The doctrine of champerty and maintenance, which prohibits contracts for part of the thing in demand, was adopted as an auxiliary regulation to enforce the general common-law principle which prohibited the transfer of all rights of action. The power of influential persons to whom rights of action were transferred in order to obtain their support and favor in suits brought to assert those rights was the cause of the rigid doctrine of the early common law; that rights of action cannot be assigned has in modern times been reversed; the reason for the doctrine has in a large measure ceased to exist, and its early stringency has been greatly relaxed." Champerty and maintenance in the main are one and the same and inseparable, and where the law of the one exists there exists the law of the other also. Breedon v. Frankfort Marine, Accident & Plate Glass Ins. Co., 119 S. W. 576, 580, 220 Mo. 327 (quoting Coke on Littleton, 368; Quigley v. Thompson, 58 Ind. 317, 318; citing Scobey v. Ross, 13 Ind. 117; Wheeler v. Pounds, 24 Ala. 472; Arden v. Patterson [N. Y.] 5 Johns. Ch. 44; Key v. Vattier, 1 Ohio, 132).

"Maintenance" is defined as an officious intermeddling in a suit that no way belongs to one by assisting either party, with money or otherwise, to prosecute or defend. The offense may be committed by stepping in after litigation has been begun, as by encouraging and aiding its origin. "Champerty" is generally treated in connection with "maintenance." The champertor has in view a profit to himself in a share of the spoils of the litigation. The maintainer is more of a voluntary intermeddler and stirs up the strife for the love of it. He is described as an officious intermeddler. In other words, he interferes where he has no business. Breedon v. Frankfort Marine, Accident & Plate Glass Ins. Co., 85 S. W. 930, 931, 110 Mo. App. 312 (citing Duke v. Harper, 66 Mo. 51, 27 Am. Rep. 314).

A contract between attorneys and their client, by which they agreed to procure the annulment of the marriage of the client and his wife and to settle her claim for alimony for a lump sum to be paid to them as attorneys and a conveyance of certain property to them, etc., was void for "champerty." Donaldson v. Eaton & Estes, 114 N. W. 19, 21, 136 Iowa, 650, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1168, 125 Am. St. Rep. 275.

"Maintenance" is an officious intermeddling in a suit that in no way belongs to one by maintaining or assisting either party with money or otherwise, to prosecute or defend it. "Champerty" which is a species of maintenance is the unlawful maintaining of a suit in consideration of some bargain to have a part of the thing in dispute or some profit out of it; the champertor agreeing to carry on the suit at his own expense. Where, however, the person promoting the suit of another has any interest in the subject-matter, he is justified in participating and is not guilty of officious intermeddling within the definition of "champerty" or "maintenance." Finlen v. Heinze, 73 Pac. 123, 127, 28 Mont. 548.

Champerty, "which is a species of maintenance, has been defined to be the unlawful maintenance of a suit in consideration of some bargain to have a part of the thing in dispute or some profit out of it; a bargain with a plaintiff or defendant campum partire to divide the land or other thing sued for between them if they prevail at law; the champertor agreeing to carry on the suit at his own expense." Where defendant in an injunction suit assigns to his attorneys, who have succeeded in securing a dissolution of a temporary injunction, his claim for damages on the injunction bond, consisting merely in his attorney's fees, the transaction is not objectionable as champertous. Lacey v. Davis (Iowa) 98 N. W. 366, 367 (quoting 6 Cyc. p. 850).

"Champerty" is a species of maintenance, being a bargain with the plaintiff or defendant to divide land, or other matter sued for, between them, if they prevail at law, whereupon the champertor is to carry the party suit at his own expense. It is the unlawful maintenance of a suit in consideration of some bargain to have a part of the thing in dispute or some profit out of it. It is the aiding of a litigant with money to prosecute or defend his suit by a stranger having no interest, direct or remote, immediate or contingent, upon an agreement with the party in interest, whereby such stranger is to receive a part of the thing in dispute. Champertous contracts are unenforceable at common law. The purpose of the early English law on the subject of champerty and maintenance was to check the power and influence of the great men felt in the administration of justice and who, by reason of such influence, would receive interests in questionable or latent titles and rights in land and carry on litigation to establish such pretended right or title to the oppression and injury of those justly entitled to the equal protection of the law. Although the growth of the law and the administration thereof have established an entirely different state of society at the present time, the common-law doctrine, with some restrictions, is still applied to champerty and maintenance, and a contract which expressly provides for the bringing of a suit to quiet title to the oil and gas covered by a lease theretofore executed, and stipulating that such suit shall be carried on at the cost and expense of one party, and stipulating for a division of the subject-matter in the suit between the parties thereto in case the suit is successful, is champertous. Mud Valley Oil & Gas Co. v. Hitchcock, 81 N. E. 111, 112, 113, 40 Ind. App. 105 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1047; Anderson's Law Dict.; Stotsenburg v. Marks, 79 Ind. 193; Quigley v. Thompson, 53 Ind. 317; Board of Com'rs of Bartholomew County v. Jameson, 86 Ind. 154; Cleveland, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Davis, 36 N. E. 778, 37 N. E. 1069, 10 Ind. App. 342; Hart v. State ex rel. Rock, 21 N. E. 654, 24 N. E. 151, 120 Ind. 83, 85).

A contract for the purchase of real estate need not stipulate for a division in kind of the land to be recovered in order to make the contract champertous, but it is sufficient if the champertor and the party with whom he contracts are to share in the fruits of a recovery; "champerty" being a bargain with plaintiff or defendant in a suit for a portion of the land or other matters sued for, in case of a successful termination of the suit which the champertor undertakes to carry on at his own expense. Seward v. Camp Mfg. Co., 71 S. E. 614, 616, 112 Va. 479.

"Champerty" is a species of maintenance whereby a stranger makes a bargain with a plaintiff or defendant to divide the land or other matter sued for between them if they prevail at law, whereupon the champertor is to carry on the party suit at his own expense. Champerty is a species of maintenance which at common law was an indictable offense. Maintenance was an officious intermeddling in a lawsuit by a mere stranger without profit. Champerty involved an element of compensation for such unlawful interference by bargain for part of the matter in suit, or some profit growing out of it. Smith v. Hartsell, 63 S. E. 172, 174, 175, 150 N. C. 71, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 203 (citing and quoting Gilman v. Jones; 5 South. 785, 87 Ala. 691, 4 L. R. A. 113, and Torrence v. Shedd, 112 Ill. 466).

Where a contract for attorney's fees contingent on the amount to be recovered stipulates that the client shall not compromise or settle his claim without the consent of the attorney, it is champertous and voidable at the option of the client, and its illegality will avail as a defense in an action against a third party, based on the contract. Davy v. Fidelity & Casualty Ins. Co., 85 N. E. 504, 507, 78 Ohio St. 256, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 443, 125 Am. St. Rep. 694.

To render a grant "champertous" within Rev. St. (1st Ed.) pt. 2, c. 1, tit. 2, § 147, providing that every grant of land shall be absolutely void if at the time of the delivery thereof the land shall be in the actual possession of a person claiming under a title adverse to that of the grantor, the "actual possession" required by the statute must be shown by plain and unequivocal proof. Saranac Land & Timber Co. v. Roberts, 109 N. Y. Supp. 547, 556, 125 App. Div. 333.

There are two essential elements in every "champertous agreement": First, there must be an undertaking by one person to defray the expenses, in whole or in part, of another's suit; second, an agreement or promise on the part of the latter to divide with the former the proceeds of the litigation in the event the prosecution was successful. Brush v. City of Carbondale, 82 N. E. 252, 255, 229 Ill. 144, 10 Ann. Cas. 121.

An assignment of a recovery or part of a recovery in tort is not champertous, and is an enforceable contract. The doctrine of champerty has been annulled as to assignments of causes or parts of causes of action for advances to defray costs by Rem. & Bal. Code, § 2970, defining barratry as the willful maintenance of suits in which the offender has no interest. Weed v. Foster, 109 Pac. 128, 124, 58 Wash. 675.

Contingent fee

A contract is "champertous" where it is for attorneys' services, for which the attorneys agree to look solely to a certain percentage of the recovery for their compensation, without any right to recover for services rendered, either before or after the recovery against the client. Gargano v. Pope, 69 N. E. 343, 344, 184 Mass. 571, 100 Am. St. Rep. 575.

At expense of champertor

An agreement by an attorney to pay all or some of the court costs to accrue in a suit which he is employed to prosecute is "champertous." Comstock v. Flower, 84 S. W. 207, 212, 109 Mo. App. 275 (citing Duke v. Harper, 66 Mo. 51, 27 Am. Rep. 314).

"Champerty" is a species of maintenance whereby a stranger makes a bargain with a plaintiff or defendant to divide the land or other matter sued for between them if they prevail at law, whereupon the champertor is to carry on the party's suit at his own expense. Smith v. Hartsell, 63 S. E. 172, 174, 150 N. C. 71, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 203.

"At common law 'champerty' was an offense, and from the beginning champertous agreements were deemed to be contrary to public policy and unenforceable." An agreement of attorneys to carry on a litigation for a share of the amount to be recovered at their own costs and expense is champertous. Moreland v. Devenney, 83 Pac. 1097, 72 Kan. 471.

A contract between plaintiff and defendant, an attorney, which provides that in consideration of services rendered by plaintiff in procuring bonds of a county as described in a receipt, to be sued on by defendant in accordance with a contract, appended to the receipt, defendant agrees to pay plaintiff one-half of the fee accruing in accordance with its terms, it being understood that plaintiff "shall pay one-half of any and all reasonable expenses * * * that may be necessary and proper" to insure the successful prosecution of the suit, does not bind plaintiff to pay any part of the costs of a suit on the bonds and is "champertous" on its face, though the contract appended to the receipt stipulates that, in case a suit is defeated, the attorney will pay all the costs thereof. Kelherer v. Henderson, 101 S. W. 1083, 1087, 203 Mo. 493.

"Champerty" may be defined to be a bargain with plaintiff or defendant in a suit for a portion of the land or other matters sued for in case of a successful termination of the suit which the champertor undertakes to carry on at his own expense. The cases and text-writers are practically uniform in holding that a contract by an attorney to undertake and carry on litigation at his own risk or without cost to his client for a share of the recovery is contrary to public policy and void. Roller v. Murray, 59 S. E. 421, 422, 107 Va. 527.

One engaged in the business of auditing the books of public officers, and having no interest in the subject-matter of a proposed litigation, contracted to audit the books of a trustee of a township for a percentage of all moneys recovered from the trustee by the township, and to hold the township harmless from costs and expenses, and at the same time executed a bond conditioned on the performance of the contract. Held, that the contract and bond must be treated as inseparably connected, and, as so treated, the contract and bond were champertous and void; "champerty" being a species of maintenance, a bargain with plaintiff or defendant to divide land or other matter sued for between them if they prevail at law, whereupon the champertor is to carry the party suit at his own expense. Lancaster Tp. of Wells County v. Graves, 96 N. E. 172, 173, 48 Ind. App. 499 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1047).

Maintenance by stranger without interest

Where a party has an interest, direct or remote, immediate or contingent, existing at the time an action is commenced, the right of such party to assist in maintaining the suit exists and may be exercised, for it is the aiding of a litigant by a stranger having no interest, direct or remote, immediate or contingent, on an agreement with the party in interest, whereupon such stranger is to receive a part of the thing in dispute, that constitutes champerty, so that a contract between two creditors of the same debtor to sue to set aside a conveyance by the debtor as fraudulent, each to pay one-half of the expense and to divide equally the amount collected, is not champertous, each creditor being interested in the subject-matter of the litigation because of having claims of equal standing against the debtor. Hotmire v. O'Brien, 60 N. E. 33, 34, 44 Ind. App. 694.

Purchase of litigation

Code Civ. Proc. § 74, prohibits attorneys from procuring retainers by offering or giving any valuable consideration therefor. Held, to prohibit an attorney from giving any consideration to a client for the purpose of obtaining his claim to bring suit thereon and from agreeing to pay to any agent out of the profits of cases for his services in inducing other persons to place their claims in the attorney's hands; such conduct being "champertous" and subjecting the attorney to removal from office and punishment as for a misdemeanor under section 75. In re Clark, 77 N. E. 1, 2, 184 N. Y. 222.

An agreement by an attorney for a contingent fee of 50 per cent. of the recovery, the attorney to advance all the court costs, is "champertous," within Code Civ. Proc. § 74, providing that an attorney shall not promise or give a valuable consideration to any person as an inducement to placing in his hands a demand of any kind for the purpose of bringing an action thereon. Taylor v. Enthoven, 88 N. Y. Supp. 138.

The purchase of a lawsuit by an attorney is "champerty." Slade v. Zeitfuss, 59 Atl. 406, 407, 77 Conn. 457.

CHANCE

See By Chance; Game of Chance; Last Clear Chance.

See, also, Hazard.

"Chance" is something that befalls; the result of unknown or uncertain forces or conditions. It is possibility, hazard, risk, or the result or issue of uncertain or unknown conditions or forces, neither understandingly brought about by the one's act nor pre-estimated by one's understanding. Stevens v. Cincinnati Times-Star Co., 73 N. E. 1058, 1060, 72 Ohio St. 112, 106 Am. St. Rep. 586.

"It is strictly and philosophically true in nature and reason that there is no such thing as 'chance' or accident, it being evident that these words do not signify anything really existing, anything that is truly an agent or cause of any event; but they signify merely men's ignorance of the real and immediate cause.' But, though, nothing occurs in the world as a result of chance, the occurrence may be a matter of chance to the observer from his ignorance of antecedent causes or of the laws of their operation. If one is told to draw from a box of which he is informed simply that it contains black balls and white balls, it is to him a matter of equal chance whether he draws a black one or a white one, and this though in fact the box contains 99 of one kind and one of the other. Nor would the chances to him be at all changed if he were told that there were 99 of one kind and one of the other, unless he was told of which color the 99 were. Therefore that may be a matter of chance to one man which is not a matter of chance to another, and with different men the chances of the occurrence of any event may differ greatly. It may be said that an event presents the element of chance so far as after the exercise of research, investigation, skill, and judgment we are unable to foresee its occurrence or nonoccurrence, or the forms and conditions of its occurrence." People ex rel. Ellison v. Lavin, 71 N. E. 753, 754, 179 N. Y. 164, 66 L. R. A. 601, 1 Ann. Cas. 165.

"By the word 'chance,' as defined by Webster, is meant 'something that befalls, as the result of unknown or unconsidered forces; the issue of uncertain conditions; an event not calculated upon; an unexpected occurrence; a happening; accident, fortuity, casualty.'" A financial co-operative scheme whereby the fees and dues were to be returned to the members, and which was certain to involve a loss to every one interested as soon as the number of members ceased to increase, was a scheme for the distribution of money by lot or chance within the meaning of the provisions of U. S. Rev. St. § 3929, as amended by the Act Sept. 19, 1890, c. 908, 26 Stat. 465, and of section 4041, and of Act March 2, 1895, c. 191; § 4, 28 Stat. 964, empowering the postmaster general to deny the privilege of the mails to persons engaged in certain prohibited enterprises. Public Cleaning House v. Coyne, 24 Sup. Ct. 789, 795, 194 U. S. 497, 48 L. Ed. 1092.

The word "hazard," as used in a statute forbidding any person to maintain any scheme or any lottery, scheme, or device for the "hazarding" of money or valuable thing, meant "chance," and the chance here referred to is that chance which is employed in connection with lottery schemes, where the attempt is to attain certain ends, not by skill or any known or fixed rules, but by the happening of a subsequent event incapable of ascertainment or accomplishment by means of human foresight or ingenuity. If the result in a given transaction could be accomplished or foretold by the exercise of skill or foresight, its ascertainment would not be attributed to chance but to the exercise of skill or foresight, and consequently to design. Chance and design are exactly opposite, and the presence of either will exclude the other. Where design enters into a transaction, it immediately partakes of the nature of contract and will be governed by other principles. In the gaming sense there is no chance whatever where either party has means of knowing the result at the inception of the wager. There may be fraud, but not chance. The International Dictionary gives the general definition of chance as "the unknown or undefined cause of events that to us are uncertain or not subject to calculation; luck; fortune." 6 Cyc. p. 890, defines chance thus: "Possibility; hazard; risk; or the result or issue of uncertain and unknown conditions or forces neither understandingly brought about by one's act nor pre-estimated by one's understanding." Russell v. Equitable Loan & Security Co., 58 S. E. 881, 885, 129 Ga. 154, 12 Ann. Cas. 129.

"Curious results sometimes happen by chance, but when those results happen so largely along the lines of the purposes of those who have control of the supposed chance, it is not strange that outsiders are apt to feel that purpose, and not chance determined the result." (Per Brewer, J., dissenting.) Taylor v. Beckham, 20 Sup. Ct. 890, 903, 178 U. S. 584, 44 L. Ed. 1187.

Where a pecuniary consideration is paid, and it is determined by lot or chance, according to some scheme held out to the public, what and how much he who pays the money is to have for it, that is a lottery. It is a sort of gaming contract by which, for a valuable consideration, one may, by favor of the lot, obtain a prize of a value superior to that of the amount or value of that which he risks. It is a scheme by which a result is reached by some action or means taken, and in which result man's choice or will has no part, nor can human reason, foresight, sagacity, or design enable him to know or determine such result until the same has been accomplished. However, it should not be concluded that the term "lot or chance" implies that, if any element of certainty or skill enters into the scheme, it therefore relieves it of its character as a lottery or scheme of chance. "Chance" is something that befalls; the result of unknown or uncertain forces or conditions. A guessing contest instituted by a newspaper company, by which persons are invited to deliver to the company 50 cents each, 24 cents of which being payment for a subscription to the newspaper and 26 cents for the privilege of making a guess upon the total vote for a state officer who is to be chosen at an approaching election, the guesser coming nearest to the actual total vote cast to receive a money prize from the fund equal to one-tenth thereof, and others next nearest to receive from the fund lesser money prizes, is within the condemnation of the statutes of Ohio against "lotteries" and "schemes of chance" and is an unlawful enterprise. And a similar scheme, involving the same amount of payment by each person, but differing from the former in that there is to be no subscription to a paper, and the prizes promised are definite amounts from $5,000 down to $2, is equally within the condemnation of the statute and unlawful. Stevens v. Cincinnati Times-Star Co., 73 N. E. 1058, 1060, 72 Ohio St. 112, 108 Am. St. Rep. 586.

CHANCE VERDICT

Under Rev. St. 1898, § 3292, relating to misconduct of the jury by a resort to the "determination of chance." The "determination of chance" must have been the means of inducing one or more jurors to assent to the verdict. A new trial may not be had on the ground that the jury resorted to the "determination of chance," unless it appear that the assent of one or more jurors was thereby obtained to the verdict. Midgley v. Bergerman, 83 Pac. 466, 467, 30 Utah, 17 (quoting and adopting definitions in Pence v. Mining Co., 75 Pac. 934, 27 Utah, 378).

CHANCERY

See Court of Chancery; Master in Chancery.

CHANCERY COURT

See Jurisdiction Originally Exercised by Chancery Court.

CHANCERY POWER

The appointment of a receiver is the exercise of "chancery power," within the Organic Act, § 9, providing that the Supreme and district courts shall possess chancery as well as common-law jurisdiction, and such power cannot be conferred on or exercised by the probate courts. Garrett v. London & Lancashire Fire Ins. Co., 81 Pac. 421, 15 Okl. 222.

CHANCERY RECEIVER

A "chancery receiver" is an indifferent person, appointed to hold property in litigation pending suit, who derives his authority from the court, and not from the parties, at whose instance he is appointed. He acts in behalf of no particular interest, but guards the rights of all, and, being a mere holder, his appointment does not change the title to the property in his charge, nor affect any lien. Pennsylvania Steel Co. v. New York City Ry. Co., 198 Fed. 721, 728, 117 C. C. A. 508.

CHANGE

See Necessary Changes; Plenty of Change; Substantial Change.

Any change increasing risk, see Any.

Any change in grade, see "Any."

Otherwise change, see Otherwise.

The word "change," as used in subdivision 17, § 3847, Comp. Laws 1897, implies the substitution of one thing for another, the giving up of all or a part of a line of road, and the provision of another railroad in lieu thereof. If no abandonment was contemplated, the words used should have been "addition," instead of "change." Territory v. Eastern Ry. of New Mexico, 110 Pac. 852, 853, 15 N. M. 591.

A vote at a school election "to move the school house onto the southeast corner" of a certain place is in effect a vote to change the school house site. Livesay v. Whitney, 81 S. W. 640, 641, 107 Mo. App. 475.

In condition

Construing Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule K, par. 356, 80 Stat. 183, providing an increased duty on wool "changed in its character or condition for the purpose of evading the duty," held, that it is not necessary that there should be any mechanical or chemical change, disguising the quality or character of the wool; and that, where white and black Iceland wools, which had always been dealt in and imported separately in different bales, were imported mixed together in the same bale for the purpose of securing a lower rate of duty on the white wool, the wool had been changed in condition within the meaning of the law. Stone & Downer Co. v. United States, 147 Fed. 603, 605.

As failure to keep and maintain

The phrase "shall not be changed" is in effect the same as "shall keep and maintain," as the same are used in Rev. St. 1895, art. 4367, requiring railroads to keep and maintain their general offices, machine shops, and roundhouses at such places as the railroad has for a valuable consideration contracted to locate the same and providing that, if the same are located in a county which has aided the railroad by an issue of bonds in consideration of such location, then such location "shall not be changed." City of Tyler v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co., 91 S. W. 1, 5, 99 Tex. 491, 13 Ann. Cas. 911.

In interest

See, also, Interest (In Property).

The word "interest," as used in a fire policy, relating to change of interest in the property insured, relates only to some lesser insurable interest therein than full title. Pomeroy v. Aetna Ins. Co., 120 Pac. 344, 346, 86 Kan. 214, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 142, Ann. Cas. 1918C, 170.

There is no "change in interest" in insured property, within the provision of a fire policy that such a change should make the policy void, where a real estate agent, having verbal authority merely, makes a contract of sale not in writing and gives a receipt for part of the purchase money, the balance to be paid if title proved good, and the owner executes a deed and gives it to the agent to deliver on payment of the balance of purchase money; the contract being within the statute of frauds and not enforceable. Moseley v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co., 84 S. W. 1000, 1001, 109 Mo. App. 464 (citing Ayres v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 17 Iowa, 176, 85 Am. Dec. 553; Hoffmann v. Columbia, 76 Mo. App. 553; Walker v. Owen, 79 Mo. 563; Gibb v. Philadelphia Fire Ins. Co., 61 N. W. 137, 59 Minn. 267, 50 Am. St. Rep. 405; Germond v. Home Ins. Co. [N. Y.] 2 Hun, 540; Loventhal v. Home Ins. Co., 20 South. 419, 112 Ala. 108, 33 L. R. A. 258, 57 Am. St. Rep. 17; Arkansas Fire Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 55 S. W. 933, 67 Ark. 553, 48 L. R. A. 510, 77 Am. St. Rep. 129; Hough v. City Fire Ins. Co., 29 Conn. 10, 76 Am. Dec. 581).

The word interest in an insurance policy providing that it shall be void "if any change shall take place in the interest, title, or possession of the subject of insurance," applies only where insured owns and insures an interest less than title, and has no application where the insured owns the title. Garner v. Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co., 84 Pac. 717, 718, 73 Kan. 127, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 654, 117 Am. St. Rep. 460, 9 Ann. Cas. 459.

Appointment of a receiver for a corporation is not ground for forfeiting a fire policy issued to the corporation, as a change in interest, title, or possession of the property insured, though Revisal 1905, § 1224, provides that title to property, shall vest in a receiver on his appointment. Southern Pants Co. v. Rochester German Ins. Co., 74 S. E. 812, 159 N. C. 78.

Where the condition in a fire policy is against any change in the title, there is no breach unless there is a change in the legal title. This doctrine cannot be applied "to a condition against any change of interest." The terms are not synonymous. The word "interest" is broader than the word "title," and includes ordinary legal and equitable rights. Hence, under a policy providing that it shall be void if any change takes place in the interest, title, or position of the subject of insurance, any material change in the interest of the insured in the subject of the insurance will avoid the policy. Excelsior Foundry Co. v. Western Assur. Co., 98 N. W. 9, 11, 135 Mich. 467, 8 Ann. Cas. 707.

A bankruptcy adjudication against insured, and a note by the referee in bankruptcy in his record of the name of the person whom he had selected as receiver to take charge of his property pending the appointment of a trustee, and an order appointing the receiver, and his qualification two days after the destruction of the property covered by the policy, did not constitute such a "change of interest" as to invalidate the policy, under a provision that it should be void if any change, other than by the death of the insured, should take place in the interest, title, or possession of the subject of insurance, etc., during the life of the policy. Fuller v. Jameson, 90 N. Y. Supp. 456, 457, 98 App. Div. 53.

Certain buildings and the furniture and fixtures in one of them were insured by plaintiff in defendant company. Plaintiff executed a mortgage on the insured property to a bank in another state purporting to secure a certain note, and on the same day executed a warranty deed to his sister, conveying the real estate on which the buildings stood for an expressed consideration, subject to the mortgage mentioned. The deed and mortgage were recorded, but in fact no consideration passed for either, and neither was ever in the possession of those in whose favor they were executed. A deed to the property was executed by plaintiff's sister on the same day and delivered to him; the object of the transactions being to avoid trouble relative to taxes on merchandise. Held, that there was no "change or diminution in the interest, title, or possession" of the property insured, within the meaning of a forfeiture clause in the policy, since no interest passed and no possession or right of possession was given, and the parties did not intend any such change. Cone v. Century Fire Ins. Co., 117 N. W. 307, 308, 139 Iowa, 205.

There is no change of interest in the insured property, which under a fire policy works for a forfeiture, where a contract for the price thereof is given, which amounts to a mere option, with rights of possession for experimental purposes, subject to a free access and management by the owner. Mackintosh v. Agricultural Fire Ins. Co., 89 Pac. 102, 104, 150 Cal. 440, 119 Am. St. Rep. 234.

In location of highway

Laws 1907, c. 201, § 16, provides that if after the changing, locating, or relocating of any public road, or opening and establishing any new public highway, any person be aggrieved, and he and the superintendent of roads cannot agree on the damages, if any, he may apply within six months after such change or opening and establishment of a new road for the assessment of damages. Held, that the word "change" refers not to a change contemplated and directed, but to a change completed, and that the word "establish" was used in the sense of "to found, prepare, make, institute, and confirm"; and hence an application to the clerk for an assessment of damages within six months after a change of a public road had been accomplished was in time. Bost v. Cabarrus County, 87 S. E. 1066, 1067, 152 N. C. 531.

In timber contract

A contract for the cutting of timber into ties of specified dimensions and barrel staves and bolts for a specified compensation, which gives the owner of the land the right to direct how the timber shall be cut, and which stipulates that the owner reserves the right to "change" any part of the contract, does not give the owner the right to terminate the contract; the word "change" meaning to alter or make different. Grayson-McLeod Lumber Co. v. Slack-Kress Tie & Stave Co. (Ark.) 143 S. W. 581, 582.

Of business

An accident policy providing that, if insured should change his business, he must immediately notify the company, and that, unless its board consented to the change, the policy upon the tenth day thereafter should terminate, means the substitution of one business for another as the usual business of insured, and does not refer to a casual or incidental resort to other activities for 80 days, where the business named in the policy was not abandoned, and insured expected within a few days of the accident to continue the same. Taylor v. Illinois Commercial Men's Ass'n of Chicago, 122 N. W. 41, 42, 84 Neb. 799.

Of domicile

To effect a change of domicile, there be an actual change of residence coupled with an intention to abandon the former domicile and to acquire another. Ætna Nat. Bank v. Kramer, 126 N. Y. Supp. 970, 971, 142 App. Div. 444.

To effect a change of domicile, there must be a residence in the new locality and intention to remain there. Eisele v. Oddie, 128 Fed. 941, 945.

The term "domicile" in its ordinary acceptation means a place where a person lives or has his home, and in a strict legal sense that is properly the domicile of a person where he has his true, fixed, permanent home, and principal establishment, and to which, whenever he is absent, he has the intention of returning. In order to effect a change of domicile, there must be an actual abandonment of the first domicile coupled with an intention not to return thereto, and a new domicile must be acquired by actual residence within another jurisdiction coupled with the intention of making the last acquired residence a permanent home. Holt v. Hendee, 93 N. E. 749, 752, 248 Ill. 288, 21 Ann. Cas. 202.

To effect a "change of domicile" there must be actual residence and intent to change. Residence, coupled with an intent to remain, establishes the domicile, notwithstanding a floating intention to return to another place at some future time. In re Titterton's Estate, 106 N. W. 761, 762, 130 Iowa, 356.

To effect a change of domicile, there must be an actual abandonment of the first domicile, coupled with an intention not to return to it, and there must be a new domicile, acquired by actual residence within another jurisdiction, coupled with the intention of making the last acquired residence a permanent home. People v. Molr, 69 N. E. 905, 907, 207 Ill. 180, 99 Am. St. Rep. 205 (citing Hayes v. Hayes, 74 Ill. 312).

A "change of domicile" cannot be effected by a mere intention in the mind to make the change unless it is accompanied by an actual change in the place of abode. The mere intention to acquire a new residence, without the fact of removal, avails nothing; neither does the fact of removal without the intention. Evidence of defendant's intention to take up his place of abode in a certain city, unaccompanied by acts calculated to carry such intention into effect, other than the placing of his wife in the home of her father in such city and his occasional visits to her, was insufficient to establish his residence in such city. Sheehan v. Scott, 79 Pac. 350, 352, 145 Cal. 684 (quoting and adopting the definition in Pickering v. Cambridge, 10 N. E. 827, 144 Mass. 244).

While residence is largely a matter of intention, mere intention to change from one place to another, and making a trip of investigation, is not enough; but one must determine on some definite place to which to remove, and take some affirmative step toward transferring his personal effects, or toward settling himself in the new place. State ex rel. White v. Scott, 171 Ind. 349, 86 N. E. 409, 412.

To effect a change of domicile for the purpose of succession, there must be a change of residence and an intention to abandon the former domicile, and acquire another as the sole domicile. Length of residence alone does not effect a change, nor does intention alone do it. United States Trust Co. of New York v. Hart, 135 N. Y. Supp. 81, 82, 150 App. Div. 413.

Of grade

Any change in grade, see Any.

A "change of grade," within the meaning of Rev. St. 1898, § 282, making cities liable for damages to property in case the established grade of a street is changed after improvements have been made upon the property in conformity with the prior established grade, and providing that the right to recover damages for "change of grade" shall apply to all cases of improved property where grades have theretofore been determined upon and established and not carried into effect, includes a case where a grade of a street was established but was not carried into effect, and thereafter buildings were erected on property abutting on the street, and a city is liable as for a "change of grade" resulting in damage to the buildings and property. Kimball v. Salt Lake City, 90 Pac. 395, 396, 32 Utah, 253, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 483, 125 Am. St. Rep. 859.

A "change of the grade" of a street is an actual physical change in the surface thereof, and, where an established grade is changed after property has been improved according to the established grade without injuring or diminishing the value of the property, the city is not liable for changing the grade, and, where the city did work in altering the grade and then ceased operations for such length of time as to make it appear that the work was completed, the owner of abutting property would only be entitled to recover for the injury occasioned by what had been done. Meardon v. Iowa City, 126 N. W. 989, 941, 148 Iowa, 12.

Change in elevation of a street is a "change of grade" thereof, within Village Law, § 159, allowing lot owners to recover damages; the grade thereof, while not previously fixed by ordinance, having for years been established by usage and common consent of the public. Hence the raising of a sidewalk is a "change of grade," within a statute allowing lot owners to recover damages in case of a change of grade. Nicholay v. Village of Newark, 130 N. Y. Supp. 1033, 1035.

Laws 1894, c. 147, as amended by Laws 1897, c. 664, authorizing the construction of a bridge with approaches extending along W. avenue to 134th street, and providing for payment of damages for change of grade for land taken and for damages sustained by owners fronting on the avenue between 132d and 133d streets, and authorizing the taking of land to widen the avenue between 133d and 134th streets, do not authorize the award of damages to owners of property abutting on the avenue in the block between 133d and 134th streets, where the avenue remains at the old grade, and in the center of it, as widened by acquisition of land, is the approach, though the same interferes with the easements of light, air, and access; the approach not being a "change of grade." People ex rel. City of New York v. Sandrock Realty Co., 134 N. Y. Supp. 427, 429, 149 App. Div. 651.

Of habitation

A decree that a grandmother be allowed to visit her grandchild at the father's house, and that upon request of the grandmother the child be required to spend seven successive days with her each month, is a "change of habitation" under the guise of visitation. Wofford v. Clark, 104 S. W. 1103, 84 Ark. 623.

Of intention

Where, after a person had made a written offer, he received no actual notice of an acceptance until after he had made a contract involving the subject-matter with another, the acceptance came too late to bind him, he having already signified his change of intention within Rev. Civ. Code, art. 1801, providing that a party proposing shall be presumed to continue in the intention which his proposal expressed, if, on receiving the unqualified assent of him to whom the proposal is made, he does not signify the change of his intention. Union Sawmill Co. v. Mitchell, 48 South. 317, 318, 122 La. 900.

Of occupation

"Occupation" is a term of broad significance and includes the trade, calling, profession, office, employment, or business by which one generally gets his living; and it is not incidental, recreatory, or even necessary suspension of the performance of regular duty which constitutes a "change of occupation" by one insured against accident. Everson v. General Accident Fire & Life Assur. Corp., Limited, of Perth, Scotland, 88 N. H. 658, 659, 661, 202 Mass. 169.

Of position

The bringing of a suit is not a "change of position" within the meaning of the law of estoppel, since a suit cannot create rights nor change the legal situation of the parties. Des Allemands Lumber Co. v. Morgan City Timber Co., 41 South. 332, 347, 117 La. 1.

Of possession

See Actual and Continued Change of Possession; Continued Change of Possession; Open, Notorious, and Continuous Change of Possession.

The title of P. L. 1906, p. 432, c. 228, entitled "an act to tax intestate's estates," etc., is sufficiently comprehensive to include the subject-matter of section 1, subd. 2, providing that a tax may be imposed when the "transfer" is by will of property within the state and decedent was a nonresident at death; the word "transfer" being used as synonymous with "change of possession." Dixon v. Russell, 73 Atl. 51, 53, 78 N. J. Law, 296.

Under St. 1893, § 2663, providing that every transfer of personal property made by a person having at the time a possession or control thereof, and not accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by an actual and continued "change of possession" of the things transferred, shall be conclusively presumed fraudulent and void against creditors and incumbrancers in good faith subsequent to the transfer, there must be an actual and substantial change of possession; the possession must be actual and exclusive and not concurrent. Where pledgees took possession of the property pledged, which consisted of a stock of goods, and opened them up for sale in a building rented by the debtors, and in the same name in which a mercantile business had been run and was being carried on by the debtors at another place, and allowed the debtors to buy new goods and place them in the stock, and all were being sold in the usual course of trade, and the money used in payment of freight on goods, rent of building leased by the debtors, and for shelving and counters, and other expenses of the store, and the remaining proceeds of the sales deposited in bank in the name of the debtors, and the debtors drew on the same by sight draft, and the remaining balance was never drawn out of the bank or asked for by the pledgees, there was no "change of possession" to sustain the pledge as against attaching creditors who merged their attachment into a mortgage given by the debtors. Jackson v. Kincaid, 46 Pac. 587, 590, 4 Okl. 554 (citing Stoddard v. Butler, 20 Wend. 507; Regli v. McClure, 47 Cal. 612; Waller v. Cralle, 47 Ky. [8 B. Mon.] 11; Stevens v. Irwin, 15 Cal. 503, 76 Am. Dec. 500; Mead v. Noyes, 44 Conn. 487; Brunswick v. McClay, 7 Neb. 137; Casey v. Cavaroc, 96 U. S. 467, 24 L. Ed. 779).

Of residence

As removal, see Remove—Removal.

When a person removes from his domicile in one state to establish a home for himself in another state or country, at a place well known, there is a "change of residence," and absence from the last domicile is that upon which the presumption of death must be built within the rule that a presumption of death is raised by the absence of a person from his domicile when unheard of for seven years. Gorham v. Settegast, 98 S. W. 665, 668, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 254.

Of terminus

A railroad company, having the right to locate a depot at a new site, had power to condemn land for the additional right of way required to elevate its tracks, in order that its trains might enter and depart from the depot; this not being a "relocation" of the right of way of the road, or a "change of its terminus." Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Chicago Mechanics' Institute, 87 N. E. 933, 937, 945, 239 Ill. 197.

Of title

Change in interest distinguished, see Change.

The title of P. L. 1906, p. 432, c. 228, entitled "An act to tax intestates' estates," etc., is sufficiently comprehensive to include the subject-matter of section 1, subd. 2, providing that a tax may be imposed when the transfer is by will of property within the state and decedent was a nonresident at death; the word "transfer" being used as synonymous with "change of title." Dixon v. Russell, 73 Atl. 51, 53, 78 N. J. Law, 296.

There is a change of "title," as well as of "interest" and "possession," within a fire policy declaring it void in case of any change in the interest, title, or possession of the insured property, where insured, the owner in fee of the insured property, makes a contract of sale of it, declaring that deed shall pass when final payment is made, and that the purchaser shall pay all taxes and assessments levied against the property subsequent to contract, and shall have the right to occupy the property before passing of title, as tenant of the seller, without pay, and the purchaser goes into possession and is not in default. Brighton Beach Racing Ass'n v. Home Ins. Co., 99 N. Y. Supp. 219, 221, 118 App. Div. 728.

CHANGE OF VENUE

Good cause for, see Good Cause.

Proceedings to secure, as within practice, see Practice (In Law).

The phrase "change of venue" has been used throughout the legislative history of the state to denote the removal of causes from one county to another county, and never removals from one court to another in the same county. Dudley v. Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co., 36 South. 700, 702, 139 Ala. 453.

CHANGING

The word "changing," in Const. art. 5, § 26, prohibiting local or special laws locating or changing county seats, means removal of an established and permanent county seat. Laws 1909, c. 133, creating Lincoln county and providing that the town of Libby shall be the county seat until the county seat is designated, as provided, and that for the purpose of definitely fixing and creating a county seat the board of county commissioners shall insert on the ballots in the general election "for the county seat of Lincoln county," and the town receiving the largest number of votes shall be the county seat, contravenes the constitutional provision. State ex rel. Geiger v. Long, 117 Pac. 104, 105, 43 Mont. 401.

As used in the by-laws of a mutual benefit association, the phrase "changing the beneficiary" refers to the act of naming and specifying some other person or persons in the place of those previously designated. St. Louis Police Relief Ass'n v. Tierney, 91 S. W. 968, 974, 116 Mo. App. 447 (citing Hanson v. Minnesota Scandinavian Relief Ass'n, 59 Minn. 123-128, 60 N. W. 1091; Shryock v. Shryock, 70 N. W. 515, 50 Neb. 886).

CHANNEL

See Auxiliary Channel; Flood Channel; Known and Well-Defined Channel; Main Channel; Narrow Channel; Ship Channel; Widest Channel.

"Whether high or low the entire volume at any one time constitutes the water of the river at such time, and the land over which its current flows must be regarded as its 'channel,' so that when swollen by rains and melting snows, it extends and flows over the bottom along its course (that is, its flood channel), as when by drought it is reduced to its minimum it is then in its low water channel." Cole v. Missouri, etc., Co., 94 Pac. 540, 541, 20 Okl. 227, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 268.

The middle line of a nonnavigable river at low-water mark is not the center of the channel which means the continuous course of deepest water, but is a line equally distant from all points on the opposite banks at right angles with the thread at low-water mark. Micelli v. Andrus, 120 Pac. 737, 740, 61 Or. 78.

The "channel" of a stream is the passageway between the banks through which the waters of the stream flow. It is the entire uninterrupted space occupied by water flowing between well-defined banks. This definition is broad enough to include a flow of water between an island and one of the banks of a stream. Morton v. Oregon Short Line Ry. Co., 87 Pac. 151, 153, 48 Or. 444, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 344, 120 Am. St. Rep. 827 (citing Farnham, Waters, § 417).

"The 'channel' of a stream in its larger sense is its bed from bank to bank; the hollow or course in which the water flows." Cities and Villages Act (Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 24) § 1, subd. 30, which provides that the city council, or the president and board of trustees in villages, shall have power to deepen, widen, dock, cover, wall, alter, or change the channel of water courses, gives the right to change the entire bed of the stream, for to construe the word "channel" as meaning the deepest part or thread of the stream would not give effect to the words "alter or change." Village of Prairie du Rocher v. Schoening-Koenigsmark Milling Co., 93 N. E. 425, 426, 248 Ill. 57 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1059).

The "channel of a river" and the bed of a river ordinarily mean the same thing and are understood to describe that depression on the earth's surface in which the waters of the stream are confined and flow in its ordinary stages, unaffected by freshets or droughts. In boatmen's parlance it is the course over its bed over which the water is deepest and the navigation safest. This may be irrespective of the current or distance from the shore. In questions of geography or boundaries, however, the term is more generally used to designate the depression of a bed below the permanent banks, forming a conduit along which waters flow, and which may be at some times full and at others nearly, if not quite, dry. This is the sense in which it is commonly used in law, and it is the more obvious signification in connection with boundaries, inasmuch as it presents something of a permanent nature, or at least at all times visible, and when changed leaving traces of old landmarks. State v. Munice Pulp Co., 104 S. W. 437, 443, 119 Tenn. 47.

As boundary

The widest expanse of water which can reasonably be called a channel is what is meant by the words "widest channel" in Act Feb. 14, 1859, c. 11, 11 Stat. 383, admitting Oregon into the Union with the Columbia river as its northern boundary. State of Washington v. State of Oregon, 29 Sup. Ct. 631, 632, 214 U. S. 205, 216, 53 L. Ed. 909.

CHANNEL BARS

"Channel bars" are vertical iron bars extending from the roof to the ceiling of a building in front of an elevator shaft, designed to hold the fire bricks making the final wall of the shaft. Hartman v. Clarke, 93 N. Y. Supp. 814, 104 App. Div. 62.

CHAR

CHARACTER

Respectable character, see Respectable.

The word "character" may denote either real character or reputed character. McQuigan v. Ladd, 64 Atl. 503, 504, 79 Vt. 90, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 689.

In one sense "character" is what a person really is. In another sense "character" is measured and determined from reputation and is what a person is supposed or estimated to be. The character of a female under the age of 18 years and over the age of 16, within the statute defining rape as an assault where the female is over the age of 16 and under the age of 18 and of previous chaste character, is that condition actually existing, contradistinguished from a character by reputation. Marshall v. Territory, 101 Pac. 139, 144, 2 Okl. Cr. 136.

"Character" is a continuous quality not quickly changed or changeable. The character of a witness at the time of testifying, is that which affects his truthfulness; but his character at another time may well be considered as evidencing his character at the time of testifying. Where a witness has been removed from a place less than three years and has established no residence elsewhere, his "character" in that community is admissible. Lindsay v. Bates, 122 S. W. 682, 687, 223 Mo. 294 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Greenl. Ev. § 461d1).

A witness, testifying to the general character of decedent in the community in which the latter lived, could also testify to such character in the community in which the witness lived, eight miles distant, though the witness lived in another state; "character" being the reputation one bears in the neighborhood in which he may reside or in which he is known. Pate v. State, 50 South. 357, 358, 162 Ala. 82.

"Character" grows out of special acts but is not proved by them." Such discrimination between character or reputation and specific acts of falsehood is constantly made where the question is as to the veracity of a party or witness; but, on an issue as to a master's negligence in retaining a servant in his employ after he knows him to be unfit for the service, this distinction does not exclude previous specific acts of the servant indicating incompetency which were or should have been known to the master. Pittsburgh Rys. Co. v. Thomas, 174 Fed. 591, 594, 98 C. C. A. 437 (quoting Frazier v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 38 Pa. 104, 80 Am. Dec. 467).

As used in a street paving contract, providing that the city should not be estopped by certificates of officers showing the true amount and "character" of the work done under the contract, the word "character" was not entirely accurate to express the meaning of the parties, but a fair construction of the word as was used was that the city might show the true and correct kind of the work that had been done; that is, that the work done was not of the general kind required by the contract. Quinn v. City of New York, 45 N. Y. Supp. 7, 9, 16 App. Div. 408.

Under the McEnerney act (St. 1906 [Ex. Sess.] p. 76), providing for an action to establish title in case of loss of records, and providing, in section 5, that an affidavit of plaintiff, fully and explicitly setting forth the character of his estate, right, title, and interest or claim in and possession of the property, shall be filed with the complaint, an affidavit, alleging simple possession without describing its character, was sufficient to give the court jurisdiction to decide the action; the word "character" having no reference to possession. Soher v. Cabaniss, 119 Pac. 911, 912, 161 Cal. 548.

The seal of a corporation is a "character" within the meaning of section 197 of the New Jersey crimes act (P. L. 1898, p. 848), and the forgery of such seal with intent to injure any person or corporation constitutes a crime thereunder. United States v. Andem, 158 Fed. 996, 997.

An assault with intent to commit murder is an offense of the same "character" as murder, within Cr. Code, § 5016, subd. 3, providing that a juror may be challenged if within 12 months he has been indicted for an offense of the same "character." Charleston v. State, 32 South. 259, 133 Ala. 118.

As reputation

"Character" is sometimes used as synonymous with "reputation." People v. Van Gaasbeck, 82 N. E. 718, 720, 189 N. Y. 408, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 650, 12 Ann. Cas. 745.

The word "character," when used in respect to the good or bad character of a defendant, means reputation, as distinguished from disposition. People v. Hinkman, 85 N. E. 676, 680, 192 N. Y. 421.

A person's character cannot be proved by asking a witness what kind of a man he is; the word "character," in legal parlance, being equivalent in meaning to the word "reputation." Peacock v. State, 73 S. E. 404, 10 Ga. App. 402.

The word "character" has a dual meaning, and may refer to a person's private life, about which the public may have no knowledge, or may mean the character that a person enjoys by reputation; and in libel actions "character" is synonymous with "reputation." Lydiard v. Daily News Co. of Minneapolis, 124 N. W. 985, 987, 110 Minn. 140, 19 Ann. Cas. 985.

"Character" is a fact which is proved by another fact; general reputation. It is not permissible to show character by evidence of particular facts. Felbelman v. Manchester Fire Assur. Co., 19 South. 540, 548, 108 Ala. 180.

The terms "character" and "reputation" are often used interchangeably, and where a witness testifies to knowledge gained from general repute, though the word "character" is used in the inquiry, there can be no error in receiving his testimony. Spain v. Rakestraw, 101 Pac. 466, 79 Kan. 758.

In Code, § 4614, providing that the general moral character of a witness may be proved to test his credibility, "character" is equivalent to general reputation. State v. Gregory, 128 N. W. 1109, 148 Iowa, 152.

Good general reputation for honesty, chastity, veracity, and like qualities is synonymous with "good character" as to those qualities, within the meaning of Cal. Pen. Code, § 268. The good character of a man is the estimation in which he is held in the community in which he resides. As stated in Anderson's Law Dictionary, the term "character" means: "The qualities impressed by nature or habit on a person, which distinguish him from other persons. These constitute his real character, while the qualities he is supposed to possess constitute his estimated character, or 'reputation.'" Under Pen. Code, § 268, requiring proof of the prosecutrix's previous chaste character in prosecutions for seduction, her reputation may be evidence of such character, as good general reputation for honesty, chastity, veracity, and like qualities is synonymous with good character as to these qualities within the meaning of the statute. Ex parte Vandiveer, 88 Pac. 993, 994, 4 Cal. App. 650.

Where the state attacked reputation of defendant, who was a witness, for truth and veracity, and defendant offered to prove that his "character" for truth and veracity was good, an objection on the ground that his "reputation," and not his "character," was involved, was improperly sustained, as the terms are frequently used without discrimination. State v. Tawney, 99 Pac. 268, 78 Kan. 855.

Reputation distinguished

A person's "reputation" and "character" are not the same. Reputation as evidence may tend to prove character; but a man may in fact have a good character while suffering from a bad reputation. Curtice v. Dixon, 68 Atl. 587, 589, 74 N. H. 386 (citing Bottoms v. Kent, 48 N. C. 160).

"Character" signifies the reality, and 'reputation' merely what is reputed or understood from report to be the reality about a person or thing." Woodruff v. State, 101 N. W. 1114, 1118, 72 Neb. 815 (citing 6 Cyc. p. 892).

"Character" is what a man is, whereas reputation is what people say of him. People v. Montgomery, 68 N. E. 258, 260, 176 N. Y. 219.

Strictly speaking, the words "reputation" and "character" are not synonymous. "Character" is what a man or woman is morally, while "reputation" is what he or she is reputed to be. Reputation is the estimate which the community has or expresses of a person's character; and, if the reputation is bad, this is treated as evidence where general character is involved. Moore v. Dozier, 57 S. E. 110, 113, 128 Ga. 90 (citing Leverich v. Frank, 6 Or. 212, 213; 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6118).

The word "character," although frequently used as synonymous with "reputation," is what a person is, while reputation is what he is supposed to be; and when he is an habitual violator of the law, by keeping his saloon open at prohibited times, he is not a person of good moral character and well disposed to the good order of the county, so as to be entitled to naturalization. United States v. Hraskey, 88 N. E. 1031, 1032, 1033, 240 Ill. 560, 130 Am. St. Rep. 288, 16 Ann. Cas. 279 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, pp. 1061, 1065).

"It would be well if 'character' and 'reputation' were used distinctly. In truth, 'character' is what a person is; 'reputation' is what he is supposed to be. Character is in himself; reputation is in the minds of others. Character is injured by temptation and by wrongdoing; reputation by slander and libels. Character endures throughout defamation in every form but perishes when there is a voluntary transgression; reputation may last through numerous transgressions, but be destroyed by a single, and even an unfounded, accusation or aspersion." Harrison v. Lakenan, 88 S. W. 53, 58, 189 Mo. 581 (quoting and adopting definition in Webster's Dict. and citing State v. Gee, 85 Mo. 647; State v. Brooks, 5 S. W. 257, 330, 92 Mo. loc. cit. 557; State v. Hillsabeck, 34

S. W. 88, 132 Mo. loc. cit. 358; and State v. Hudspeth, 60 S. W. 136, 159 Mo. loc. cit. 200).

CHARACTER AND CIRCUMSTANCES OF INJURY

A notice that plaintiff was injured while walking upon the sidewalk of defendant city at the intersection of certain streets does not give notice of the "character and circumstances of the injury," as required by Rev. St. 1899, § 5724, requiring such notice as a prerequisite to a recovery. Lyons v. City of St. Joseph, 87 S. W. 588, 112 Mo. App. 681.

Primarily the word "charge" means a load, a weight, a burden, and does not embrace compensation. Sage v. Vinton County Com'rs, 92 N. E. 24, 25, 82 Ohio St. 186.

To "charge" is to lay on or impose as a load, tax, or burden; to fix or demand a price for a thing or service. The word as used in an alternative writ of mandamus, setting up that a railroad charges and has charged rates in excess of the rates prescribed by the railroad commissioners, cannot be said to be indefinite and indeterminate in meaning. State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Atlantic Coast Line Ry. Co., 37 South. 652, 656, 48 Fla. 114.

Where a pleader intends to allege or aver a fact, it is sufficient, although he "charges" such to be the truth. Johnson v. Helmstaedter, 30 N. J. Eq. 124, 125.

Immigration Act Feb. 20, 1907, c. 1134, § 19, provides that if the owner of a steamship shall make any "charge" for the return of any alien brought to the United States and not entitled to enter, or shall take any security from him for the payment of such charge, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. An indictment alleged that defendant steamship company at Bremen collected return passage money from proposed immigrants who were within the excluded classes, and that it afterwards brought them to New York, and knowing of their proposed deportation, holds the money as security for a charge to be made for deportation. Held, that the word "charge" as so used did not import a continuing act, but meant an overt act, by which the charging party manifested his purpose to demand the money charged from the person charged, excluding the subsequent relations which were consequences of the act, and that the indictment was therefore fatally defective for failure to allege that the forbidden "charge" was made with the intent to apply the amount so collected to the return of the aliens under deportation. Under Immigration Act Feb. 20, 1907, c. 1134, § 19, 34 Stat. '904, providing that if any shipowner shall make any charge for the return of any alien brought to the United States and not entitled to enter, or shall take any security from him for the payment of the charge of deportation, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, an indictment alleging that defendant at Bremen collected return passage from certain proposed immigrants who were within the excluded classes, and held the money as security for a charge to be made for deportation, did not charge the taking of the money as security within the United States, since to retain money taken in a foreign country was not a continuous repetition of the "taking" within the United States by reason of the fact that the aliens were brought to the United States and ordered deported because not entitled to enter. United States v. Nord Deutscher Lloyd, 186 Fed. 391, 394.

The centrifugals used in sugar factories for the purpose of forcing out the molasses or syrup from the mass of sugar are "charged" when they are loaded with sugar. Great Western Sugar Co. v. Pray, 158 Fed. 756, 757, 86 C. C. A. 112.

As control or regulation

The brakeman was in "charge or control" of the train within the meaning of the statute; it having been his duty to set the brakes, and he having the power to so control the train. Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Vitello, 121 Pac. 112, 118, 21 Colo. App. 51.

Under a statute making a railroad company liable for injuries to its employes caused by the negligence of its yardmaster, engineer, or any other employer, who had "charge or control of any switch," a railroad is liable for injuries to a brakeman, caused by the collision of a switch engine with a train on which the brakeman was; the collision occurring at a station from which a spur track extended to certain quarries and being caused by the acts of the engineer of the switch engine and the yardmaster at the station, acting as brakeman in taking cars to the quarries. Albrecht v. Milwaukee & S. Ry. Co., 69 N. W. 63, 64, 94 Wis. 397.

A "person in charge of defendant's ways, works, and machinery" may or may not have authority to direct workmen, and whether he does or not will depend entirely on the authority given him by the master.

In an action for injuries to a servant, where one of the essential facts upon which the complaint was based was a negligent assignment of plaintiff to work at a machine, which required an allegation that plaintiff was put to work at the machine by defendant, an allegation that plaintiff was negligently and carelessly taken from his common work, and that those in charge of defendant's ways, works, and machinery ordered him to operate the machine where he was injured, was insufficient; the phrase "a person in charge of defendant's ways, works, and machinery" not carrying the necessary inference that he was authorized to direct workmen by authority of the master. Holliday & Wyon Co. v. O'Donnell, 90 N. E. 24, 26, 44 Ind. App. 647.

A tower man, whose duty it was to move a switch, is a person in "charge or control of" a switch within a statute, providing that a railroad company shall be liable for injuries caused by the negligence of an employe in charge or control of a switch. Welch v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 57 N. E. 668, 176 Mass. 393, 398.

Where defendant had set up and furnished the machinery in its factory which it agreed to maintain for the use of plaintiff's employer, it was "in charge" of the factory, within the meaning of Labor Law (Laws 1897, c. 415, § 81), imposing on the person "in charge" of the factory the duty of properly guarding the machinery, and it is liable for an injury to plaintiff due to its neglect to properly guard the machinery. Poole v. American Linseed Co., 103 N. Y. Supp. 1047, 1048, 119 App. Div. 136.

As a debt or liability

Testator made a residuary bequest to a nephew, declared that it was "charged" with an indebtedness due from the nephew's father, directed the executor not to enforce the collection thereof during the father's lifetime, and provided that, if the indebtedness exceeded the bequest, the same was to be made up to the other beneficiaries. Held that, on the indebtedness being less than the bequest, the executor should assign the indebtedness to the nephew; the testator intending that in making up the bequest the indebtedness should be debited as against the nephew's right and made a part of his interest. In re Bouck's Will, 113 N. W. 452, 453, 133 Wis. 161.

As lien or incumbrance

"Charge" is defined in Bouv. Law Dict. as "a lien, incumbrance, or claim which is to be satisfied out of the specific thing or proceeds thereof to which it applies." Under Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 16, § 83, providing that proceedings to enforce any charge or lien on lands shall be instituted in the county where such lands lie, etc.; the word "charge" means a lien, incumbrance, or claim which is to be satisfied out of the specific thing or proceeds thereof to which it applies, and a bill to set aside a conveyance as in fraud of creditors is a claim to be satisfied out of the land or the proceeds thereof. Abramson v. Horner, 80 Atl. 907, 912, 115 Md. 232.

A "charge" on land signifies either a burden imposed by a testator in his will, or a lien or incumbrance which the purchaser may have, and for which, at common law or in equity, he would be entitled to hold the land as security; and so a proceeding by an administrator to sell land of his testator for the payment of unsecured claims is not a proceeding for the enforcement of a "charge" on land, and hence is not governed by Code, art. 16, § 83, providing that all proceedings for the partition of real estate, foreclosure of mortgages, or enforcement of liens or charges shall be instituted in the court of the county or of the city of Baltimore, where the lands lie. Cain v. Miller, 82 Atl. 1055, 1057, 117 Md. 45; People v. Marks, 135 N. Y. Supp. 523, 75 Misc. Rep. 404 (citing Words and Phrases).

In the law of real property "charges" are always treated as charges in rem as well as in personam, unless the testator uses some other language which limits, restrains, or repels that construction." Also "a condition for the benefit of a person, without any expressed intention that its breach shall work a forfeiture of the estate, should be regarded as creating a trust or charge upon the land in such person's favor, to be enforced as other trusts and charges, and not as a limitation on the estate devised." Wood v. Ogden, 97 S. W. 610, 611, 121 Mo. App. 668 (quoting Sands v. Champlin, 1 Story, 376, 21 Fed. Cas. 339).

CHARGE (In Criminal Law)

See Act Charged; As Charged in the Information; Legal Charge of Crime; Legally Charged.

See, also, Arraign.

"Charged with crime," in legal parlance, means charged in the regular course of judicial proceedings. A man cannot be legally charged with crime when there is no jurisdiction to try him. The fact that he is so legally charged means that he is charged by an authority having a right to try him. The right to try means jurisdiction over the place where the crime has been committed and over the person who commits it." Ex parte Cheatham, 95 S. W. 1077, 1081, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 51 (quoting and adopting definition in Ex parte Morgan, 20 Fed. 308).

In Const. art. 4, § 2, providing for the extradition from one state to another of persons charged with crime, and Rev. St. § 5278, enacted for the carrying out of such constitutional provision, the term "charged with crime" is used in its broad sense and includes all persons accused of crime by legal proceedings; the charge continuing until such person has been tried and acquitted, or, if convicted, until the sentence imposed has been performed. Hughes v. Pfanz, 138 Fed. 980, 983, 71 C. C. A. 234 (citing In re Hope, 10 N. Y. Supp. 28; Drinkall v. Spiegel, Sheriff, 36 Atl. 830, 68 Conn. 441, 36 L. R. A. 496).

Where a person was legally charged under the laws of a sister state with an offense, and was legally convicted thereof under an information filed by the prosecuting officer of the sister state and such person subsequently fled to the state of Texas, the Governor of Texas properly issued his extradition warrant on a proper demand therefor; the word "charged," within Const. U. S. art. 4, § 2, and the federal statutes relating to extradition applying to persons convicted as well as to persons merely sought for the purpose of trial. Ex parte Bergman, 130 S. W. 174, 178, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 8.

The word "charged," in Const. art. 4, § 2, subd. 2, providing that "a person 'charged' in any state with treason, felony, or any other crime, who shall flee from justice and be found in another state, shall on demand of executive authority of the state from which he fled be delivered up to be removed to the state having jurisdiction of the crime," was used in its broad signification to cover any proceeding which a state might see fit to adopt by which a formal accusation was made against an alleged criminal. A person against whom a complaint for a felony has been filed before a committing magistrate, who can only charge or hold for trial before another tribunal, is "charged" with the crime within the meaning of the Constitution, and of Rev. St. § 5278, providing for the extradition of persons "charged" with treason, felony, or other crime. In re Strauss, 25 Sup. Ct. 535, 537, 197 U. S. 324, 49 L. Ed. 774.

A fugitive from justice is "charged" with a crime, within the extradition law, only when he is charged lawfully by a person who has knowledge of its commission, or is possessed of information, which he states under oath, leading a reasonable and fair mind to infer its commission. People ex rel. Cornett v. Warden of City Prison of Brooklyn, 112 N. Y. Supp. 492, 493, 60 Misc. Rep. 525.

An indictment, whether good or bad as a pleading, which unmistakably describes every element of the crime of false swearing, as defined by Pen. Code Tex. 1895, art. 209, is a "charge" of crime within the meaning of Const. U. S. art. 4, § 2, par. 2, relating to interstate extradition. Pierce v. Creecy, 23 Sup. Ct. 714, 719, 210 U. S. 387, 52 L. Ed. 1113.

The word "charged" as applied to criminal proceedings may have different meanings according to the text. It may mean the accusation which precedes the formal trial, or it may mean the responsibility for the crime itself, and, may be applicable to one who has been convicted and is serving a sentence. In common parlance, it signifies the formal commencement of a criminal proceeding, by filing or returning of the accusatory paper. State v. Ju Nun, 98 Pac. 513, 514, 53 Or. 1 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, p. 1069).

A "legal charge of crime," as contemplated by extradition statutes, means one made in that state having jurisdiction to try the offense and from which the fugitive fled. The word "charged," in 2 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 7017, declaring that, when any person shall be found within the state charged with an offense committed in another state, the court or magistrate may on complaint issue a warrant for his arrest, contemplates that the person arrested and delivered up committed the offense in another state and is in such state legally charged with crime. State v. White, 82 Pac. 907, 908, 909, 40 Wash. 560, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 563.

The words "charged with," as used in a statute providing that an accessory after the fact is one who, with knowledge that a crime has been committed, harbors or protects the person "charged with" or found guilty of the crime, cannot be said to have a well-known and established legal significance as applied to criminal offenses, but do not require that a judicial charge be then pending against the principal. The expression is sometimes used in a limited sense, including the accusation of a crime which precedes a formal trial. In a fuller and more accurate sense the expression includes also the responsibility for the crime. State v. Jones, 120 S. W. 154, 155, 91 Ark. 5, 18 Ann. Cas. 293 (quoting Drinkall v. Spiegel, 36 Atl. 330, 68 Conn. 441, 86 L. R. A. 436).

An indictment, whether good or bad as a pleading, which unmistakably describes every element of the crime of false swearing, as defined by Tex. Pen. Code 1895, art. 209, is a charge of crime within the meaning of Const. art. 4, § 2, par. 2, regulating interstate extradition. Pierce v. Creevy, 28 Sup. Ct. 714, 718, 210 U. S. 387, 52 L. Ed. 1113.

Rev. St. 1899, § 5273, provides that an information may be filed without a preliminary examination, whenever an offense shall be charged against any person at any time within 30 days immediately preceding the first day of a regular term of court of the county wherein such offense is charged to have been committed. Held, that the filing of the information constitutes the "charge," where there has been no prior proceeding, and that the 30 days are to be computed from the date of preferring the charge, and not from the date of the commission of the offense. Nicholson v. State, 106 Pac. 929, 930, 18 Wyo. 298.

The examination of witnesses before a grand jury need not be preceded by a presentment, indictment, or other formal "charge." In summoning witnesses before a grand jury it is sufficient to apprise them of the names of the parties with respect to whom they will be called upon to testify, without indicating the nature of the "charge" against such persons. Hale v. Henkel, 28 Sup. Ct. 370, 372, 201 U. S. 43, 50 L. Ed. 652.

CHARGE (To Jury)

See Additional Charge; General Charge; Written Charge or Instruction.

Abstract charge, see Abstract.

See, also, Instruction.

"Charging a jury" is stating the precise principles of law applicable to the case immediately in question. Oral statements made by the court to the jury with reference to the form of their verdict, which do not contain directions or instructions upon some question of law involved in the trial or comment on the evidence, are not instructions within the statute requiring instructions to the jury to be reduced to writing unless waived by the defendant. Douglas v. Territory, 98 Pac. 1023, 1024, 1 Okl. Cr. 583.

An oral charge taken down by a stenographer in the employ of both parties to report the proceedings is a charge in writing. Schon v. Modern Woodmen of America, 99 Pac. 25, 27, 51 Wash. 482.

The word "charged," as used in a holding that after a jury has been sworn and charged with the fate of the prisoner, it is too late to challenge any of its members, means when the prisoner has been placed in the hands of the jury for trial, which occurs when the jury is sworn and before indictment read or testimony heard, and not necessarily after the testimony in the case is heard or the law charged. When the jury has once been impaneled and charged with the trial of the prisoner, the discharge of the jury, unless by the consent of the prisoner, or in a case of legal necessity, will operate as an acquittal, and prevent his being again put on trial. Where, in a criminal case, after a jury was impaneled and sworn, the defendant arraigned, and the state and defendant announced ready for trial, the court, after asking them some questions, discharged two jurors over defendant's objection, one because of relationship to the defendant and the other because he had not been a resident of the county a sufficient time, the defendant was entitled to discharge on the ground of former jeopardy. Tomasson v. State, 79 S. W. 802, 808, 112 Tenn. 596 (quoting Ward v. State, 20 Tenn. [1 Humph.] 253; State v. Connor, 45 Tenn. [5 Cold.] 315).

Under Pen. Code 1910, § 1056, providing where the judge is requested to put his "charge" in writing "there are certain di-reactions which the court may give to a jury, which do not fall within any fair definition of the word 'charge.' For example, suppose the evidence in a case to be over and the arguments of counsel concluded at a late hour in the day. The judge decides not to charge the jury until after supper. He turns to them and orally informs them of this purpose and instructs them not to enter upon a consideration of the case until they shall have received his charge, and commends to them those other observances which are ordinarily commended to the jury by the judge when they are being detained not in the presence of the court. Certainly such a direction as this would not be considered as part of the charge of the court, within the purview of the statute. Likewise, if the judge, having committed his charge to writing and being about to read it to the jury, should, prefatory to the reading of it, ask the jury to give him their careful attention. A number of similar directions can be conceived of which would in no fair sense be considered as a part of the charge, and which would not be violative of the letter or the spirit of the law, though orally given." But it is violative of the statute if the court gives to the jury any instructions not in writing as to how they shall consider the case to be submitted to them or how they shall make a verdict. Walker v. State, 72 S. E. 531, 532, 10 Ga. App. 85.

Oral statements made by the court to the jury, with reference to the form or character of their verdict, which do not contain instructions or directions upon some question of law involved in the trial, or comment on the evidence, are not within the statute requiring instructions or "charges" to be in writing. Sturgis v. State, 102 Pac. 57, 73, 77, 2 Okl. Cr. 362.

The word "charge," in a statute providing that the judge shall not charge juries with respect to matters of fact but might state the testimony at law, refers to the final summing up of the case by the judge to the jury containing his instructions to them after the evidence has all been heard and the arguments of counsel concluded. It is not intended to include any and every question and answer passing between the court and jury, but refers to the address made by the judge after the case had been closed when he comments upon the testimony or instructs the jury in any matters of law arising upon it. Partelow v. Newton & B. St. Ry. Co., 81 N. E. 894, 896, 196 Mass. 24 (citing Harris v. McArthur, 15 S. E. 758, 90 Ga. 216; Moore v. Columbia & G. R. Co., 16 S. E. 781, 38 S. C. 1, 31; Equitable Fire Ins. Co. v. Trustees C. P. Church, 18 S. W. 121, 91 Tenn. 135; Dodd v. Moore, 91 Ind. 522; Lehman v. Hawks, 23 N. E. 670, 121 Ind. 541; Sharp v. Hoffman, 21 Pac. 846, 79 Cal. 404, 408).

Under Const. art. 6, § 12, providing that judges shall not charge juries with respect to matters of fact, nor comment thereon, but shall declare the law, an instruction that the testimony of accused should be weighed, like that of any other witness, but that the jury may consider his very great interest in the result, is erroneous; such an instruction clearly being a "charge with respect to matters of fact," although such an instruction would not, in every case, be reversible error, in view of Const. art. 6, § 22, providing that no cause shall be reversed for technical error when substantial justice has been done. Erickson v. State (Ariz.) 127 Pac. 754, 757.

CHARGE DOCKET

The clerk of the district court is under no legal obligation to keep a "general docket," and he has no personal interest in keeping such a docket, but the clerk's "charge docket" is a record in which the clerk has a vital interest, and the correctness of the entries in such docket is more or less assured by the fact that the litigants against whom the charges are entered have an interest in the matter of their correctness in conflict with that of the clerk. Fontelleu v. Fontelleu, 41 South. 120, 126, 116 La. 866.

CHARGEABLE

The language of a decree, declaring real estate, for the improvement of which plaintiff had made advances, "chargeable with the sums so advanced," refers to pecuniary advances and not to advances in the shape of personal services. Hodges v. Hodges, 9 R. I. 32, 34.

CHARGING LIEN

The lien which an attorney has upon any money in his hands belonging to his client is sometimes called a "charging lien." Holmes v. Waymire, 84 Pac. 558, 559, 78 Kan. 104, 9 Ann. Cas. 624.

An attorney's lien at common law in England upon the fund or judgment which he recovered, for payment as attorney was nominated a "charging lien." Imboden v. Benschaw, 76 S. W. 701, 705, 102 Mo. App. 173 (citing Stokes, Liens of Attorneys, p. 85, § 5).

An attorney's lien created by statute is a "charging lien" extending to all money or property of the client, including the judgment, and is perfected by verbal or written notice to the judgment debtor, if no special form of notice is required. A settlement of the judgment, with actual notice of the attorney's claim, will be set aside to enable him to satisfy his lien. Northrup v. Hayward, 113 N. W. 701, 702, 102 Minn. 307, 12 Ann. Cas. 341.

CHARITABLE

See Charity.

The word "charitable," as used in a residuary clause of a will disposing of the residue by giving it to the executors to distribute among such "charitable institutions, persons, or objects" as they deem fit, will be construed to qualify "persons" and "objects" as well as "institutions" in order to sustain the trust as a charitable one. Gill v. Attorney General, 83 N. E. 876, 197 Mass. 232.

"Charitable" in its usual sense means pertaining to almsgiving or relief of the poor, and in a legal sense "charity" has been defined as a gift to be applied lawfully, among other things, for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons, by bringing their hearts under the influence of education or religion, relieving their bodies from disease or suffering. In re Moore's Estate, 122 N. Y. Supp. 828, 831, 66 Misc. Rep. 116.

CHARITABLE BEQUEST

See Charity.

CHARITABLE CORPORATION

While "charity" has a broad meaning, a "charitable corporation" is one whose principal aim is to benefit needy ones other than by improving their morals. In re McCormick's Estate, 127 N. Y. Supp. 493, 495, 71 Misc. Rep. 95 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1086).

CHARITABLE INSTITUTION

See, also, Charity.

An institution, organized under Pub. Acts 1855, p. 28, No. 20, providing that three or more persons who may desire to become incorporated for any charitable purpose may do so, the purpose of which is charitable, is a charitable society. Gallon v. House of Good Shepherd, 122 N. W. 631, 633, 158 Mich. 361, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 286, 133 Am. St. Rep. 387.

CHARITABLE TRUST

See, also, Charity.

A "charitable trust" is simply an indefinite or uncertain trust without a beneficiary. In re Shattuck's Will, 86 N. E. 455, 193 N. Y. 446 (quoting and adopting Levy v. Levy, 88 N. Y. 97).

Charitable trusts include all gifts in trust for religious and educational purposes in their ever-varying diversity, all gifts for the relief and comfort of the poor, the sick, and the afflicted, and all gifts for the public convenience, benefit, utility, or ornament, and a "charity" in the legal sense may be defined as a gift to be applied, consistently with existing law, for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons, either by bringing their minds or hearts under the influence of education or religion, or by relieving their bodies from disease, suffering, or constraint, by assisting them to establish themselves in life or otherwise lessening the burdens of government. Carter v. Whitcomb, 69 Atl. 779, 782, 74 N. H. 482, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 733.

A "charitable trust" is a gift for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons, either by bringing them under the influence of education or religion, or relieving them of disease, suffering, or constraint, by assisting to establish them for life, by erecting or maintaining public buildings, or in other ways lessening the burdens or making better the condition of the general public or some class thereof. In re Lennon's Estate, 92 Pac. 870, 871, 152 Cal. 327, 125 Am. St. Rep. 58, 14 Ann. Cas. 1024.

It is a distinguishing element of a charitable trust that it is a trust for an indefinite number of persons, and the gift of land to the "membership now existing and hereafter to exist" of an "unincorporated association or body of persons" for a charitable use is sufficiently certain as to the beneficiaries, and is valid. Peth v. Spear, 115 Pac. 164, 165, 63 Wash. 291.

CHARITABLE USE

Used for charitable purpose, see Use—Used.

See, also, Charity.

The words "charitable uses" include all gifts for general public use, independent of benevolent, educational, or religious purposes. Trustees of New Castle Common v. Megginson (Del.) 77 Atl. 565, 570, 1 Boyce, 361.

The law recognizes no purpose as charitable unless it is of a public character. If the donor merely intended to benefit specific individuals, the gift is not charitable, though the motive may have been to relieve poverty or accomplish some other purpose in reference to those particular individuals which would be charitable if not so confined; but if the donor's object is to accomplish the abstract purpose of relieving poverty, advancing education or religion, or other purpose charitable within the meaning of the statute of Elizabeth without reference to any particular individuals and without giving any particular individuals the right to claim the funds, the gift is for a "charitable use." In re Shattuck's Will, 86 N. E. 455, 456, 193 N. Y. 446 (citing Tud. Char. and Mortmain [4th Ed.] 37; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. [2d Ed.] § 1019; Sherwood v. American Bible Society, *40 N. Y. 561; Smith v. Havens Relief Fund Society, 90 N. Y. Supp. 168, 175, 44 Misc. Rep. 594-608; Attorney General v. Soule, 28 Mich. 153; Stratton v. Physio-Medical College, 21 N. E. 874, 149 Mass. 505,

CHARITY

See Public Charity; Purely Public Charity.

A gift to be applied consistently with existing laws for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons by bringing their hearts under the influence of education is a "charity." In re Kavanaugh's Will, 126 N. W. 672, 675, 143 Wis. 90, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 470.

A "charity" is a trust, an active express trust, though known to the English law distinctively as a public trust, and is subject to the provisions of the Revised Statutes abolishing all trusts except those specified. Levy v. Levy, 33 N. Y. 97, 134.

"Charity" is a gift to promote the welfare of others in need. Mason v. Zimmerman, 106 Pac. 1005, 1008, 81 Kan. 799.

"Charity" is defined by Lord Camden as a "gift to a general public use, which extends to the poor as well as to the rich." Kronshage v. Varrell, 97 N. W. 928, 930, 120 Wis. 161 (citing Perin v. Carey, 65 U. S. [24 How.] 465, 16 L. Ed. 701).

A "charity" is defined to be "a gift to a general use, which extends to the poor as well as the rich," and is not confined to mere almsgiving, or the relief of poverty and distress, but has a wider signification, which embraces the improvement and promotion of the happiness of man. New England Sanitarium v. Inhabitants of Stoneham, 91 N. E. 385, 387, 205 Mass. 335.

A charity, in the legal sense, is not confined to mere almsgiving or the relief of poverty and distress, but has a wider signification which includes the improvement and promotion of happiness. Little v. City of Newburyport, 96 N. E. 1032, 1033, 210 Mass. 414, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 425.

Personal Property Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 41) § 12, providing that no "gift" to charitable uses shall be invalid for indefiniteness or uncertainty of the persons designated as the beneficiaries, applies only to gifts for a public purpose, and not to gifts for the benefit of private institutions or individuals. In re Robinson's Will, 96 N. E. 925, 926, 203 N. Y. 880, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1023.

"A 'charity,' in its legal sense, is a gift to be applied, consistently with existing laws, for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons, either by bringing their minds or hearts under the influence of education or religion, by relieving their bodies from disease, suffering, or constraint, by assisting them to establish themselves in life, or by erecting or maintaining public buildings or works or otherwise lessening the burdens of government. It is immaterial whether the purpose is called charitable in the gift itself, if it be so described as to show that it is charitable in its nature." MacKenzie v. Trustees of Presbytery of Jersey City, 61 Atl. 1027, 1033, 67 N. J. Eq. 652, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 227 (quoting and adopting definition in Jackson v. Phillips, 96 Mass. [14 Allen] 539, 566).

"A 'charity,' in a legal sense, is a gift to be applied consistently with existing laws for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons, either by bringing their hearts under the influence of education or religion, by relieving their bodies from disease, suffering, or constraint, by assisting them to establish themselves in life, or by erecting and maintaining public buildings or works, or otherwise lessening the burdens of government." In re Merchant's Estate, 77 Pac. 475, 477, 143 Cal. 537 (quoting and adopting the definition in Jackson v. Phillips, 96 Mass. [14 Allen] 539, which was approved in 2 Perry, Trusts, § 697).

Gifts to charitable uses have always received favorable consideration of the court. A testator who bequeathed all his property to his wife for life, she, after providing for her own wants, to give such amounts to testator's relations as she might think proper, and the balance to advance the cause of religion and promote the cause of charity in such a manner as the wife might think would be most conducive to carrying out testator's wishes, with authority to lease and sell property for the benefit of the estate, did not create a trust for a "charitable use" enforceable in equity. Hadley v. Forsee, 101 S. W. 59, 61, 203 Mo. 418, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 49.

A "charitable" or pious gift is one given for the love of God or for the love of your neighbor, in the catholic or universal sense, given from these motives and to these ends, free from stain or taint of any consideration that is personal, private, or selfish. More precisely, it is a gift to the general public use, extending to the poor as well as the rich. A charity, in the legal sense, may be more fully defined as a gift to be applied consistently with existing laws for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons, either by bringing their minds and hearts under the influence of education or religion by relieving their bodies from diseases, suffering, or constraint, by assisting them to establish themselves in life, or erecting and maintaining public buildings or works, or otherwise lessening the burdens of government. In order that there may be a good trust for a charitable use, there must be some public benefit open to an indefinite and vague number, the persons to be benefited to be uncertain and indefinite and to be selected or appointed to be the particular beneficiaries of the trust for the time being. A "charity" is any gift not inconsistent with existing laws, which is promotive of science or tends to the education, enlightenment, benefit, or amelioration of the condition of mankind, or the diffusion of useful knowledge, or for the public convenience. Crow ex rel. Jones v. Clay County, 95 S. W. 369, 375, 196 Mo. 234 (citing Coggeshall v. Pelton [N. Y.] 7 Johns. Ch. 294, 11 Am. Dec. 471; Perin v. Carey, 65 U. S. [24 How.] 506, 18 L. Ed. 701; Hinkley's Estate, 58 Cal. 457; Missouri Historical Society v. Academy of Science, 8 S. W. 846, 94 Mo. 459; Chambers v. St. Louis, 29 Mo. 543).

Charitable trusts include all gifts in trust for religious and educational purposes in their ever-varying diversity, all gifts for the relief and comfort of the poor, the sick, and the afflicted, and all gifts for the public convenience, benefit, utility, or ornament, and a "charity" in the legal sense may be defined as a gift to be applied, consistently with existing law, for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons, either by bringing their minds or hearts under the influence of education or religion, or by relieving their bodies from disease, suffering, or constraint, by assisting them to establish themselves in life or otherwise lessening the burdens of government. Carter v. Whitcomb, 69 Atl. 779, 783, 74 N. H. 482, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 733.

The word "charity," as found in our decisions and statutes, is not to be taken in its widest sense denoting all the good affections which men ought to bear to each other, nor in its restricted and usual sense signifying relief to the poor, but is to be taken in its legal signification as derived chiefly from the statute of 43 Eliz. c. 4. Those purposes are deemed charitable which are enunciated in that act, or which by analogy are deemed within its spirit and intentment. Maine Baptist Missionary Convention v. City of Portland, 65 Me. 92, 93.

In a legal sense, a charity is a gift applied consistently with existing laws for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons by bringing their minds or hearts under the influence of education or religion, by relieving their bodies from disease, suffering, or constraint, by assisting them to establish themselves in life, or by erecting or maintaining public buildings or works, or otherwise lessening the burdens of government. In re Centennial & Memorial Ass'n of Valley Forge, 83 Atl. 683, 684, 235 Pa. 206.

Testator's will provided that he desired his executors to divide the surplus among such charities as they might think well of with a suggestion as to a certain class of objects to which testator "would like" the money to be given. Held a valid "gift," within Laws 1898, c. 701, as amended by Laws 1901, c. 291, and to create a valid trust the suggestion being equivalent to a command so that the purpose of the gift was certain, leaving only the beneficiaries uncertain.

Manley v. Flske, 124 N. Y. Supp. 149, 150, 139 App. Div. 665.

A gift of a residue to an executor, to be distributed among "charitable" institutions, "persons," or "objects" in their discretion, is not void on the theory that a charitable person means a person devoted to charity, since the property passes directly to the executor, to be conveyed to the person in execution of the trust. Gill v. Attorney General, 83 N. E. 676, 197 Mass. 232.

Asylums and hospitals

That a public charitable hospital receives pay from a patient for lodging and care does not affect its character as a charitable institution, nor its rights or liabilities as such in relation to such a patient. Taylor v. Protestant Hospital Ass'n, 96 N. E. 1089, 1090, 1091, 85 Ohio St. 90, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 427.

A hospital organized under Laws 1899, c. 95, under which the directors and managers received no financial benefit, and which is not a business project, is a "charitable institution" and as such is not liable for the negligence of its ambulance driver, though such institution received compensation for some of its patients. Noble v. Hahnemann Hospital of Rochester, 98 N. Y. Supp. 605, 607, 112 App. Div. 663.

A home for aged women established in a city of the state which requires its beneficiaries to turn over to it the property they possess and which requires the payment of an established fee on their admission and not managed for profit is a charitable institution within Laws 1905, p. 432, c. 40, § 1. Carter v. Whitcomb, 69 Atl. 779, 783, 74 N. H. 482, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 733.

The Employes' Hospital Association of the Frisco Line, a corporation under the direct control of the St. Louis & San Francisco Railway Company, which undertakes to furnish medical treatment to employes of said railroad in consideration of monthly payments made by them, is not a "charitable institution," within the rule which exempts such institutions from liability for negligence. Phillips v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 111 S. W. 109, 113, 211 Mo. 419, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1167, 124 Am. St. Rep. 786, 14 Ann. Cas. 742.

Legally "charity" has been defined as a gift to be applied lawfully, among other things, for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons by bringing their hearts and minds under the influence of education or religion, relieving their bodies from disease or suffering, etc. Though patients at the Craig Colony for epileptics work to grow food which may be sold by the state to furnish funds to purchase necessities to support the colony, it is conducted exclusively for "charitable and other purposes," within Tax Law, § 221, so that a legacy to it is exempt from the Transfer Tax. In re Moore's Estate, 122 N. Y. Supp. 828, 831, 66 Misc. Rep.

116 (citing "charity," as defined in Words and Phrases).

An association established under Rev. St. 1899, c. 12, art. 11, providing for organization of benevolent, religious, scientific, etc., associations, the charter of which provides that its object shall be to conduct and control a certain hospital, to provide medical treatment free to the poor, and to train and educate nurses, which has no stock, and pays no dividends, but devotes any income from paying patients to the improvement and maintenance of the hospital, which receives persons free of charge for board even, when unable to pay, and furnishes other places, known as free institutions, with physicians, nurses, and medicines, gratuitously, is a "charity." Adams v. University Hospital, 99 S. W. 453, 456, 122 Mo. App. 675.

A corporation conducted a hospital, and its only source of income was from donations and receipts from patients who were able to pay for treatment received. It received all patients who applied, and gave free accommodations to all patients unable to pay, and the treatment of free cases was the same as that of pay patients, except that the free cases were accommodated in wards instead of in private rooms. Any regular medical practitioner was privileged to send patients to the hospital and treat them there, and the institution made no profits. Held, that the institution was within Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 120, § 2, exempting from taxation "all property of institutions of public charity." German Hospital of Chicago v. Board of Review of Cook County, 84 N. E. 215, 216, 233 Ill. 246.

"An orphans' home," "a home for the friendless and orphan poor," or "an orphans' home for the friendless poor of all denominations," is a "charity" or "charitable use" within the general intent and scope of the statute of 43 Eliz. c. 4. Kemmerer v. Kemmerer, 84 N. E. 256, 258, 233 Ill. 327, 122 Am. St. Rep. 169.

A "charity" may be defined "as a gift to be applied consistently with existing laws for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons, either by bringing their minds or hearts under the influence of education or religion, by relieving their bodies from disease, suffering, or constraint, by assisting them to establish themselves in life, or by erecting or maintaining public buildings or works, or otherwise lessening the burdens of government. It is immaterial whether the purpose is called charitable in the gift itself, if it is so described as to show that it is charitable in its nature. (Quoting Jackson v. Phillips, 96 Mass. [14 Allen] 539). A donation of land and buildings to a corporation organized for charitable purposes, to be used as a home for consumptives, constitutes a "charity" so as to exempt such land and buildings from taxation under the Constitution of Colorado exempting land and buildings used for charitable purposes from taxation. Bishop and Chapter of Cathedral of St. John the Evangelist v. Treasurer of City & County of Denver, 86 Pac. 1021, 1023, 37 Colo. 378.

Beneficial associations

Incorporated mutual benefit associations, such as a typographical society, which is open to all printers of the city in which it is located, or a teacher's association, open to all teachers, or a bank officers' association, open to all bank officers and clerks, are public, and not private, charities, though their benefits are limited to their own members; and a gift to them is a gift for a "charitable purpose," within the meaning of a will giving the residue of testator's estate to trustees, to be applied "to such charitable purposes" as to them may seem proper. Minns v. Billings, 66 N. E. 593, 183 Mass. 126, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 686, 97 Am. St. Rep. 420.

Benevolent synonymous

Though the word "benevolent" covers a wide field, its essential and substantial meaning is familiar and easily grasped. It is little, if any, more indefinite than the word, "charitable," and in many cases it has been held to have been synonymous with "charitable." In re Dulles' Estate, 67 Atl. 49, 50, 218 Pa. 162, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1177.

"Charity" is a gift to promote the welfare of others in need; and "charitable," as used in constitutional and statutory provisions relating to exemptions from taxation, means intended for charity, and "benevolent" as used therein is entirely synonymous with "charitable." Mason v. Zimmerman, 106 Pac. 1005, 1008, 81 Kan. 799.

The words "benevolent" and "charitable" are nearly synonymous in meaning and as frequently used are entirely so, especially when applied to purposes or institutions. Kansas Masonic Home v. Board of Com'rs of Sedgwick County, 106 Pac. 1082, 1086, 81 Kan. 859, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 702.

In a bequest to be divided among such benevolent, charitable, and religious institutions and associations as might be selected by the testator's executors, the word "benevolent" should be construed as synonymous with "charitable," and a bequest was therefore not void for uncertainty. In re Murphy's Estate, 39 Atl. 70, 71, 184 Pa. 310, 63 Am. St. Rep. 802 (citing Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society's Appeal, 30 Pa. 435; Whitman v. Lex [Pa.] 17 Serg. & R. 88, 17 Am. Dec. 644; Saltonstall v. Sanders, 93 Mass. [11 Allen] 446; Rotch v. Emerson, 105 Mass. 431; Goodale v. Mooney, 60 N. H. 523, 49 Am. Rep. 334; Webst. Dict.).

"Charity" is defined as benevolence, any act of kindness or benevolence, and "charitable" is defined as pertaining to or characterized by charity, benevolence or kindness, and a gift to the board of park commissioners of a city for the purpose of erecting a drinking fountain for horses, and in connection therewith a life-size bronze statue of a certain horse, with an inscription thereon stating that it was donated by testator, and that the horse was the first to make a certain record, was a gift for charitable purposes within Inheritance Tax Law, § 2½, exempting such gifts from taxation. In re Graves' Estate, 89 N. E. 672, 673, 242 Ill. 23, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 283, 134 Am. St. Rep. 302, 17 Ann. Cas. 137.

Benevolent distinguished

"Benevolent" includes objects and purposes that are not "charitable." Van Syckel v. Johnson, 70 Atl. 657, 658, 80 N. J. Eq. 117.

"Bénévolent" is wider than "charitable" in its legal signification. A trust for benevolent and charitable objects, as the trustee may select, is void as being indefinite and vague. Hegeman's Ex'rs v. Roome, 62 Atl. 392, 393, 70 N. J. Eq. 562.

Comp. Laws, §§ 8258-8263, as originally enacted, was entitled "An act to provide for the incorporation of benevolent societies," and authorized a corporation to provide for the relief of distressed members, the visitation of the sick, etc., and such other "benevolent and worthy purposes" and objects as affect the members of the corporation, and gave the corporation power to receive and enjoy property, and to sell, mortgage, and dispose of the same, provided that the proceeds arising from all estates and investments should be devoted exclusively to the benevolent purposes and objects of the corporation. Held, that the word "benevolent" has a much broader significance than the word "charity," and includes things which are in no sense charities, and refers to the kind intention of the donor rather than the condition of the donee, meaning in its broader sense liberality and generosity, though its meaning may be circumscribed by the circumstances, and, as used in the statutes, it denotes acts tending to relieve misfortune and confer a benefit on a needy member, though he may not be an actual object of charity, so that a conveyance by the society to all of its members was not a disposition for "benevolent purposes," and hence was beyond the powers of the society. German Corporation of Negaunee v. Negaunee German Aid Society, 138 N. W. 343, 345, 172 Mich. 650 (quoting 1 Words and Phrases, pp. 753-756).

Care of burial lot

A testamentary gift to a trustee to apply the income to the care of testator's burial lot, which became operative before the passage of Laws 1909, c. 218, authorizing trusts for the care of cemetery lots and classifying them with charitable uses, is not a "gift to a charitable use," within Laws 1898, c. 701, relating to gifts for charitable purposes.

Driscoll v. Hewlett, 118 N. Y. Supp. 466, 467, 132 App. Div. 125, 91 N. E. 784, 198 N. Y. 297.

Cemetery associations

A cemetery corporation, selling lots to members of the public generally, is not a charitable or benevolent corporation within St. 1909, c. 490, pt. 1, § 5, cl. 3, exempting from taxation the property of "benevolent" and "charitable" institutions. Town of Milford v. Commissioners of Worcester County, 100 N. E. 60, 61, 213 Mass. 162.

A cemetery association, organized without capital stock under Acts June 17, 1852, to provide a place for the burial of the dead, with authority to sell burial lots and engaged in selling burial lots and maintaining a cemetery, is conducting a "business," and is not a "charitable" organization, and is liable for the negligence of its officers or agents, though it has maintained the cemetery without profit, and its officers have received no compensation; there being nothing in the charter precluding the association from selling lots for profit or from paying salaries to its officers or dividends to its members. East Hill Cemetery Co. of Rushville v. Thompson (Ind.) 97 N. E. 1036, 1037.

Drinking fountain

"Charity" is defined as benevolence, any act of kindness or benevolence, and "charitable" is defined as pertaining to or characterized by charity, benevolence or kindness, and a gift to the board of park commissioners of a city for the purpose of erecting a drinking fountain for horses, and in connection therewith a life-size bronze statue of a certain horse, with an inscription thereon stating that it was donated by testator, and that the horse was the first to make a certain record, was a gift for charitable purposes within Inheritance Tax Law, § 2½ (Hurd's Rev. St. 1908, c. 120, § 367a), exempting such gifts from taxation. In re Graves' Estate, 89 N. E. 672, 673, 242 Ill. 23, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 283, 134 Am. St. Rep. 302, 17 Ann. Cas. 137.

Education

Under Gen. St. 1902, §§ 3990, 4026, a parochial school supported by private funds is a charitable institution, within Gen. St. 1902, § 2647, as amended by Pub. Acts 1907, p. 750, c. 200, providing that no license, except the renewal of a license at the discretion of the county commissioners, shall be granted within 200 feet of any public or parochial school, nor shall one be granted in such proximity to a charitable institution as may be detrimental to the same. Appeal of Schusler, 70 Atl. 1029, 1030, 81 Conn. 276.

Special Laws January 13, 1854 (page 30), incorporating an institution of learning for instruction in science and literature, and providing that the income of the capital stock shall be appropriated only for the benefit of the institution, creates a "charitable institution," and it is not liable for the negligent acts of its officers or employes in preserving its grounds. Hill v. President and Trustees of Tualatin Academy and Pacific University, 121 Pac. 901, 904, 61 Or. 190.

A society having for its object the collection and preservation of historical and current accounts of events, persons, and inventions, etc., and all other materials of a similar character, connected with the interests of a certain town, is not a "charitable institution"; its object not possessing an educational character, and the collections of the society not necessarily being devoted to public use. In re Vineland Historical & Antiquarian Society, 56 Atl. 1039, 1040, 67 N. J. Eq. 780.

A trust to establish for the benefit of the public an art gallery for the advancement of education in art is a "charitable trust." (1909) Mason v. Bloomington Library Ass'n, 86 N. E. 1044, 1047, 237 Ill. 442, 15 Ann. Cas. 603 (citing Kemmerer v. Kemmerer, 84 N. E. 256, 233 Ill. 327, 122 Am. St. Rep. 169).

Gifts for the advancement of learning, science, and the useful arts, without any particular reference to the poor, are legally regarded as "charities." Godfrey v. Hutchins, 68 Atl. 317, 318, 28 R. I. 517.

A gift to a college will be construed to be a gift to a charitable use, within the meaning of Act April 26, 1855, § 11, relating to the execution of wills within one calendar month from testator's death, where it appears that the college in question was incorporated; that it included as one of its departments a school of theology; that the corporation was under the control of members of a particular denomination, although its management was not denominational, various denominations being represented in its faculty; that the college was not self-supporting, but was maintained by gifts, contributions of churches, tuition fees, and endowed scholarships; that young men were aided to the extent of their tuition bills, and to some, in their room bills, and to some loans were made to be repaid after graduation. And it is immaterial that there is no word in the will in connection with the gift, indicating a charitable purpose. In re Amole's Estate, 32 Pa. Super. Ct. 636, 637.

The term "charity," in its legal sense, includes not only gifts for the benefit of the poor, but endowments for the advancement of learning or institutions for the encouragement of science and art. Under Const. § 170, providing that institutions of purely public charity and institutions of education not used or employed for gain, and the income of which is devoted solely to the cause of education, shall be exempt from taxation, the Kentucky Female Orphan School, a corporation the beneficiaries of which are female orphan children, though paid pupils are also received and the amount derived therefrom devoted solely to the maintenance of the school, is an institution of purely public charity. Trustees of Kentucky Female Orphan School v. City of Louisville, 36 S. W. 921, 924, 100 Ky. 470, 40 L. R. A. 119.

Eleemosynary synonymous

The word "eleemosynary" as used in Const. art. 20, § 9, forbidding perpetuities except for eleemosynary purposes, is synonymous with "charitable." In re Sutor's Estate, 102 Pac. 920, 922, 155 Cal. 727.

Library or museum

An institution is charitable within the meaning of the collateral inheritance tax act, the property and funds of which are divided to purposes which are charitable within the doctrine; that is, for such purposes as would support as valid the creation of a trust or gift. An association which collects and preserves a library of books open to general use would be a "charitable institution" under this act, but an association to collect and preserve history and current accounts or events, persons and inventions, scientific investigations, and photographs, drawings, models, and specimens and all other materials of a similar character connected with the interest of Vineland, though it appears that the collection is open to the public but that the estate is not bound to maintain the collection open to the public, is not a charitable institution; such a collection resembling a museum rather than a library in not performing any educational functions. In re Landis' Estate, 56 Atl. 1039, 1040, 66 N. J. Eq. 291.

A corporation was organized for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a library at a health resort. The Constitution presented with the petition for the organization recited that: "We whose names are annexed, desiring to form an association to organize a * * * library for own benefit, and that of * * * people who visit" the resort. Held, that the corporation was a "charitable trust"; the phrase "for our own benefit" not being understood as confined to the persons who signed the petition for a charter but intended to embrace all persons who should thereafter contribute to the support of the library. Fordyce & McKee v. Woman's Christian Nat. Library Ass'n, 96 S. W. 155, 156, 79 Ark. 550, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 485.

"Charitable trusts" include all gifts in trust for religious and educational purposes in their ever-varying diversity; all gifts for the relief and comfort of the poor, the sick, and the afflicted; and all gifts for the public convenience, benefit, utility, or ornament, in whatever manner the donors desire them applied. Property acquired by a corporation under a grant of Congress for the sole purpose of maintaining thereon a library for the benefit of its members and the public is not embraced by Sand. & H. Dig. § 3049, declaring subject to execution real estate whereof defendant or any person for his use is seized in law or equity. Woman's Christian Nat. Library Ass'n v. Fordyce, 86 S. W. 417, 419, 74 Ark. 621 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Perry, Trusts, § 687).

Masonic societies

A masonic lodge is not a "charitable institution," within R. S. c. 6, § 6, pt. 2, exempting all property of such institutions from taxation. City of Bangor v. Rising Virtue Lodge No. 10, Free and Accepted Masons, 73 Me. 428, 441, 40 Am. Rep. 869.

A Masonic lodge, to which realty was devised to use the income for charity, the by-laws of which provided for a committee of charity whose duties were to dispense the benevolence of the lodge, and the lodge members of which pay an initiation fee and assessments and are not entitled to any pecuniary benefits from the lodge unless they become the objects of charity, which is rarely bestowed upon nonmembers, the lodge being engaged in no business for profit, issuing no stock, and its funds being first for lodge expenses and the remainder for charity, is a "charitable institution" within Code, § 1467, taxing all property which passes by law or inheritance other than to charitable, educational, or religious institutions. Morrow v. Smith, 124 N. W. 816, 818, 145 Iowa, 514, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 696, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1183.

The upper story of a building owned by a masonic lodge, and certain furniture used exclusively for lodge purposes, together with $500 in a bank to the credit of the lodge used exclusively for charitable purposes, is exempt from taxation, under Const. art. 9, § 2, providing that property used exclusively for charitable purposes may be exempt, and Revenue Law (Laws 1903, p. 390, c. 73) § 13, providing that property used for religious and charitable purposes shall be exempt from taxation. Plattsmouth Lodge No. 6, A. F. & A. M. v. Cass County, 113 N. W. 167-170, 79 Neb. 463.

Moral reformation

An institution organized under Pub. Acts 1855, No. 20 (Comp. Laws 1897, §§ 8264-8270), providing that three or more persons who may desire to become incorporated for any charitable purpose may do so, the purpose of which is charitable, is a "charitable society." A corporation organized for the purpose of the moral reformation of girls and women, and the preservation in a state of purity of girls and women whose virtue is exposed to danger, which administers its funds according to rules of its own adoption, by methods of its own choosing, and shelters, clothes, feeds, and instructs the inmates, requiring of them such labor in return as they can perform, and whose buildings and premises are erected and arranged with the purpose of detaining those whom it desires to detain, it being the intention that girls confined to the institution should remain until discharged, may be treated as occupying the position of a public "charitable institution" administering a charitable fund. Gallon v. House of Good Shepherd, 122 N. W. 631, 633, 158 Mich. 361, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 286, 133 Am. St. Rep. 387.

Public charity

"In the first place, it may be laid down as a universal rule that the law recognizes no purpose as charity unless it is of a public character; that is to say, a purpose must, in order to be charitable, be directed to the benefit of the community or a section of the community. The distinction between a public purpose and one which is not public is often fine. . . . If the intention of the donor is merely to benefit specific individuals, the gift is not charitable, even though the motive of the gift may be to relieve their poverty or accomplish some other purpose in reference to those particular individuals which would be charitable if not so confined; on the other hand, if the donor's object is to accomplish the abstract purpose of relieving poverty, advancing education or religion, or other purpose, charitable within the meaning of the Statute of Elizabeth without reference to any particular individuals and without giving any particular individuals the right to claim the funds, the gift is charitable." Laws 1893, c. 701, § 1, as amended by Laws 1901, c. 291, provides that no gift for religious, educational, charitable, or benevolent uses, which shall in other respects be valid under the laws of this state, shall be deemed invalid on account of indefiniteness or uncertainty of the beneficiaries; but the title to the subject-matter of the gift shall vest in the trustee named in the instrument, applies to public and not private charitable gifts, and has reference to indefiniteness of beneficiaries, but not of the purposes for which the gift is made; that while the words, "religious" and "eleemosynary," in a will attempting to create a trust when used to designate institutions, may necessarily imply that the institutions are engaged in public and not private charitable work, the words "educational" and "institutions" have a broad significance and may refer as well to private as to public organizations or charities; and that, since the terms used are in the disjunctive, the invalidity of the provision as to educational institutions renders the entire gift invalid. In re Shattuck's Will, 86 N. E. 455, 456, 193 N. Y. 446 (quoting and adopting Tud. Char. and Mortmain [4th Ed.] 37).

A "charity" contemplates a public benefit, or the well-being of a community or a class, as contrasted with the beneficial use for private purposes, or for a private individual. To constitute a charity, the use must be public in its nature. Smith v. Hav- ens Relief Fund Soc., 90 N. Y. Supp. 168, 174, 44 Misc. Rep. 594.

Relief of the poor and sick

A donation to the poor of a certain locality is a gift for a "charitable purpose." Brookville Borough v. Startzell, 56 Atl. 938, 940, 207 Pa. 347.

The gift of an estate to executors in trust to sell and distribute the proceeds "to any institution for the benefit of the poor and suffering my executors may in their judgment give to any individual or person who in their judgment selected as poor and in need" is valid as a trust for charitable use within Personal Property Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 41) § 12. In re Davis' Will, 187 N. Y. Supp. 427, 77 Misc. Rep. 72.

A residuary bequest to the poor of Voorst, Gelderland, Netherlands, is for a "charitable purpose" either under the statute of charitable uses or independent of it. Klumpert v. Vrieland, 121 N. W. 34, 38, 142 Iowa, 434.

A bequest by a testator, who was a native of an island of the Kingdom of Norway, to a church congregation or parish of the island, which body was by the laws of that kingdom capable of receiving such bequests and administering such charitable trusts, of a sum of money to be invested and the income therefrom distributed annually "to worthy and needy servant girls and the widows and orphans of deceased sailors and fishermen who are not a public charge," and appointing the pastor and president of the county commissioners and county treasurer and their successors in office as trustees, constitutes a charitable trust, sufficiently definite as to the class of beneficiaries and as to the selection of the individuals who are to receive the charity to be valid and enforceable. In re Nilson's Estate, 116 N. W. 971, 972, 81 Neb. 809.

To constitute a "charity" the use must be public in its nature. A corporation formed to apply the income of money and property contributed or devised to it to the relief of poverty and distress, and generally to act in respect to any property received by deed or will for any charitable use or purpose, is a benevolent and charitable corporation within Laws 1848, c. 319, § 1, providing for associations for benevolent or charitable purposes. Smith v. Havens Relief Fund Society, 90 N. Y. Supp. 168, 174, 44 Misc. Rep. 594.

Religious purposes

A gift to a church eo nomine is a gift to a "charity." Sears v. Parker, 79 N. E. 772, 774, 193 Mass. 551, 9 Ann. Cas. 1200 (citing St. Paul's Church v. Attorney General, 41 N. E. 231, 164 Mass. 188, 197; Attorney General v. Union Society of Worcester, 116 Mass. 167, overruling Parker v. May, 59 Mass. [5 Cush.] 336; Old South Society in Boston v. Crocker, 119 Mass. 1, 20 Am. Rep. 299).

While "religious corporations" are in a sense corporations for charitable purposes, all "charitable corporations" are not "religious corporations." Baltzell v. Church Home & Infirmary of Baltimore City, 73 Atl. 151, 153, 110 Md. 244.

A testamentary gift for masses for the repose of souls of named persons and of the testator is a "charitable bequest," and valid as such, because according to the doctrine of the Catholic Church masses benefit the whole church as the prayers of the mass include all of the faithful, living and dead. In re Kavanaugh's Will, 126 N. W. 672, 675, 143 Wis. 90, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 470.

A society incorporated under a special act to promote evangelical religion by means of the Bible, the printing press, colportage, Sunday schools, and other appropriate ways, is not a "charitable corporation" within the provision of the transfer tax law, exempting property willed to such corporations. In re McCormick's Estate, 127 N. Y. Supp. 493, 495, 71 Misc. Rep. 95.

"It is well settled that a Christian church lawfully existing is a 'charity,' in the sense of St. 43 Eliz. c. 6." Gifts to charitable institutions may lapse, as well as gifts to natural persons. A bequest to a church for deaf mutes, of which the testatrix had been a member, and in the prosperity of which she had been greatly interested, does not show such a general charitable intention as to entitle a new church corporation, formed by consolidation of the legatee with another church, to take under the will, though the new corporation carried on the identical work which had been conducted by the legatee. Gladding v. St. Matthew's Church, 57 Atl. 860, 863, 25 R. I. 628, 65 L. R. A. 225, 105 Am. St. Rep. 904, 1 Ann. Cas. 537.

A corporation established to manage and apply a fund toward the support of a minister is not a "charitable institution" within a statute exempting the property of such institutions from taxation. Inhabitants of Gorham v. Trustees of Ministerial Fund, 82 Atl. 290, 292, 109 Me. 22.

The establishment of a mission for the preaching of the gospel is a "charitable purpose," within Acts 1885-86, c. 1233, § 1, providing that churches and all property of seminaries, asylums, hospitals, infirmaries, and colleges, and all other funds devoted to charitable purposes, shall be exempt from taxation. City of Louisville v. Werne (Ky.) 80 S. W. 224, 225.

A trust created by a deed conveying land to trustees of a Presbyterian church in trust for the use of the congregation of the church as a place of worship is not violated by a transfer to a Universalist church; any gift not inconsistent with law and promotive of the amelioration of the condition of mankind, or the diffusion of useful knowledge, being a "charity." Strother v. Barrow, 151 S. W. 960, 963, 246 Mo. 241.

A "charitable trust" is a gift for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons, either by bringing them under the influence of education or religion, or relieving them of disease, suffering, or constraint, by assisting to establish them for life, by erecting or maintaining public buildings, or in other ways lessening the burdens or making better the condition of the general public or some class thereof. A bequest to a bishop to be expended in the saying of masses for the testator's soul is not a bequest to a charitable use within a statute restricting devises or bequests for charitable uses. In re Lennon's Estate, 92 Pac. 870, 871, 152 Cal. 327, 125 Am. St. Rep. 58, 14 Ann. Cas. 1024.

Prior to Laws 1893, c. 701, in order to constitute a valid trust provision for a "charity," there must not only be a trustee but a beneficiary, capable of being designated and who could enforce the trust provision. A bequest in trust to T., Protestant Episcopal Missionary Bishop of Utah and Idaho, his successors, etc., to erect a church within his episcopal jurisdiction as he or his successors should elect, with a further sum bequeathed to build a rectory for the rector of said church, was invalid prior to the laws of 1893 for its failure to designate a beneficiary. Mount v. Tuttle, 91 N. Y. Supp. 195, 196, 99 App. Div. 433.

A "charitable gift" in the legal sense is one which is within the principle and reason of the statute (43 Ellis c. 4), although not expressly named therein, as an illustrative of which are gifts for the promotion of science, learning, and useful knowledge, gifts for bringing water into a town for building town houses, or otherwise improving a town or city. Except in a few states this statute is admitted to be the principal test of what, in law, are charitable uses, and many purposes not named in it have been held to be charitable when within the reason and spirit of the statute. Under this definition it was held that a testamentary provision requiring that, after the death of beneficiaries named, the executors should make over to the presiding bishop of a designated religious order one-half of the estate which such bishop shall receive in trust to expend the annual interest or income according to his discretion for the benefit of the members of such religious order, whether it be for public schools, parks, watering cities, acclimatizing foreign plants, or anything else whereby the members may be benefited, was a "charitable gift." Staines v. Burton, 53 Pac. 1015, 1016, 17 Utah, 331, 70 Am. St. Rep. 788.

In contributing to a church fund, one is performing a work of "charity," and it follows that the fund contributed to is a charitable fund. Bruce v. Central Methodist Episcopal church, 110 N. W. 951, 147 Mich. 230, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 74, 11 Ann. Cas. 150.

Society for prevention of cruelty to children

Where testatrix died after Laws 1905, p. 827, c. 368, amending Transfer Tax Law, § 221, and providing that property devised to any "charitable, benevolent, or religious society" should be exempt from the provisions of the act, legacies to a Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children are not taxable. In re Moses' Estate, 113 N. Y. Supp. 930, 931, 60 Misc. Rep. 637.

Temperance

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union falls within the class of benevolent charitable corporations exempted from payment of the transfer tax under Tax Law (Consol. Laws, c. 60) § 221. In re Moore's Estate, 122 N. Y. Supp. 828, 832, 66 Misc. Rep. 116.

Young Men's Christian Association

Where testatrix died after Laws 1905, p. 827, c. 368, amending Transfer Tax Law, § 221, and providing that property devised to any "charitable, benevolent, or religious society" should be exempt from the provisions of the act, legacies to the Young Men's Christian Association are not taxable. In re Moses' Estate, 113 N. Y. Supp. 930, 931, 60 Misc. Rep. 637.

A society composed of young women organized to extend spiritual, intellectual, social, and financial help to a Young Men's Christian Association of a city of the state whose purpose set forth in its charter is to improve the spiritual, intellectual, and social condition of the young men of the city, and whose property is exempt from taxation to a specified amount, is a charitable society within Laws 1905, p. 432, c. 40, § 1, on the assumption that its principal endeavor is to promote the spiritual and intellectual condition of young men without pecuniary gain or profit to itself. Carter v. Whitcomb, 69 Atl. 779, 783, 74 N. H. 482, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 733.

A Young Men's Christian Association was incorporated for "the improvement of the spiritual, mental, social and physical condition of young men," with a membership made up of active members with the exclusive right to vote and hold office, of associate members enjoying all other privileges, and limited members, not permitted to use the gymnasium and other means of amusement, together with sustaining members, and unlimited members, who paid certain fees annually for privileges; there being no religious test applied to associate members. The association work included services in different schoolhouses and churches at its own expense, educational classes, charging a small fee, but never conducted at a profit, classes in rowing, swimming, etc.; and it also maintained a reading room open to the public, and held meetings for social purposes, public receptions, etc. It depended for support mainly upon subscriptions, derived no profit from its work, had no capital stock, and no paid officers, except a secretary. Held, that the association was a benevolent or charitable corporation, within St. 1909, c. 490, pt. 1, § 5, cl. 8, and that funds held in trust for it were exempt from taxation. Little v. City of Newburyport, 96 N. E. 1032-1034, 210 Mass. 414, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 425.

Young Women's Christian Association

Where testatrix died after Laws 1905, p. 827, c. 368, amending Transfer Tax Law, § 221, and providing that property devised to any "charitable, benevolent, or religious society" should be exempt from the provisions of the act, legacies to the Young Women's Christian Association are not taxable. In re Moses' Estate, 113 N. Y. Supp. 930, 931, 60 Misc. Rep. 637.

CHARITY (In Sunday Law)

Where a prisoner, in jail under a warrant charging a bailable offense, employs a lawyer to secure a bond, and the prisoner is released, a note given the lawyer for his services, including those rendered in procuring the bond, is valid, though executed on Sunday; the work being in the nature of a "work of charity," within the exception of Pen. Code 1910, § 416. Few v. Gunter, 72 S. E. 720, 10 Ga. App. 100.

CHARIVARI

As breach of the peace, see Breach of the Peace.

A "charivari" is defined by Webster as a mock serenade of discordant music, kettles, tin pans, etc., designed to annoy and insult. Where the members of the charivari party forcibly place a bride and groom in a wagon against their will and draw them up and down the streets, they are engaged in an act of unlawful violence, and the fact that they are good natured and intend no serious harm to any one is immaterial. City of Cherryvale v. Hawman, 101 Pac. 994, 995, 80 Kan. 170, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 645, 133 Am. St. Rep. 195, 18 Ann. Cas. 149.

CHARLIE

"Charlie" is a corruption of "Charles"; and the fact that a mortgage is signed "Charlie," instead of "Charles," will not take it out of the chain of title, so that a record thereof will not be notice to a subsequent purchaser. Styles v. Theo. P. Scotland & Co., 134 N. W. 708, 712, 22 N. D. 469.

CHARTER

See During Term of Charter; May Frame Charter; Power of Charter Amendment.

"A 'charter' is defined as an act of a legislative body creating a municipality or other corporation, and defining its power and privileges." Benedict v. City of New Orleans, 39 South. 792, 801, 115 La. 645.

"Charters" are not created by the act of the corporation or association but are granted by the sovereign power of the state. Burns v. Manhattan Brass Mut. Aid Society, 92 N. Y. Supp. 846, 847, 102 App. Div. 467 (quoting and adopting definition in Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias v. Knight, 117 Ind. 489, 20 N. E. 479, 3 L. R. A. 400).

The use of the term "hire," like the word "charter," is not inconsistent with the idea of a covenant or agreement only for freighting accommodations. Grimberg v. Columbia Packers' Ass'n, 83 Pac. 194, 197, 47 Or. 257, 114 Am. St. Rep. 927, 8 Ann. Cas. 491.

Of corporation

The word "charter," in the statement of the rule that a corporation possesses only those properties given it by its charter, refers to the law of the state authorizing the formation of the corporation. Myatt v. Ponca City Land & Imp. Co., 73 Pac. 185, 196, 14 Okl. 189, 68 L. R. A. 810.

Under Const. art. 12, § 2, prohibiting the General Assembly from passing special acts conferring corporate powers, etc., and section 6, permitting corporations to be formed under general laws which may be altered or repealed from time to time, the general laws under which a corporation is formed constitute its charter. Ozan Lumber Co. v. Biddle, 113 S. W. 796, 798, 87 Ark. 587.

The charter of a corporation formed under a general law consists of its articles of incorporation, taken in connection with the law under which the organization takes place. The provisions of the law enter into and form a part of its charter. Traer v. Lucas Prospecting Co., 99 N. W. 290, 292, 124 Iowa, 107.

"The words 'chartered by law' are not to be understood as referring simply to corporations incorporated under special acts. A corporation which is organized under a general law is as much 'chartered by law' as one whose organization is provided for by special act." Lindsay & P. Co. v. Mullen, 20 Sup. Ct. 825, 829, 176 U. S. 136, 44 L. Ed. 400.

Of municipal corporation

A "charter" is the municipal organic law, which no ordinance may override. Kemp v. City of Monett, 69 S. W. 31, 32, 95 Mo. App. 452.

The word "charter," as it is called, when used in connection with a municipal corporation, consists of the creative act and all laws in force relating to the corporation, whether in defining its powers or regulating their mode of exercise. City of St. Petersburg v. English, 45 South. 483, 487, 54 Fla. 585.

A "charter for municipal purposes" is an investing of the people of a place with the local government thereof, constituting an imperium in imperio, and the corporators and the territory are the essential elements. Grennan v. Carson, 107 Pac. 925, 929, 25 Okl. 780.

A municipal "charter" consists of the creative act and all laws in force relating to the corporation, whether in defining its powers or regulating their mode of exercise. Tommast v. Archibald, 100 N. Y. Supp. 367, 372, 114 App. Div. 838 (quoting People v. Briggs, 50 N. Y. 553, 559).

"A municipal 'charter' is not only the measure of corporate powers but is also the beginning and the end of corporate life; and that life is a distinct, indivisible thing. When a charter is completely granted, a distinct corporate entity comes into being; and, when the charter is completely surrendered, the corporate entity ceases to exist. * * *"
Malone v. Williams, 103 S. W. 798-812, 118 Ten. 390, 121 Am. St. Rep. 1002 (quoting and adopting the definition in Brinkley v. State, 67 S. W. 796, 108 Tenn. 475).

A municipal "charter" is the municipality's constitution enumerating and giving to it all the powers it possesses, unless other statutes are applicable to it, and the term applies to special acts creating cities adopted before the present Constitution and to the portions of the general municipal corporation act adopted under Const. art. 11, § 6, providing for particular classes of municipalities. Platt v. City and County of San Francisco, 110 Pac. 304, 308, 158 Cal. 74.

CHARTER PARTY

A "charter party" is nothing more than an agreement between the parties to a shipping contract, and it is to be construed in the same manner as any other contract. Auten v. Bennett, 76 N. E. 609, 611, 183 N. Y. 496, 5 Ann. Cas. 620.

As demise or affreightment

The word "chartering," in a charter party whereby the owner of a vessel agrees on the freighting and "chartering" thereof to the charterer for one voyage, does not necessarily mean a letting of the vessel by way of demise, but is equally consistent with the idea of a contract of affreightment. A charter party contained no technical words of demise, nor was the vessel let to hire. The charterer covenanted to "charter and hire." The owner provided the master. The charterer engaged the crew and bound himself to pay all port charges and labor bills and provisions during the voyage and to "deliver" the vessel in port of destination to the owner, and agreed to employ the vessel only in lawful trade. The master's wages were included in monthly payments to be made for the charter. The first payment was to be made on the day of the "acceptance" of the vessel by the charterer. The owner agreed to place the vessel at a wharf selected by the charterer, at which time, the vessel being safely moored, the charter should "commence," and if the vessel was not so delivered the charterer might cancel the charter. Held that, though the words "charter and hire" and "acceptance" and "deliver" indicated a demise, they were not inconsistent with a contract of affreightment merely, and, in view of the absence of words of demise and the presumption against a demise, the charter party must be construed as one of affreightment only. Grimberg v. Columbia Packers' Ass'n, 83 Pac. 194, 195, 47 Or. 257, 114 Am. St. Rep. 927, 8 Ann. Cas. 491.

"Chartreuse" is a highly esteemed tonic cordial obtained by the distillation of various aromatic plants, especially nettles growing on the Alps. It derives its name from the celebrated monastery of the Grande Chartreuse in France where it is made. (Cent. Dic.) A. Bauer & Co. v. Order of Carthusian Monks, Convent la Grande Chartreuse, 120 Fed. 78-80, 56 O. C. A. 484.

The word "Chartreuse" is the French term for a kind of building (that is, a Carthusian monastery); but for American commercial purposes it means, and long has meant, a certain drinkable manufactured by that branch of the Carthusian order living near Grenoble in La Grande Chartreuse (that is, the monastery occupied by the Father Superior). Baglin v. Cusenier Co., 156 Fed. 1016, 1017.

The cordial known as "Chartreuse," imported from France, is a liquor within the provision for a reduced rate of duty on brandies or other spirits, in the reciprocal commercial agreement between the United States and France. (Proc. May 30, 1898, 30 Stat. 1774). Nicholas v. United States, 122 Fed. 892, 893.

CHASING

"Chasing" is a technical term, and relates to the cutting of bricks in a building for wiring. M. B. Foster Electric Co. v. Phi Gamma Delta Club, 120 N. Y. Supp. 809, 810.

CHASTE

"Chaste" is defined as "pure from all unlawful commerce of sexes; applying to persons before marriage, it signifies pure from all sexual commerce, undefiled." State v. Kelley, 90 S. W. 834, 838, 191 Mo. 680 (quoting and adopting definition in 6 Cyc. p. 978).

Under a statute defining statutory rape on females under the age of 18 not previously unchaste, a girl under the age of 18 who has had intercourse prior to that with which the prisoner stands indicted is not "chaste." Bailey v. State, 78 N. W. 284, 285, 57 Neb. 706, 73 Am. St. Rep. 540.

If first intercourse was accomplished by force on the part of the defendant and against the will of the prosecutrix, she was thereby debauched in a physical but not in a moral sense and was still "chaste," within the meaning of the statute (Code 1896, § 5503), so that seduction might be predicated of a second act accomplished with her consent, induced by promise of marriage. Pope v. State, 34 South. 840, 841, 137 Ala. 56.

The words "chaste and virtuous," in an instruction; on a trial for seduction, that chastity means virtue, and that the woman must have been "chaste and virtuous" at the time she was seduced, to justify a conviction, mean that the woman was virtuous in the sense that she was chaste, and not that she possessed all the cardinal virtues. Kerr v. United States, 104 S. W. 809, 811, 7 Ind. T. 486.

A chaste female is one who has never had sexual intercourse, who yet retains her virginity. Marshall v. Territory, 101 Pac. 139, 143, 2 Okl. Cr. 136.

The general rule of law seems to be, from the weight of authority, that although a woman may at one time have lapsed from physical chastity, if it appears affirmatively that she has reformed and at the time of the offense maintained a habit of sexual virtue, she may be deemed "chaste" within the meaning of the law, so that an invasion of that virtue under a promise of marriage may serve in greater or less degree to enhance the damages she would suffer by the breach. Salchert v. Reinig, 115 N. W. 132, 136, 135 Wis. 194.

"A 'chaste female' is one that has never had sexual intercourse, who yet retains her virginity. A 'virtuous female' is one who has not had sexual intercourse unlawfully, out of wedlock, knowingly and voluntarily." Marshall v. Territory, 101 Pac. 139, 2 Okl. Cr. 136. Whatever may be the language which one may choose to define a female of previously chaste character, it certainly cannot be contended that one who, moved by lewd desire and libidinous impulse, submits herself to the carnal embrace of a man from November to July whenever the time and the place are opportune is a female of such a character on the 30th day of June. It is argued by the state that, as to the appellant, the prosecutrix is exempt from this requirement of the law; that, being the author of her undoing, he cannot take advantage of his own wrong and hide himself under the cloak of this statutory requirement, as a shield for his protection. Such an argument is purely a sentimental one, and, although it may be abhorrent to the moral sense to permit a man to protect himself with the shield of his own wrong, we are dealing with a legal question, and not one of sentiment nor morals; and, in order to find a man guilty of such an offense as the one named in this information, we must first find a female who can in all its essentials measure up to the requirement of the law charged to be violated. The test of virtue in a woman is a personal and physical test, and when, by reason of her voluntary sin, she has lost her virginal purity, it matters not who contributed to that loss; she is no longer chaste. It is not a sound argument to say that the prosecutrix in this case was immune from rape as to all other men, but not from appellant. The statute makes no such distinction; neither can we. As is said in Shirwin v. People, 69 Ill. 55: "The right of the accused to defend must be as broad as that of the prosecution to criminate." Such we believe to be the reasoning of the law. Its authority will be found in similar cases to which we will now refer. State v. Dacke, 109 Pac. 1050, 1051, 59 Wash. 238, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 173.

CHASTE CHARACTER

See Previous Chaste Character.

"Chaste character," in connection with seduction, does not mean reputation, but actual personal chastity. State v. Preuss, 127 N. W. 438, 439, 112 Minn. 108.

"The words 'chaste character' are held to mean actual personal virtue, and not reputation, and require evidence of specific acts of lewdness for impeachment." Woodruff v. State, 101 N. W. 1114, 1119, 72 Neb. 815.

CHASTITY

See Unchaste—Unchastity.

Previous chastity essential to seduction, see Seduce—Seduction.

"Chastity" is that virtue which prevents the unlawful commerce of the sexes, and "unchastity" is the reverse of this. Ly-sacker v. Bemidji Pioneer Pub. Co., 130 N. W. 850, 851, 114 Minn. 179; Woodruff v. State, 101 N. W. 1114, 1118, 72 Neb. 815 (citing 6 Cyc. p. 978).

CHATELAINE PURSE

Not dutiable as articles commonly known as jewelry, see Articles Within Tariff Act.

CHATTEL

Any goods or chattels, see Any.
Goods and chattels, see Goods.

The word "chattel," when applied to a mortgage of chattels, is of no special significance and is a comprehensive term, including every species of property which is not real estate or a freehold. A vessel is a "chattel," and a mortgage thereof a "chattel mortgage," within a policy of insurance thereon that it shall be void if the subject of insurance be personal property and be or become incumbered by a chattel mortgage. Gilchrist Transp. Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co., 170 Fed. 279, 282, 95 C. C. A. 475.

Coin and money

An indictment for larceny which alleges that defendant stole "$26, * * * current money of the value of * * * of the goods and chattels of" a person named, sufficiently alleges the ownership of the property, though "current money" is improperly described as "goods and chattels," as when such description is disregarded the charge remains that defendant stole the "current money, of the value of * * * dollars, of" the person named. State v. King, 51 Atl. 1102, 1103, 95 Md. 125.

Crops

Growing crops are "chattels" not susceptible of manual delivery until harvested and are not in the possession or under the control of the vendor, within the meaning of the statute requiring an immediate delivery and continued change of possession. Rosenberg Bros. & Co. v. Ross, 93 Pac. 284, 286, 6 Cal. App. 755.

Fixtures

The rules for ascertaining whether an article is a "chattel" or an irremovable "fixture" are as follows: "(1) Real or constructive annexation of the article in question to the realty. (2) Appropriation or adaptation to the use or purpose of that part of the realty with which it is connected. (3) The intention of the party making the annexation to make the article a permanent accession to the freehold; this intention being inferred from the nature of the article affixed, the relation and situation of the party making the annexation, and the policy of the law in relation thereto, the structure and mode of the annexation, and the purpose or use for which the annexation has been made." Incorporated Town of Ozark v. Adams, 83 S. W. 920, 921, 73 Ark. 227 (quoting Choate v. Kimball, 19 S. W. 108, 56 Ark. 55; citing Bemis v. First Nat. Bank, 40 S. W. 127, 63 Ark. 625; Monticello Bank v. Sweet, 43 S. W. 500, 64 Ark. 502; Markle v. Stackhouse, 44 S. W. 808, 65 Ark. 23; Tenniswood v. Smith, 82 S. W. 834, 72 Ark. 500).

Horse

A horse is a "chattel." McVeigh v. Ripley, 58 Atl. 701, 702, 77 Conn. 186.

Jewelry

A "chattel" is defined to be every species of property, movable or immovable, which is less than a freehold. A ring, though an article of personal adornment, is property which may be the subject of a chattel mortgage. Salabes v. J. Castalberg & Sons, 57 Atl. 20, 21, 98 Md. 645, 64 L. R. A. 800 (quoting Bouv. Law Dict.).

Land certificate

An unlocated land certificate is a "chattel," title to which may pass by parol sale and delivery. Duren v. Bottoms (Tex.) 129 S. W. 376, 377.

Mortgages and securities

Whether notes and mortgages are "goods" within Tax Law, § 92, authorizing the sale of goods and chattels for taxes, or not, they are unquestionably "chattels." Blain v. Irby, 25 Kan. 499, 500 (Webster's Dict.; Bouv. Law Dict.; and Abbott's Law Dict.).

Oxen

An averment in an indictment that defendant by false pretenses obtained two oxen from prosecutor was an averment of obtaining by false pretenses a "chattel," within Rev. Code 1852, amended to 1893, p. 987, § 1, providing that if any person shall by any false pretenses obtain from any other person any chattel, with intent to cheat any person of the same, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, etc., and, no averment of the value of the chattel being required, proof thereof, if averred, was unnecessary. State v. Holden (Del.) 79 Atl. 215, 216.

Stocks

At common law, corporate shares were not subject to attachment or levy, not being considered as a "chattel" or debt. Fowler v. Dickson (Del.) 74 Atl. 601, 605, 1 Boyce 118 (citing Foster v. Potter, 37 Mo. 525).

CHATTEL INTERESTS

A lease to a corporation for 99 years creates an interest in land, usually termed a "chattel interest," being less than a freehold. Brown v. Schleier, 118 Fed. 981, 984, 55 C. C. A. 475.

"A lease for a thousand years is considered only an 'estate for years,' and the lessee has only a 'chattel interest,' which by the common law goes into the hands of his executor or administrator at his decease." Orchard v. Wright-Dalton-Bell-An- chor Store Co., 125 S. W. 486, 497, 225 Mo. 414, 20 Ann. Cas. 1072 (quoting 1 Swift Dig. p. 87).

CHATTEL MORTGAGE

A chattel mortgage is merely a lien in this state, and does not transfer title, and hence, under the rule that the offspring belongs to the mother, the increase of sheep mortgaged belong to the mortgagor, unless the increase was also mortgaged. Ayre v. Hixson, 98 Pac. 515, 519, 53 Or. 19, 133 Am. St. Rep. 819.

Civ. Code, § 3815, providing that a mortgage is a lien upon everything that would pass by a grant of the property, does not apply to the natural increase of domestic animals by procreation; and hence a "chattel mortgage" on cattle does not cover calves in gestation when the mortgage was executed. Demers v. Graham, 93 Pac. 268, 270, 38 Mont. 402, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 431, 122 Am. St. Rep. 384, 13 Ann. Cas. 97.

A "chattel mortgage" is a conditional sale of personal property as security for the payment of a debt or the performance of some other obligation. Odom v. Clark, 60 S. E. 513, 514, 146 N. C. 544.

"A 'mortgage of chattels' is a conditional sale thereof, whereby the legal title is vested in the mortgagee subject to the right of the mortgagor to perform the conditions imposed by the mortgage. Upon violation of such conditions, the title of the mortgagee becomes absolute, and he is entitled to take and hold possession of the mortgaged chattels for the purpose of sale, according to the terms of the mortgage subject to the right of the mortgagor to redeem pending sale." Hurt v. Hubbard, 92 Pac. 908, 41 Colo. 505.

The purchase price of an article may be secured either by a condition in the contract, by which the title is reserved in the vendor until the price is paid, or by a "chattel mortgage" given back to the vendor by the purchaser. While the object to be accomplished by either form of security is substantially the same, the rights of the parties under the two forms of security are materially different, and it is frequently of importance to determine whether the paper constitutes a "conditional sale" or a "mortgage." Tweedie v. Clarke, 99 N. Y. Supp. 856, 858, 114 App. Div. 296.

Liens upon personalty similar to mortgage liens upon real property, are "chattel mortgages." Bank of Woodland v. Pierce, 77 Pac. 1012, 1013, 144 Cal. 434.

"A 'chattel mortgage' is a conveyance of the legal title to the property mortgaged, subject to be defeated upon the payment of the debt secured at a day fixed, and upon default this title becomes absolute, and the mortgagor has no right, save the equity of redemption, which a court of equity alone can enforce." Schaffer v. Castle, 91 S. W. 35, 6 Ind. T. 244.

A chattel mortgage, covering a stock of merchandise, where the mortgagor remains in possession, and has the usual right of redemption, creates a lien only, and does not pass title, and is not a sale, exchange, or assignment within the meaning of said act, and is therefore not within the inhibition of said statute. Noble v. Ft. Smith Wholesale Grocery Co., 127 Pac. 14, 17, 34 Okl. 662.

The essentials of a chattel mortgage are the existence of a debt, legal liability, or obligation, and an intention to secure the same by some form of conveyance. Wasey v. Whitcomb, 132 N. W. 572, 580, 581, 167 Mich. 58.

An instrument which conveys no personal property and which names no debt upon the failure to pay which the same may be foreclosed by the mortgagee, and which is silent as to the amount of any mortgage debt, is not a "chattel mortgage." State v. Cordray, 98 S. W. 1, 2, 200 Mo. 29, 9 Ann. Cas. 1110.

Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 3327, providing that all reservations of title to or property in chattels as security for the purchase money thereof are chattel mortgages, notes, for the purchase price of rails, which reserved the title to the seller, though possession was given to the purchaser, were chattel mortgages. Stewart & Alexander Lumber Co. v. Miller & Vidor Lumber Co. (Tex.) 144 S. W. 343, 345.

An instrument which conveys personalty as security for the payment of money is a "chattel mortgage," within Willson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, §§ 3578, 3583, providing that a mortgage of personal property is void as against creditors of the mortgagor unless the original or a copy be filed in the office of the register of deeds, etc. Thompson v. Crosby, 82 Pac. 643, 645, 16 Okl. 316.

Where there is an indebtedness, and the effect of contemporaneous writings executed by the debtor and creditor is merely to transfer the property of the debtor to the creditor for the purpose of securing the debt and to leave in the debtor a right to all that remains after the debt is paid, it constitutes a "chattel mortgage." Hastings v. Fithian, 60 Atl. 350, 351, 71 N. J. Law, 311.

A mortgage of a vessel is a "chattel mortgage," within a policy of insurance on the vessel stipulating that it shall be void if the subject of insurance be personal property and be or become incumbered by a chattel mortgage. Gilchrist Transp. Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co., 170 Fed. 279, 282, 95 C. C. A. 475.

A "chattel mortgage" is an instrument by which specific personal property is hypothecated for the performance of an act without the necessity of a change of possession. A lease of a building, containing a clause giving a lien for the rent on the lessee's chattels in the building, is not within the statute requiring a copy of a chattel mortgage to be delivered to the mortgagor. Kennedy v. Hull, 85 N. W. 228, 224, 14 S. D. 234.

A mortgage was given by a silk manufacturing company to secure an issue of bonds, by virtue of a resolution of its board of directors authorizing a mortgage upon "the mill property, * * * its boilers, engines, buildings, stacks, silk winding, spinning, reeling, and quilling machinery, dynamos and electric light plant." The mortgage described the real estate and property above enumerated, and also "fixtures, materials, and all other property on the said above-described premises situate, * * * to have and to hold all and singular the above-described real and personal properties," etc. The boilers, engines, and machinery described were a part of the silk manufacturing plant, and were all attached to the real estate by being set in concrete or brick, or by lag screws attaching them to the floor. The mortgage was not recorded as a chattel mortgage, as required by the law of New Jersey, where the property was situated. Held, that under the law of New Jersey it was not a "chattel mortgage," within the meaning of a provision of an insurance policy covering the machinery and personal property in the mill making it void in case the personal property insured should be incumbered by a chattel mortgage. Humboldt Fire Ins. Co. v. W. H. Ashley Silk Co., 185 Fed. 54, 58, 107 C. C. A. 274.

Bill of sale

A bill of sale conveying the grantor's stock of goods, fixtures, storehouse, and lot, as security for money loaned, was, in fact, a chattel mortgage, within Kirby's Dig. Ark. § 5396, declaring that a mortgage shall be a lien only for the time it is filed for record. In re Reynolds, 153 F. 295, 298, 297 (citing Bryan v. Hobbs, 83 S. W. 341, 72 Ark. 635; *Land v. Pledge distinguished

A "chattel mortgage" is a present transfer of title to mortgaged property, with a defeasance, so that, upon payment of the debt or performance of the obligation secured, the title to the property reverts to the mortgagor; while a "pledge" is a transfer of the possession of personalty, not the title, as security for the performance of some act by the pledgor, with provisions for sale of the property or other disposition thereof by the pledgee upon the pledgor's default. Palmer v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, 130 N. W. 250, 252, 114 Minn. 1, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 957.

A transaction whereby neither an absolute nor a defeasible title to personalty is transferred by the owner but only possession with the power to sell if default is made in the payment of the note secured is not a "mortgage" but a pledge. Grand Ave. Bank v. St. Louis Union Trust Co., 115 S. W. 1071, 1074, 135 Mo. App. 368.

Vendor's lien

Reservation of title to a chattel sold and delivered, as security for the purchase money thereof, is but a "chattel mortgage" and does not give a vendor's lien. Parlin & Orendorff Co. v. Davis' Estate (Tex.) 74 S. W. 951, 952.

An instrument, reciting a sale of a drug stock and fixtures in the storeroom and the retention of a vendor's lien for the unpaid portion of the purchase price, and binding the vendees to keep the stock up to its present standard and not permit it to run down, and stipulating that, if the notes are not paid when due, the vendor may take possession and sell sufficient of the stock in the usual conduct of the business to pay the mortgage and default, is a "chattel mortgage," though it denominates the lien retained a vendor's lien. Fleisher Bros. v. Hinde, 99 S. W. 25, 27, 122 Mo. App. 218.

CHATTELS PERSONAL

"Chattels real" include estates for years, at will, by sufferance, and various interests of uncertain duration. They are to be distinguished from things which have no concern with the land, such as mere movables and rights connected with them, which are "chattels personal," and also from a "freehold," which is realty. Orchard v. Wright-Dalton-Bell-Anchor Store Co., 125 S. W. 493, 495, 225 Mo. 414, 20 Ariz. Cas. 1072.

CHATTELS REAL

At common law a term for years created by lease was a "chattel real." Springfield Southwestern R. Co. v. Schweitzer, 151 S. W. 128, 131, 246 Mo. 122.

A leasehold interest is merely a "chattel real." Townsend v. Boyd, 66 Atl. 1099, 1101, 217 Pa. 386, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1148.

A chattel real at common law was an interest annexed to or growing out of real estate, as a term for years, having the character of immobility, which denominated it real, while other chattels proper are movable; but they were regarded as personal property and went to the personal representative upon death, and not to the heir. Comer v. Light, 98 N. E. 660, 663, 175 Ind. 367.

"'Chattel real' is defined in 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) as 'an estate in land other than one for life or inheritance.' In 2 Tucker's Com. p. 305, it is said that chattels real are such as concern or savor of the realty; as terms for years in land, wardships in chivalry (while military tenures subsisted), the next presentation to a church, estates by a statute merchant, statutes staple, elegit, or the like. They are called real chattels, as being interests issuing out of or annexed to real estate, of which they have one quality, immobility, but want the other, viz., a sufficient legal indeterminate duration; and this want it is that constitutes them chattels. The utmost period for which they can last is fixed and determinate either for such a space of time certain or until such a particular sum of money be raised out of such a particular income, so that they are not equal in the eye of the law to the lowest estate of freehold, viz., a lease for another's life. A lease for years of land is a real chattel whether it be for one or a thousand years, provided there be a certainty about it, and a reversion or remainder in some person." Harvey Coal & Coke Co. v. Dillon, 53 S. E. 923, 930, 59 W. Va. 605, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 628.

"Chattels real" include estates for years, at will, by sufferance, and various interests of uncertain duration. They are to be distinguished from things which have no concern with the land, such as mere movables and rights connected with them, which are "chattels personal," and also from a "freehold," which is realty. Orchard v. Wright-Dalton-Bell-Anchor Store Co., 125 S. W. 486, 493, 225 Mo. 414, 20 Ann. Cas. 1072.

A term for years is a "chattel real," under Civ. Code, §§ 761, 765, dividing estates in real property into estates of inheritance, estates for life, for years, and at will, and declaring that estates for years are chattels real, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 17, 871, and Civ. Code, § 14, defining real property as co-extensive with lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and including chattels in a definition of personalty, and making a judgment a lien on all the real property of a judgment debtor not exempt from execution owned by him at the time or afterwards acquired, a judgment is not a lien on a leasehold estate acquired by the debtor under a lease executed subsequent to the judgment. Summerville v. Stockton Milling Co., 76 Pac. 243, 246, 142 Cal. 529.

A lease for a term of years is a "chattel real." It conveys an interest in the land, and, while it has many of the attributes of personalty, it is treated in many respects as real estate; and the rule that a corporation to acquire and hold real estate cannot be organized embraces all interests in real estate, including leaseholds. People v. Shedd, 89 N. E. 332, 335, 241 Ill. 155 (citing First Nat. Bank of Joliet v. Adam, 28 N. E. 955, 138 Ill. 483; Knapp v. Jones, 32 N. E. 382, 143 Ill. 375).

A lease of real estate for 10 years was a "chattel real," as provided by Real Property Law (N. Y. Laws 1896, p. 563, c. 547) § 23, and was not therefore the proper subject of a chattel mortgage. In re Fulton, 153 Fed. 664, 666.

Though a leasehold interest in land is for some purposes treated as personalty, generally it is considered a "chattel real" and is real estate within Incorporation Act (Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 32, §§ 1, 26), prohibiting the organization of corporations to hold real estate. Imperial Bldg. Co. v. Chicago Open Board of Trade, 87 N. E. 167, 169, 238 Ill. 100 (citing First Nat. Bank of Joliet v. Adam, 28 N. E. 955, 138 Ill. 483; Knapp v. Jones, 32 N. E. 382, 143 Ill. 375).

CHAUFFEUR

A "chauffeur" is one who operates and propels an automobile. State v. Swagerty, 102 S. W. 483, 486, 203 Mo. 517, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 601, 120 Am. St. Rep. 671, 11 Ann. Cas. 725.

The business of one who operates and propels an automobile along the public highways, called a "chauffeur," is a business attendant with such dangers, and requires a degree of scientific knowledge upon which others must rely, that the Legislature may properly impose conditions on its exercise. Christy v. Elliott, 74 N. E. 1035, 1040, 216 Ill. 31, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 215, 108 Am. St. Rep. 196, 3 Ann. Cas. 487.

In an action for injuries to a pedestrian struck by an automobile, proof that defendant admitted his ownership of the automobile, and that the chauffeur in charge thereof was his chauffeur, was prima facie proof that plaintiff received injury through the negligence of defendant's servant while acting within the scope of his employment, and the burden of proof was shifted on defendant to show that the chauffeur was not acting for him at the time; the word "chauffeur" involving the idea of one having charge of or operating an automobile. Shamp v. Lambert, 121 S. W. 770, 773, 142 Mo. App. 567.

CHEAT

"Cheating" may embrace civil fraud for which one is amenable to a civil and not a criminal action, and may offend the laws of morality without being legally cheating. Cheating is not actionable by the common law, unless spoken of the plaintiff in relation to his profession or business, or unless it be by false pretenses or tokens. A charge that members of an organization were thieves, robbers, that one of them had cheated the organization out of $2 in connection with the purchase of a liquor license, is not actionable per se. Yakavicke v. Valentukevicius, 80 Atl. 94, 96, 84 Conn. 350, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1264.

The word "defraud," in Rev. St. 1899, § 2009, punishing every person who, with intent to injure or "defraud," shall falsely forge, relates to injury to property or property rights, and an indictment alleging that accused, with intent to "cheat and defraud," forged an instrument was not insufficient because of the word "cheat"; it being of similar import to the word "injure" in the statute and not repugnant to the word "defraud." State v. Harroun, 98 S. W. 467, 470, 199 Mo. 519.

Crime imported

Under Code Cr. Proc. §§ 275, 276, providing that an indictment shall contain a concise statement of the act constituting the crime, etc., and prescribing the form of indictment, an indictment charging the defendants conspired, by procuring the presentation and allowance of fraudulent claims against a city, to cheat and defraud the city, and alleging that, in pursuance of the conspiracy, defendants prepared in the name of a third person a false claim against the city and procured the allowance of the same, etc., charges a violation of Pen. Code, § 168, providing that, where two or more persons conspire to cheat another out of property by any means which are in themselves criminal, or which if executed would amount to a cheat, they shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, since the means alleged were of a felonious character, within the purview of the section, and were such as if executed would amount to a cheat, which is such a fraud as will affect the public, such a deception that common prudence and care are not sufficient to guard against it. People v. Miles, 108 N. Y. Supp. 510, 517, 123 App. Div. 862.

Defendant while present in a lodge room, having charged members of the organization to be thieves and robbers, and being requested to point out to whom he referred, stated he could tell "two of those thieves and robbers," and, pointing to plaintiff, said: "There is one. He cheated the club out of $2 in connection with the purchase of the liquor license." Held that, since the specification did not sustain the charge that plaintiff was a thief, the words at most imputing to him not a crime, but an act of cheating, which was no more than to charge that plaintiff tricked or outwitted the club, they were not actionable per se, under the rule that words to be so actionable must charge a crime involving moral turpitude, or subject the offender to infamous punishment. Yakavicke v. Valentukevicius, 80 Atl. 94, 96, 84 Conn. 350, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1264.

The offense of cheating and swindling consists of some false pretense, device, or contrivance fraudulently made with intent to deceive another so successfully accomplished that the other is in fact deceived thereby and suffers loss. Foster v. State, 68 S. E. 739, 740, 8 Ga. App. 119.

The giving of a second mortgage on personal property without disclosing the existence of a first mortgage, where no representation of the nonexistence of the first mortgage is made, is not "cheating and swindling" within any special section of the Penal Code of 1895, nor general section 670, declaring any person using any deceitful means or artful practice other than those mentioned in that Code, by which an individual or the public is defrauded, guilty of a misdemeanor. Griffin v. State, 60 S. E. 277, 3 Ga. App. 476.

The offense of "cheating by false pretenses" under Code, § 5041, is the obtaining from another, designedly and by false pretense, or by any privy or false token, and with intent to defraud, any money, goods, or property, etc., and is complete only as the wrongful act affects property rights of some third person, and to charge the crime it is necessary to expressly allege the name of that person. State v. Clark, 119 N. W. 719, 721, 141 Iowa, 297.

It is the general holding that neither the common law nor the statutes of the several states defining the crime of "cheating by false pretenses" apply to real estate. Code, § 5041, providing that if any person designedly and by false pretense, or by any privy or false token, and with intent to defraud, obtain from another any money, goods, "or other property," he shall be punished, etc., does not apply to false pretenses for the purpose of acquiring real estate. State v. Eno, 109 N. W. 119, 120, 131 Iowa 619, 9 Ann. Cas. 856.

The essential requisites in the offense of cheating and swindling by false representations are: (a) That the representations were made; (b) that they were knowingly and designedly false; (c) that they were made with intent to deceive and defraud; (d) that they did deceive and defraud; (e) that they related to an existing fact or past event; (f) that the party to whom the false statements were made, relying on their truth, was thereby induced to part with his property. Goddard v. State, 58 S. E. 304, 305, 2 Ga. App. 207.

CHECK

Payment of, see Payment.

Raising a check, see Raise.

"Checks" are negotiable instruments both at common law and under the express provisions of Ky. St. 1903, § 478. Boswell v. Citizens' Savings Bank, 96 S. W. 797, 799, 123 Ky. 485.

A check is an instrument by which a depositor seeks to withdraw funds from a bank, and, as between the drawer and the payee, is evidence of indebtedness, and equivalent to the drawer's promise to pay. Camas Prairie State Bank v. Newman, 99 Pac. 833, 834, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 703, 128 Am. St. Rep. 81, 15 Idaho, 719.

The usual business carried on by banks is to receive moneys on deposit from persons who desire a safe place to keep their funds, and a convenient place from which they can, when needed, be withdrawn, and to loan money to persons who desire to borrow it. According to the usual custom of such banks, the money deposited by a customer of the bank would be entered to his credit and, when the depositor desired to withdraw from the bank any or all of the funds so deposited and carried to his credit, he would draw an order on the bank for the amount of money desired. This order is commonly called a "check." Chadwick v. United States, 141 Fed. 225, 228, 229, 72 C. C. A. 343.

Criminal Code 1902, § 358, which makes it an offense, unless otherwise provided by special contract, to offer to any farm laborer at the time when his wages are due and payable by agreement as compensation for labor, checks known as plantation checks, payable at some future time or in his shop or store in lieu of lawful money, expressly declares that the word "checks" shall not be construed so as to prohibit the giving of checks on any of the authorized banks of deposits or issue in, this state. Johnson, Lytle & Co. v. Sparton Mills, 47 S. E. 695, 703, 68 S. C. 339, 1 Ann. Cas. 409.

A "check" is simply a written order of a depositor to his bank to make a certain payment. It is executory, and as such it is of course revocable at any time before the bank has paid or permitted itself to pay it. But after the bank has paid, or placed itself under obligation to comply with, the order, the drawer's power to revoke is at an end. It is no defense to an action by a depositor against a bank that it paid his check; payment having been after notice from him not to pay it. The depositor may prove a verbal notice, though afterwards on the request of the teller he reduced the notice to writing. People's Savings Bank & Trust Co. v.

Lacey, 40 South. 346, 347, 146 Ala. 688 (quoting Morse, Banking [4th Ed.] § 398; Zane, Banks, p. 261, § 153; National Commercial Bank v. Miller, 77 Ala. 168, 54 Am. Rep. 50; and other cases).

"A 'check,' being simply a written order of a depositor to his banker to make a certain payment out of his funds, is executory and of course revocable at any time before the bank has paid it or committed itself to its payment. * * * The bank is the agent of the drawer. Its duty is to pay his money as he directs. It owes no duty to the holder except under the drawer's directions, until, by virtue of those directions, it assumes some obligation to the holder; up to that time the latest order from the drawer governs." Pease & Dwyer v. State Nat. Bank, 88 S. W. 172, 173, 114 Tenn. 693 (quoting and adopting definition in Kahn v. Walton, 20 N. E. 203, 46 Ohio St. 205).

A "check" is usually defined to be a draft or order on a bank for the payment, at all events, of a certain sum of money to a person or his order, or to bearer, and payable instantly on demand; and it is an evidence of indebtedness, and, as between drawer and payee, is equivalent to the drawer's promise to pay, though the drawer may not be bound absolutely until payment has been duly demanded of the bank and refused. Brown v. Cow Creek Sheep Co. (Wyo.) 128 Pac. 886, 890.

For certain purposes a bank "check" is regarded as a simple contract. For example, the statute of limitations as to simple contracts in writing applies to checks. Whether a check is a specialty or not under Civ. Code 1895, § 3634 et seq., it is such an instrument as is by common law negotiable and as to which a consideration will be presumed. Purcell v. Armour Packing Co., 61 S. E. 138, 141, 4 Ga. App. 253 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1111; Haynes v. Wesley, 37 S. E. 990, 112 Ga. 668, 81 Am. St. Rep. 72).

As used in Laws 1901, p. 166, § 2, prohibiting the conduct of games of chance for money, "checks," credits, or any representative of value, or for any property or thing whatever, "checks" includes all kinds of articles embraced under that designation. The expression "any representative of value," together with these words, leave nothing of any of the classes of property enumerated. Hence a nickel in the slot machine, involving in its operation the element of chance as to whether the player obtained in cigars more or less than the value of his money, was prohibited by such statute. State v. Woodman, 67 Pac. 1118, 1120, 26 Mont. 348.

Leaving blank the name of the payee of a check gives to any bona fide holder for value implied authority to fill the blank with his own name or that of a third person, and so, likewise, where all that was required to make a check out of a forged instrument delivered by defendant in payment was the insertion of the name of the payee, the delivery constituted the transferee defendant's agent with authority to fill in the blank with its own name; and a claim that the instrument was not a check or an instrument for the payment of money within the meaning of Pen. Code, § 476 when passed by defendant, is without merit. People v. Gorham, 99 Pac. 391, 392, 9 Cal. App. 341.

As appropriation or assignment of money

Under Rev. St. 1908, §§ 8177v, 8177z, declaring that a "check" is a bill of exchange drawn on a bank, payable on demand, and providing that a check does not operate as an assignment, and the bank is not liable to the holder until it accepts or certifies the check, a "check" for part of the sum due the drawer does not, before acceptance by the drawee, constitute an equitable assignment of the amount for which it is drawn, but the transfer of a certified check is an equitable assignment of money to meet it, and the bank making the certification is liable therefor to the holder. Blake v. Hamilton Dime Savings Bank Co., 87 N. E. 73, 75, 79 Ohio St. 189, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 290, 128 Am. St. Rep. 684, 16 Ann. Cas. 210.

A "check" is an absolute appropriation of so much of the funds of the drawer in the hands of the bank as is called for by the instrument, so that after notice to the bank it cannot be withdrawn by the drawer, the money becoming the absolute property of the holder; and this notwithstanding the drawer may afterwards deliver another check to an innocent person without notice of the first one, who by first presenting his check may defeat the claim of the first check holder, the title to the amount represented by the check as between the maker and the payee, passing to the latter, so that the taxable balance of the maker may properly be reduced by outstanding unpaid checks. Commonwealth v. Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co., 116 S. W. 766, 769, 132 Ky. 521, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 30, 136 Am. St. Rep. 186, 18 Ann. Cas. 1156 (citing Lester & Co. v. Givens & Co., 71 Ky. [8 Bush] 357; Weinstock v. Bellwood, 75 Ky. [12 Bush] 140; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Robinson, 31 S. W. 136, 97 Ky. 552, 28 L. R. A. 760; Columbia Finance & Trust Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 76 S. W. 156, 116 Ky. 364; Farmers' Bank & Trust Co. of Stanford v. Newland, 31 S. W. 38, 97 Ky. 464; Deatheridge v. Crumbaugh, 8 Ky. Law Rep. 592; Rosenbaum & Co. v. Lytle & Co., 8 Ky. Law Rep. 607).

"A 'check' on the bank in the usual form, not accepted or certified by its cashier to be good, does not constitute a transfer of any money to the credit of the holder; it is simply an order which may be countermanded and payment forbidden by the drawer at any time before it is actually cashed. It creates no lien on the money which the holder can enforce against the bank. It does not of itself operate as an equitable assignment." Pease & Dwyer Co. v. State Nat. Bank, 88 S. W. 172-174, 114 Tenn. 693 (quoting and adopting the definition in Florence Mining Co. v. Brown, 8 Sup. Ct. 531, 534, 124 U. S. 391, 31 L. Ed. 424).

A check given by a depositor upon a bank is a mere direction to the bank to pay a certain sum of money to the person named therein, and by the giving of such check the amount of the same does not become the property of the payee of the check nor place such fund beyond the control of the depositor. Kaesemeyer v. Smith, 123 Pac. 943, 947, 22 Idaho, 17, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 100.

A "check" is neither a legal nor an equitable assignment or appropriation of a corresponding amount of the drawer's funds in the hands of the drawee and gives the payee no right of action against the drawer nor any valid claim to the funds of the drawer in his hands. Tibby Bros. Glass Co. v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank, 69 Atl. 280, 281, 220 Pa. 1, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 519 (citing Harrisburg Nat. Bank's Appeal, 10 Wkly. Notes Cas. 41).

Bill of exchange distinguished

A "check" is a bill of exchange, sometimes defined as an inland bill of exchange, and is "property"; it being capable of beneficial ownership. Citing Words and Phrases, vol. 2, p. 1109. State v. Fraley (W. Va.) 76 S. E. 134, 135, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 498.

A "check" is a bill of exchange drawn on a bank, payable on demand. Columbian Banking Co. v. Bowen, 114 N. W. 451, 452, 134 Wis. 218 (quoting and adopting definition in Negotiable Instruments Law [Laws 1899, c. 356, § 1684-1]).

A bank "check" is a bill of exchange, within the meaning of Gen. Stat. 1901, § 548, providing that an acceptance of a bill of exchange written on paper other than the bill shall not bind the acceptor except in favor of a bona fide holder of the paper. First Nat. Bank of Atchison v. Commercial Sav. Bank, 87 Pac. 746, 74 Kan. 606, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1148, 118 Am. St. Rep. 340, 11 Ann. Cas. 281 (citing Eakin v. Citizens' State Bank, 72 Pac. 874, 67 Kan. 338).

A bank "check" is a bill of exchange within the statute providing that no one shall be charged as an acceptor of a bill of exchange unless the acceptance is in writing, etc. Interstate Nat. Bank v. Ringo, 83 Pac. 119, 122, 72 Kan. 116, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1179, 115 Am. St. Rep. 176.

A check is a bill of exchange upon a bank or banker, payable on demand without interest. Hobart Nat. Bank v. McMurrough, 103 Pac. 601, 24 Okl. 210.

Negotiable Instruments Law, § 185, provides that a "check" is a "bill of exchange" drawn on a bank payable on demand. National Bank of Commerce in St. Louis v. Mechanics' American Nat. Bank, 127 S. W. 429, 433, 143 Mo. App. 1; Van Buskirk v. State Bank of Rocky Ford, 83 Pac. 778, 85 Colo. 142, 117 Am. St. Rep. 182.

Under Rem. & Bal. Code, §§ 3516, 3575, a check is a bill of exchange. State v. Garland, 118 Pac. 907, 910, 65 Wash. 606.

A "check" constitutes a demand on the bank for the payment of the amount of money designated in the check from the funds of the drawer on deposit in the bank. If there are no funds on deposit, the check amounts to a request for credit and becomes an overdraft. Under Civ. Code, § 3254, a check is a bill of exchange and is negotiable. Whether regarded as a demand or a request, it is always the written instrument on which the payment of a sum mentioned therein is founded and is the foundation of any suit growing out of the payment of such money or the refusal to pay the check. A check implies a promise that the money is in the bank with which to pay it, and that if the money is not there the drawer of the check will repay the money to the bank, and therefor the promise implied by the check is a contract in writing, and the statute of limitations governing written instruments to pay money applies to a check. Du Brutz v. Bank of Visalia, 87 Pac. 467, 469, 4 Cal. App. 201 (citing Bancroft v. San Francisco Tool Co., 52 Pac. 496, 120 Cal. 228; Long v. Straus, 6 N. E. 123, 7 N. E. 763, 107 Ind. 94, 57 Am. Rep. 87; Meherin v. Saunders, 63 Pac. 1084, 131 Cal. 681, 54 L. R. A. 272).

Under Rem. & Bal. Code, §§ 3516, 3575, defining a "bill of exchange" as an unconditional order in writing addressed by one person to another, signed by the person giving it, requiring the person to whom it is addressed to pay, on demand or at a fixed or determinable future time, a specified sum, to order or bearer, and defining a "check" as a bill of exchange drawn on a bank payable on demand, a certificate of deposit properly indorsed by the depositor is a "check" within an information charging larceny of a check by means of false pretenses. State v. Garland, 118 Pac. 907, 910, 65 Wash. 606.

Where an instrument for the payment of the price of a shipment of iron was drawn by the seller on the buyer, who resided in a foreign country, and, with the bill of lading attached, was indorsed for discount, it was a foreign bill of exchange, and not a check, under Negotiable Instruments Law, §§ 210, 321 (Laws 1897, pp. 745, 756, c. 612), defining a bill of exchange as an unconditional order in writing, addressed by one person to another, signed by the person giving it, requiring the addressee to pay on demand, or at a fixed or determinable time, a certain sum of money to order or to bearer, and defining a check as a bill of exchange, drawn on a bank, payable on demand. Amsinck v. Rogers, 93 N. Y. Supp. 87, 91, 103 App. Div. 428.

Deposit presumed

"A 'check' is an order on a bank purporting to be drawn on a deposit of funds. It presupposes that the drawer has money in the hands of the banker subject to his order at any time on demand." McKnight v. Bank of Acadia, 38 South. 172, 173, 114 La. 289 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Hand. Com. Paper, § 8).

A "check" is defined as a draft or order upon a bank or banking house, purporting to be drawn upon a deposit of funds for the payment at all events of a certain sum of money to a certain person therein named, or to him or his order, or to bearer, and payable instantly on demand. Farmers' Bank of Nashville v. Johnson, King & Co., 68 S. E. 85, 86, 134 Ga. 486, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 697, 137 Am. St. Rep. 242.

A "check is defined as a draft or order upon a bank or banking house, purporting to be drawn upon a deposit of funds for the payment at all events of a certain sum of money, to a certain person therein named, or to him or his order or to bearer, and payable instantly on demand. An instrument certified by a national bank reciting that, on the failure of the drawers to comply with the building contract, the drawers agreed to pay plaintiff surety company, which had become surety on the drawer's construction bond, any amount such surety would become legally liable to pay on the bond, not exceeding a specified sum, otherwise the check to be void and held for naught, is not a certified check drawn in the ordinary course of business. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. National Bank of Commerce of Dallas, 106 S. W. 782, 784, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 301 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Daniel, Neg. Inst. § 1566).

A check is an order on a bank purporting to be drawn upon a deposit of funds. State v. Hammelsy, 96 Pac. 865, 866, 52 Or. 156, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 244, 132 Am. St. Rep. 686.

A bank "check" is not an "obligation for the payment of money," within the legal meaning of such term as used in Rev. St. § 5451, providing for the punishment of bribery of United States officers. The definitions of the word "check," as given in 1 Bouv. Law Dict. 225, 1 Abb. Law Dict. 214, 2 Daniel, Neg. Inst. (4th Ed.) § 1566, Bishop, Stat. Cr. (2d Ed.) p. 299, § 328, and People v. Howell (N. Y.) 4 Johns. p. 301, do not support the proposition that a "check" is an "obligation for the payment of money" within the meaning of the statute. The definitions of the word "obligation," as found in 2 Bouv. Law Dict. 254, Wharton's Law Dict., 2 Abb. Law Dict. p. 193, Strong v. Wheaton (N. Y.) 38

Barb. 616, Crandall v. Bryan (N. Y.) 15 How. Prac. 48, Rippon's Ex'rs v. Townsend's Ex'rs (S. C.) 1 Bay, 445, Basehore v. Rhodes, 85 Pa. 44, are not sufficiently broad to cover the case of a "check." A "check" is a representation by the drawer that he has money on deposit with the drawee subject to his order. The law implies a consideration for the check, and a promise on the part of the drawer to pay the amount of the check in case it is not paid or accepted by the bank or banker on which it is drawn. The giving of a check is not the creation of an obligation but is merely the admission by the drawer of the existence of an obligation to pay a certain sum of money. If payable to bearer or to the order of the payee, it is negotiable and passes by delivery or indorsement, but the check imposes no obligation on the drawee to pay the same, at least as between the drawee and payee; but if the bank refuses to pay the check, having funds with which to pay the same, the payee cannot maintain an action in law or in equity against the bank unless the bank has accepted the check. A check is neither a draft or bill of exchange, although it has many of the features of a bill of exchange and some of the features of a draft. It is not a bond or a promissory note. It is not a contract, for it contains no promise by the drawer to any person. United States v. Green, 136 Fed. 618, 645, 650 (citing Bull v. First Nat. Bank, 8 Sup. Ct. 62, 123 U. S. 110, 111, 31 L. Ed. 97; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. State Nat. Bank, 77 U. S. [10 Wall.] 604, 19 L. Ed. 1008; Chapman v. People, 39 Mich. 357, 359; In re Richter, 100 Fed. 295, 297; U. S. v. Royall, 3 Cranch, C. C. 618, 27 Fed. Cas. 906; Elsasser v. Haines, 18 Atl. 1095, 52 N. J. Law, 10; Sinton v. Carter County, 23 Fed. 535, 537, 538; Merchants' Bank v. State Bank, 10 Wall. 604, 19 L. Ed. 1008; Bull v. First Nat. Bank, 8 Sup. Ct. 62, 123 U. S. 110, 111, 31 L. Ed. 97; People v. Howell [N. Y.] 4 Johns, 296, 301).

A check is but a request to another to pay to the payee the sum named therein out of funds supposed to be deposited with the drawee to meet the check. If the drawee does not comply with the request, the funds are still there and the debtor still owes the money; the drawer of the check being the principal debtor, and not a surety, like an indorser. Williams v. Braun, 112 Pac. 465, 466, 14 Cal. App. 396.

Payable on demand or presentment

A "check" is an order to pay the holder a sum of money at the bank upon which it is drawn on presentment of the check and demand for the money. Parker-Fain Grocery Co. v. Orr, 57 S. E. 1074, 1075, 1 Ga. App. 628.

A "check" is defined by Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1908, § 3703, as a "bill of exchange drawn upon a bank or banker, or a person described as such upon the face thereof, and payable on demand without interest." Checks, as a rule, are used in paying obligations that are due, and take the place of the cash itself; and, while a check is not an assignment of the fund against which it is drawn until accepted by the drawee, the law recognizes that the funds are placed in the bank for the purpose of paying checks drawn by the depositor on the bank; and hence the law requires one holding a check to use reasonable diligence in presenting it for payment. School Dist. No. 57, Logan County, v. Eager, 91 Pac. 847, 848, 19 Okl. 235.

Under Negotiable Instrument Law, § 126, defining a bill of exchange, section 185, p. 246, declaring that a check is a bill of exchange drawn on a bank and subject to the law applicable to a bill of exchange, section 143, p. 238, providing that a check need not be presented for acceptance, and section 189, p. 246, providing that a bank is not liable to the holder until it accepts or certifies it, a drawee of a check is not liable to the holder until it accepts or promises to pay it in writing. Van Buskirk v. State Bank of Rocky Ford, 83 Pac. 778, 35 Colo. 142, 117 Am. St. Rep. 182.

A gift of one's check is incomplete until the check has been paid or accepted by the bank, for a "check" is a mere order to the payee to draw the amount called for, and, when given without consideration, it may be revoked by the maker so long as it remains unacted on in the hands of the payee. Foxworthy v. Adams, 124 S. W. 381, 382, 136 Ky. 403, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 308, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 827.

CHEMICAL

Public Health Law, § 197, provides that all pharmaceutical preparations shall be of a quality, established by the United States Pharmacopoeia, and that every proprietor of a place where "drugs, medicines or chemicals" are sold shall be responsible for the quality of "drugs, chemicals or medicines." Section 199 provides that the provision shall not apply to the sale by merchants of cream of tartar, and other enumerated articles, except as herein provided. Held, that the enumerated articles not sold as drugs or medicines need not conform to the standard prescribed by the Pharmacopœia for medicines, though the seller of such articles, if adulterated, may be subject to other statutory penalties; the word "chemicals" in the statute being limited to chemicals used as medicines or drugs. State Board of Pharmacy v. Gasau, 88 N. E. 55, 57, 195 N. Y. 197.

CHEMICAL COMPOUND

Glycerophosphate of lime, though occasionally dispensed medicinally, is almost always used with other drugs in preparing elixirs. Held, not a "medicinal preparation," but a "chemical compound," within Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, pars. 8, 67, 30 Stat. 151, 154. A. Klipstein & Co. v. United States, 167 Fed. 535, 536, 98 O. C. A. 67.

A dry, antiseptic preservative, consisting of an intimate mechanical mixture of boracic acid and borax, the former being the more valuable component, is an article not enumerated in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, § 1, c. 11, 30 Stat. 151, either as "boracic acid," under paragraph 1, Schedule A, § 1, c. 11, 30 Stat. 151, as "chemical compounds," under paragraph 3, Schedule A, § 1, c. 11, 30 Stat. 151, or as "borax" or "borate material," under paragraph 11, Schedule A, § 1, c. 11, 30 Stat. 152, and is subject to an assessment at the same rate of duty as boracic acid under said paragraph 1, by virtue of section 7, 30 Stat. 205, which prescribes that on articles not enumerated, manufactured of two or more materials, the duty shall be assessed at the highest rate at which the same would be chargeable, if composed wholly of the component material thereof of chief value. Berth Levi & Co. v. United States, 126 Fed. 420, 421.

The article known as "carbolineum," or "carbolineum Avenarius," which consists of dead oil modified by the action of chlorine gas, is dutiable under the provision in paragraph 15, Schedule A, § 1, c. 11, Tariff Act of July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. 152, for "preparations of coal tar, not colors or dyes and not medicinal, not specially provided for," and is not dutiable under the provision for "chemical compounds," in paragraph 3 of said act (30 Stat. 151), or free of duty as "dead or creosote oil," under paragraph 524 of said act (Free List, § 2, c. 11, 30 Stat. 197). Downing v. United States, 123 Fed. 1000, 1001.

Bone-size substitute, consisting of chemical starch, dextrin, magnesium chloride, and silica, which is used for stiffening the backs of fabrics, is not a preparation fit for use as starch, under paragraph 285, Schedule G, § 1, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. 173, c. 11, but is a chemical compound, under paragraph 3, Schedule A, 30 Stat. 151. United States v. B. P. Ducas & Co., 149 Fed. 253, 254.

The term "coal tar preparations" is more specific than the term "chemical compounds." Lysol, a coal tar preparation, is dutiable under paragraph 15, Schedule A, § 1, c. 11, Tar- iff Act July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. 152, providing for preparations of "coal tar * * * not medicinal," rather than under paragraph 3, Schedule A, § 1, c. 11, of said act, covering "chemical compounds." United States v. Lehn, 124 Fed. 87, 89.

"Gaduol," an extract of cod liver oil, which, in the form in which imported is not prepared for the use of the apothecary or physician, and which is not dispensed in that form, is not a "medicinal preparation," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 67, 30 Stat. 154, but is dutiable as a "chemical compound" under paragraph 3 of said act (30 Stat. 151, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A). United States v. Merck & Co., 136 Fed. 817, 69 O. C. A. 472; Merck & Co. v. United States, 126 Fed. 438, 439.

The provision for "chemical compounds" in Tariff Act July 24, 1894, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 2, does not include herbs immersed in alcohol. United States v. Stone & Downer Co., 171 Fed. 293.

Extract of nutgalls, an article which is made by grinding nutgalls, digesting the powder in water, and filtering to remove impurities, a chemical being added as a preservative without working any chemical change, is not dutiable as tannin or tannic acid, under paragraph 1, Schedule A, § 1, c. 11, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. 151, nor as a chemical compound under paragraph 3, Schedule A, § 1, c. 11, 30 Stat. 151, but either directly or by similitude as "drugs, such as * * * nutgalls, * * * advanced in value or condition," under paragraph 20, Schedule A, § 1, c. 11, 30 Stat. 152. W. N. Proctor & Co. v. United States, 139 Fed. 586, 588.

CHEMIST

"Although the study of chemistry is the study of a science, yet a chemist who occupies himself in the practical use of his knowledge of chemistry as his services may be demanded may certainly at this time be fairly regarded as in the practice of a profession. * * * [One] is none the less a chemist, and none the less occupied in the practice of his profession because he * * *. limits himself to that particular branch, which is to be applied in the course of the scientific manufacture of sugar, any more than a lawyer would cease to practice his profession by limiting himself to any particular branch thereof or a doctor by confining his practice to some specialty which he particularly favored and was eminent in." United States v. Laws, 16 Sup. Ct. 998, 163 U. S. 266, 267, 41 L. Ed. 151.

CHEROKEE TRIBE OR ANY BAND THEREOF

The phrase "Cherokee Tribe or any Band thereof," as used in Act Cong. July 1, 1902,

c. 1375, § 68, 32 Stat. 728, conferring jurisdiction to adjudicate any claim which the Cherokee tribe, or any band thereof, arising under treaty stipulations, may have against the United States, means the Cherokee people as a people or any band thereof, and not the Cherokee nation as a body politic. United States v. Cherokee Nation, 26 Sup. Ct. 588, 599, 202 U. S. 101, 50 L. Ed. 949.

CHERRIES

As edible fruit, see Edible Fruit.

CHERRY JUICE

The article known as "marasque water" or "eau de marasque," which is produced by distilling the juice of crushed cherries diluted somewhat with water used in the distilling process, is not dutiable as cherry juice, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule H, par. 299, 30 Stat. 174, but as an unenumerated manufactured article under section 6, 30 Stat. 205. Leerburger Bros. v. United States, 141 Fed. 1023.

CHEST

"An indictment charging theft of one certain trunk or chest containing various articles of clothing, jewelry, etc., is bad for uncertainty in the description of the property stolen. The words 'trunk' and 'chest' are not synonymous." State v. Collett, 75 Pac. 271, 272, 9 Idaho, 608 (citing Potter v. State, 39 Tex. 388).

CHICKENS

Any useful fowl, see Any.

As personal property, see Personal Property.

As valuable things, see Valuable Thing.

A complaint, alleging that accused stole chickens of a specified value, charges the larceny of "poultry," punishable by Gen. St. 1902, § 1211; the word "chickens" meaning poultry, and the word "poultry" including domestic fowls, generally or collectively, reared for the table or for their eggs or feathers. Town of Wolcott v. Sticklee, 82 Atl. 572, 573, 85 Conn. 322.

CHICKEN COOP

As building, see Building (In Criminal Law).

CHICKEN HOUSE

As house, see House.

"A chicken or hen house is a building which is of a permanent and substantial kind and is well known in communities where poultry is raised as the building in which chickens and other poultry are housed." Indictment for burglary of a chicken or hen house need not allege that the house was specially made to keep such goods, merchandise, or other valuable things. Lucas v. State, 39 South. 821, 144 Ala. 63, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 412.

CHIEF COUNSEL

Pending a suit by the United States against a disbursing officer to recover misappropriations, it was stipulated that, in consideration of a payment to a receiver of all money and property which the defendants had not conveyed or disbursed, to bona fide purchasers and were able to pay over, there should be paid, from the property so surrendered, fees of the receiver, the fees, traveling and other expenses of defendants' chief counsel and of his attorney, the amount to be fixed and allowed by the court, the fee of his attorney for representing him in any criminal prosecution, expenses of an accountant, etc. Held that, under such stipulation, a reasonable allowance for defendants' chief counsel, both on an appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals and to the Supreme Court of the United States, together with their expenses therein, should be allowed out of the fund, and that two attorneys appearing and prosecuting the appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals and two other attorneys appearing and prosecuting the appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States should be considered as "chief counsel," within the stipulation. United States v. Stone, 187 Fed. 577, 580, 109 C. C. A. 267.

CHIEF DEPUTY

Acts 29th Gen. Assem. c. 27, § 2, providing that a sheriff shall appoint one or more deputies, from whom he shall require a bond, the appointment and bond to be approved by the officers having the approval of the principal's bond, and the salary of the chief deputy to be paid by the sheriff out of the compensation allowed him under the preceding section and of other deputies to be paid by the county, requires that there shall be a deputy, and, when only one deputy is provided for, he is necessarily the "chief deputy" whose compensation is to be paid by the sheriff. Bodenhofer v. Hogan, 120 N. W. 659, 661, 142 Iowa, 321, 134 Am. St. Rep. 418, 19 Ann. Cas. 1073.

Under Code Supp. 1907, § 510b, requiring the sheriff of each county to appoint a deputy, conferring power on the board of supervisors to fix a greater number, and providing that in all counties the "chief deputy" shall be paid by the sheriff, and all other deputies by the county, the one deputy whom the sheriff is required to appoint is the "chief deputy" for whose compensation the sheriff, and not the county, is liable, though such "chief deputy" is the only deputy. Culver v. Fayette County, 120 N. W. 627, 628, 142 Iowa, 269.

CHIEF OFFICER

A director, by or through the authority of his office, is not a "chief officer" or "managing agent" of a domestic corporation, within the meaning of section 5604, Comp. Laws 1909; hence service of summons on the corporation cannot be had by the delivery of a copy of the summons to such director. Oklahoma Fire Ins. Co. v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., 125 Pac. 734, 736, 34 Okl. 149.

A return on a summons against a corporation that the president was absent from the county, and that the officer served was "the secretary and treasurer, and chief officer in charge of the business," without reciting that the service was made at defendant's business office, as required by Rev. St. 1899, §§ 995, 996, when the president or other chief officer cannot be found, does not show that the writ was served in the manner prescribed by the statute, though it states that the secretary and treasurer is the chief officer, which is a mere conclusion of the sheriff; a "chief officer" of a corporation being one who has charge and control of its business, and not one who is charged with the performance of other and subordinate duties. Stanley v. Sedalia Transit Co., 117 S. W. 685, 686, 186 Mo. App. 388.

CHIEF OF DEPARTMENT

The officer of chief engineer is created by Ky. St. 1903, § 2810, empowering the board of public works in cities of the first class to appoint a chief engineer, and the officer is a "chief of a department" under the control of the board of public works and removable by it without notice and without cause. Parsons v. Breed, 104 S. W. 766, 768, 126 Ky. 759.

CHIEF OF POLICE

- As state officer, see State Officer.

The city of Janesville was incorporated under Laws 1882, p. 702, c. 221. Chapter 2, § 2, provided that one of the officers of the city should be a city marshal. Chapter 3, § 18, gave him all the powers of constables, and also required him to enforce all laws, ordinances, etc., and to perform such duties as the city council should direct. Chapter 12, § 46, provided that no general state law contravening the provisions of the charter should be construed as repealing or amending it, unless such purpose was expressly stated. St. 1898, § 959-40, provided that cities of the third class, however incorporated should have a board of fire and police commissioners, and section 959-41 requires the chief of police to be appointed by the board of police and fire commissioners, and prohibits any appointment on the police force without the board's approval. The general charter law, St. 1898, § 925-259, provides that the city marshal shall be known as such or as captain or chief of police in the discretion of the council, and shall command the police officers, etc., and in a number of cities of the third class operating under special charters the chief police officer is called the "city marshal" and in others "chief of police." Janesville is a city of the third class. Held, that the term "chief of police" in section 959-41 meant the head of the police force, and that section, by authorizing the board of police and fire commissioners to appoint a chief of police, took away the power of the city council to appoint a city marshal. State ex rel. Brown v. Appleby, 120 N. W. 861, 862, 139 Wis. 195.

Anderson's Law Dict. says that of the word "child" the primary definition is an infant, this in a popular sense; that the next allowable use in meaning is "one of tender years, a young person, a youth"; that the next allowable use of the word is as meaning "a legitimate descendant in the first degree," and the next is "a legitimate descendant in any degree; but in this case 'children' is the word used; offspring, issue, or descendants generally" the author commenting thus: "While the word 'children' will include grandchildren, the presumption of law is against such construction." Keeney v. McVoy, 108 S. W. 946, 954, 206 Mo. 42.

"The ordinary, popular, and legal sense of the word 'children' embraces only the first generation of offspring, and for it to be extended further there must either be something in the context showing that a larger signification was intended, or the person using it must know that there neither is, nor can afterwards be, any person to whom the term can be applied." Crawley v. Kendrick, 50 S. E. 41, 44, 122 Ga. 188, 2 Ann. Cas. 643.

The rule that the words "child" or "children" will be taken to refer to "issue" or descendants of the first degree, and to exclude descendants of a more remote degree, is not inflexible, as the term will be given a wider signification and include issue, however remote when reason demands it. Pfender v. Depew, 121 N. Y. Supp. 285, 286, 136 App. Div. 636.

Descendants

Descendant as including, see Descendant.

The term "children" includes only lineal descendants. Dungan v. Kline, 90 N. E. 938, 940, 81 Ohio St. 371 (citing Turley v. Turley, 11 Ohio St. 173).

Grandchildren

The word "children" does not include grandchildren. Simpson v. Adams, 106 S. W. 819, 821, 127 Ky. 709.

The word "children" in its natural and usual sense does not include a grandchild. Varick v. Smith, 61 Atl. 151, 154, 69 N. J. Eq. 505; Succession of Roder, 46 South. 697, 698, 121 La. 692, 15 Ann. Cas. 528 (citing Curtis v. Hewins, 52 Mass. [11 Metc.] 294).

Issue

The word "children" is often used interchangeably and as synonymous with issue. In re Duckett's Estate, 63 Atl. 830, 832, 214 Pa. 362.

As legal representative

See Legal Representative.

Legitimate children

The word "child," in the absence of any facts or circumstances indicating the contrary, means legitimate offspring. Tillery v. Tillery, 46 South. 582, 155 Ala. 495 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, pp. 1123, 1124). Landry v. American Creosote Works, 43 South. 1016, 1018, 119 La. 231, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 387 (quoting and adopting definition in Webster's Dict., and citing Enfant Natural, 12 Laurent [2d Ed.] § 456).

As person

See Person.

As personal representative

See Personal Representative.

As servant

See Servant.

Stepchildren

The primary sense of "children" is offspring, and that is the sense of relationship in which it is rightly used when the question of relationship is involved, and cannot be properly held to include stepchildren. Houston v. McKinney, 45 South. 480, 481, 54 Fla. 600.

CHILD-CHILDREN (In Conveyances)

Adopted children

The phrase "children and heirs of the body" of a certain person, when used to designate the grantees in a deed, was used in the sense of issue of the body, and did not include an adopted child of such person. Adams v. Merrill, 65 N. E. 114, 118, 45 Ind. App. 315.

After-born child

In litigation involving the estate of D.'s father, certain property was decreed to stand and remain as the sole and separate property of D.'s wife and their children, who were not parties to the suit, nor shown to be interested in the estate. This was construed as rather in the nature of a voluntary conveyance from D. of an interest in his father's estate than as a judgment between the parties determining disputed claims of right. Held that, although D. at that time had only one child, the use of the plural word "children" did not change the well-established rule of construction that a voluntary conveyance by a person to his wife and their children vests the property in the wife and the children then in being, and that after-born children take no interest therein. Dix v. Bigham, 53 S. E. 571, 572, 124 Ga. 1067.

Child by former marriage

The words "widow or infant child or children," as used in the statute providing that certain articles should be exempt from distribution and sale, and should be set apart to the "widow or infant child or children," referred to the infant child or children of the intestate, and did not include his wife's infant children by a former marriage. Howland's Adm'r v. Harr, 97 S. W. 358, 359, 123 Ky. 732.

Child by future marriage

A deed of property in trust for the wife of the grantor for life, with remainder to her "children," inures to the benefit of children of the grantee by a subsequent marriage to another person after divorce from the grantor. Pettit v. Norman, 82 S. W. 622, 623, 119 Ky. 777.

Children living only

A trust deed directing that on the death of the grantor's daughter the property shall go to her "children and their descendants, if any such survive her," is not void as contrary to the rule against "perpetuities"; the words "'children' and their descendants," employed in the deed, referring to those surviving at the time of the death of the daughter. Cribbs v. Walker, 85 S. W. 244, 247, 74 Ark. 104.

Grandchildren

The word "children" in a deed in the nature of a testamentary disposition of the grantor's property cannot be made to include grandchildren, unless there is something in the instrument showing such intention. Frosch v. Monday, 34 App. D. C. 338, 351. Land was conveyed to a father to hold in trust and pay the income to a daughter for life, and then to the daughter's daughter for life, after which the property was to be sold and the proceeds divided among four other designated children of the trustee and the children of the first life beneficiary representing the mother. It was further provided that in case of death of any of the four named children before that of the life beneficiaries the heirs of the deceased child should take the parent's share per stirpes. Held, that the word "children," in the provision of the deed giving the second life tenant's children a fifth of the fund, could not be regarded as extending to grandchildren. Train v. Davis, 98 N. Y. Supp. 816, 819, 49 Misc. Rep. 162.

Generally the word "children" does not include grandchildren, and the word is to be construed according to its ordinary and popular signification, designating the immediate offspring. As used in a deed conveying a life estate to a named person, with the remainder to a class designated as "such child or children, they being the heirs of her body that she (the life tenant) may leave in life," indicates plainly that the word "children" therein used includes only the first generation of offspring, and does not include grandchildren. Smith v. Smith, 61 S. E. 114, 130 Ga. 532, 124 Am. St. Rep. 177 (citing White v. Rowland, 67 Ga. 546, 44 Am. Rep. 731).

Heirs

"Children," as used in a granting clause, to a specified person and to his children and assigns forever means "heirs." Chew v. Kellar, 71 S. W. 172, 174, 171 Mo. 215 (citing Rines v. Mansfield, 9 S. W. 798, 96 Mo. 394).

Where it is apparent from a deed that the word "children" therein is used in the sense of heirs, the word "children" will be read as meaning "heirs" and construed as a word of limitation, and not of purchase. Virginia Iron, Coal & Coke Co. v. Dye, 142 S. W. 1057, 1058, 146 Ky. 519.

The word "children" is one of purchase. Occasionally it has been held the equivalent of the word "heirs," but only where it was the manifest intention of the grantor that it should be so construed. Brown v. Brown, 101 N. W. 81, 82, 125 Iowa, 218, 67 L. R. A. 629.

The word "children" in a deed will be read as meaning "heirs," and construed as a word of limitation, and not of purchase, where it is apparent from the deed that the word "children" is used in the sense of "heirs," as where they are used interchangeably. Kelly v. Parsons (Ky.) 127 S. W. 792, 793.

While the word "children" as a rule is used as a word of purchase, it is frequently used as a synonym for "heirs," and this may always be shown by or deduced from a consideration of the whole instrument. Wilson v. Shumate, 113 S. W. 851, 852, 130 Ky. 663.

Where a grantor conveyed certain land to the grantee and to the children of her body begotten, to have and to hold to the use of the grantee during her natural life, and after her death to the use of the children of her body begotten in fee tail forever, he clearly intended to create an estate tail, and must have used "children" in the sense of "heirs," and the grantee took an estate during her life, and her surviving daughter took the remainder in fee simple. Dick v. Ricker, 78 N. E. 823, 824, 222 Ill. 413, 113 Am. St. Rep. 426.

A deed from a husband to a wife, made in consideration of money which her father had advanced to her and which her husband had received, conveying both land and personal property, provided that the grantor "has given, granted, * * * and * * * does give, grant, * * * with general warranty title (for the sole and separate use and benefit of herself and her child or children, free from the control and debts of the party of the first part, with power in her to dispose of the same by will or otherwise), unto the party of the second part her child or children and assigns forever." Held that, as the entire consideration moved from her, the words "child or children and assigns forever" were used in the sense of heirs and assigns, and she took a fee simple thereunder. Hughes v. Saffell, 119 S. W. 804, 806, 134 Ky. 175.

The caption of a deed stated the grantee as "trustee for C. and her children." The granting and habendum clauses stated him as "trustee for C., her heirs and assigns." The warranty was to "C., her heirs and assigns." Held that, in view of the exclusive use of the words "heirs" and "assigns" in all the parts of the deed which conveyed or warranted the estate, the word "children" in the caption, which was merely descriptio personæ of the grantee, was used by the grantors in the sense of "heirs," and the deed conveyed an equitable fee-simple estate to C. Wilson v. Shumate, 113 S. W. 851, 853, 130 Ky. 663.

A deed recited that the grantor had sold to the grantee, "his children and assigns forever," all the grantor's interest in certain land. Held, that under the common law the deed conveyed a mere life estate rather than one in fee or fee tail, but in effect conveyed a fee under Rev. St. 1899, § 4590, dispensing with the necessity of using the word "heirs" or words of inheritance in the creation of a fee simple, and in view of the fact that there were no words signifying a life estate and remainder. Tygar v. Hartwell, 102 S. W. 989, 990, 204 Mo. 200.

Where the caption of a deed recited that it was made between the grantors and the grantee "and his children," and the habendum recited that the grantors would warrant and defend the title unto the grantee "and his children forever," but the granting clause recited a conveyance to the grantee without any words of inheritance or mention of the children, the term "and his children forever" should not be construed as heirs, and the deed conveyed to the grantee merely a life estate, with remainder to his children, born and to be born. Hall v. Wright, 87 S. W. 1129, 1133, 121 Ky. 16.

The words "children" and "issue" in a deed will not be read as meaning "heirs," where not to do so will carry into effect the lawful intention of the grantor that the grantee take only a life estate, and his children living at his death the remainder, while to do so would defeat such intention. Hopkins v. Hopkins, 122 S. W. 15, 17, 103 Tex. 15.

The caption of a deed made the grantee named party of the second part. The granting clause conveyed to the party of the second part "and his children." The habendum clause read "unto the party of the second part, his heirs," etc. Held, that the grantee acquired the fee-simple title, for the word "children" was used in the sense of "heirs." Kelly v. Parsons (Ky.) 127 S. W. 792, 793.

As words of purchase

The primary and technical meaning attached to the word "children" is one of purchase. Xander v. Easton Trust Co., 66 Atl. 759, 760, 217 Pa. 485.

The word "children" is ordinarily a word of purchase, and not a word of limitation, and is synonymous with "heirs of the body." Sechler v. Eshelman, 70 Atl. 910, 911, 222 Pa. 35.

"Children" is a word of purchase and not of limitation, except in cases where the context shows unmistakably that it was used in the sense of "heirs." Speight v. Askins, 102 S. W. 74, 75, 118 Tenn. 749.

The word "children" is not a word of limitation, excepting in very rare instances, as in the case of Dillard v. Yarboro, 57 S. E. 841, 77 S. C. 227, where it was held that under the circumstances therein mentioned the word "children" must be construed to mean "heirs of the body." Williams v. Gause, 65 S. E. 242, 243, 83 S. C. 265.

"It is true that prima facie 'children' is a word of purchase, and not of limitation, and, uncontrolled by the context, must be so construed. But where it is clear that it is used in the sense of 'heirs,' or 'heirs of the body,' it must be so construed." Hastings v. Engle, 66 Atl. 761, 762, 217 Pa. 419.

In a trust deed providing that the income of land should be paid for the maintenance of the grantor's wife and children during her life, and that on her death the trustee should convey the land to the children and heirs of the wife, the word "children" was the controlling word, and it being the word of purchase, and not of limitation, the rule in Shelley's Case did not apply, and the wife took only a life interest. Cowell v. Hicks (N. J.) 30 Atl. 1091.

A conditional conveyance of land to the grantee "during her natural life, and at her death to her children or to their lineal descendants," and providing that, if the conditions are performed, at the death of the grantee the title was to vest absolutely in "the lineal descendants of the grantee," did not vest a fee in such grantee under the rule in Shelley's Case, since the word "children" was a word of purchase, and not of limitation, and it being the grantor's manifest intent to convey only a life estate, such word would not be construed as equivalent to the word "heirs." Brown v. Brown, 101 N. W. 81, 82, 125 Iowa, 218, 67 L. R. A. 629.

A deed conveying to B. certain described premises, to have and to hold said premises to B. "and his children," and containing a general warranty, gives B. a life estate, with remainder to his children, born and to be born; the word "children" being a word of purchase, and not of limitation. Brumley v. Brumley, 89 S. W. 182, 183, 28 Ky. Law Rep. 231.

The distinction between a grant to A. for life and remainder to her "heirs" and a grant to A. for life with remainder to her "children" is marked in the application of the rule in Shelley's Case. Tiffany, in his work on the Modern Law of Real Property (paragraph 25), in substance says that a deed to A. and his children cannot, at common law, convey an estate tail; and the word "children" can have no effect as a word of limitation defining the interest A. is to take, and must take effect, if at all, as a word of purchase, generally giving the children of A. living at the time of the grant a joint estate with A. in the property; but generally a devise to A. and his children, while there is a presumption that the word "children" is one of purchase, and not of limitation, it is not a conclusive presumption, depending upon whether the context shows that the word was used in the sense of heirs of the body. He furthermore says that in some cases the word "children" in a conveyance to A. and his children is construed as a word of purchase, giving the children a remainder, and not joint interests with A. But he further says: "By the weight of authority, such a conveyance, without any indication of an intention to the contrary, gives joint interests to A. and the children then living." So that in his view the question is more or less controlled by the intention of the grantor, to be gathered from the instrument. Where a deed to a daughter contains a provision in the habendum clause that it is expressly agreed by the grantee in accepting this deed that she will not sell, convey, or incumber, or in any manner dispose of the same, but to retain the same for the use of herself and "her children" forever, the term "her children" is descriptio personæ, and as such may at once indicate the objects and limit the scope of the gift, and become of purchase. Hubbird v. Goin, 137 Fed. 822, 837, 70 C. C. A. 320.

A deed to one and his "children," to have and to hold to him and his children, conveys to him a fee simple, and not merely an estate for life. Viley v. Frankfort & O. Ry. (Ky.) 51 S. W. 173, 174.

Where a deed created a trust for the benefit of a wife for life with a fee to her children and heirs of her body on her death, the word "children" is a word of limitation; and, on the death of the husband, the wife took an estate tail, which, by the act of 1855 (P. L. 368), was enlarged into an estate in fee simple. Wilson v. Hellman, 68 Atl. 674, 675, 219 Pa. 237.

CHILD—CHILDREN (In Criminal Law)

As minor child

The statute making the assault of a "child" an aggravated assault, as applied to a male, means one not above the age of 14 years. Thompson v. State, 80 S. W. 623, 624, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 412.

Under the statute making an assault upon a child an aggravated one, boys over 14 and girls over 12 are not children. Wilman v. State, 141 S. W. 110, 111, 63 Tex. Cr. R. 623.

Juvenile courts have no jurisdiction over minors, or of offenses against minors, over 17 years of age. A minor over the age of 17 years is not considered a "child" in the sense of section 9, Act 83 of 1908, which defines such children as those "17 years of age and under." State v. Lanassa, 51 South, 688, 125 La. 687.

As quick child

The word "child," as used in Pen. Code 1895, § 81, declaring that any person who shall administer to any woman pregnant with a child any medicine, etc., with intent to destroy such child, shall be punished, etc., means an unborn child, so far developed as to be ordinarily quick, so far developed as to move or stir in the mother's womb. Sullivan v. State, 48 S. E. 949, 950, 121 Ga. 183; Barrow v. State, 48 S. E. 950, 951, 121 Ga. 187.

As referring to relationship

An accusation charging the abandonment of a child, as punishable under the terms of Pen. Code 1895, § 114, is sufficient, if the name of the accused denotes a person of the masculine gender, and if the child alleged to have been abandoned is described as his child. In the absence of proof to the contrary, the inference is authorized that a child described in relation to a named man as his child, is not merely a child committed to his custody, but is the "offspring" of his body and lawfully begotten. Rimes v. State, 67 S. E. 223, 7 Ga. App. 556.

As under age of puberty

A female ceases to be a "child" and becomes a woman at the age of puberty within the meaning of the statute defining rape. Blackburn v. State, 22 Ohio St. 102, 110.

A child is a young person at any age less than maturity, but most commonly one between infancy and youth, and in laws for the protection of children it means generally the young under the age of puberty, which has never been fixed, either by the laws of nature or man, and depends upon sex, climate, and race. A girl 14 years of age is presumptively a child within Pen. Code 1895, § 708, providing punishment for cruelty to children. Stone v. State, 57 S. E. 992, 1 Ga. App. 292 (citing Stand. Dict. and Black's Law Dict.).

Legitimate children

An illegitimate daughter is a child within Ky. St. § 1219 (Russell's St. § 3681), providing punishment for whoever shall have carnal intercourse with his or her child, etc. Cecil v. Commonwealth, 131 S. W. 781, 782, 140 Ky. 717, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 501.

CHILD—CHILDREN (In Insurance)

Children living only

While a benefit certificate speaks from the death of the insured, it is not a testamentary disposition, since the proceeds do not become a part of the estate of insured and are not subjected to the payment of debts or costs of administration, so that the statute of descent does not apply thereto and require the children of a child of the insured, who predeceased him and who was a beneficiary to be made parties to an action on the policy. Martin v. Modern Woodmen of America, 97 N. E. 693, 694, 253 Ill. 400, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 299.

A beneficiary is vested with no right in an insurance certificate which will pass by descent upon his demise before the insured, so that, though an insurance policy is payable to the wife and "children" of the insured, the death of one of the children before the death of the deceased does not render the children of that child necessary parties to an action on the policy. Martin v. Modern Woodmen of America, 97 N. E. 693, 694, 253 Ill. 400, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 299.

Grandchildren

The word "children," in an insurance policy, ordinarily means a descendant of the first degree, and is never extended to include grandchildren, except where there is something in the policy showing an intention to so extend its meaning, or where it is necessary to render the instrument effective. Martin v. Modern Woodmen of America, 97

N. E. 693, 694, 253 Ill. 400, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 299.

The term "children" expresses the immediate offspring of parents, and does not include grandchildren. Where the beneficiaries of an insurance policy were designated as the surviving "children" of the insured and others, such designation did not include the grandchildren. Succession of Roder, 46 South. 697, 698, 121 La. 602, 15 Ann. Cas. 528 (citing Turner v. Ivie, 52 Tenn. [5 Heisk.] 223, 230; Gadsden v. Poang [S. O.] 2 Bay, 293, 305).

CHILD—CHILDREN (In Statutes)

The word "child," as used in Ann. Code 1892, § 1545, providing for the descent of property between husband and wife, means such child as shall have a right under the law to share in the estate of his intestate father, and does not include children who have been portioned off and have released their interest in the estate. Norfleet v. Callicott, 43 South. 616, 618, 90 Miss. 221.

B. & C. Comp. § 5216, permits females 15 years old to marry, and section 5228 prohibits issuance of a marriage license without the parent's consent if the female is under 18. The juvenile act provides that it shall apply only to children under 18, and makes it a misdemeanor to endeavor to induce a child to do anything tending to cause him to become delinquent. Held that, on marriage of a child between 15 and 18 years of age with parental consent, he loses his legal status as a "child" within the juvenile act. State v. Eisen, 99 Pac. 282, 283, 53 Or. 297.

Adopted children

P. S. 2936, subd. 1, provides that the estate of an intestate shall descend in equal shares to his "children," or the legal representatives of deceased children, and subdivision 2 provides that, if the deceased is a married person and leaves no "issue," the surviving husband or wife, if such survivor does not take dower or testamentary provision, shall be entitled to one-half of the estate of deceased forever if it does not exceed $2,000, otherwise the $2,000 and one-half of the remainder, etc. Held, that the word "children," as used in subdivision 1, and the word "issue," in subdivision 2, were not limited to natural children, but included as well children by adoption. In re Walworth's Estate, 82 Atl. 7, 12, 85 Vt. 322, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 849.

The heirs of an adopted child will inherit, through it, a share of the estate of the deceased adopting parent; the statute relating to descents, in the use of the word "children," not limiting the right of inheritance to children by blood. Gray v. Holmes, 45 Pac. 596, 598, 57 Kan. 217; Power v. Haffey, 85 Ky. 671, 4 S. W. 683.

Adults

An "adult" is not a "child" entitled to bring an action for wrongful death, under Civ. Code § 3828, nor is he a "child" entitled to share in the distribution of the proceeds of such action, under section 3829. Griffith v. Griffith, 57 S. E. 698, 699, 128 Ga. 371.

Code 1886, § 2367, providing for the adoption of children, uses the word "child" in the sense of relationship, and not of infancy; and hence one 26 years of age is subject to adoption. Sheffield v. Franklin, 44 South. 373, 374, 151 Ala. 492, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 884, 125 Am. St. Rep. 37, 15 Ann. Cas. 90.

After-born child

"The word 'children' used in the statute as to descent and distribution, includes a posthumous child. Such child is entitled to share equally with other children of the deceased." State ex rel. Niece v. Soale, 74 N. E. 1111-1113, 36 Ind. App. 73 (quoting and approving Nelson v. Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co., 14 S. W. 1021, 78 Tex. 625, 11 L. R. A. 691, 22 Am. St. Rep. 89).

Child en ventre sa mere

In a statute providing that if any person shall administer to any woman pregnant with child any drug or shall use any instruments, with intent to destroy the child, such person, shall, in case the death of such child or mother be thereby produced, be guilty of manslaughter, the term "in case of the death of such child," which constitutes the consummation of the crime, equally with the death of the mother, would seem to mean the death of the fetus either before or after quickening. State v. Atwood, 102 Pac. 295, 297, 54 Ore. 526.

Children living

Statute of Descent (Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 39) § 11, which provides that the issue of a devisee or legatee who has predeceased the testator shall be entitled to the estate of such devisee or legatee, but that, in case there is no issue, the estate which would have passed shall be considered intestate property, cannot be invoked to determine whether or not children of a child of an insured, who was a beneficiary under the policy and who predeceased the insured, need be made parties in an action on the policy, since under such a construction the shares of other children who were beneficiaries, who died childless, would by the terms of the statute, be intestate property. Martin v. Modern Woodmen of America, 97 N. E. 693, 694, 253 Ill. 400, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 299.

Collateral heirs

A son-in-law is not a "child," within Laws 1896, c. 545, §§ 60, 62, providing that an application to adjudge a person a lunatic may be made by the child of the alleged lunatic, and a son-in-law has no more authority to make the petition than a stranger. Washer v. Slater, 73 N. Y. Supp. 425, 427, 67 App. Div. 385.

Under the Kansas statute relating to descent (Gen. St. 1889, c. 83, §§ 20, 21, 29), which by Act Cong. Feb. 8, 1887 (24 Stat. 389, c. 19), is made to govern descent of lands allotted in severalty to the members of certain tribes in Indian territory, providing that where an intestate leaves neither husband, wife, nor issue, his estate shall go to his parents, and if they are dead it shall be disposed of in the same manner as if they or either of them had outlived intestate and died in the ownership and possession of the portion thus falling to their share, and that "children of the half blood shall inherit equally with children of the whole blood," the word "children" will be construed as meaning "kindred." Finley v. Abner, 129 Fed. 734, 736, 64 C. C. A. 262.

Ky. St. § 2071, provides that an adopted child shall be capable of inheriting as though he were the child of the petitioner. Section 1393, subsec. 1, provides that when a person dies intestate his real estate descends, first, to his "children" and their descendants. Section 1401 of the same chapter, limiting section 1393, provides that if an infant having title to real estate derived by gift, devise, or descent from one of its parents dies without issue such estate shall descend to that "parent" and his or her "kindred," and, if none, then to the other parent and his or her kindred. And section 460 declares that the common-law rule that statutes in derogation thereof should be strictly construed does not apply to such revision, but that its provisions are to be liberally construed with a view to promote its object. Held, that the purpose of the limitation was to prevent the estate of the parent from being distributed to strangers to his blood; that the word "kindred" in section 1393 was not necessarily confined to blood relations, but might include a relation in law, as an adopted child, and that the word "children" in subsection 1 was not necessarily confined to children born in lawful wedlock, but might include children by adoption; that within section 1401 the foster parent of an adopted child was a "parent"; and hence that an adopted child inheriting from his parent was on the same footing as a natural child, so that where he inherited from his foster father, and then died in infancy without issue, the estate went back to the father's kindred, to the exclusion of his natural mother. Lanferman v. Vanzile, 150 S. W. 1008, 1011, 150 Ky. 751.

Grandchildren and other descendants

The word "children," in either the popular or the technical sense, does not include grandchildren, and where used in a statute it must be construed to mean only descendants of the first degree, unless it is apparent from the context that a broader meaning was intended. Starrett v. McKim, 119 S. W. 824, 90 Ark. 520.

Under Const. art. 16, § 52, securing homestead rights to minor children after the death of their parents, the word "children" does not include grandchildren. Clements v. Maury, 110 S. W. 185, 188, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 158.

Grandchildren are not children, within Rev. St. 1879, art. 1653, declaring that community property goes to the surviving spouse, if the deceased spouse had no "child or children." Ross v. Martin, 140 S. W. 432, 433, 104 Tex. 558.

The word "children," in Kirby's Dig. § 2709, providing that, where a husband dies leaving a widow and no children, the widow shall be endowed in fee simple with a half of the real estate as against collateral heirs, etc., includes descendants in any degree, and the widow of a husband leaving grandchildren is not entitled to a half of the real estate of the husband's lands. Starrett v. McKim, 119 S. W. 824, 825, 90 Ark. 520.

Statute of Descent (Hurd's Rev. St. 1901, c. 39), § 11, providing that whenever a devisee or legatee in any will being a child or grandchild of the testator shall predecease the testator and no provision shall be made for such contingency the issue of such devisee or legatee shall take such estate devised or bequeathed as the devisee or legatee would have taken had he survived the testator, applies to a devise to a class, as well as to devise in name, so that, where one of testator's sons died before testator, the son's children were entitled to his share under a provision of the will devising the remainder of the property to testator's "children" as their absolute property in fee simple to be equally divided between them. Rudolph v. Rudolph, 69 N. E. 834, 837, 207 Ill. 266, 99 Am. St. Rep. 211.

The right of action against a person who causes damage to another "in case of death shall survive in favor of the minor children" of the deceased. Act No. 71, p. 94, of 1884. Minor grandchildren, under the statute, cannot recover damages for personal injuries to their grandfather, resulting in his death. Children are descendants in the first degree. Grandchildren are descendants in the second degree. "Children," under the codal definition, may include "grandchildren." But "minor" children do not include grandchildren who are minors, or those who are of age, or any other descendants more remote. Walker v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co., 34 South. 749, 750, 110 La. 718.

The words "minor children" used in a statute providing for the setting apart of a homestead to the widow or minor children, does not include grandchildren; the term "children" including grandchildren only when it is used in the sense of issue or descendants. Wilkins v. Briggs, 107 S. W. 135, 140, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 596 (citing 7 Cyc. p. 126).

Ordinarily "children" include only descendants of the first degree and not descendants of children, and the rule is different where the intention to use the word in a broader sense and more extended significance appears from the context of the instrument in which it is employed, where the word appears to have been employed as nomen collectivum, or synonymous with a word of larger import, such as "issue," or "descendants," or where such interpretation is required by reason and justice. Applying these rules to the construction of Code 1896, § 1462, providing that personality of an intestate is to be distributed in the same manner as his real estate and according to the same rules, except that the widow if there are no "children" is entitled to all, or if but one child, one-half, etc., the words "child" and "children" mean the child or children represented in the distribution of the estate, whether living or represented by descendants. Phillips v. Lawing, 43 South. 494, 495, 150 Ala. 186 (citing 7 Cyc. pp. 126, 127).

The word "children," in Rev. St. 1899, § 2944, providing that, where a husband shall die leaving a "child or children" or other descendants, the widow, if she has a "child or children," by such husband living, may elect to take a child's share in the real estate of the husband, when considered in connection with section 4160, requiring words of statutes to be taken in their ordinary sense, etc., and sections 2933, 2946, 2939-2941, and 2944, relating to dower, includes grandchildren, and the widow of one dying seised of land leaving a child of a deceased child of the widow and decedent is entitled to take a child's share. Keeney v. McVoy, 103 S. W. 946-955, 206 Mo. 42.

The common-law rule that the word "children" does not include grandchildren has been modified in Kentucky by statute. Ky. St. § 2064, provides: "A devise to children embraces grandchildren when there are no children, and no other construction will give effect to the devise." This provision is a part of the statute abrogating the common-law rule as to survivorship among devisees, and applies to all instruments in the nature of a testamentary disposition. Harrington v. Gibson, 60 S. W. 915, 916, 109 Ky. 752.

Issue

Under Rev. St. 1871, c. 67, relating to the adoption of children, the term "child" has a broader significance than issue, and an adopted child must be regarded as the child of the adopting parents, not by birth, but by law, and is entitled to the proceeds of a policy of insurance payable to the assured, his executors, administrators, or assigns, for the benefit of his widow; if not, otherwise for the benefit of his surviving children. Virgin v. Marwick, 55 Atl. 520, 521, 97 Me. 578.

Legitimate children

The statute giving a right of action for the death of a mother to her children embraces her illegitimate children. Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Walker, 106 S. W. 705, 706, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 52.

It is a rule of construction that the word "child," or "children," or any other terms of kindred, when used in a statute, mean legitimate children or kindred only. Jackson v. Hocke, 84 N. E. 830, 831, 171 Ind. 371.

"It is a well-recognized rule of construction that prima facie the word 'child' or 'children,' when used in a statute, means legitimate child or children, and that bastards are not within the meaning of the terms; and, therefore, where parents are given the right of action for the death of a child, such action cannot be maintained by a parent for the death of a bastard." McDonald v. Southern Ry., 51 S. E. 138, 139, 71 S. E. 352, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 640, 110 Am. Rep. 576 (quoting and adopting definition in 13 Cyc. p. 337).

Acts 1884, p. 94, No. 71, authorizing an action by a parent for the death of his child, gives a right to sue for damages to the mother of a legitimate child only. Lynch v. Knoop, 43 South. 252, 118 La. 611, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 480, 118 Am. St. Rep. 391, 10 Ann. Cas. 807.

Under 1 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4624, providing that an illegitimate child shall be an heir to the person acknowledging himself as his father in writing before a competent witness, but that he cannot claim, as representing his father, any part of the estate of the father's kindred, unless his parents intermarry, and his father acknowledge him and adopt him into his family, such illegitimate, being so acknowledged, is entitled to an allowance from his father's estate as his "child" under section 6219, providing that when a person shall die leaving a widow and a minor child or children, they shall be entitled to remain in possession of the homestead, and if the head of the family in his lifetime has not complied with the provisions of the law relative to the acquisition of a homestead, the widow, child, or children may comply with such provisions, and shall be entitled on such compliance to a homestead as provided by law for the head of the family, and that the same shall be set aside for the use of the widow, child, or children, and shall be exempt from all claims for the payment of any debt, and shall be for the use and support of such widow, child, or children, and shall not be assets in the hands of the administrator, though his parents did not intermarry. In re Gorkow's Estate, 56 Pac. 385, 388, 20 Wash. 563.

Under Shannon's Code, § 4163, providing that an intestate's lands shall descend equally to all the sons and daughters, and that if an intestate dies "without issue" his lands shall descend equally to his brothers and sisters of the whole or half blood, born before his death, or afterwards, construed with section 5411, declaring that an adopted "child" shall have all the privileges of a legitimate child, with capacity to inherit and succeed to the estate as the applicant's heir or next of kin, a duly adopted child, left by a nonresident intestate, owning land in this state, under the rule of comity has the status of a legitimate "child" in this state to the extent that the foreign adoption law is similar to the local law, and is capable of succession to real property, so that his foster parent does not die without issue. Finley v. Brown, 123 S. W. 359, 363, 122 Tenn. 316, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1285.

Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 2046, requiring the setting aside for the widow and minor "children" and unmarried daughters all exempt property, etc., does not secure to an unmarried illegitimate daughter of decedent a right to occupy the homestead; the word "children" referring alone to legitimate children. Hayworth v. Williams, 116 S. W. 43, 45, 102 Tex. 308.

The words "child," "children," "brother," or "sister," in Burns' Ann. St. 1908, §§ 2992, 2993, 2996, relating to descent, mean legitimates only, so that on the death of an intestate leaving neither children nor other descendants, nor husband, father, or mother, but a brother of the full blood, and the descendants of two illegitimate half-brothers, the surviving brother took the entire estate. Truelove v. Truelove, 86 N. E. 1018, 1020, 172 Ind. 441, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 220, 139 Am. St. Rep. 404.

Act Cong. June 28, 1898, c. 517, § 16, 30 Stat. 501, authorizing any citizen of the Five Civilized Tribes to hold possession of such amount of agricultural or grazing land as would be his just and reasonable share of the lands of his nation or tribe, and to which his wife and minor children were entitled, and to continue to use and occupy the same and receive the rents until allotment to him, by the word "children" means legitimate children alone, and does not authorize any such citizen to hold lands as a prospective allotment for an illegitimate child. Walker v. Roberson, 97 Pac. 609, 611, 21 Okl. 894.

The word "children," as used in Code 1907, § 3754, prescribing the descent and distribution of real and personal property, means legitimate children only having inheritable blood. Williams v. Witherspoon, 55 South. 132, 133, 171 Ala. 559.

"Child of the person killed," as used in the civil damage act of 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93, meant legitimate child only. Bowerman v. Lackawanna Min. Co., 71 S. W. 1062, 1063, 98 Mo. App. 308.

Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 93, § 133, provides that the illegitimate child or children of any female may take real or personal estate from their mother as if born in lawful wedlock. Article 46, § 30, declares that where an illegitimate child shall die, leaving no descendants or brothers or sisters, or the descendants of such brothers and sisters, then the mother shall inherit, and, if she be dead, the mother's heirs at law shall inherit the estate of such child as if such child had been born in lawful wedlock. Article 46, § 27, provides that, if any father or mother entitled to take by inheritance shall be dead, the child or children of such father or mother shall take by representation. Held, that an illegitimate child was the "child" of its mother within section 27, and hence, where the mother of an illegitimate child was dead, he was entitled to inherit as an heir of the mother's deceased sister. Barron v. Zimmerman, 83 Atl. 258, 117 Md. 296.

The word "children," when used in a statute, means "legitimate children," unless the contrary be expressed. Under Merrick's Rev. Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 2315, giving the surviving father and mother, or either of them, an action for the death of a minor child, and article 3556, cl. 8, providing that natural children, though recognized, make no part of the children properly so called, unless legitimized, neither the mother nor administrator of a bastard not legitimized can maintain an action for his death. Runt v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 41 South. 1, 88 Miss. 575.

"The decisions are unanimous that, in the absence of statutory provisions modifying the common law with respect to illegitimate children, the words 'issue,' 'child,' or 'children,' found in a will or statute, whether qualified by the word 'lawful' or not, are to be construed as only those who are legitimate, and if others are intended this must be deduced from the language employed, without resort to extrinsic facts. This is on the ground that at the common law a bastard child had no inheritable blood, was kin to no one, could have no ancestor, nor be an heir, and could have no heirs, save those of his own body. But this rule has been greatly modified by the enactment of statutes ameliorating his condition, and in different degrees conferring the rights of legitimate children. The bastard was nullius filius mainly in the matter of inheritance. In many other respects his status was the same as others. He could not marry within the levitical degrees, and was held to be within the act requiring the consent thereto of parent or guardian. His settlement was that of his mother." In a will providing for the distribution of an income to the lawful issue of testator's children, the words "lawful issue" mean children, and include only the lawful children of testator's children, and an illegitimate child would not share in the income, although recognized by its father. Brisbin v. Huntington, 108 N. W. 144, 147, 128 Iowa, 166, 5 Ann. Cas. 931.

As minor child

The rights of action given by B. & C. Comp. St. § 34, to a father for the injury or death of a child, is limited in its scope of operation to the minority of such child; that is to say, that the term "child" is used as indicative of a minor, and not with reference to one who has attained to the age of majority. Schleiger v. Northern Terminal Co., 72 Pac. 324, 326, 43 Or. 4.

Negro child

The word "children," in the statutes providing for the education of the "children" within the territory, includes colored children, as well as white. School Dist. No. 71, Oklahoma County, v. Overholser, 87 P. 665, 667, 17 Okl. 147.

As referring to relationship

Under the statute casting the descent of property, using the word "children" and providing that children of half blood shall inherit equally with those of the whole blood, the relationship of parent and child determines the right of inheritance, and the divorce of the parents does not affect this relationship. No matter who may have the child for purposes of nurture, it is still the child of its father, though he has been deprived of its custody by a decree of divorce. McIntyre v. Gelvin, 95 Pac. 389, 390, 77 Kan. 779.

CHILD—CHILDREN (In Wills)

The word "children" must be read in its ordinary sense, unless there be some word or expression within the will to show that testator used it in a broader sense. Where testator gave one-fifth of his estate in trust for his brother, with a provision that on the brother's death the property should be divided among the brother's children or grandchildren, but, if he left neither, then to the children of testator's sisters, "the child or children of each to take an equal portion" thereof, the gift in remainder was to the children of each sister as a class by representation. In re Keogh, 98 N. Y. Supp. 433, 435, 112 App. Div. 414.

Where testator devises stock in trust for his daughter, one of the trustees being also an executor, and by another item directed that the executors should hold it, together with other stock, the dividends of which are disposed of by the will, until a designated time, in the meantime paying the dividends and profits to each of said "legatees," and provides that, if any of the legatees die before such time without children, the dividends so bequeathed to each legatee, as well as the stock, shall be distributed among his surviving children, the words "legatees" and "children" are used interchangeably, and as to that item of the will synonymously, so that the dividends are payable directly to the beneficiary of the trust, and not to the executors as trustees. Lamar v. Harris, 48 S. E. 932, 933, 121 Ga. 285.

The word "child" includes all the immediate offspring, male and female, of the parents. Where testator devised his real estate to his four sons for life, subject to his wife's dower, giving each an undivided one-fourth, and the remainder in fee to their respective sons, and by his codicil providing that, as his second son had died leaving a sufficient estate for his children, he revoked the devise made to him and his children, and devised his share to his three surviving sons and their children for the like estate mentioned in the will. The codicil revoked the devise of the remainder to the grandsons of the testator, and vested it in the children of the three sons named in the codicil. In re Tibby's Estate, 56 Atl. 1126, 1127, 207 Pa. 643.

A husband of a deceased child cannot claim a share of testator's property under a clause of the will providing for an equal division of his property among all his "children." Nelson v. Nelson (Ind.) 72 N. E. 482, 485.

"Where there are no immediate children to whom the term can apply, or where it is manifest from other words in the will that it was used in the broad sense of issue or descendants, it may be construed to include grandchildren, stepchildren, illegitimate children, or descendants, however remote." In re Sander's Estate, 105 N. W. 1064, 1066, 126 Wis. 660, 5 Ann. Cas. 508 (quoting and adopting definition in Re Scholl's Will, 76 N. W. 616, 100 Wis. 650).

A child not of testator's blood, whom he designated in his will as "an adopted daughter" and "my daughter," was not entitled to take with children of testator's blood under a direction in a codicil dividing certain money in a bank among all "his children." In re Hughes' Estate, 73 Atl. 1061, 225 Pa. 79.

Adopted children

Where, when testator made his will and died, his granddaughter was a young unmarried woman, one afterwards adopted by her was not her child, within the will giving to the granddaughter a life estate, and providing that on her death the property should be divided among her "children" and the heirs of any of her children who should have died, and empowering her, in case she left no children or descendants of children, to dispose of the property by will, and providing that if she died childless, or having no heirs by right of representation, and making no will, the remainder should go to testator's nephew by marriage. Lichter v. Thiers, 121 N. W. 153, 156, 157, 139 Wis. 481.

A will created a trust fund for the benefit of testator's widow, and directed that at her death it should be divided among his sons, and that, if any of them should die before the widow, his share should go to his children, if any; otherwise to testator's other children. One of testator's sons, who died before the widow, had no children when the will was made, but then occupied the relation of stepfather to four children, one of whom he afterward adopted. Laws 1878, c. 830, as amended by Laws 1887, c. 703, in force when the will was made, provided that an adopted child should not sustain the legal relation of child to the adopting parent with respect to the passing of property dependent upon the person adopting dying without heirs. Held, that the adopted stepchild was not included under the designation "children" in the provision that the share of any child dying before the widow should go to his children. In re Hopkins, 92 N. Y. Supp. 463, 102 App. Div. 458 (citing Wetmore v. Parker, 52 N. Y. 450, 463; Rogers v. Rogers, 47 N. E. 452, 153 N. Y. 343).

Pub. St. 1882, c. 164, § 7, declares that an adopted child shall be deemed, for the purposes of inheritance, and all other legal consequences of the natural relation of parent and child, the child of the parents by adoption, as if he had been born in lawful wedlock, except that he shall be incapable of taking property expressly limited to the bodies of his adopted parents, or property from the lineal or collateral kindred of such parents, by the right of representation. Held, that where testator created a trust for the benefit of his two sons, the income to be used for the support of them and their families and in the event of their decease, leaving lawful issue, for the support of such issue until the termination of the trust, and on the death of both of the sons to distribute one-half of the trust res to the "children then living" of each, etc., an adopted child of one of the sons took the same interest she would have taken as if she were a child of his body. In re Olney, 63 Atl. 956, 957, 27 R. I. 495.

Where one makes provision for his own "child or children," by that designation, he should be held to have included an adopted child, since he is under obligation to make provision for such child; but when in a will provision is made for "a child or children" of some other person than the testator, an adopted child is not included, unless other language in the will makes it clear that he was intended to be included. Hence where a testator devises property to his own child by blood, and then over to the child or children of that child, if any, otherwise to others of the testator's blood, a child of the latter by legal adoption only is not included and takes nothing under the will, even though adopted before the making of the will. In re Woodcock, 68 Atl. 821, 822, 103 Me. 214, 125 Am. St. Rep. 291.

Under a will describing a legatee as testator's nephew, and referring to his own children as his "oldest daughter" and his "second daughter," and directing that after the death of his wife the estate should be equally divided between "our children or their heirs," such nephew is not entitled to share in the residuary estate, though from the time he was 11 years old he had been treated as an adopted child, though never formally adopted. Hamlin v. Stevens, 69 N. E. 118, 119, 177 N. Y. 39.

An adopted child or a beneficiary under a will does not take under a provision in the will giving the income of a certain sum to the beneficiary for life, and upon his death "leaving a child or children" surviving giving the principal to "such child or children," Laws 1896, c. 272, providing that "as respects the passing and limitation over of real or personal property dependent under the provisions of any instrument on the foster parent dying without heirs, the minor is not deemed the child of the foster parent so as to defeat the rights of remaindermen." The phrase also "in common parlance imports a child or children born in lawful wedlock, and not a child or children whose filial relation arises solely out of an adoption." In re Leask, 90 N. E. 652, 654, 197 N. Y. 193, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1158, 184 Am. St. Rep. 866, 18 Ann. Cas. 516.

After-born children

Where a testator's daughter has one child living at the date of the will that the will makes a devise to "her child or children" does not indicate that children born after testator's death are included in the devise. Toher v. Crounse, 107 N. Y. Supp. 990, 997, 57 Misc. Rep. 252.

Where a legacy is given to a class as the "children" of a person, and no period is fixed for the distribution of the legacy, it is to be considered as due at the testator's death, and none but children born or begotten previously to that time are entitled to share in it. Chasmar v. Bucken, 37 N. J. Eq. 415, 418.

"Children," as ordinarily used in devises, is a word of personal description, and, so far as designation goes, differs in no way from the mention of individuals by name. It is not a word of limitation, but is employed in contradistinction to "issue" and "heirs of the body," and a devise to testator's son by name and to his children gives a life estate to the son and an estate in remainder to his children living at testator's death, subject to be opened to let in after-born children. Forest Oil Co. v. Crawford, 77 Fed. 106, 109, 23 C. C. A. 55.

Where property was devised to one for life, with remainder to her children, the remainder vested in the children as a class on the death of the testator, the class being subject to open on the birth of another child, the word "children" being sufficient to include those born after the death of the testator, as well as those then living. May v. Walter's Ex'rs (Ky.) 97 S. W. 423, 425.

Children living

A bequest to B. and her children is a bequest to a class consisting of B. and such of her children as survive the testator. Davis v. Sanders, 51 S. E. 298, 299, 123 Ga. 177.

If there be any question that be regarded as incontrovertibly settled in the construction in the matter of wills or testamentary papers, it is that an immediate gift to children simpliciter, without additional description, means a gift to the children in existence at the death of the testator, provided there be children then in existence to take. The word "heirs" may be construed in a will, to arrive at the intention of the testator, as descriptive of a class of beneficiaries and in the sense of the word "children"; the two words being used synonymously by those unlearned in the law. Wyman v. Johnson, 59 S. W. 250, 252, 68 Ark. 326.

The expression "until the youngest of the children shall attain the age of 25 years," in a will devising property in trust until the youngest of several grandchildren shall become 25 years old, when they shall take the property in fee simple, limits the trust to the time when the youngest of the grandchildren living at testator's death shall become 25 years old or die before reaching that age, and the will is not void as offending the statute of perpetuities. Coston v. Coston, 103 N. Y. Supp. 307, 308, 118 App. Div. 1.

The words children "then living," or "if they shall leave such issue," or those "then living," or the "survivors," indicate an intention to limit the gift to those living at a certain time, but such words are not construed to limit the remainder of such children only as should survive the life tenant; the rule being that where the estate is given to the life tenant, with remainder to the children of the life tenant, the estate vests at once on the birth of each child, subject to letting in after-born children, and this without regard to the question whether or not the child survives the life tenant. In re Wetherill's Estate, 63 Atl. 406, 407, 214 Pa. 150.

Where by the twelfth clause of his will testator gave a sixth of the residue of his estate to trustees, the net income to be paid a daughter for life, and on her death leaving "children" to be paid to them equally during their lives, and as they should successively die the property to be distributed among their lineal descendants according to the right of representation, but if she died without "children or lineal descendants," the property to go to his surviving children, one part in fee to two sons, one part to trustees for another son, and one part to trustees for each of his surviving daughters, and a sixth part of the residue was given to each of his other children, like trusts being created for his two other daughters, a similar trust for a son, and the two other sons receiving their shares in fee, and another clause provided that the daughters could take no part in fee, except certain legacies, and that at the death of the last survivor the whole of the legacies in trust to them, except the parts which their children or lineal descendants might be entitled to, should be divided between the sons, the words "children" and "children or lineal descendants" as used in the twelfth clause, relate to a definite failure of issue at the daughter's death, creating in her only a life estate, and not to an indefinite failure of issue, so as to create in her an estate tail, and hence on her death without issue the two sons took their shares in such sixth part in fee, and the rest passed to trustees on the declared trusts for the other son. Stone v. Bradlee, 66 N. E. 708, 710, 183 Mass. 185.

A provision of the will that, in the event of any of testator's sons dying intestate and unmarried, the share or shares of such son shall go to all testator's surviving children in equal proportions, refers to the children of testator who may be in existence at the time such death occurs. Ridgely v. Ridgely, 59 Atl. 731, 734, 100 Md. 230.

Where testatrix gave her sister-in-law a house and lot in fee simple, and the will provided that, in the event that the sister-in-law should die before the will took effect, the property should be divided between the children of certain persons, it meant children living at the death of the testatrix, and not them and such others as might be born thereafter. Barker v. Barker, 135 S. W. 396, 143 Ky. 66.

Grandchildren and other descendants

The word "children," when used in a will, is rarely held to be synonymous with "heirs," or "bodily heirs," and generally does not embrace grandchildren. Thomas v. Thomas, 53 South. 630, 633, 97 Miss. 697.

The term "children," in designating testamentary beneficiaries, does not include grandchildren or other than immediate descendants in the first degree of the person named as ancestor, in the absence of a showing of contrary intent. Lich v. Lich, 138 S. W. 558, 561, 158 Mo. App. 400.

The word "children" has sometimes been held to include grandchildren, as where it can fairly be seen from the context that such was the intention of the testator as exhibited in his will. Lawrence v. Phillips, 71 N. E. 541, 542, 186 Mass. 320.

The word "children" in a will does not include grandchildren, unless it appears from the context to have been so intended by testator, or unless such meaning is necessary to carry out his manifest intent. In re Long's Estate, 77 Atl. 924, 928, 228 Pa. 594.

Where testator made a devise over to his "children who shall then be living," the term "children" cannot be enlarged to include grandchildren, where there is nothing in the context to authorize such enlargement. Frank v. Frank, 111 S. W. 1119, 1123, 120 Tenn. 509.

The general rule is that, where there are children who fully answer the description of the word "children" in a will, and where confining the bequest to them will satisfy the whole apparent design of testator, grandchildren or more remote descendants may not share with them, because, in the ordinary use of the word, "children" does not include grandchildren, though, where there is any reason to suppose that such was the intention of testator, "children" may be construed as meaning "issue." Boston Safe Deposit & Trust Co. v. Nevin, 98 N. E. 1051, 1053, 212 Mass. 232.

Where testator made a devise to the children of his two sisters and his brother, "each of the above families to share equally," the word "children" is not thereby enlarged so as to include grandchildren. Fulghum v. Strickland, 51 S. E. 294, 295, 123 Ga. 258.

The word "children" does not, in its settled and usual signification, include grandchildren, though it is sometimes used to include them. In construing wills, it will not be construed to include them unless something in the context shows that to be testator's intention, or unless the provision will be inoperative without such construction. Felt's Ex'rs v. Vanatta, 21 N. J. Eq. 84, 85.

Grandchildren cannot take under bequest in a will to "children" as a class, unless there is something in the will to indicate such an intention. Where a will provides that the balance of testator's property not disposed of shall be "equally divided between all of my children," it was the evident intent that the grandchildren should take nothing under such clause, where provision was made for them in a prior item of the will. Lyon v. Baker, 50 S. E. 44, 122 Ga. 189.

Grandchildren of decedent were not "children," and do not stand for or represent

"children," in the sense in which that word is used in Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 285, giving a right of action for death, and providing that the damages shall inure to the benefit of the children, if any, or next of kin. Pittsburgh, O., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Reed, 88 N. E. 1080, 1083, 44 Ind. App. 635.

"The word 'children,' in common parlance, does not include grandchildren or any others than the immediate descendants in the first degree of the first person named as ancestor." A bequest "to the children of my wife and myself" was not a bequest to the testator's grandchildren, but to the children of his wife and himself. Schneider v. Hellbron, 101 N. Y. Supp. 152, 154, 115 App. Div. 720 (quoting and adopting definition in Palmer v. Horn, 84 N. Y. 516, 521, and citing Matter of Truslow, 35 N. E. 955, 956, 140 N. Y. 599, 603; Matter of Kimberly, 44 N. E. 945, 150 N. Y. 90).

"Nothing is better settled in the law of wills than that the term 'children' does not include grandchildren or more remote descendants, unless there is something in the will to show that the word was used in a broader sense. This is not based on any technical rule of law; on the contrary, it is founded on the ordinary meaning of the word and the presumption that the testator has used the word in its ordinary sense." Pimel v. Betjemann, 76 N. E. 157, 158, 183 N. Y. 194, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 580, 5 Ann. Cas. 239.

Testator gave his residuary estate to his executors, in trust to divide the same into five parts, and to pay the income of one share to a daughter or to her children for the support of the daughter and children, and provided for a division of the corpus at a designated time, and that a one-fifth share should go to the "children" of the daughter "living at the time of such division." Held, that the word "children" did not include grandchildren, since the term "children" does not include "grandchildren" unless the intention of testator discloses the contrary, and only the children of the daughter living at the time of the division of the corpus could participate in the distribution. Hurlbert v. Gerow, 132 N. Y. Supp. 842, 845, 148 App. Div. 378.

"It is a matter of common knowledge that in ordinary conversation and affairs of life the word 'child' is commonly used to designate a son or daughter, a male or female descendant of the first degree. It is safe to say that, standing alone, it is never understood to mean grandchildren." A testator bequeathed money to designated grandchildren, and then declared that the residue of his estate should go "to such of the children of my own blood begotten as shall survive me." The word "children," as used in the residuary clause, did not include grandchildren. Brown v. Brown, 98 N. W. 718, 722, 71 Neb. 200, 115 Am. St. Rep. 568, 8 Ann. Cas. 632.

Under the clause of a will giving the residue of the estate to executors in trust to divide in five equal shares, and pay annually the income of one to A., or to her children, for the support and maintenance of herself and children, as the executors may think best, A. dying, and thereafter one of her children dying, leaving a child, the income goes to her surviving children only; the word "children" not including grandchildren, unless there is something in the will to show that the word is used in the broader sense. Baker v. Gerow, 126 N. Y. Supp. 277, 281.

By the fifth clause of his will testator gave the residue of his estate to his executors in trust to divide into five equal shares, and pay annually the income, one share to A. (his daughter) or to her children, for the "support and maintenance" of herself and children, as the executors may think best; one share to M. (another daughter); one share to each of his daughters R. and S.; and one share to his son H. By the sixth clause he provided that the principal of the residue should be divided, 20 years after his death, or on the death of the survivor of R. and S., if before that time, one-fifth to R. and one-fifth to S., or to such person or persons as they shall appoint by will; and, in case one of R. and S. shall de cease leaving no lawful issue and no will, then the survivor to receive the share of both; one-fifth to M., if she be living at the date of the division; one-fifth to the child or children of A. living at the time of such division; one half of one-fifth share to H., and to his children, provided such children or H. be living at the time of such division; and the other half of said share to R. and S., share and share alike. By the seventh clause he directed the executors out of the principal of the shares directed to be held in trust for "my children," in addition to the payment of income provided, to pay each year $1,000 of the principal of said shares to each of "my children." Held that, in view of the sixth clause naming as beneficiaries of the trust the children of H. and A. living at the time of the final distribution of the estate the word "children" in the seventh clause is used in a broad sense, and includes the children of H. and A., as well as of testator; so that advancements of principal, under the seventh clause, after the deaths of H. and A., go not to their estates, but to those who, as each advancement is made, answer the description of their surviving children. Id.

Where each of the daughters of testator had children living at the date of his will, whereby, subject to life estates for the daughters, the residue was given to the children of the daughters, the word "children" must be given its primary legal meaning, and did not include testator's remoter descendants.

Carpenter v. Perkins, 74 Atl. 1062, 1064, 83 Conn. 11.

The word "children," as used in a will, means descendants in the first degree, and does not include grandchildren, in the absence of satisfactory evidence that such was the intent of the testator. Davies v. Davies, 112 N. Y. Supp. 157, 158, 59 Misc. Rep. 104.

Where the word "children" is used in a will, its simple and primary meaning is to be accepted, when it can be so understood; and it cannot be held to include grandchildren, unless it is necessary to do so to give effect to the words of the will or the evident intent of the testator. Eddy v. Mathewson, 78 Atl. 506, 507, 32 R. I. 53.

Ky. St. § 4841, has changed the common-law rule of construction of the word "children," so as to embrace grandchildren unless a different construction is required by the will. Where testator left an estate to his wife for life then to be divided between his children then living, but one child died before testator, leaving issue, such issues were entitled to such child's share. Ruff v. Baumbach, 70 S. W. 828, 829, 114 Ky. 336 (citing Benaker v. Lemon, 62 Ky. 212; Dunlap v. Shrieve's Ex'rs, 63 Ky. [2 Duv.] 334; Chenault's Guardian v. Chenault's Ex'rs, 11 S. W. 424, 88 Ky. 84).

In its primary sense the word "children" expresses the relation of parent and child and does not extend to grandchildren or descendants, and when used in a will it is, prima facie, used in its natural and primary meaning; but a more extended meaning may be given it where it will prevent intestacy and where the language of the will indicates that testator used the word in its more extensive meaning. Dilts v. Clayhaunce, 62 Atl. 672, 674, 70 N. J. Eq. 10.

Heirs

Heir as including children, see Heir.

Heirs of the body as including children, see Heirs of the Body.

Legal heirs as including children, see Legal Heirs.

Deeds and wills are often so constructed that the term "children" would be properly interpreted as "heirs" or "heirs of the body" when they mean children; but these are not the primary meaning of the terms, and such construction depends upon the instrument evincing an intention. Where testator devised lands to his daughter for life, with remainder over to his other children, on the death of the life tenant without issue, after surviving all the rest of testator's children, the grandchildren of testator, as his heirs at law, were entitled to the estate as reversioners. Rosenau v. Childress, 20 South. 95, 96, 111 Ala. 214.

A testator bequeathed all his personal property to his wife, and devised his real estate to her for life and then provided that all the residue of the estate should, upon the decease of his wife, go to his children equally, and "to their children forever." At the time the will was made two of testator's children had no children. Held, that under Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 30, § 13, providing that every estate in lands granted or devised shall be deemed a fee, if a less estate be not limited by express words, etc., the word "children," as last used in the will, meant heirs generally, and not natural offspring, and hence testator's children took a fee, and not a life estate. Strawbridge v. Strawbridge, 77 N. E. 78, 79, 220 Ill. 61, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 948, 110 Am. St. Rep. 226.

"The term 'children' is primarily a word of purchase, and is not to be construed as equivalent to 'heirs,' in the absence of other words or circumstances showing it to have been used in that sense; but where there are other words in the will showing that the word 'children' was used in the sense of 'heirs,' the word will be construed as a word of limitation, equivalent to 'heirs.'" Dick v. Ricker, 78 N. E. 823, 824, 222 Ill. 413, 118 Am. St. Rep. 426 (quoting and adopting definition in Strawbridge v. Strawbridge, 77 N. E. 78, 79, 220 Ill. 61, 63, 4 L. R. A. [N. S.] 948, 110 Am. St. Rep. 226).

The word "children" in a will, does not ordinarily mean "heirs," or "heirs of his body," so as to bring the devise under the operation of the rule in Shelley's Case, unless the context of the will leaves no doubt of such intention. The word "heirs" is a word of limitation, and not of purchase; and, when used in a will, its legal intentment is to designate a class of persons who are to take in succession, from generation to generation, and the law effectuates this purpose by declaring a fee to pass to the first taker, or, as it is sometimes expressed, by giving a life estate to the first taker and a limitation in fee to himself. The words "sons," "daughters," "child," and "children" are not technical, legal terms, to which a fixed and determined meaning must be given, regardless of the sense in which they are employed; but they are flexible and subject to construction, to give effect to the intention of the testator. The rule in Shelley's Case often defeats the clearly expressed intention of the testator. In a devise to one for and during his natural life, with remainder to his heirs in fee, the inexorable rule of the common law, from which courts cannot escape without legislative aid, requires them to set at naught the clearly expressed intention and decide that the testator gave a fee-simple title to the first taker, although he expressly limited it to a life estate by apt words. When, however, the testator has used other words, such as "child" or "children," the rule in Shelley's Case has no application, and the court is left free to adopt a construction which will carry into effect the intention of the testator. It is true the intention, when discovered, may lead to the same result as is reached under the rule in Shelley's Case, where the word "heirs" is used; but, if this be so, it is because the intention is carried out by adopting such construction. It will never be so construed to defeat the intention, as may follow from the rigor of the rule in Shelley's Case. Connor v. Gardner, 82 N. E. 640, 644, 230 Ill. 258, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 73 (citing Kales, Future Interests, § 129; Schaefer v. Schaefer, 31 N. E. 136, 141 Ill. 337; Strawbridge v. Strawbridge, 77 N. E. 78, 220 Ill. 61, 4 L. R. A. [N. S.] 948, 110 Am. St. Rep. 226).

Where a father or mother devises property to a son, daughter, or blood relation, using the language "to him and his children forever," the word "children" will be construed to mean heirs, and the children held to take no interest in the property devised. If the devise, however, is to a blood relation and his children, and the word "forever" is not used following the word "children," the devise will pass a life estate only to the parent, and a fee to the children, as is also the effect of a devise by a husband to his wife and her children. A bequest of the residue of testator's estate to his daughter and "her children forever" vested the daughter with the fee; the word "children" being used in the sense of "heirs," as a word of inheritance and not of purchase. Naville v. American Mach. Co., 140 S. W. 559-561, 145 Ky. 344 (citing Moran v. Dillehay, 71 Ky. [8 Bush] 434; Hood v. Dawson, 83 S. W. 75, 98 Ky. 285; Lachland's Heirs v. Downing's Ex'rs, 50 Ky. [11 B. Mon.] 94; Williams v. Duncan, 17 S. W. 330, 92 Ky. 125).

A devise to a son "and his children" is within the rule laid down in one of three lines of cases: First, that the parent takes a joint estate in fee simple with the children then born or thereafter to be born; second, that the parent takes a life estate with remainder to the children; third, that the word "children" is used in the sense of "heirs"—this construction being adopted only in those cases where, upon consideration of the whole will, it is evident that the words were used as words of limitation and not of purchase. A will devising to a son "and his children" 250 acres of land gave him a fee-simple, and not a life estate, especially in view of other devises showing that testator knew what language to employ in giving a life estate, and in view of a clause restraining alienation of the various tracts devised, and in view of a provision requiring the son to pay $4,200 to his brothers and sisters. Harkness v. Lisle, 117 S. W. 264, 266, 132 Ky. 767.

Testator, by the eleventh clause of his will, bequeathed certain lands to the heirs of his brother A., naming his three children, and giving to each an undivided one-third. He then, in the same clause, bequeathed to the "surviving heirs" of the brother an undivided half interest in certain live stock, provided that if either of the "above-named children" should die without issue before testator's death the share of such child should go to the survivors, and if any should die childless such share should revert to the survivors; it being testator's intention that his estate should descend to the heirs of his own blood, except the property devised to his wife. He thereafter bequeathed all the residue of his estate, one-third to C. and his heirs, and one-third, share and share alike, to the surviving heirs of the brother referred to in the eleventh clause. Held, that the two clauses should be construed together, and that the words "surviving heirs" were used synonymously with the words "surviving children," and hence did not include the granddaughter of such brother, so as to entitle her to share under the residuary clause. Dunshee v. Dunshee, 96 N. E. 298, 300, 251 Ill. 405.

Heirs of body

Heirs of the body as including children, see Heirs of the Body.

The word "children," as used in a will whereby a testator gave all his estate to his wife for life, and at her death the proceeds to his sons and daughters during their lives, and after the death of either of them he gave "to their child or children, should they leave any children at their death, the share held by my sons and daughters at the time of his or her death, but, should neither of my sons or daughters leave no heirs, then their share is to be divided between all of my grandchildren, share and share alike," meant "heirs of the body," and the testator's children took an estate in fee tail, which was enlarged by the statute into a fee simple. In re Vilsack's Estate, 57 Atl. 32, 33, 207 Pa. 611.

Testator devised his estate in trust for his daughter "and the heirs of her body," and provided that in case she died without "children" the estate should go to persons named. Held to create an estate tail in the daughter, converted by the statute into a fee simple, subject to the defeasance under which the estate would pass on her death without children; the words "and the heirs of her body" being words of limitation, and the word "children" being synonymous with "issue" or "heirs of her body." Watkins v. Pfeiffer, 92 S. W. 562, 563, 29 Ky. Law Rep. 97.

The word "children" in a will does not ordinarily mean "heirs of his body," so as to bring a devise under the operation of the rule in Shelley's Case, unless the context of the will leaves no doubt of such intention. Connor v. Gardner, 82 N. E. 640, 644, 230 Ill. 258, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 73.

Issue

Issue as including children, see Issue (Descendants).

In a devise to testator's nephew and to his children, providing that, if the nephew die without legal issue, the property is to go to the heirs of testator's father, the use of the phrase "legal issue" does not require the word "children" to be construed as though it were "issue"; "children" being prima facie a word of purchase, and not of limitation, and being properly so construed in such a devise. Chambers v. Union Trust Co., 84 Atl. 512, 514, 235 Pa. 610.

If it is apparent from the reading of a will that the testator has used the words "heirs," "issue," and "children" interchangeably or synonymously, the court is warranted in construing them in like manner, so as to carry out the testator's intention. Stisser v. Stisser, 85 N. E. 240, 241, 235 Ill. 207 (citing Gannon v. Peterson, 62 N. E. 210, 193 Ill. 372, 55 L. R. A. 701; Butler v. Huestis, 68 Ill. 594, 18 Am. Rep. 589; Leiter v. Sheppard, 85 Ill. 242).

A testamentary trust which authorized the trustee upon the last beneficiary's death to pay over the remainder of the trust fund to the children of the beneficiary, if she left children, but if she died without issue, then to her heirs at law, used the word "children" in its ordinary meaning, and as synonymous with the word "issue." Russell v. Hartley, 78 Atl. 320, 324, 83 Conn. 654.

Legal heirs

Legal heirs as including children, see Legal Heirs.

Legatee

Legatee as including child, see Legatee.

Legitimate children

The word "children," when used in a devise, includes illegitimate children, if consistent with testator's intent. Harrell v. Hagan, 60 S. E. 909, 911, 147 N. C. 111, 125 Am. St. Rep. 539.

At common law, the word "children" means legitimate issue, and testator is presumed to have so used it. Kemper v. Fort, 67 Atl. 991, 995, 219 Pa. 85, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 820, 123 Am. St. Rep. 623, 12 Ann. Cas. 1022.

"The decisions are unanimous that, in the absence of statutory provisions modifying the common law with respect to illegitimate children, the words 'issue,' 'child,' or 'children,' found in a will or statute, whether qualified by the word 'lawful' or not, are to be construed as only those who are legitimate, and if others are intended this must be deduced from the language employed, without resort to extrinsic facts. This is on the ground that at the common law a bastard child had no inheritable blood, was kin to no one, could have no ancestor, nor be an heir, and could have no heirs, save those of his own body. But this rule has been greatly modified by the enactment of statutes amellorating his condition, and in different degrees conferring the rights of legitimate children. The bastard was nullius filius mainly in the matter of inheritance. In many other respects his status was the same as others. He could not marry within the levitical degrees, and was held to be within the act requiring the consent thereto of parent or guardian. His settlement was that of his mother." In a will providing for the distribution of an income to the lawful issue of testator's children, the words "lawful issue" mean children, and include only the lawful children of testator's children, and an illegitimate child would not share in the income, although recognized by its father. Brislin v. Huntington, 103 N. W. 144, 147, 128 Iowa, 166, 5 Ann. Cas. 931.

An illegitimate child who has been acknowledged by his father, and whose grandfather referred to him as his grandson, and on one occasion expressed an intention of giving him a share in his estate, is entitled to share in a devise by the grandfather to the "children" of the father, as being within the intention of testator, even conceding that the marriage of his father and mother did not legitimate him for all purposes. Harness v. Harness (Ind.) 98 N. E. 357, 359.

"Generally in the construction of a will a gift to 'children' will be held to apply to legitimate 'children' only. Nevertheless, a gift to 'children' has been held to include illegitimate children in a case where, from the expressions in the will, and from the state of the testator's family at the date of the will, the probability that he intended them to take was deemed sufficiently strong." A will left an undivided fractional portion of testatrix's estate "to the children or issue" of a deceased brother. The brother had but one child of his body, and she had died, leaving children, some time prior to testatrix's death; but he also had a legally adopted daughter, who had assumed his name and been invested by the Legislature with rights of inheritance. Testatrix had always treated and regarded this adopted daughter as one of her brother's children, called her "niece," and introduced her to other people as her own niece, and was in turn addressed by the child as "aunt." Held, that the adopted child was included in the will as one of the 'children' of the deceased brother. In re Truman, 61 Atl. 598, 599, 27 R. I. 209.

A will gave to testator's executors and trustees portions of his estate in trust, the use and income for the benefit of his daughter during her life, and at her death the principal for the benefit of her surviving children, and, if she should leave none, then for the benefit of testator's other children. Prior to the execution of the will the daughter had joined a semireligious and sociological society whose members rejected the prevalent ideas of the marriage relation, and contracted an alliance with a man who became the father of her only child, whom she left surviving, and who was born prior to the execution of the will. Testator knew, before the execution of the will, of the illicit alliance which his daughter had formed, and knew that the child was illegitimate and that he was her only child. Held, that testator intended that the remainder of the share of his estate should go to the then living illegitimate child, or to any other illegitimate children that might be the fruit of his daughter's irregular relationship, and the then living illegitimate child took title to the estate of which his mother during her lifetime received the income. Tuttle v. Woolworth, 77 Atl. 684, 688, 74 N. J. Eq. 810.

Where a man married a woman having an illegitimate child, and thereafter had seven children, and died leaving his whole estate to his wife for life and on her death to be divided "among her 'children' and mine," the illegitimate child took nothing under the will. Bealafeld v. Slaughenhaupt, 62 Atl. 1113, 1114, 213 Pa. 565.

Stepchildren

A testator who had been twice married left several children by his first wife surviving him, and also children by his second wife. In making final disposition of his estate, the will proceeds, "I desire to give to my first children all my negroes," and, after making specific the devise to them of other property, "I desire that my present wife and her children shall have my homestead, containing 400 acres, to remain undivided for her and their benefit during widowhood." After giving to his wife certain personalty, he further directs the balance sold, and the proceeds equally divided among all of his children, "without distinction," and that "all my notes and accounts shall be collected, and the proceeds equally divided between my children, without distinction." The last wife, at the time of her marriage to the testator, was a widow, and had one child, who survived the testator. Held, that such child was not entitled to share with testator's children by his last wife in the devise of the estate made to them. Blankenbaker v. Snyder (Ky.) 36 S. W. 1124, 1125.

Testatrix gave a fund to trustees, the income to be paid to a certain person, after his decease to his wife for life, and after her decease the principal to be distributed among the "children" of said person and wife. At the time the will was executed, both beneficiaries of the trust were in the service of testatrix, and had been for many years, both before and after their marriage. Held, that "children" of the husband by a former marriage were not entitled to share in the distribution of the fund on the death of both beneficiaries. Crapo v. Pearce, 72 N. E. 935, 936, 187 Mass. 141.

As creating tenancy in common

Where lands are devised to a woman and her children, she having children living at the time of the devise, the word "children" must be taken as a word of purchase according to its natural import, and the children take a joint estate with the mother in the land devised. Jones' Ex'rs v. Jones, 18 N. J. Eq. 236, 237.

As word of limitation

S. bequeathed to her grandsons J. and W., an amount of money, her will providing that, if either of them died leaving no child or descendant surviving him, the share he received under this will was to go to his surviving brother, and if both should die leaving no child or descendants, then to be equally divided between testatrix's children. Held, that the words "child" and "descendants," in the connection in which they occur, are not words of purchase creating an estate in a class designated, but are words of limitation which limit or describe the estate given. Daniel v. Lipscomb, 66 S. E. 850, 852, 110 Va. 563.

Where, in a devise of an estate with remainder over, the words "heirs of the first taker" are used, as well as the word "children," the word "children" would be construed as a word of limitation; the ultimate gift over to the heirs of the first taker in default of children indicating a general intent that the estate should descend to the devisees' heirs. Cook v. Councilman, 72 Atl. 404, 407, 109 Md. 622.

Prima facie the word "children" as used in a will is a word of purchase and not of limitation. It will not be construed as a word of limitation unless there is found in the will an intention so to use it. Manning v. Bader, 73 Atl. 939, 940, 224 Pa. 575.

As word of purchase

Unless it is necessary to effectuate the manifest intention of a testator, the word "children" is a word of purchase. Jahine v. Sawyer (Ky.) 78 S. W. 140, 141.

The word "children" is a word of purchase, and not of limitation, and describes the persons who take. Where a testator devised real estate to his son and to his children, with a direction that the son should pay certain legacies, the son acquired only a life estate, and the children of the son living at the testator's death took the estate in remainder. Crawford v. Forest Oil Co., 57 Atl. 47, 53, 208 Pa. 5.

A devise to the son and daughter of testatrix of her whole estate for their life, and after death "to their children (my grandchildren), i. e., the share devised to my son to go to his children, and the share devised to my daughter to go to her children," gives to the son and daughter estates for life, with remainder to their children; the word "child-dren" being a word of purchase, and not a word of limitation. Shields v. Aitken, 84 Atl. 662, 664, 236 Pa. 6.

In a devise over of all testator's property to his daughter "and her children for their use and benefit forever," the word "children," being followed by the word "forever," is equivalent to "heirs," and is a word of inheritance, and not of purchase, so that the daughter took a fee-simple estate. Dicken v. Dicken, 152 S. W. 258, 259, 151 Ky. 488, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 276.

Where a will devised property to be equally divided among testator's three daughters, "and then to their children, forever," the word "children" is not used as a word of limitation, in the sense of "heirs," but is a word of purchase. Interior & W. V. R. Co. v. Epling, 73 S. E. 51, 52, 70 W. Va. 6.

Generally the words "child and children" prima facie are words of purchase and not of limitation; but where a remainder, even where these words are used, is to go to the general or lineal heirs as pointed out by law, they are synonymous with "heirs of the body," and the estate for life in the first taker is enlarged to a fee or into an estate tail by implication, so that a devise to a daughter and at her death to her children or issue in fee simple gives the daughter an estate in fee simple. Pifer v. Locke, 55 Atl. 790, 791, 205 Pa. 616.

Where one of testator's daughters had children at the date of the will, and all of them had children at testator's death, the word "children" in a devise to the daughters "and their children" is a word of purchase, not of limitation, unless different intent plainly appear in the will. Wills v. Foltz, 56 S. E. 473-477, 61 W. Va. 262, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 283 (citing and distinguishing Martin v. Martin, 44 S. E. 198, 52 W. Va. 389; Graham v. Graham, 4 W. Va. 320, 323; Merryman v. Merryman, 19 Va. [5 Munf.] 440; Moon v. Stone's Ex'r, 60 Va. [19 Grat.] 130; Hinton v. Milburn's Ex'rs, 23 W. Va. 166; Ball v. Payne, 27 Va. [6 Rand.] 73; Gaskins v. Hunton, 23 S. E. 885, 92 Va. 528; Fitzpatrick v. Fitzpatrick, 42 S. E. 306, 100 Va. 552, 93 Am. St. Rep. 976; Nickell v. Handly, 51 Va. [10 Grat.] 336; Lindsey v. Eckels, 40 S. E. 23; Wallace v. Dold's Ex'rs, 30 Va. [3 Leigh] 258; Stace v. Bumgardner, 16 S. E. 252, 89 Va. 418; Wilmoth v. Wilmoth, 12 S. E. 731, 34 W. Va. 426; Pack v. Shanklin, 27 S. E. 389, 43 W. Va. 304; Barksdale v. White, 69 Va. [28 Grat.] 224, 26 Am. Rep. 344; Ross' Ex'r v. Kiger, 26 S. E. 193, 42 W. Va. 402; Collins v. Feather, 43 S. E. 323, 52 W. Va. 107, 61 L. R. A. 660, 94 Am. St. Rep. 912; Kent v. Kent, 55 S. E. 564, 106 Va. 199).

The word "children," as used in a will, is a word of purchase, and not of limitation, and will not be construed as a word of limitation, unless there is found in the will an intent so to use it. Manning v. Bader, 73 Atl. 939, 940, 224 Pa. 575.

Testator gave a certain farm to W. and his children forever, but if W. shall die leaving no children the farm was devised to J. Held, that W. took a fee simple, to be defeated only in case he died without children; the words "his children forever" being words of limitation and not of purchase, creating an estate tail, which by statute was made fee simple. Hood v. Dawson, 33 S. W. 75, 76, 98 Ky. 285.

Under a will giving personal and real property to testator's wife, to go at her death to "my son and his children," the son takes but a life estate, with remainder to his children; the word "children" being used as a word of purchase, and not of limitation. Smith v. Smith, 85 S. W. 169, 171, 119 Ky. 899, 27 Ky. Law Rep. 382.

Where land is devised to testator's two sons "in trust to make their living, and to their children after them," the word "children" is one of purchase and not of limitation, and the devise creates an estate for life in the sons, with remainder to their children in fee. Emerick v. Emerick, 68 Atl. 183, 184, 219 Pa. 187.

The word "children" is a word of purchase and not of limitation, and therefore, where property is devised or conveyed to a woman and her children, the children take as joint tenants with the mother, when there is nothing to show a contrary intention. But where there are other words in the will or deed showing that the word "children" was used in the sense of "heirs," as where they are followed by the word "forever," and in other parts of the instrument the words "children" and "heirs" are used interchangeably, the word "children" will be used as meaning heirs, and construed as a word of limitation, and not of purchase. This construction is adopted only to effectuate the intention of the maker when there is enough on the face of the instrument to show that he used the word "children" in the sense of "heirs." On the other hand, the word "heirs" will be read as synonymous with "children," and construed as a word of purchase, when necessary to effectuate the intention of the grantor in the deed. An exception to the above rule has been made in a deed or will from the husband to his wife and children. In a deed, the consideration of which was paid by H., and the parties to which were R. of the first part and H. of the second part, the words "and her children" in the granting and habendum clauses to "H. and her children" will be construed to be words of purchase, so that H. will take a life estate only, and her children the remainder. McFarland v. Hatchett, 80 S. W. 1185, 1186, 118 Ky. 423.

CHILDREN FOREVER

In a devise over of all testator's property to his daughter "and her children for their use and benefit forever," the word "children," being followed by the word "forever," is equivalent to "heirs," and is a word of inheritance, and not of purchase, so that the daughter took a fee-simple estate. Dicken v. Dicken, 152 S. W. 258, 259, 151 Ky. 438, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 276.

CHILD'S PART

As used in the statute permitting a widow to elect to take a "child's part" in her deceased husband's estate, imports as large a share as any child has. It means the part or share of the estate to be apportioned among the children by the existing laws, after the widow's dower and debts of the estate were satisfied, and is a varying share or proportion, to be determined by the number of the children, with the addition of the widow. If one child only was left and a widow, both would be regarded as children to take an equal part. If two children and a widow, a child's part would be a third. Benedict v. Wilmarth, 35 South. 84, 88, 46 Fla. 535, 4 Ann. Cas. 1033 (citing Davis v. Duke, 1 N. C. 526).

CHILDBIRTH

As personal ailment, see Personal Ailment.

CHILDHOOD

"Childhood" or the state of being a child is the condition or time from infancy to puberty. Sheffield v. Franklin, 44 South. 373, 374, 151 Ala. 492, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 884, 125 Am. St. Rep. 87, 15 Ann. Cas. 90 (citing Webster's Dict.).

CHILDLESS

In a will by a wife leaving property to her husband and others if she should die "childless," the word "childless" did not mention an after-born child, within the meaning of Ky. St. § 4847, providing that if any person die leaving a child, or his wife with child, leaving a will made when such person had no child living, wherein any child he might have is not mentioned, the will shall be construed as if the devisees had been limited to take effect in the event that the child should die under the age of 21 and without issue. Knut v. Knut (Ky.) 58 S. W. 583, 584.

CHILLED THE BIDDING

The term "chilled the bidding" is applied to the act of preventing competition at a judicial sale, and the act may consist in falsely telling prospective buyers that the land offered for sale is greatly incumbered. Nodine v. Richmond, 87 Pac. 775, 783, 48 Or. 527.

CHINESE LABORER

The term "laborer," as used in the statutes describing the class of Chinese who are not privileged to enter the United States, includes master mechanics and tradesmen, such as blacksmiths, cabinetmakers, tailors, and shoemakers, who receive orders, and cut and make up materials in such forms and of such dimensions as their customers require, and it also includes a restaurant keeper. In re Ah Yow, 59 Fed. 561, 562.

It has been held that a Chinese person engaged in keeping a restaurant and lodging house is a "laborer"; that a Chinese person whose occupation was that of a laundryman is a laborer within the meaning of the Chinese exclusion laws; that a Chinese person owning an interest in a mercantile firm, but not engaged in conducting it, who is also a cook in a restaurant, of which he is part owner, is a laborer and not a merchant under such laws; and that a Chinaman who, from the date of his landing in this country, works in a laundry, although he also has an interest in a mercantile business, is a laborer. Act Cong. Nov. 3, 1898, c. 14, 28 Stat. 7, amending Act May 5, 1892, c. 60, 27 Stat. 25, "to prohibit the coming of Chinese persons into the United States," does not restrict the meaning of the word "laborers" as used in the prior acts, so as to enlarge the privileged classes. United States v. Yee Gee You, 152 Fed. 158, 159, 160, 81 C. C. A. 409.

"Laborer," as defined by Act Cong. May 5, 1892, c. 60, 27 Stat. 25, as amended by Act Nov. 3, 1898, c. 14, § 2, 28 Stat. 8, means both skilled and unskilled manual laborers, including Chinese employed in mining, fishing, huckstering, peddling, and laundrymen, or those engaged in taking, drying, or otherwise preserving shell or other fish for home consumption or exportation. Where a Chinese person, arrested as unlawfully within the United States at the time of his arrest, was working as a servant in a boarding house, and since coming to the United States had worked as a cook and deliveryman in a store in which he had no interest, he was properly found to be a "laborer." Mar Sing v. United States, 137 Fed. 875, 876, 70 C. C. A. 213.

Chinese Treaty Nov. 17, 1880, 28 Stat. 826, and Act May 6, 1882, c. 126, 22 Stat. 58, in aid thereof, provided for the exclusion of Chinese laborers, and the Geary act (Act Cong. May 5, 1892, c. 60, 27 Stat. 25) defined "Chinese laborers" to include both skilled and unskilled manual laborers, including Chinese employed in mining, fishing, huckstering, peddling, laundrying, and those engaged in taking, drying, or otherwise preserving shell or other fish for home consumption or exportation. Held, that a Chinese person owning a $500 interest in a general merchandise store, but operating a fruit farm as a tenant and selling the fruit grown thereof by his own labor, was a "laborer," and not entitled to enter or remain in the United States. Lew Quen Wo v. United States, 184 Fed. 685, 687, 106 C. C. A. 639.

A Chinese person of a reputable character, who has resided in this country for 19 years, and who is the proprietor of two laundries, which he conducts, is not a "laborer," in contemplation of the Chinese exclusion laws, if he labored himself; it being only incidentally. United States v. Kol Lee, 132 Fed. 136, 137.

Where a Chinese merchant for a year prior to his return to China did no manual labor, except that for a short time he assisted in pickling shrimps and going in wagons to deliver them to customers in connection with the business of a shrimp company, in which he was a partner, such work did not amount to the doing of "manual labor" not necessary in the conduct of his business, within the Chinese exclusion act, depriving him of the right to re-enter the United States on his return. Ow Yang Dean v. United States, 145 Fed. 801, 804, 76 C. C. A. 365.

A Chinese seaman, a member of the crew of a vessel calling temporarily at the port of New York, was not a "laborer" or a "Chinese person" within Chinese Exclusion Act Sept. 13, 1888, c. 1015, § 9, 25 Stat. 478, providing that the master of any vessel who shall knowingly bring within the United States on such vessel and land or attempt to land, or permit to be landed, any Chinese laborer, or other Chinese person, in contravention of the act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and punished, etc. United States v. Jamieson, 185 Fed. 165, 166.

The fact that a Chinese laborer was a minor 19 or 20 years old at the time of the passage of the registration acts did not exempt him from the duty of registering thereunder. United States v. Joe Dick, 134 Fed. 988, 990.

CHIP

According to the Century Dictionary and other standard lexicographers, the word "chip" is defined as "wood, coarse straw, palm leaves, or similar material split into thin chips and made by weaving into hats and bonnets." A contention of an importer of baskets that "chip" is an article produced from a piece of willow or other appropriate wood, which is split into two or more parts by an instrument called a splitter, after which each of the pieces so produced is passed through a shaver, which removes the pith adhering to the split willow, and that on leaving the second instrument or machine the shaved pieces are passed through a chipper, which removes the rough edges and produces a clean and flat wooden material, cannot be sustained, and baskets so manufactured do not come within the word "chip," as used in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 449, 30 Stat. 193. Theodore Ollesheimer & Bros. v. United States, 154 Fed. 167, 168.

CHIROPRACTIC—CHIROPRACTOR

See Practice of Medicine and Surgery. As embraced within statute regulating practice of medicine, surgery, and osteopathy, see Practice of Medicine, Surgery, and Osteopathy.

"Chiropractic" means, primarily, hand manipulation, and the word is applied to a system of healing that treats disease by manipulation of the spinal column. State v. Gallagher, 143 S. W. 98, 99, 101 Ark. 593, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 328; State v. Johnson, 114 Pac. 890, 391, 84 Kan. 411, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 539.

A "chiropractor" is one versed in the science of "chiropractics," said to be a system of adjusting the cause of disease without drugs, based on a thorough knowledge of the nervous system. Swarts v. Siveny (R. I.) 85 Atl. 33, 34.

CHISEL

See Cold Chisel.

CHLORAL HYDRATE

"Chloral hydrate" and "salol" are medicinal preparations which contain no alcohol as a component part, but in the preparation of which alcohol is sometimes used, and which may, and in some cases are, manufactured by other processes without the use of alcohol. They are dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, par. 67, 30 Stat. 154, subjecting to a certain duty "medicinal preparations containing alcohol or in the preparation of which alcohol is used." United States v. Schering, 123 Fed. 65, 66.

CHLOROFORM

Administering chloroform as surgery, see Surgery.

CHOCK

A "chock" in a pile driver is a piece of wood horizontally placed on a platform of the frame, a short distance below the top, and intended to remain far enough under the follower to prevent it from going below it in case of accident, or providing the engine and ropes attached did not hold it in place. Swanson v. Oakes, 101 N. W. 949, 93 Minn. 404.

Pieces of timber commonly used by blast furnace companies to sketch or "chock" hot pots and hold them in position on inclined tracks on slag piles while they cool are a part of the "plant" used in the master's business. Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. v. Mobley, 36 South. 181, 185, 139 Ala. 425.

CHOICE

See Domicile of Choice; Strictly Choice.

"Choice" is defined as "meriting preference; having special excellence; select; precious." Where a seller offered to sell "nice" potatoes, an order of purchase requiring "choice" potatoes did not amount to an acceptance. Brophy v. Idaho Produce & Provision Co., 78 Pac. 493, 495, 31 Mont. 279 (quoting Standard Dictionary).

Where defendants offered to sell plaintiff two cars "choice" potatoes at a specified price, an acceptance requiring the potatoes to be strictly choice did not constitute a variance from the terms of the offer, in view of evidence that there was no difference between the grade "choice" and "strictly choice" potatoes. Ennis Brown Co. v. W. S. Hurst & Co., 82 Pac. 1056, 1059, 1 Cal. App. 752.

CHOP

In the manufacture of corn meal for culinary purposes the corn is first kiln-dried, then cracked or ground between rollers, and afterwards bolted. A product made by the same rollers, but set farther apart, so as not to crush the grain so finely, and with the corn not kiln-dried and the product not bolted, but merely passed between the rollers and then loaded in the cars, and variously known as "cracked corn," "chop," or "coarse meal," was not in the ordinary acceptance of the term "meal," and was properly distinguished from meal in schedule rates for shipping. State ex rel. Crandall v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 101 N. W. 23, 24, 72 Neb. 542.

CHOSE

CHOSE IN ACTION

Contents of chose in action, see Contents. See also, Right Arising Out of an Obligation; Right in Action.

"Choses in action" are a species of intangible property, following the domicile of the owner for purposes of taxation. Ellis v. People, 65 N. E. 428, 429, 199 Ill. 548.

Cal. Civ. Code, § 953, defines a "chose in action" as the right to recover money or other personal property by judicial proceeding.

Driscoll v. Driscoll, 77 Pac. 471, 474, 148 Cal. 528.

The phrase "chose in action," in Rem. & Bal. Code, § 191, permitting any assignee of a "chose in action" for the payment of money to sue in his own name, though the assignor has an interest in the thing assigned, means the right to recover a debt, demand, or damages on a cause of action ex contractu, or for a tort connected with contract, which cannot be enforced without recourse to an action, and a cause of action against a building association to recover money paid under a contract on the ground of fraud is assignable. Conaway v. Co-operative Home Builders, 117 Pac. 716, 718, 65 Wash. 39 (quoting Black's Law Dictionary [2d Ed.] p. 198; 32 Cyc. p. 669).

The term "choses in action" may be used either in the broad sense of all rights of action, whether ex contractu or ex delicto, or in the narrower, but more general, sense as referring to assignable rights of action ex contractu, and perhaps ex delicto, for injuries to property, but not for personal injuries. Gibson v. Gibson, 43 Wis. 23, 32, 28 Am. Rep. 527.

The term "chose (or thing) in action" is used in contradiction to a chose or thing in possession. It is used when the title to the money or property (the thing) is in one person and the possession is in another. Higbee v. State, 104 N. W. 748, 749, 74 Neb. 331.

"Property" in one sense may mean a chose in action. A "chose in action" in one sense may be any right to damages, whether arising from the commission of a tort, the omission of a duty, or the breach of a contract. Womach v. City of St. Joseph, 100 S. W. 443, 446, 201 Mo. 467, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 140 (citing Black's Law Dict.).

Judiciary Act March 3, 1875, c. 137, § 1, 18 Stat. 470, as amended by Act Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, § 1, 25 Stat. 433, declares that the federal courts shall not have cognizance of any suit, except on foreign bills of exchange, to recover the contents of any promissory note or other "chose in action" in favor of any assignee or any subsequent holder, if such instrument be payable to bearer, or be not made by any corporation, unless such suit might have been prosecuted in such court to recover the contents if no assignment or transfer had been made. Complainant B. B., a citizen of West Virginia, entered a partnership with defendant and G., both residents of New York, for the exploitation of gas land and the construction and operation of a carbon plant; G. agreeing to drive the gas well on the land of complainant B. B., defendant to construct and operate the plant, the proceeds to be divided, one-third to complainant B. B., one-half to defendant, and one-sixth to G. G. thereafter assigned his interest to complainant J. B., a citizen of West Virginia, whereupon complainants sued defendant in the federal court for dissolution of the partnership and for an accounting. Held, the term "chose in action" was sufficiently broad to cover the right of complainant J. B., whether by his purchase he became a partner, or whether his right of action was limited to compensation for drilling a well out of profits earned by defendant; and hence, since G. could not have maintained an action against defendant in the federal court for such relief, such court had no jurisdiction of the joint action by G.'s assignee and his co-complainant. Brown v. Beacom, 174 Fed. 812, 814, 98 C. C. A. 520.

Breach of contract

Under Civ. Code, § 953, providing that a "thing in action" is a right to recover money or other personal property by a judicial proceeding, the right to recover damages from a common carrier for breach of a contract is "property." Justis v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 108 Pac. 328, 329, 12 Cal. App. 639.

After breach a covenant of warranty becomes a mere chose in action, and no longer runs with the land. De Long v. Spring Lake Beach Imp. Co., 66 Atl. 591, 592, 74 N. J. Law, 250.

Claim for money

A suit by the assignee of an oral contract to recover a sum of money due thereon is one to recover the contents of a "chose in action," within the meaning of section 1 of the Judiciary Acts of March 3, 1887, c. 373, 24 Stat. 552, and Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, 25 Stat. 433, and a federal court is without jurisdiction of such suit, unless it is shown by the record that it could have been maintained in such court by the assignor. Utah-Nevada Co. v. De Lamar, 133 Fed. 113, 119, 66 C. C. A. 179.

Debt distinguished

The terms "chose in action" and "debt" are synonymous. A "chose in action" is the right of a creditor to be paid, while a "debt" is the obligation of the debtor to pay. As said by Prof. Minor: "The chose in action, or right of the creditor, is a personal right which adheres to him wherever his situs may be. It may for some purposes be his legal situs (or domicile); for others, his actual situs. Just as, in the case of tangible chattels, though the title thereto follows the owner, and its transfer will be regulated by the law of the owner's situs, yet his transferee's ability to enforce that title may be in the exceptional cases determined by a different system of law, should the chattels be actually situated elsewhere. So, also, in the case of debts, though the right to enforce them follows the owner (the creditor), and his transferee is therefore to be governed by the law of his situs, yet his or his transferee's ability to enforce that right may depend upon another jurisdiction and system of law, if he has to resort to another state to sue the debtor." Smead v. Chandler, 76 S. W. 1066, 1068, 71 Ark. 505, 65 L. R. A. 353.

Dower

The term "chose in action" implies a right of possession which may be demanded by action, and the term is properly applied to a widow's right to dower, which is consummate. Sherman v. Hayward, 90 N. Y. Supp. 481, 484, 98 App. Div. 254 (citing Gillet v. Fairchild [N. Y.] 4 Denio, 80; 2 Williams, Ex'rs, p. 1; Winfield, Words and Phrases; Aikman v. Harsell, 98 N. Y. 186).

Judgment

Code 1907, § 4157, provides that a judgment, when filed for record in the probate office, shall be a lien on the property of defendant in the county, subject "to levy and sale under execution." Section 4091 provides that executions may be levied on personal property of defendant, except "things in action." Held, that, where one had obtained judgment, his judicially declared rights were in the nature of "things in action," within section 4091, and the judgment was not subject to a lien created by recording in the probate office a judgment against him. Canterbury & Gilder v. Marengo Abstract Co., 52 South. 388, 389, 166 Ala. 231, 139 Am. St. Rep. 30 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1144 et seq.).

A judgment is a "chose in action" upon which at common law the judgment creditor could maintain an action of debt. Hamilton v. City of New York, 73 Atl. 1, 2, 82 Conn. 208.

A judgment for the recovery of money, while not assignable by statute, so as to vest the legal title in the assignee, is nevertheless a "chose in action," subject to sale and equitable assignment. Brown & Bro. v. Lapp (Ky.) 89 S. W. 304, 305.

A "chose in action" is a personal right, not reduced to possession, but recoverable by a suit at law. A judgment upon which no execution could now issue, and, which must be collected, if at all, by a new suit, is a "chose in action" within a statute authorizing assignees of choses in action not negotiable to maintain actions thereon in their own name. Wood v. Decoster, 66 Me. 542, 544 (quoting and adopting the definition in 2 Kent's Comm. pt. 5, p. 351).

"A 'judgment' is not a negotiable instrument or writing; it is a mere chose in action; the doctrine of caveat emptor applies to the purchaser thereof. If such purchaser desires warranty beyond what is so implied, as above stated, he must see to it that he gets it in express terms." Hinkley v. Champaign Nat. Bank, 75 N. E. 210, 212, 216 Ill. 559.

Life insurance policy

A policy of life insurance is a "chose in action," even before the death of the insured. Perry v. Tweedy, 57 S. E. 782, 783, 128 Ga. 402, 119 Am. St. Rep. 396, 11 Ann. Cas. 46 (citing Steele v. Gatlin, 42 S. E. 253, 115 Ga. 929, 931, 59 L. R. A. 129).

An insurance policy is a "chose in action," and may be transferred by delivery without writing. Stewart v. Gwynn, 82 N. E. 1000, 1001, 41 Ind. App. 320.

A policy of life insurance is a "chose in action"—a promise to pay money upon a given contingency. Doty v. Dickey (Ky.) 96 S. W. 544, 547.

"A life policy is a 'chose in action.' It may be assigned or otherwise disposed of as other choses, subject to the condition that the assignee must have an insurable interest in the life of the insured, must be related by blood or marriage, and be so situated that the assignee or beneficiary has a pecuniary interest in the prolongation of the life of the insured rather than its early termination." Lockett v. Lockett (Ky.) 80 S. W. 1152, 1153.

A life insurance policy is a "chose in action," and when a man makes a policy payable to his representatives or to his estate the policy passes to his personal representative. McLean v. Martin, 45 South. 295, 296, 155 Ala. 208 (citing 1 Cooley's Briefs, Insurance, 84; McLean v. Williams, 42 S. E. 485, 116 Ga. 257, 59 L. R. A. 129; St. John v. American Mut. Life Ins. Co., 13 N. Y. 31, 64 Am. Dec. 529; Hutson v. Merrifield, 51 Ind. 24, 19 Am. Rep. 722, 725; Ionia County Sav. Bank v. McLean, 48 N. W. 159, 160, 84 Mich. 625).

Negotiable instruments

A negotiable instrument is a "chose in action," and may be assigned either before or after maturity, with or without indorsement. Beall v. Russell, 134 N. Y. Supp. 633, 634, 76 Misc. Rep. 244.

Personal injury

Where a woman suffers a tortious personal injury, impairing or destroying her earning capacity, the cause of action arising therefrom becomes a "chose in action" within the meaning of Civ. Code 1910, § 2993, and a part of her separate estate, notwithstanding her subsequent marriage, though the damages which under the law she would have been entitled to recover as a result of the tort may include compensation for loss of earning capacity, which the after-acquired husband would have been entitled to enjoy if it had not been previously destroyed by the tort. Wrightsville & T. R. Co. v. Vaughan, 71 S. E. 691, 696, 9 Ga. App. 371.

Code 1907, § 3765, provides that the surviving husband of a woman who dies intestate shall be entitled absolutely to half the personality of her separate estate. Section 4486 provides that all property of a wife, held by her previous to her marriage, is her separate property. Section 2486, giving to the administrator a right of action for negligence causing death, provides that the damages recovered shall not be liable for the debts of the deceased, and shall be distributed according to the statute of distributions. Held, the right of action being expressly vested in the administrator alone, so as not to be assignable, which right is inseparable from the idea of property, and the action by the administrator being more as an agent to effect the legislative policy to prevent homicide, and as trustee of any recovery, than as the representative of deceased in reducing property of the estate to possession, that, where a widow remarried and died pending a suit by the administrator of the first husband to recover for his death, the surviving second husband was not entitled to share in the subsequent recovery, the wife having had no "property" right in the cause of action, within the meaning of the statutes of distribution, her interest being merely personal, especially in view of Code 1907, § 2, defining "personal property" as money, goods, chattels, things in action, and evidences of debt; the use of the phrase "things in action," in connection only with assignable property, indicating the legislative intent that it shall have a similar meaning. Holt v. Stollenwerck, 56 South. 912, 913.

As personal property

See Personal Property.

Promissory note

"Notes are 'choses in action'—that is, things which must be recovered by action at law—and, like all other things in action, they may be assigned and the title will pass without indorsement." First Nat. Bank v. Moore, 137 Fed. 505, 507, 70 C. C. A. 89 (quoting Yunker v. Martin, 18 Iowa, 143).

As property

See Property.

Right of entry

"A right of entry is not * * * an 'estate' in any just and legal sense of the word. Neither is it a 'thing in action'; for it does not depend upon any right to sue, but may be enforced by a mere entry. Indeed, a right of action and a right of entry are often used in contradistinction to each other." Inglis v. Sailor's Snug Harbour, 28 U. S. (3 Pet.) 99, 180, 7 L. Ed. 617.

Right to recover possession

A corporation executed a mortgage to defendant, which included all after-acquired bills receivable, debts, demands, choses in action, etc. Thereafter defendant converted bonds belonging to the corporation. After such conversion, the mortgage was foreclosed. Held, that the term "choses in action" in the mortgage did not include the corporation's right of action against defendant for its own conversion; and hence the attempted release to defendant of such claim by the purchaser on foreclosure did not bar an action therefor. MacDonnell v. Buffalo Loan, Trust & Safe Deposit Co., 85 N. E. 801, 804, 193 N. Y. 92.

The right to retake possession of personalty, to which title is reserved by the seller, is a "chose in action" and hence must be assigned in writing. Swann Davis Co. v. Stanton, 67 S. E. 888, 889, 7 Ga. App. 668.

Stock

Stock in a corporation is a "chose in action," and the certificates are the evidence of its existence and of its amount. Allen-West Commission Co. v. Grumbles, 129 Fed. 287, 290, 63 C. C. A. 401.

Torts

The term "choses in action," in a mortgage by a corporation which included all after-acquired choses in action, did not include causes of action arising out of a tort committed in dealing with the bonds which the mortgage was given to secure. MacDonnell v. Buffalo Loan, T. & S. Deposit Co., 85 N. E. 801, 804, 193 N. Y. 92.

CHOUSE

In an action against a carrier for injury to live stock from delay in transportation, an allegation in the petition that the injury resulted from "delay, rough handling, and that the horses were choused around while at T.," was not broad enough to admit testimony that at one of the stations defendant's servants "hammered and knocked around and put four bolts in the back end of the car," and that the noise and hammering made the horses restless and nervous," since the word "choused" means no more than a trick, a sham, or a cheat. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Peacock (Tex.) 128 S. W. 463, 466.

CHRISTIAN

CHRISTIAN NAME

The statute requiring a writ to be endorsed with the "Christian and surname" is complied with by indorsing the surname and the initials of the Christian name. Clark v. Paine, 28 Mass. (11 Pick.) 66, 67.

By the common law since the Norman Conquest, a legal name has consisted of one "Christian name," or that which is given one after his birth or at baptism, or is afterwards assumed by him in addition to his family name, and of one "surname," or family name, which is that derived from the common name of his parents, or borne by him in common with other members of his family. Schaffer v. Levenson Wrecking Co., 81 Atl. 434, 82 N. J. Law, 61.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

"Christian Science" is a form of mental therapeutics. It is not the practice of medicine, and is not included within the act regulating the practice of medicine. Bennett v. Ware, 61 S. E. 546, 549, 4 Ga. App. 293 (citing State v. Mylod, 20 Atl. 753, 20 R. I. 632, 41 L. R. A. 428).

CHRISTIANITY

As part of common law

"It is * * * said, and truly, that the Christian religion is a part of the common law of Pennsylvania. But this proposition is to be received with its appropriate qualifications, and in connection with the bill of rights of that state, as found in its constitution of government." Vidal v. Girard, 43 U. S. (2 How.) 198, 11 L. Ed. 205.

CHRISTMAS

Gen. Laws 1909, c. 123, § 2, provides that no license granted shall authorize any person to sell any spirituous and intoxicating liquors on Sunday, or on any election day, etc., or on Christmas Day. Gen. Laws 1909, c. 201, § 5, provides that the 25th day of December in every year, or, when it falls on the first day of the week, then the day following, shall be a holiday, etc., thus making the legal holiday "Christmas" the 26th day of December when the 25th falls on Sunday. Held, that Christmas Day as defined in the latter statute, will govern Christmas Day in the statute for the regulation of the sale of intoxicating liquors, and saloons must remain closed on the 26th. In re Pothier, 78 Atl. 346, 347, 31 R. I. 565.

Gen. Laws 1909, c. 123, § 25, provides that boards of aldermen may by giving 24 hours' notice, etc., require saloons to remain closed during the hours of any holiday not specifically mentioned in section 2 of this chapter. Section 2 provides that saloons shall be closed on Christmas Day, and Christmas Day under Gen. Laws 1909, c. 201, § 5, is the 26th of December when the 25th falls on Sunday. Held, that the former statute has no application with regard to "Christmas" when it falls on Sunday. In re Pothier, 78 Atl. 346, 347, 31 R. I. 565.

CHRONIC

"Chronic" inebriety is the same as habitual drunkenness. Leavitt v. City of Mor- ris, 117 N. W. 393, 395, 105 Minn. 170, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 984, 15 Ann. Cas. 961.

Acts 1909, p. 637, authorizing the State Board of Medical Examiners to revoke a license to practice medicine for publicly advertising special ability to treat or cure chronic and incurable diseases, is not invalid because of indefiniteness, for chronic and incurable diseases are specifically named and discussed in medical works, and are known to physicians possessing a sufficient knowledge of their profession to practice medicine; the word "chronic" being the antithesis of acute, and a "chronic and incurable disease" being generally understood to be one of long standing and unyielding to treatment. State Medical Board of Arkansas Medical Society v. McCrary, 130 S. W. 544, 546, 95 Ark. 511, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 783, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 631.

The State Board of Medical Examiners, in proceedings to revoke a license to practice medicine on the ground that the holder thereof has publicly advertised a special ability to treat or cure chronic and incurable diseases, in violation of Acts 1909, p. 637, may consult standard medical works naming and discussing chronic and incurable diseases, as an aid to the memory and understanding of the members of the board, but not as evidence of what are chronic and incurable diseases. Id.

CHRYSAROBIN

"Chrysarobin" is dutiable as a drug advanced in value, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 20 (30 Stat. 152), and not as a medicinal preparation, under paragraph 68 (30 Stat. 154). Levi v. United States, 140 Fed. 126.

CHUCK

A "chuck" is a device which serves to hold a drill in place. Ripley v. Cochiti Gold Mining Co., 76 Pac. 285, 12 N. M. 186.

CHURCH

See Feeble Churches; Gift to Church; Incorporate Church.

Exclusively used as a church, see Exclusively Used.

A church is "a religious congregation, comprising all those who worship together in one church." The more general definition is "the district in which such worshipers live." A deed to trustees, to be held in trust for "Trinity Parish, in the town of Moundsville, in the county of Marshall, in the state of West Virginia," does not create a valid trust, as the trust attempted to be created is void for uncertainty, as well to the beneficiaries as to the purpose of the trust, for there is nothing to indicate that the words "Trinity Parish" mean a church. Weaver v. Spurr, 48 S. E. 852, 856, 56 W. Va. 95.

A gift in trust for the repair of a "church," in the modern sense of that word as a place for public worship, open to everybody and established for the promotion of religion and morality among all people, whether regularly connected with its ecclesiastical organization or not, is a charity. Chase v. Dickey, 99 N. E. 410, 415, 212 Mass. 555.

A portion of a building in the business district of a city, which had been previously occupied as a flour and feed store, leased by a religious order incorporated as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter Day Saints, did not constitute a "church," within Pub. Acts 1909, No. 291, § 37, providing that no license shall be issued to establish a new saloon within 400 feet from the front entrance of a church, etc. Starks v. Presque Isle Circuit Judge, 189 N. W. 29, 173 Mich. 464, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1142.

As the building

A "church" means a building set apart for religious worship. Liquor Tax Law (Laws 1896, c. 112) § 24, subd. 2, prohibiting the issue of a certificate when a building used exclusively as a "church" is within 200 feet thereof, does not apply to a building used for occasional entertainments incidental to the church, and the subsequent use of the building for public worship does not invalidate a certificate granted before such use. In re Rupp, 106 N. Y. Supp. 483, 484, 55 Misc. Rep. 313 (quoting and adopting the definition in Webst. Dict. Unab.).

As religious corporation

A gift in trust to "the First Church of Christ, Scientist," for the promotion of the "religion of Christian Science as taught by me," when construed in connection with the term "church," which imports an organization for religious purposes, and the allegations of a bill, admitted by demurrer, that the church existed as a religious society, with a large membership, and that it was organized by the testatrix for the promotion of the doctrines of Christian Science, which doctrines were ascertainable from books published by the testatrix, was not indefinite as to its object. Glover v. Baker, 83 Atl. 916, 930, 76 N. H. 393.

The very term "church" imports an organization for religious purposes, and property given to it eo nomine, in the absence of all declaration of trust or use, must, by necessary implication, be intended to be given to promote the purposes for which a church is instituted, the most prominent of which is the public worship of God. Bruce v. Central M. E. Church, 110 N. W. 951, 952, 147 Mich. 230, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 74, 11 Ann. Cas. 150.

The word "church" as used in the law of Maryland is synonymous with the corporate entity holding title to the property of the society. A devise of land to the vestry of a church, to be used for such church purposes as the rector of the church should direct, was not a devise in trust, but gave the vestry the fee. Doan v. Vestry of Parish of Ascension of Carroll County, 64 Atl. 314, 316, 103 Md. 662, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1119, 115 Am. St. Rep. 379.

As a place for worship only

The word "church," as used in P. L. 1905, p. 42, c. 21, providing that no licenses to sell intoxicants shall be granted in any new place within 200 feet of a church, schoolhouse, etc., will not include a place where religiously inclined persons meet for Bible study, etc. Emmons v. Supreme Conclave Improved Order Heptasophs, 63 Atl. 871, 6 Pennewill (Del.) 115.

CHURCH PROPERTY

The term "church property," as used in 2 Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896, c. 120, § 2, cl. 2, exempting from taxation all church property actually and exclusively used for public worship, where the land (to be of reasonable size for the location of the church building) is owned by the congregation, means the church, defined by Webster to be a building set apart for Christian worship, and a lot of reasonable size for its location, and does not include camp-meeting grounds, used by several congregations for public worship, but the title to which, instead of being in any religious congregation, is in a corporation organized under the statute relating to the formation of corporations not for pecuniary profit. People ex rel. Breymeyer v. Watseka Camp-Meeting Ass'n, 43 N. E. 716, 717, 160 Ill. 576.

CHURCH SESSIONS

The constitution of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church creates certain church courts and declares that the government of the church has to be exercised in some certain and definite form by various courts in regular gradation. These courts are called "church sessions," "presbyteries," etc. The jurisdiction of each is defined by the constitution; the "church session" having jurisdiction of a single church. Mack v. Kime, 58 S. E. 184, 195, 129 Ga. 1, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 875.

CHURN

Agricultural Law, § 41, prohibits the sale of any oleaginous substance not made from pure milk or cream, as a substitute for butter under any brand, device, or label bearing words indicative of cows or the product of the dairy, and the use of terms indicative of processes in the dairy in making or preparing butter. Held, that the sale of oleomargarine in cartons inscribed with the words "Purity Oleomargarine," "churned by the Capital City Dairy Co.," "We are the only exclusive first quality churners in the U. S.," etc., violated the statute; the word "churn" in its primary and ordinary meaning conveying to the mind one of the processes of making butter, and being a term indicative of processes in the dairy in making or preparing butter, as used in the statute. People v. Griffin, 128 N. Y. Supp. 946, 947, 71 Misc. Rep. 568.

In rock blasting, the act of striking with a drill is designated "churning." McKane v. Marr & Gordon, 63 Atl. 944, 966, 79 Vt. 13.

CHUTNEY

The article commercially known as "chutney," which consists of various fruits preserved with sugar and spices, is dutiable as "fruits preserved," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 263, 30 Stat. 171, rather than as "edible fruits * * * prepared," under paragraph 262, 30 Stat. 171. Park & Tilford v. United States; 164 Fed. 910, 911.

CIDER

As used in Rev. St. c. 29, § 40, declaring that "cider," when kept for sale as a beverage, is declared to be intoxicating, is not limited to apple juice which has become fermented, though that is perhaps technically the correct definition of the word which is popularly and universally known to include apple juice when it first comes from the cider press, so that cider, when kept for tipping purposes or for sale as a beverage, is within the statute, though it may be unfermented and nonintoxicating in fact. State v. Frederickson, 63 Atl. 535, 537, 101 Me. 37, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 186, 115 Am. St. Rep. 295, 8 Ann. Cas. 48.

Where the law prohibits or regulates the sale of cider by name, without any qualifying word, it applies to all cider, without regard to its intoxicating qualities. Commonwealth v. Goodwin, 64 S. E. 54, 56, 109 Va. 828 (citing Commonwealth v. Dean, 80 Mass. [14 Gray] 99; State v. Roach, 75 Me. 123; State v. Spalding, 17 Atl. 844, 61 Vt. 505).

Under the rule that, where a statute relating to a certain commodity designated it by a word certain and definite in its significance or extent, other commodities not described by the word, but by other designation, and understood by a large part of the community not to fall within the meaning of the word, are not covered by statute, St. 1898, § 4608f (Sanborn's Supp. 1906; Laws 1905, p. 143, c. 82), outlawing "cigarettes," used the word to designate a well-known, recognized, and definite article, consisting of tobacco of a peculiar kind, distinguished by its light color and mildness, rolled in a paper wrapper, and does not include an article consisting of a cylindrical roll of cigar leaf tobacco; the leaves being cut in strips the length of the roll, rolled in a section of wrapper leaf tobacco, and this kind of article being generally known as a cigar at the time of the passage of the act. *Goodrich v. A "cinder pit" is an excavation beneath the rails, about 3¼ feet deep, and walled up, into which the cinders are dropped, and from thence removed. The rails are laid upon posts and beams over the pit. Stauning v. Great Northern R. Co., 98 N. W. 518, 519, 88 Minn. 480.

CIRCUIT COURT

A "circuit court" is a court of general jurisdiction. Rudisell v. Jennings, 77 N. E. 959, 38 Ind. App. 403.

"The 'circuit court' is a constitutional court of record, having general jurisdiction over common-law actions inter partes and proceedings therein according to the course of the common law." Five-mile Beach Lumber Co. v. Friday, 66 Atl. 901, 902, 75 N. J. Law, 175.

The Circuit Courts of the United States are courts of general jurisdiction, corresponding in a general way as to their general authority with the state and District Courts, and full faith and credit must be given to their records and proceedings. Dunseth v. Butte Electric Ry. Co., 103 Pac. 567, 570, 41 Mont. 14, 21 Ann. Cas. 1258.

Rev. St. 1899, § 4161, provides that, whenever the term "circuit court" is used in any law general to the whole state, the same shall be construed to include "courts of common pleas" unless such construction would be inconsistent with the evident intent of such law or of some law especially applicable to courts of common pleas. Such section does not apply to Rev. St. 1899, p. 2579, granting power to the judge of the Cape Girardeau court of common pleas to issue injunctions returnable to the "circuit court"; the act being special. Oliver v. Snider, 75 S. W. 591, 593, 176 Mo. 63.

CIRCUIT JUDGE

Laws 1880, c. 292, confers power to appoint commissioners in condemnation proceedings upon the circuit court or the judge thereof. Laws 1905, c. 295, confers on the superior court for Lincoln county jurisdiction equal to and concurrent with the circuit court of that county in "all civil actions and proceedings at law and in equity," with an immaterial exception and confers express authority to issue all commissions provided by law, and provides that, whenever a statute shall mention the "circuit judge," the words shall be deemed to apply to the judge of the superior court for Lincoln county. St. 1898, § 2594 divides remedies in courts of justice into "actions" and "special proceedings"; the latter embracing all remedies other than actions, under the direct provisions of section 2596. Held, that inasmuch as the words "at law and in equity" embrace all exercise of judicial or quasi judicial power of courts, whether conferred by statute, common law, or equitable rules, the expression "all civil actions and proceedings at law and in equity" is extensive and general, rather than restrictive and particular, and confers on the superior court or the judge thereof the same power to appoint commissioners in condemnation proceedings as is possessed by circuit courts or judges. Wisconsin River Imp. Co. v. Pier, 118 N. W. 857, 859, 137 Wis. 325, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 538.

CIRCULAR

In Act April 1, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 326), making it unlawful for any liquor dealer in the state to in any manner, through agents, circulars, posters, or newspaper advertisements, solicit orders for the sale of intoxicating liquors in any territory where it would be unlawful to grant a license to make such sales, written or printed matter which is intended to be issued to a great number of persons or for general circulation is a "circular," whether issued in the form of a memorandum book, or some other form. Hancock v. State, 133 S. W. 181, 182, 97 Ark. 38 (citing 2 Words and Phrases).

CIRCULAR SAW PLATES

The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 141, 30 Stat. 162 for "steel circular saw plates," includes plates that resemble circular saw plates in size, shape, general finish, and general quality of steel, though imported for other uses. Hermann Boker & Co. v. United States, 168 Fed. 573, 574.

CIRCUMSTANCES

See Character and Circumstances of Injury; Extraordinary Circumstances; Inquire into the Circumstances; Like Circumstances; Same Circumstances; Special Circumstances.

Mitigating circumstances, see Mitigate—Mitigation.

Other circumstances, see Other.

Similar circumstances, see Similar.

In an action for personal injuries caused by alleged ejection from a passenger train, the jury was instructed that if the brakeman pushed plaintiff through the door and onto the platform for the purpose of protecting plaintiff from violence, and with no purpose to eject him from the train, plaintiff could not recover, and that plaintiff was not required to show that the brakeman actually threw him from the train, but that if the evidence showed that the brakeman wrongfully put him out of the car, and for that reason he fell from the platform, it would amount to an ejection, and that it would be sufficient that the act was wrongful, if it appeared that the brakeman was endeavoring to remove plaintiff under the circumstances claimed, and that to put one off a train under such circumstances was a wrongful act. The majority of the court held that such instructions were erroneous. Deemer, C. J. (dissenting opinion), said that there was no room for any confusion in the use of the words "circumstances claimed," and "such circumstances," as found in the instruction, since defendant simply denied that it ejected plaintiff while it was in motion; so that there could be no doubt as to what was meant by the words "circumstances claimed" and "such circumstances," since in another instruction the court told the jury just what was claimed, and in so doing he followed the agreement and concession made by counsel, and that ordinarily, when a court refers to the claims of the parties, it has reference to the pleadings, unless it indicates some other source. Battis v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 100 N. W. 543-549, 124 Iowa, 623.

The word "circumstances" in the requested instruction that the innocence of defendant must be presumed by the jury till the case against him is proved in all its material circumstances is not an apt word to express the meaning to make the charge a good one. Such word can hardly be considered as the equivalent of the word "elements." Bailey v. State, 53 South. 298, 300, 168 Ala. 4; Id., 53 South. 390, 168 Ala. 4.

The word "circumstances," as used in an instruction in an action against a carrier for injuries to a passenger, to the effect that if the jury found that plaintiff was injured, that the accident could not have happened under ordinary circumstances, had defendant exercised the utmost care, a presumption of negligence was raised, and that the burden was on defendant to rebut it, and to that end defendant must prove that, as to the matters which the circumstances indicated were the cause of the accident, defendant and its employes exercised that high degree of care which the law required of them, merely had reference to the claim made by plaintiff as to the manner in which the accident happened, and the instruction was not erroneous on the theory that it was left uncertain as to what circumstances the jury might consider. Fitch v. Mason City & C. L. Traction Co., 100 N. W. 618, 620, 124 Iowa, 665.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE

"Circumstantial evidence" is where, some facts being proved, another fact follows as a natural or very probable conclusion from the facts actually proved, so as readily to gain the assent of the mind from the mere probability of its having actually occurred. It is the inference of a fact from other facts proved, and the fact thus inferred and assented to by the mind is said to be presumed or taken for granted until the contrary is proved. This is what is called "circumstantial evidence," and it is adopted the more readily in proportion to the difficulty in proving the fact by direct evidence. State v. Tyre, 67 Atl. 199, 205, 6 Pennewill (Del.) 343.

"Circumstantial evidence" is evidence of facts and circumstances which, when established, lead the mind to certain conclusions or inferences taken therefrom. Knickerbocker v. Worthing, 101 N. W. 540, 544, 138 Mich. 224.

"Circumstantial evidence" in a criminal case is the proof of such facts or circumstances connected with or surrounding the commission of the offense charged as tends to show the guilt or innocence of accused. State v. Marren, 107 Pac. 993, 1000, 17 Idaho, 766.

Where the fact in controversy must be inferred from other facts proved, the fact is shown by "circumstantial evidence." State v. Blackburn, 75 Atl. 536, 541, 7 Pennewill (Del.) 479.

Where "circumstantial evidence" is relied on to prove guilt, it is essential that the circumstances be proved to the jury's satisfaction beyond a reasonable doubt; that they be consistent with the theory of guilt and inconsistent with any other reasonable theory except guilt. State v. Tilghman, 63 Atl. 772, 774, 6 Pennewill (Del.) 54.

"Circumstantial evidence" may be relevant, even though of very slight probative value. State v. Blackburn (Del.) 75 Atl. 536, 541, 7 Pennewill (Del.) 479; Gary v. State, 67 S. E. 207, 7 Ga. App. 501.

The court having charged: "Circumstantial evidence" is legal evidence, but it must be of such a character and nature as to exclude every reasonable hypothesis other than that the prisoner is guilty. The circumstances not only must all be in harmony with the guilt of the accused, but they must be of such a character that they cannot be true, in the nature of things, and the accused be innocent"—a charge, specially requested, that "in a murder case circumstantial evidence must be received with great caution," is properly refused. State v. Le Blanc, 41 South. 105, 106, 116 La. 822.

"Circumstantial evidence" is where, some facts being proved, another fact follows as a natural conclusion from the facts actually proved, and it is the inference of a fact from other facts proved, and the fact thus inferred and assented to by the mind is taken for granted until the contrary is proved; but, to justify a conviction on circumstantial evidence, the evidence must be satisfactory, and of such significance and force as to produce conviction in the minds of the jury of the guilt of accused beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Roberts (Del.) 78 Atl. 305, 310.

The evidence was entirely "circumstantial" where no witness saw decedent killed, and there was no direct and positive evidence as to how, when, where, or by whom he was killed, and the only evidence as to defendant's guilt was the circumstances surrounding the killing. State v. Samuels, 67 Atl. 164, 166, 6 Pennewill (Del.) 86.

"Circumstantial evidence" is proof of certain facts and circumstances in a certain case, in which the jury may infer other and connected facts which usually and reasonably follow according to the common experience of mankind. Crime may be proved by "circumstantial evidence" as well as by direct testimony of eyewitnesses, but the facts and circumstances in evidence should be consistent with each other and the guilt of the defendant and inconsistent with any reasonable theory of innocence. State v. Shelton, 122 S. W. 782, 788, 223 Mo. 118.

"The term 'evidence' includes not only that offered on the part of the government, but that also offered for the defense. * * * 'Direct evidence' is that which immediately points to the question at issue. It is positive in its character. It often depends upon the credibility and intelligence of the witnesses who testify to a knowledge of the facts. It may also be documentary in character. 'Indirect' or 'circumstantial' evidence is that which tends to establish the issue only by proof of facts sustaining by their consistency the hypothesis claimed, and from which the jury may infer the fact. 'Direct' and 'circumstantial' evidence differ merely in their logical relations to the fact in issue. Evidence as to the existence of the fact is 'direct.' 'Circumstantial evidence' is composed of facts which raise a logical inference as to the existence of the fact in issue." United States v. Greene, 146 Fed. 803, 824.

The testimony of eyewitnesses detailing the acts of accused and the inferences which can legally be drawn therefrom are direct and not circumstantial evidence, within Rev. St. 1908, § 1624, providing that no person convicted of murder in the first degree on "circumstantial evidence" shall suffer the death penalty. Proof of the commission of acts by accused which tend to prove specific intent is direct proof of such intent, within Rev. St. 1908, § 1609; and the proof is not circumstantial, within section 1624, prohibiting the imposition of the death penalty on a conviction on "circumstantial evidence."

Wechter v. People, 124 Pac. 183, 185, 53 Colo. 89.

Great latitude is to be allowed in the reception of "circumstantial evidence," including all evidence of an indirect nature; whether the inferences afforded by it be drawn from prior experience, or be a deduction of reason from the circumstances of the particular case or of reason aided by experience and the competency of a collateral fact to be used as the basis of legitimate argument, is not to be determined by the exclusiveness of the inferences it may afford relative to the litigated fact, but it is enough if it may tend even in a slight degree to elucidate the inquiry or to assist, though remotely, to a determination properly founded on truth. White v. State, 52 South. 805, 806, 59 Fla. 53.

"Circumstantial evidence" is the evidence of certain facts from which are to be inferred the existence of other material facts, bearing upon the question at issue or fact to be proved. Such evidence is legal and competent, and, when of such character as to exclude every reasonable doubt of a defendant's innocence, is entitled to as much weight as direct evidence. When a conviction is sought on "circumstantial evidence," it must not only be shown by preponderance of evidence that the facts are true, but they must be such as are absolutely opposed upon any reasonable ground of reasoning to the innocence of the accused, and incapable of explanation upon any reasonable hypothesis other than that of his guilt. State v. Aspara, 37 South. 883, 890, 113 La. 940.

"Circumstantial evidence" consists in reasoning from known or proved facts to establish facts which are inferred to exist; but the facts relied upon to establish the inferred facts must be proved by direct evidence, or admitted, and may not themselves be inferred from other facts. Evansville Metal Bed Co. v. Loge, 85 N. E. 979, 981, 42 Ind. App. 461.

In a criminal case, an instruction: "Evidence is of two kinds, direct and circumstantial. 'Direct evidence' is where a witness testifies of his own personal knowledge of the main fact, or facts, to be proven. 'Circumstantial evidence' is proof of certain facts and circumstances in a certain case, from which the jury may infer other and connected facts, which usually and reasonably follow according to the common experience of mankind. Crime may be proven by circumstantial evidence, as well as by direct testimony of eyewitnesses, but the facts and circumstances in evidence should be consistent with each other and with the guilt of the defendants, and inconsistent with any reasonable theory of their innocence"—sufficiently charged on circumstantial evidence. State v. Hillman, 127 S. W. 102, 103, 142 Mo. App. 510.

An instruction that evidence is of two kinds, direct and circumstantial, and that direct evidence is when a witness testified directly of his own knowledge of the main fact or facts to be proven, and that "circumstantial evidence" is proof of certain facts and circumstances in a certain case from which the jury may infer other and connected facts which usually and reasonably follow according to the common experience of mankind, is correct. State v. Gatlin, 70 S. W. 885, 888, 170 Mo. 354.

Conclusiveness

Where guilt depends wholly upon "circumstantial evidence," it is error not to instruct, if the facts are consistent with innocence, to acquit. Middleton v. State, 66 S. E. 22, 23, 7 Ga. App. 1.

"Evidence" is none the less effective because it is circumstantial, if it be consistent, connected, and conclusive. Circumstantial or presumptive evidence is receivable in both civil and criminal cases; but where evidence is circumstantial the jury must be fully satisfied, not only that the circumstances are consistent, with the prisoner's guilt, but they must also be satisfied that the facts are such as to be inconsistent with any other rational conclusion than that of guilt. State v. Samuels, 67 Atl. 165, 166, 6 Pennewill (Del.) 36.

"Circumstantial evidence" is a kind of evidence wholly different from evidence consisting of the direct and positive testimony of eyewitnesses. It is no stronger than the weakest link in the chain. It is inferior in cogency and effect to "direct evidence." The fallacy of the declaration that "circumstances cannot lie" lies in the fact that whether the facts constituting the chain of circumstances existed depends on the truthfulness of the witnesses deposing to the facts. There may be ten links in the chain of circumstantial evidence offered to convict a defendant. Each one of these links or circumstances is testified to by witnesses; and the difference, therefore, is, where the question is whether the defendant committed the homicide, that if the testimony be direct, the killing may be established by the clear testimony of a single eyewitness, whereas, if the evidence be circumstantial, a number of witnesses necessarily must be examined to make out every link in the chain, every circumstance in the series, before the jury will be warranted in deducing from the circumstances the conclusion that the defendant did the killing. A statement by the court to the jury, therefore, that circumstantial evidence is as good as any other kind of evidence, is tantamount to telling the jury that there is no difference between the nature of circumstantial evidence and the nature of direct testimony, and is therefore wholly misleading and erroneous. Haywood v. State, 43 South. 614, 90 Miss. 461.

A request to charge in a criminal case that "circumstantial evidence" is "wholly inferior in cogency, force, and effect to direct evidence" was properly refused. Gordon v. State, 41 South. 847, 849, 147 Ala. 42 (citing Mickle v. State, 27 Ala. 20; Faulk v. State, 52 Ala. 415; Bland v. State, 75 Ala. 574; Thornton v. State, 21 South. 356, 113 Ala. 43, 59 Am. St. Rep. 97).

On a prosecution for murder, an instruction defining "circumstantial evidence," and stating that the evidence in the case, though circumstantial, was competent, and if it was of such a character as to exclude every reasonable theory or hypothesis other than that of defendant's guilt, beyond a reasonable doubt, it should be given the same weight as direct evidence of the fact alleged, and that "circumstantial evidence, when competent, and when complete and satisfying to your minds, * * * is entitled to the same weight that direct evidence is," was not improper. State v. Coleman, 98 N. W. 175, 180, 17 S. D. 594 (quoting and adopting definition in Sackett's Instructions to Juries, and citing and adopting Schoolcraft v. People 7 N. E. 649, 117 Ill. 277; United States v. Reder, 69 Fed. 965; Carlton v. People, 37 N. E. 244, 150 Ill. 181, 41 Am. St. Rep. 346; 1 Greenl. Ev. [13th Ed.] § 13a).

Nature of facts constituting "Circumstantial evidence" consists of the suspicious facts or circumstances which surround a case, but which lack the direct or positive character." State v. Collins, 62 Atl. 224, 226, 5 Pennewill (Del.) 263.

Proof by "circumstantial evidence" consists in proof of a fact by proof of surrounding conditions from which existence of the principal fact may be deduced. Fritz & Groh v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 148 S. W. 74, 78, 243 Mo. 62.

"Circumstantial evidence" is the proof of collateral facts and circumstances from which the mind arrives at the conclusion that the main fact sought to be established in fact existed." Buckler v. Kneezell (Tex.) 91 S. W. 367, 370.

CIRCUS

Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 5049, subd. 23, imposing a license tax on circuses wherein equestrian or acrobatic feats are exhibited, a Wild West show, portraying actual incidents that had happened in the West, and lacking most of the essentials which by common understanding a present-day circus includes, is not a "circus." State v. Cody (Tex.) 120 S. W. 267, 268.

Under Rev. Code 1852, amended to 1893, p. 56, c. 117, § 1, providing that no person, etc., without having first obtained a proper license therefor, shall be engaged in, etc., any trade, that is to say, exhibiting circuses, etc., and section 5 providing that every building, etc., where theatrical performances are exhibited, shall be deemed a "circus" within the meaning of this act, one maintaining a moving picture show must procure a license; the word "theatrical" meaning of or pertaining to a theater or scenic representation resembling the manner of dramatic performers. State v. Morris, 76 Atl. 479, 480, 1 Boyce (Del.) 330.

CITATION

"Notice" and "citation" are not synonymous. A citation is a writ of the court, addressed to an officer of the court, and commands him to do certain things. Service by publication is a citation, and therefore may be resorted to by a justice of the peace. Inasmuch as the powers of the justice of the peace in this respect are derived from the statute, and as by no provision of the statute is that court expressly authorized to acquire jurisdiction over a defendant by issuance and service of notice as provided by statute for district and county courts, we must hold the power wanting, unless "notice" and "citation" are synonymous terms. Carpenter v. Anderson, 77 S. W. 201, 203, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 484.

A "citation" in its general character is a summons. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1327, authorizing the filing of a petition within one year after the probate of a will to contest it, and section 1328, prior to the amendment of 1907, requiring the issuance of a "citation" to named parties, without specifying the time therefor, one who files, three days before the expiration of a year after the probate of a will, a petition to revoke the probate, but who does not, for more than six months thereafter, take any steps to issue "citation," is prima facie guilty of want of diligence, authorizing the dismissal thereof on motion of the executor. Focha v. Focha's Estate, 97 Pac. 321, 322, 8 Cal. App. 576.

CITED

The word "cited," as used in Civ. Code, art. 3518, has been construed to mean any kind of judicial notice which brings home to the defendant knowledge of the demand instituted against him, such as notice of seizure and sale in executory proceedings, or seizure and notice under execution of a twelve-months bond. King v. Guynes, 42 South. 959, 960, 118 La. 344 (citing Cloutier v. Lemée, 33 La. Ann. 305).

Rev. St. 1908, § 322, relating to the collateral inheritance tax, provides that the probate judge of the court having jurisdiction of an estate shall appoint an appraiser to fix its valuation, and that the appraiser shall give notice by mail as to persons having an interest in the property, including the collector of revenue, and section 329 authorizes the state auditor to engage counsel to represent the county collector in proceedings in which he is cited as a party under the preceding section. Section 8057 requires words and phrases to be taken in their ordinary and usual sense; technical words and phrases having a peculiar and appropriate meaning in law to be understood according to their technical import. Held, that while the word "cited," in its technical sense, denotes a writ issuing out of a court to notify a party interested in a cause of action of proceedings therein, it also means notification of legal proceedings, and hence, despite section 8057, the term in this case must be understood as referring to written notice by mail, and consequently the state auditor may hire counsel where the collector is notified by mail of proceedings to enforce the collateral inheritance tax. State ex rel. Curators of University of Missouri v. Walker, 144 S. W. 866, 867, 240 Mo. 708 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1164).

CITIZEN

See Controversy between Citizens of Different States and Citizens of State and Foreign Subjects; Foreign Citizen or Subject.

Citizen or Resident of Territory or District of Columbia as citizen of a state, see State.

A "citizen" is one who owes allegiance to the state, and he has a right to reciprocal protection from it. In re Rousos, 119 N. Y. Supp. 34, 36.

"A 'citizen' is one who, as a member of a nation or of the body politic of a sovereign state, owes allegiance to and may claim reciprocal protection from its government." To be a citizen one must be "a member of an independent political society and as such subject to its law and entitled to its protection in the enjoyment of civil or private rights." There is no such thing as a citizen of a county; a county being a mere subdivision of a state, with bodies executing functions assigned to them by the sovereign in process of government, but not themselves sovereign. A person may be a citizen of a state or of the Union, because they are sovereign. As used in Acts 1905, c. 36, p. 363, re-enacted in Code 1899, c. 32, § 24, giving courts of equity jurisdiction to restrain and abate liquor nuisances on a bill filed by "any citizen of any county," it means only a resident; the statute being intended to protect residents, no matter whether they be aliens or citizens, against illegal liquor selling. Devanney v. Hanson, 53 S. E. 603, 604, 60 W. Va. 8.

The word "citizen" has come to us from the Roman law, where it designated a person who had the freedom of Rome and could exercise the legal and civil privileges of the Roman government. Webster defines "citizen" as a person, native or naturalized, who has the privilege of voting for public officers, and who is qualified to fill public offices in the gift of the people; also either native-born or naturalized persons who are entitled to full participation in the exercise and enjoyment of so-called private rights. Bouvier says "citizen," in American law, is one who, under the Constitution and law of the United States, has a right to vote for representatives in Congress and other public officers, and who is qualified to fill offices in the gift of the people; that all persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens of the United States and of the state where in they reside. It is held in Nebraska that a "citizen," as used in its Constitution, means a person who is an American "citizen" by birth, or a person of foreign birth who has been naturalized. The Constitution of the United States provides that all persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens of the United States and of the state where in they reside. There are, then, two classes of citizens; one of the United States, and one of the state. One class of citizenship may exist in a person without the other, as in the case of a resident of the District of Columbia. Foreigners who have merely declared an intention to become citizens of the United States since the ratification of the Constitution of 1901, but have not perfected their naturalization, cannot register or vote, nor are they citizens of the state within the fourteenth amendment to the federal Constitution, defining federal and state citizenship. Gardina v. Board of Registrars of Jefferson County, 48 South. 788, 790, 791, 160 Ala. 155.

The noun "citizen" has been defined to be one who enjoys the freedom and privileges of a city; a freeman of a city, as distinguished from a foreigner, or one not entitled to its franchises; an inhabitant of a city; a townsman; a person, native, or naturalized, of either sex, who owes allegiance to a government and is entitled to reciprocal protection from it; one who is domiciled in a country, and who is a citizen, though neither native nor naturalized, in such a sense that he takes his legal status from such country. In English law, the term means an inhabitant of a city; the representative of a city, in Parliament. In American law, a citizen is one who, under the Constitution and laws of the United States, has a right to vote for representatives in Congress and other public officers, and who is qualified to fill offices in the gift of the people; one of the sovereign people; a constituent member of the sovereignty, synonymous with the people; a member of the civil state, entitled to all its privileges. A person may be a citizen for commercial purposes, and not for political purposes. Greenough v. Board of Police Com'rs of Town of Tiverton, 74 Atl. 785, 787, 30 R. I. 212, 136 Am. St. Rep. 953.

Aliens

Under Act Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, providing that no civil suit shall be brought against any person by any original process in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant, but where jurisdiction is founded only on the fact that the action is between citizens of different states, suit shall be brought only in the district of the residence of either plaintiff or defendant, an alien, though a resident in a state, can maintain a suit against a citizen of the United States only in the district of defendant's residence. Miller v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co., 147 Fed. 771, 772.

The federal statutes which provide that, when jurisdiction of a federal court is founded on the fact that the action is between citizens of different states, suit shall be brought only in the district of the residence of either plaintiff or defendant, does not apply to aliens. Hall v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 197 Fed. 488, 489.

Under the statute (Rev. St. 1908, § 2116) providing that no person shall be entitled to a divorce, unless he shall have been a bona fide resident and citizen of the state for one year before the commencement of the action, an alien who in good faith has made the state his home for more than a year, and has no residence elsewhere, is a resident and "citizen" of the state. Sedgwick v. Sedgwick, 114 Pac. 488, 490, 50 Colo. 164, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 853.

Children of American parents born abroad

Rev. St. U. S. § 1993, provides that all children born out of the jurisdiction of the United States, whose fathers were at the time of their birth citizens of the United States, are citizens thereof, and the fourteenth amendment to the federal Constitution declares that all persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are "citizens of the United States." Held, that the Constitution is merely declarative of existing rights, and under the statute a child born in a foreign country, but whose father was at the time of his birth a citizen of the United States, is a citizen thereof. Buckley v. McDonald, 84 Pac. 1114, 1115, 33 Mont. 483.

Children of resident alien

Rev. St. § 2172, provides that the children of persons who have been duly naturalized, being under the age of 21 years at the time of the naturalization of their parents, shall, if dwelling in the United States, be considered as "citizens" thereof; and the naturalization law (Act June 29, 1906, c. 3592, § 4, cl. 6, 34 Stat. 596), provides that, when any alien who has declared his intention to become a citizen dies before he is actually naturalized, the widow and minor children of such alien may, by complying with the other provisions of the statute, be naturalized without any declaration of intention. Applicant was born in England, where his father died, and his mother was again married to an alien, who emigrated to the United States when applicant was about 4 years of age. When the applicant was about 17 years old and residing with the stepfather as a member of his family, the stepfather made a declaration of intention, but died without having been naturalized. Held, that the applicant was entitled to naturalization on the strength of his stepfather's declaration. In re Robertson, 179 Fed. 131, 132.

As a man is a "citizen" of the country to which his father owes allegiance, it was incumbent on one alleging in an election contest that a voter was not a citizen of the United States to show that such voter's father was not a citizen thereof during his son's minority. Savage v. Umphries (Tex.) 118 S. W. 893, 909.

As citizen of state

A phrase describing one as "a citizen of Franklin county, Tennessee," sufficiently describes him as a citizen of the state and a resident of the county. Gruetter v. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co., 181 Fed. 248, 255.

Corporation

A corporation is not a "citizen" in the ordinary meaning of the term as used in an indictment against it. United States Board & Paper Co. v. State, 91 N. E. 953, 956, 174 Ind. 460.

A corporation cannot be considered a "citizen," inhabitant, or resident of a state in which it has not been incorporated for the purpose of determining federal jurisdiction. Fribourg v. Pullman Co., 176 Fed. 981, 983.

A corporation is not a "citizen," within Const. art. 2, § 18, providing that the General Assembly shall not grant to any citizen or class of citizens privileges or immunities which upon the same terms shall not equally belong to all citizens. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. State, 111 S. W. 456, 460, 86 Ark. 412.

A corporation is not a "citizen," within Const. U. S. Amend. 14, as to the abridgment of privileges and immunities of citizens. Mutual Mfg. Co. v. Alsbaugh, 91 N. E. 504, 505, 174 Ind. 381; Same v. Hauenstine, 91 N. E. 959, 174 Ind. 757; In re Speed's Estate, 74 N. E. 809, 811, 216 Ill. 23, 108 Am. St. Rep. 189; Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. State, 111 S. W. 456, 460, 86 Ark. 412; Kirven v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co., 145 Fed. 288, 292, 76 C. C. A. 172, 7 Ann. Cas. 219; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Ford, 99 S. W. 260, 262, 124 Ky. 403; Mutual Mfg. Co. v. Alsbaugh, 91 N. E. 504, 505, 174 Ind. 381; State v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 51 South. 918, 921, 97 Miss. 35, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1150; Continental Life Ins. & Inv. Co. v. Hattabaugh, 121 Pac. 81, 84, 21 Idaho, 285; Western Turf Ass'n v. Greenberg, 27 Sup. Ct. 384, 386, 204 U. S. 359, 51 L. Ed. 520; Ulmer v. First Nat. Bank of St. Petersburg, 55 South. 405, 407, 61 Fla. 460; Taylor v. Same, 55 South. 408, 61 Fla. 460.

A corporation is not a "citizen" of a state within Const. U. S. art. 4, § 2, securing to citizens of each state the privileges and immunities of the citizens of the several states. In re Speed's Estate, 74 N. E. 809, 811, 216 Ill. 23, 108 Am. St. Rep. 189; Attorney General v. Electric Storage Battery Co., 74 N. E. 467, 188 Mass. 239; State v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 51 So. 918, 921, 97 Miss. 35, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1150; Aetna Ins. Co. v. Brigham, 48 S. E. 348, 349, 120 Ga. 925; Humphreys v. State, 70 N. E. 957, 962, 70 Ohio St. 67, 65 L. R. A. 776, 101 Am. St. Rep. 888, 1 Ann. Cas. 233 (quoting 10 Cyc. p. 150); Ducat v. City of Chicago, 48 Ill. 172, 95 Am. Dec. 529; Tatem v. Wright, 23 N. J. Law, 429; Ducat v. Chicago, 77 U. S. [10 Wall.] 410, 19 L. Ed. 972; Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. State, 111 S. W. 456, 460, 86 Ark. 412; In re Speed's Estate, 74 N. E. 809, 811, 216 Ill. 23, 108 Am. St. Rep. 189; Commonwealth v. Gregory, 89 S. W. 168, 170, 121 Ky. 256; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Ford, 99 S. W. 260, 262, 124 Ky. 403.

A foreign corporation is not a "citizen" within the meaning of article 4, § 2, Const. U. S. Cumberland Gaslight Co. v. West Virginia & Maryland Gas Co., 188 Fed. 585, 596, 110 C. C. A. 383; State ex rel. Atlantic Horse Ins. Co. v. Blake, 144 S. W. 1094, 1096, 241 Mo. 100, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1283; In re Avery's Estate, 92 N. Y. Supp. 974, 979, 45 Misc. Rep. 529.

A corporation is a mere creature of local law, incapable of having legal existence beyond the limits of the sovereignty creating it, and must be treated as a citizen of the state creating it, within the meaning of the provision of the federal Constitution extending judicial power in federal courts to controversies between citizens of different states. Lemon v. Imperial Window Glass Co., 199 Fed. 927, 931.

It is settled that a corporation is a "citizen" of the state creating it, for the purposes of federal jurisdiction. A corporation cannot change its residence or "citizenship." It can have its legal home only at the place where it is located by or under the authority of its charter. Garrett & Co. v. Bear, 56 S. E. 479, 144 N. C. 23.

A foreign insurance company engaged in business in New York by permission of the insurance department is, so far as any litigation is concerned, a "citizen" of New York. Webster v. Columbian Nat. Life Ins. Co., 116 N. Y. Supp. 404, 181 App. Div. 837.

The word "citizens" is a descriptive word; no broader, to say the least, than "people." A corporation is a citizen of a state for purposes of jurisdiction of the federal courts, and as a citizen it may locate mining claims under the laws of the United States, and is entitled to the benefit of the Indian depredation acts. Hale v. Henkel, 28 Sup. Ct. 370, 383, 201 U. S. 43, 50 L. Ed. 652.

A state corporation is a citizen of the United States, within the meaning of Act March 3, 1887, c. 376, § 5, 24 Stat. 557, conferring upon such citizens who are bona fide purchasers from a railway company of land excepted from its grant the right to purchase the same from the government. Ramsey v. Tacoma Land Co., 25 Sup. Ct. 286, 287, 196 U. S. 360, 49 L. Ed. 513.

While a corporation is not a "citizen" within the meaning of the federal Constitution, yet it is a "person" within its terms. Southern B. Co. v. Greene, 49 South. 404, 409, 160 Ala. 396.

A corporation originally incorporated in the Indian territory under the Arkansas statutes which were put in force therein by the act of Congress of February 18, 1901 (31 Stat. 794, c. 379), became an Oklahoma corporation when that state was admitted to the Union, and must be regarded for jurisdictional purposes as a "citizen" of that state. Shulthis v. McDougal, 32 Sup. Ct. 704, 706, 225 U. S. 561, 56 L. Ed. 1205.

A foreign corporation is not a "citizen" within the meaning of the Constitution, and a state statute forbidding foreign insurance corporations from doing business within the state in violation of the state law does not conflict with the Constitution of the United States. Noble v. Mitchell, 17 Sup. Ct. 110, 111, 164 U. S. 367, 41 L. Ed. 472.

While, under Act March 3, 1887, c. 373, § 4, 24 Stat. 554, as amended by Act Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, § 4, 25 Stat. 436, national banks are deemed "citizens" of the states where located for the purposes of federal jurisdiction, yet, when a right is asserted by a national bank under authority of the law of its creation, the determination of such right involves a federal question, of which a federal court has jurisdiction, without regard to citizenship, if the requisite amount is involved. Larabee v. Dolley, 175 Fed. 365, 384.

"It is now held by the English courts that a foreign corporation, by establishing an office in England and carrying on business there, is to be considered as a resident of England, and may be sued in its courts." Under the system prevailing in this country, corporations are regarded as citizens of the state in which they are created, but in other states are regarded as foreign corporations, and their right to transact business therein is subject to such conditions and restrictions as the Legislatures of those states may prescribe. The residence of a corporation is within the state in which it is created, and, so long as it confines the exercise of its corporate powers within the state, it is beyond the reach of the process of courts of other states. Jameson v. Simonds Saw Co., 84 Pac. 289, 290, 2 Cal. App. 582.

A foreign corporation, though a person, under Statutory Construction Law, § 5, is not a "citizen," within the provision of the United States Constitution that citizens of each state shall be entitled to the privileges and immunities of citizens of the several states. In re Avery's Estate, 92 N. Y. Supp. 974, 979, 45 Misc. Rep. 529.

St. 1898, § 1770b, requiring foreign corporations to file articles with the Secretary of State before doing business in the state, and that every contract relating to property within the state shall be void unless such provisions are complied with, is constitutional, as such corporation is not a "citizen" of any state within Const. U. S. art. 4, § 2, and hence has no right to exercise its franchise in another state than that of its creation except on such terms as each state may impose. Independent Tug Line v. Lake Superior Lumber & Box Co., 131 N. W. 408, 409, 146 Wis. 121.

A corporation organized under the laws of any one of the United States is in contemplation of law a "citizen" and "resident" of the state in which it is incorporated. Act March 3, 1887, c. 373, 24 Stat. 552, as corrected and amended by Act Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, 25 Stat. 433, provides for the removal of causes in which there shall be controversy between citizens of the state and foreign states, citizens, or subjects; and section 2 declares that all such suits may be removed to the Circuit Court of the United States for the proper district by the defendant or defendants therein being "nonresidents" of that state. Held that, where defendant was an alien insurance corporation, it was a nonresident of California within such act, though it had a branch office within the state for the transaction of business. Baumgarten v. Alliance Assur. Co., 153 Fed. 301, 302, 303, 304 (citing Shaw v. Quincy Min. Co., 12 Sup. Ct. 935, 145 U. S. 444, 36 L. Ed. 768; Miller v. Eastern Oregon Gold Min. Co., 45 Fed. 348; Gilbert v. New Zealand Ins. Co., 49 Fed. 884, 15 L. R. A. 125; Barrow S. S. Co. v. Kane, 18 Sup. Ct. 528, 170 U. S. 100, 42 L. Ed. 964; In re Keasbey & M. Co., 16 Sup. Ct. 273, 160 U. S. 229, 40 L. Ed. 402; Howard v. Gold Reefs of Georgia, 102 Fed. 657; Shattuck v. North British & Mercantile Ins. Co., 58 Fed. 609, 7 C. C. A. 386).

A domestic corporation, organized to manufacture and deal in intoxicating liquors, spirits, etc., is a "citizen resident of the state," within Gen. Laws 1896, c. 102, § 2, providing that the town council of the several towns and boards of commissioners may grant liquor licenses to such citizens resident within the state, for the manufacture and sale of liquor, as they deem proper. Greenough v. Board of Police Com'rs of Town of Tiverton, 74 Atl. 785, 787, 30 R. I. 212, 136 Am. St. Rep. 953.

A charitable corporation created by decree of the Spanish crown to operate in Porto Rico is not a "citizen" of the United States within the meaning of Act March 2, 1901, c. 812, § 3, 31 Stat. 953, extending the jurisdiction of the district court for Porto Rico to controversies where the parties or either of them are citizens of the United States, but since the enactment of Act April 12, 1900, c. 191, 31 Stat. 77, establishing a civil government for Porto Rico, is, if a citizen of any country, a citizen of Porto Rico. Martinez v. La Asociacion de Señoras Damas Del Santo Asilo de Ponce, 29 Sup. Ct. 327, 328, 213 U. S. 20, 53 L. Ed. 679.

A joint-stock company, though a legal entity, and suable in the name of its president under state laws, is not a corporation, and cannot be deemed to have citizenship for the purpose of removing actions against it to the federal courts. Saunders v. Adams Express Co., 136 Fed. 494, 495 (citing Chapman v. Barney, 9 Sup. Ct. 426, 129 U. S. 677, 32 L. Ed. 800; Great Southern Fire Proof Hotel Co. v. Jones, 20 Sup. Ct. 690, 177 U. S. 449, 44 L. Ed. 842; Thomas v. Ohio State University, 25 Sup. Ct. 24, 195 U. S. 207, 49 L. Ed. 160; Boatner v. American Express Co., 122 Fed. 714).

Declaration of intention

An alien's declaration of his intention to become a citizen of the United States did not make him a citizen, he having never taken out his naturalization papers. Wallenburg v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 159 Fed. 217, 218.

Indian

"The words 'member' or 'members' and 'citizen' or 'citizens' shall be held to mean members or citizens of the Choctaw or Chickasaw Tribe of Indians in Indian Territory not including freedmen," under Act July 1, 1902, c. 1362, 32 Stat. 641, § 3. Frame v. Bivens, 189 Fed. 785, 788.

The relationship of guardian and ward existing between the United States and an Indian of the Osage Tribe in Oklahoma is not affected by the mere fact that such Indian may be a citizen of the United States and of the state. Mosier v. United States, 198 Fed. 54, 57, 117 O. C. A. 162.

The Indians of a tribe are not citizens; and, though not treated as independent foreign nations, they are not subject to jurisdiction of the state to the same extent as its citizens. Seneca Nation of Indians v. Appleby, 89 N. E. 835, 836, 196 N. Y. 318.

Crimes committed by one Indian upon the person of another within the limits of the Tulalip Reservation, in the state of Washington, are not excepted from the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal courts, under Act March 3, 1885, c. 341, § 9, 23 Stat. 385, because both parties hold patents from the United States, issued under the authority of the treaty with the Omahas of March 16, 1854 (10 Stat. 1043), and the treaty of Point Elliott of January 22, 1855 (12 Stat. 927), and are therefore, by virtue of Act Feb. 8, 1887, c. 119, § 6, 24 Stat. 388, citizens of the United States. United States v. Celestine, 30 Sup. Ct. 98, 215 U. S. 278, 54 L. Ed. 195.

The distinction between different classes of "citizens" was recognized by the Cherokees in the difference in their intermarriage law as applied to the whites and to the Indians of other tribes, by the provision in the intermarriage law that a white man intermarried with an Indian by blood acquires certain rights as a citizen, but no provision that if he marries a Cherokee citizen not of Indian blood he shall be regarded as a citizen at all, and by the provision that if, once having married an Indian by blood, he marries the second time a citizen not by blood, he loses all his rights as a citizen; and the same distinction between citizens as such and citizens with property rights has also been recognized by Congress in enactments relating to other Indians than the five Civilized Tribes, as to which see Act Aug. 9, 1888, 25 Stat. 392, c. 818; Act May 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 96, c. 182; and Act June 7, 1897, 30 Stat. c. 3. Red Bird v. United States, 27 Sup. Ct. 29, 34, 203 U. S. 76, 51 L. Ed. 96.

As inhabitant

The word "inhabitants" in its political sense means "citizens." In re Silkman, 84 N. Y. Supp. 1025, 1034, 1038, 88 App. Div. 102.

The words "inhabitant," "citizen," and "resident" mean substantially the same thing, and one is an "inhabitant," "resident," or "citizen" of the place where he has his domicile or home. A man's residence is his home or habitation, where that residence is fixed, and at a particular place, and he does not entertain a present intention of removing therefrom. To constitute a domicile but two elements are necessary, the act and the intention. Stevens v. Larwill, 84 S. W. 113, 118, 110 Mo. App. 140 (citing State ex rel. Lowe v. Banta, 71 Mo. App. 32; Greene v. Beckwith, 38 Mo. 384; Johnson v. Smith, 43 Mo. 499; Tiller v. Abernathy, 37 Mo. 196).

An averment that the parties are "inhabitants" or "residents" of different states is not equivalent to an averment that they are "citizens." Wood v. Mann, 1 Sumn. 578, 30 Fed. Cas. 447, 448.

The word "inhabitant" is equivalent to the word "citizen" as used in U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 587, § 740, providing that, when a state contains more than one district, every suit not of a local nature in the Circuit or District Courts thereof against a single defendant, inhabitant of such state, must be brought in the district where he resides, and is used to avoid the incongruity of speaking of citizens of anything less than a state when the word "inhabitant" applies to a citizen of any district in a state which was divided into more than one district. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. v. Vehicle Equipment Co., 155 Fed. 676, 678 (citing Galveston, H. & S. A. Co., 14 Sup. Ct. 401, 151 U. S. 496, 38 L. Ed. 248).

Levee district

A levee district, such as that created by Acts 1909, p. 660, creating levee district No. 2, in Jackson county, is not within Const. art. 2, § 18, prohibiting the granting to any citizen or class of citizens privileges which shall not belong to all citizens upon the same terms, since a levee district is a governmental agency, and not a "citizen," and its powers are public duties, and not a grant of privileges. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Board of Directors of Levee Dist. No. 2, Jackson County (Ark.) 145 S. W. 892, 896.

Naturalized citizen

Where the term "Mexican" or "Spaniard" or other similar designation of nationality is used in a statute, it includes naturalized "citizens" as well as those who are native-born. Ruls' Hevis v. Chambers, 15 Tex. 586, 589.

Negro

The term "citizens of the United States," as used in Const. art. 2, § 1, providing that every male citizen of the United States of the age of 21 years and upward, excepting paupers, etc., having his residence established in the state for the term of three months next preceding any election shall be an elector for governor, senators, and representatives in the town or plantation where his residence is established, includes free colored persons of African descent. Opinions of the Justices, 44 Me. 505, 515.

People synonymous

See People.

As person

See Person.

Personal representative

The personal representative of a nonresident deceased, having qualified as such in this state, was a "citizen" of the state for purposes of the action, and as bearing on the question of removal of the cause. Lemon's Adm'r v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 125 S. W. 701, 702, 137 Ky. 276.

As resident

The word "residence" may refer either to a fixed and settled abode or to one merely of some duration; hence a statement of an applicant for insurance that his residence was in Kansas was not necessarily a declaration that he was a "citizen" of that state. Kroge v. Modern Brotherhood of America (Mo.) 105 S. W. 685, 687.

An averment in a pleading that plaintiff is a resident of a particular state is not equivalent to one that he is a "citizen" of that state, and is insufficient to give a federal court jurisdiction, where that is dependent on diversity of citizenship. Board of Trustees of Mohican Tp., Ashland County, Ohio, v. Johnson, 133 Fed. 524, 66 C. C. A. 592.

State

A proceeding before the state board of control to determine water rights in a river as between various claimants under authority conferred by Or. Laws 1909, p. 319, is, in effect, a proceeding on behalf of the state, through an administrative or executive board, to have the rights of the various claimants determined, and the state, which is not a "citizen" within the removal statutes, being, in effect, a party to the proceeding, it was not removable to the federal court under Judicial Code, § 24. In re Silvies River, 199 Fed. 495, 503.

A suit by a state to recover taxes on property omitted from taxation brought against nonresidents is not removable to the federal court, as there was no diversity of citizenship; a state not being a "citizen" within U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 509.—Darnell v. State, 90 N. E. 769, 772, 174 Ind. 143.

A state is not a "citizen," within the meaning of the Constitution or the acts of Congress; hence the federal Circuit Court cannot take cognizance of a case instituted by a state against a corporation of another state as one presenting a controversy between citizens of different states. Minnesota v. Northern Securities Co., 24 Sup. Ct. 598, 601, 194 U. S. 48, 48 L. Ed. 870 (citing Postal Telegraph Cable Co. v. Alabama, 15 Sup. Ct. 192, 155 U. S. 482, 487, 39 L. Ed. 231).

Town

"Citizens," as used in a statute amending the charter of a railroad and directing that the road build its line to or near a city named, and that a certain amount of the expense of building the road should be paid by the town, or the citizens thereof, refers to the people of the town, and both "citizens" and "town" as used in that statute are synonymous. Macon & B. R. Co. v. Gibson, 11 S. E. 442, 445, 85 Ga. 1, 21 Am. St. Rep. 135.

As voter

"Citizen" and "elector" are not synonymous, for the qualifications of a voter are prescribed by the laws of the different states. In re Rousos, 119 N. Y. Supp. 34, 36.

The word "citizen," as used in a statute to denote the persons who may sign petitions for change of school district boundaries, means an elector. School Dist. No. 11 v. School Dist. No. 20, 39 S. W. 850, 851, 63 Ark. 543.

Woman

Where a woman was born a "citizen" of the United States, she did not lose her citizenship by marrying an alien, at least so long as she continued to reside in the United States. Wallenburg v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 159 Fed. 217, 219.

CITIZEN OF SPAIN

A corporation created by a decree of the Spanish crown for charitable purposes, and limited in its field of operations to Porto Rico, does not continue, after the ratification of the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain, to be a citizen or subject of Spain, within the meaning of Act March 2, 1901, c. 812, § 3, 31 Stat. 953, extending the jurisdiction of the District Court of the United States for Porto Rico to controversies where the parties or either of them are citizens or subjects of a foreign state. Martinez v. La. Asociacion de Señoras Damas Del Santo Asilo de Ponce, 29 Sup. Ct. 327, 328, 213 U. S. 20, 53 L. Ed. 679.

CITIZEN OF SWEDEN

The alienage of the plaintiff is sufficiently alleged to sustain the jurisdiction of a federal Circuit Court by an averment in the complaint that the plaintiff now is, and for more than one year last past has been, a resident of Washington and a "citizen of Sweden," although at the time that the action was brought Sweden was under a monarchical form of government, since the designation "citizen of Sweden" could only have been intended as a statement of the nationality of the plaintiff, viz., the country to which he bore allegiance. O. H. Nichols Lumber Co. v. Franson, 27 Sup. Ct. 102, 104, 203 U. S. 278, 51 L. Ed. 181.

CITIZENSHIP

See Diverse Citizenship.

Certificate of, see Certificate of Citizenship.

A fundamental right inherent in "state citizenship" is a privilege or immunity of that citizenship only. Privileges and immunities of "citizens of the United States," on the other hand, are only such as arise out of the nature and essential character of the national government, or are specifically granted or secured to all citizens or persons by the Constitution of the United States. Twining v. New Jersey, 29 Sup. Ct. 14, 18, 211 U. S. 78, 94, 53 L. Ed. 97.

An allegation in a declaration, that plaintiff complains of "the Chicago Lumber Company, who is a citizen of the state of Illinois, defendant in this suit," is an allegation of the "citizenship" of the corporation as one incorporated under the laws of Illinois, within the act of Congress conferring jurisdiction. Chicago Lumber Co. v. Comstock, 71 Fed. 477, 480, 18 C. C. A. 207.

To make "citizenship," the two elements of residence and the intention that such residence shall be permanent must concur. Where complainant alleged in his bill in a federal court that he was a citizen of North Carolina, and it was shown without contradiction that he was a native of that state, that his home, where his wife and family resided, had always been there, and that he visited them frequently and always voted there in national elections, the presumption of his citizenship in that state was not overcome by proof that for several years he had been, for a large part of the time, in Georgia, where the suit was brought, in connection with his business there in different places, that he took part in a political meeting there as member of a local committee, and that on one occasion he registered and voted there at a primary, especially since the Georgia statute requires apparently only residence and the payment of taxes to entitle any citizen of the United States to vote. Gaddie v. Mann, 147 Fed. 955, 956.

The leading purpose in the adoption of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the federal Constitution, the former defining "citizenship" by declaring "all persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside," and the latter securing to citizens of the United States the right to vote, was to secure to persons of African descent the full enjoyment of the privileges of citizens, including the right to vote; and the federal courts have jurisdiction of a suit by such person against the officers of a state to restrain them from acting under a statute claimed to violate said amendments by abridging or denying such privileges. The statutes of South Carolina (Gen. St. 1882) relating to the registration of voters constitute an unreasonable restriction on the right of suffrage and are in violation of the federal Constitution. Mills v. Green, 67 Fed. 818, 828.

"Citizenship" does not carry with it the right on the part of the citizen to dispose of land which he may own in any way he sees fit, without reference to the character of the title by which it is held. The right to sell property is not derived from, and is not dependent on, citizenship. Neither does it detract from the dignity of citizenship that a person is not possessed of an estate, or, if possessed of an estate, that he is deprived for the time being of the right to alienate it. Williams v. Steinmetz, 82 P. 986, 989, 16 Okl. 104.

"Citizenship," essential to confer federal jurisdiction, cannot depend entirely on birth, but may be changed from one state to another, or to a foreign country, by change of residence. Hammerstein v. Lyne, 200 Fed. 165, 170.

Domicile distinguished

"Citizenship" and "domicile" are not the same thing. Neither necessarily controls the other. The matter of domicile is ordinarily of private concern only. Citizenship is a matter of public concern, over which the government assumes, in some degree, control. It is in its nature continuous, and, once established, is presumed to continue until the contrary is shown. A change of domicile, merely, does not effect a change of allegiance. To overcome the presumption of the continuance of the allegiance once established, evidence of an actual removal or a continued residence abroad, with a fixed purpose to throw off and terminate the former allegiance, must be produced. State v. Jackson, 65 A. 657, 660, 79 Vt. 504, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1245.

"Domicile" and "citizenship" are substantially synonymous terms in most cases, but there is a marked distinction between "domicile" and "residence"; the term "residence" indicating a place of abode, whether permanent or temporary, while "domicile" denotes a fixed permanent residence, to which, when absent, one has the intention of returning, and when there has been an actual removal with intent to make a permanent residence, and the acts of the party correspond with the purpose, the change of domicile is completed, and the law forces on him the character of a citizen of the state where he has chosen his domicile, although he may have formerly declared that he nevertheless considered himself a citizen of the state he had left. Harding v. Standard Oil Co., 182 Fed. 421, 423, 424.

To constitute "citizenship" of a state in relation to the federal Judiciary Act, there must be residence within the state and an intention that the residence shall be permanent. State citizenship means the same thing as "domicile" in its general acceptance. Marks v. Marks, 75 Fed. 321, 324.

Residence distinguished

"Residence" is not equivalent to "citizenship." Yocum v. Parker, 130 Fed. 770, 771, 66 C. C. A. 80.

"Citizenship" and "residence" are not synonymous terms. A person may reside in one state and be a citizen in another. An allegation, in a petition for removal of a suit pending in the state court to the federal court, that defendant is a citizen of a state other than that in which the suit is pending, is not equivalent to an allegation that he is a nonresident of that state, and does not show his right to a removal. Irving v. Smith, 132 Fed. 207.

"Citizenship" and "residence" are not convertible terms. "Citizenship" is a status or condition, and is the result of both act and intent. An adult person cannot become a citizen of a state by simply intending to, nor does any one become such citizen by mere residence. The residence and the intent must coexist and correspond; and though, under ordinary circumstances, the former may be sufficient evidence of the latter, it is not conclusive, and the contrary may always be shown; and when the question of citizenship turns on the intention with which a person has resided in a particular state, his own testimony, under ordinary circumstances, is entitled to great weight on the point. Eisele v. Oddie, 128 Fed. 941, 945.

An averment of the "residence" of a plaintiff is not equivalent to one of "citizenship," and does not give a circuit court jurisdiction, where it is dependent on diversity of citizenship. Sanbo v. Union Pac. Coal Co., 140 Fed. 713, 714, 72 C. C. A. 24.

The terms "residence" and "citizenship" are not equivalents. An allegation in a complaint that plaintiff is a "bona fide resident" of a certain state is not one of his "citizenship" in such state, and is not sufficient to give a federal court jurisdiction on the ground of diversity of citizenship. Kolke v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 157 Fed. 623, 624 (citing Marks v. Marks [C. C.] 75 Fed. 321; Wolfe v. Hartford, etc., Ins. Co., 148 U. S. 389, 13 Sup. Ct. 602, 37 L. Ed. 493; Horne v. Hammond Co., 155 U. S. 393, 15 Sup. Ct. 167, 39 L. Ed. 197; Menard v. Goggan, 121 U. S. 253, 7 Sup. Ct. 873, 30 L. Ed. 914).

A distinction is to be observed between "citizenship" and "residence" for the purpose of suit. The question of suability and jurisdiction is not so much one of citizenship as of finding. If a citizen of one state is found, for the purpose of the lawful service of judicial process, in another, he may ordinarily be sued there. A partnership may be sued in any county in which one of the partners has such a residence as will confer upon the courts of that county jurisdiction over his person, regardless of the place of his citizenship. J. B. Pyron & Son v. Ruohs, 48 S. E. 434, 436, 120 Ga. 1060 (quoting Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Koontz, 104 U. S. 5, 10, 26 L. Ed. 643; Williams v. East Tennessee, V. & G. Ry. Co., 16 S. E. 303, 90 Ga. 519, 522).

"Citizenship" carries with it the idea of connection or identification with the state, and a participation in its functions, and, as such, implies much more than "residence." "Citizenship" as used in the removal laws and the jurisdiction statute of 1875 means "residence" with the intention of permanently remaining in a particular place. Harding v. Standard Oil Co., 182 Fed. 421, 425.

Politically and socially, a "city" is an aggregation of people. Cunningham v. City of Seattle, 84 Pac. 641, 642, 42 Wash. 184.

A "city" is a mere intangible thing, existing only in legal contemplation; it could not itself use the franchise, and can act only through its governing body, the board of trustees. A grant of a franchise, in terms, to the city, would be, in effect, a grant to the body having the power to use it. Davoust v. City of Alameda, 84 Pac. 760, 763, 149 Cal. 69.

"The 'city' is a miniature state, the council is its legislature, the charter is its constitution; thus as an exercise of legislative power pursuant to a proper delegation of authority, an ordinance of a city stands on the same general footing as an act of the Legislature." Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Hartford City, 85 N. E. 362, 364, 170 Ind. 674, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 461 (quoting and adopting the definition in Citizens' Gas & Min. Co. v. Town of Elwood, 16 N. E. 624, 626, 114 Ind. 832, 836).

A "city" is a corporation as well as a political and governmental subdivision and agency. Street v. Varney Electrical Supply Co., 66 N. E. 895, 896, 160 Ind. 338, 61 L. R. A. 154, 98 Am. St. Rep. 325.

An affidavit to compel plaintiff to give security for costs, under Code Civ. Proc. § 3268, as amended by Laws 1904, c. 524, authorizing defendant in an action in the City Court of New York to require security for costs from plaintiff if the latter is a nonresident, is insufficient, where it fails to allege that plaintiff has no office either in the borough of the Bronx or in the borough of Manhattan, but alleges merely that he resides in Brooklyn, and has no office in the borough of Manhattan, regardless of whether the word "city," as used in the Code, is governed by New York City charter (section 1345, c. 466, Laws 1901), defining the word "city" so as to include the entire city, of five boroughs, and not merely the original city, as it existed prior to the consolidation. Pelz v. Roth, 92 N. Y. Supp. 263, 264, 46 Misc. Rep. 419.

Section 4935 of the Rev. Codes, which provides: "In any civil action or proceeding wherein the state or the people of the state, is a party plaintiff, or any state officer, in his official capacity, or on behalf of the state, or any county, or city, is a party plaintiff or defendant, no bond, written undertaking, or security can be required of the state or the people thereof, or any officer thereof, or of any county, or city; but on complying with the other provisions of this Code, the state, or the people thereof, or any state officer acting in his official capacity, or any county or city, have the same rights, remedies, and benefits as if the bond, undertaking, or security were given and approved as required by this Code"—applies to villages organized under the laws of this state governing the organization of cities and villages. Trueman v. Village of St. Maries, 123 Pac. 508, 509, 21 Idaho, 632.

"Cities" are deemed voluntary corporations, and, while they exercise political functions, it is considered that their charters are granted, not so much with a view to the interests of the public, as for the private advantage of their citizens. James v. Trustees of Wellston Tp., 90 Pac. 100, 101, 105, 18 Okl. 56.

Const. §§ 109, 135, 143, vesting the judicial power in designated courts, and authorizing the establishment of a police court in each "city and town," and declaring that all laws inconsistent with the Constitution shall cease on its adoption, repeal so much of the charter of the district of Clifton as provides for a police court thereof; the words, "city and town" referring to cities and towns classified by section 143. Morris v. Randall, 112 S. W. 856, 857, 129 Ky. 720.

The initiative provision of the charter of Los Angeles (St. 1903, p. 572) authorizing direct legislation by the citizens, is authorized by Const. art. 11, § 11, providing that any county, "city," town, or township may make and enforce within its limits certain regulations; the term "city" not meaning some board or officers of the city, but the municipality, or the people in their organized condition as a body politic. As political subdivision of state Political subdivision within constitutional provision, see Political Subdivision.

"A 'city' is a creation of the Legislature, a subordinate agency of the state, which exercises only such power as the Legislature confers, and for such period of time as the Legislature in its discretion determines." Wulf v. Kansas City, 94 Pac. 207, 209, 77 Kan. 358.

"A 'city' is a branch, a subordinate agent, of the state government, vested with grave and important powers of state government delegated to it by the state." Bryant v. Logan, 49 S. E. 21, 22, 56 W. Va. 141, 8 Ann. Cas. 1011.

A "city" is only a political subdivision of the state, made for the convenient administration of the government. It is an instrumentality with powers more or less enlarged, according to the requirements of the public, which may be increased or repealed at the will of the Legislature. State v. Aberdeen, 74 Pac. 1022, 1024, 84 Wash. 61.

"The 'city' is an arm or branch of the state government, and in the administration of its public affairs it acts as an agent of the state, and no property held by it for a purely public or governmental purpose is subject to taxation any more than the public property of the state itself is subject to taxation." A sinking fund created to liquidate the bonded debt incurred by a city in the purchase of a waterworks system is but so much taxes collected to liquidate a debt, incurred for a public purpose, notwithstanding it is invested in interest-bearing stocks and bonds, and is exempt from taxation under Const. § 170, providing that public property for public purposes shall not be taxed. Commonwealth ex rel. Albritton v. Lebanon Waterworks Co., 112 S. W. 1128, 1129, 130 Ky. 61.

"Cities" are territorial subdivisions of the state, created as public corporations for convenience in administration of government, and they exercise only the powers which have been conferred expressly or by necessary implication, and they have a twofold character, the one governmental and the other private; and in the former they execute the functions and possess the attributes of sovereignty delegated by the Legislature, while in the latter they are clothed with the capacities of a private corporation, and may claim its rights and immunities, and are subject to its liabilities. Higginson v. Slaterry, 99 N. E. 523, 524, 212 Mass. 583, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 215.

A "city" is but the political subdivision of the state, and is given power to maintain a waterworks system for the purpose of promoting the comfort, health, and safety of its inhabitants as the agent of the state. Commonwealth v. City of Covington, 107 S. W. 231, 232, 128 Ky. 36, 32 Ky. Law Rep. 837, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1214; Same v. City of Newport, 107 S. W. 232, 32 Ky. Law Rep. 820.

Under Act Cal. April 19, 1856 (St. 1856, p. 145), commonly known as the "consolidation act," which provided that the corporation known as the "City of San Francisco" shall "remain and continue to be a body politic and corporate in name and fact, by the name of the City and County of San Francisco," such corporation in matters of government, must be regarded as a city, while geographically it is one of the legal subdivisions of the state and in that respect is a county. Kahn v. Sutro, 46 Pac. 87, 89, 114 Cal. 316.

"A 'city' is only a political subdivision of the state, made for the convenient administration of the government. It is an instrumentality, with powers more or less enlarged, according to the requirements of the public, and which may be increased or repealed at the will of the Legislature. In directing, therefore, a particular tax by such corporation, and the appropriation of the proceeds to some special municipal purpose, the Legislature only exercises a power through its subordinate agent, which it could exercise directly; and it does this, only in another way, when it directs such corporation to assume and pay a particular claim not legally binding for want of some formality in its creation, but for which the corporation has received an equivalent." City of Worcester v. Worcester Consol. St. Ry. Co., 25 Sup. Ct. 327, 330, 196 U. S. 539, 49 L. Ed. 591 (quoting and adopting the definition in New Orleans v. Clark, 95 U. S. 644, 654, 24 L. Ed. 521, 522).

"A 'city or incorporated town' not only bears a property or private relation to the state, but it also bears a political relation thereto. In its political relation it is merely an agency of the state." Where it holds a street for the benefit of the public, the Legislature can direct the manner in which it shall exercise its control. Harder's Fireproof Storage & Van Co. v. City of Chicago, 85 N. E. 245, 251, 235 Ill. 58, 14 Ann. Cas. 536 (quoting the definition in Cicero Lumber Co. v. Town of Cicero, 51 N. E. 758, 762, 176 Ill. 9, 22, 42 L. R. A. 696, 68 Am. St. Rep. 155).

Town distinguished

Town as including city, see Town.

A town is not a "city" within the statute authorizing the adoption of children upon the consent of the mayor of the "city" where the child is living, so that the adoption proceedings were invalid where the consent was given by the mayor of a "town." Anderson v. Blakesly (Iowa) 136 N. W. 210, 211.

The word "city," as used in the proviso found in Laws 1899, c. 143, § 1, declaring that in any school township containing a "city" of 800 inhabitants or more, and which is not organized as an independent school district, the residents in said school township, outside the city limits, may separate themselves from the city and organize a distinct school township, by presenting to the county superintendent of schools a sufficient petition, does not include incorporated towns or villages. Plummer v. Borsheim, 80 N. W. 690, 691, 8 N. D. 565.

CITY ATTORNEY

The "city attorney" is the general law officer of the municipality, and it is his duty to attend to all legal business of the city, except prosecutions in the police court. City of Bowling Green v. Gaines, 96 S. W. 852, 853, 123 Ky. 562.

Acts 1905, p. 111, § 2, requires one, about to sue a city, village, etc., for personal injuries to within six months, etc., file in the office of the "city attorney" (if there be one), and also in the office of the city clerk, a written statement, giving the name of the person injured, the date and place where the accident occurred, etc. Section 3 provides that, if the notice is not filed, the suit shall be dismissed and the action be forever barred. Held, that the city or village attorney referred to must be a licensed attorney having an office or place of business, and where a village has no such attorney the notice may be served on the village clerk. Donaldson v. Village of Dieterich, 93 N. E. 366, 367, 247 Ill. 522.

Employment as "city attorney" includes services rendered in connection with a special tax matter and compensation as city attorney covers such services, and the city collector may not contract with him for additional compensation for services in such matter. Edwards v. City of Kirkwood, 142 S. W. 1109, 1110, 162 Mo. App. 576.

Where an attorney was paid the salary of city attorney and referred to himself as the successor in office of the preceding city attorney, that he failed to take the oath of office, notwithstanding Rev. St. 1909, § 9323, providing that, where an appointee fails to take the oath of office, his office shall be deemed vacant, did not prevent him from being a de facto officer, so as to preclude a claim of additional compensation for services in a special tax matter, rendered pursuant to a contract with the city collector.—Id.

CITY CLERK

As town clerk, see Town Clerk.

CITY COUNCIL

Member of city council, see Member.

The words "city council" usually mean the whole "city council"; that is to say, both branches when there are two, and one branch when there is but one branch. Attorney General v. Douglass, 80 N. E. 581, 195 Mass. 35.

A "city council" is a miniature General Assembly, and their authorized ordinances have the force of laws passed by the Legislature of the state. Kersey v. Terre Haute, 68 N. E. 1027, 1029, 161 Ind. 471 (citing Taylor v. Corondelet, 22 Mo. 105).

The term "city council," in Denver City Charter (Laws 1898, c. 78), requiring an ordinance directing the erection of a storm sewer to be passed by a two-thirds vote of the council, and providing that a majority of the members-elect of each board shall be a quorum to transact business, and that no action of either board except an adjournment shall have force unless a majority of the members-elect vote in favor thereof, means a quorum of each branch; and a two-thirds vote of each of such quorum, provided such vote constitutes a majority of all the members-elect to the branch in which such vote is taken, is sufficient. City of Denver v. Rubidge, 116 Pac. 1130, 1132, 51 Colo. 224.

CITY COURT

The words "city court," used in Acts 1899, p. 48, purporting to confer authority upon the judge of a city court to preside in another city court when the judge of the latter court is disqualified, are used in their constitutional sense, and apply only to city courts from which a direct bill of exceptions lies to the appellate court. Georgia, F. & A. R. Co. v. Sasser, 60 S. E. 997, 998, 130 Ga. 394 (citing Wells v. Newton, 28 S. E. 640, 101 Ga. 141).

The act creating the city court of Sylvania (Acts 1902, p. 170) makes it a "city court" within the meaning of that term as used in the Constitution, as construed in Welborne v. State, 40 S. E. 857, 867 (1), 114 Ga. 793. Mock v. Waters, 65 S. E. 579, 6 Ga. App. 608.

The municipal court of the city of Chicago is a "city court" within the terms of the Appellate Court and Practice Acts, since the Legislature does not derive power to create that court from Const. art. 4, § 34, providing that, if the General Assembly shall create municipal courts in the city of Chicago, the jurisdiction and practice of such courts shall be the same as the General Assembly shall prescribe, but from the authority conferred in the Constitution to create courts in and for cities and incorporated towns. People v. Cosmopolitan Fire Ins. Co., 92 N. E. 922, 924, 246 Ill. 442.

The municipal court of Chicago, while within the generic name of "city court," belongs to a specific class different from the city courts established under the general city court act (Hurd's Rev. St. 1908, c. 37, §§ 240-263), and is created, not as part of the judicial department of the state at large, but as a local court of the city to administer the law within the city, and hence while the court is in a class by itself and the Legislature may provide for the review of its judgments in its discretion, yet the laws relating to other courts must apply uniformly to the practice in such court, so as to make their operation the same under similar conditions. People v. Hibernian Banking Ass'n, 92 N. E. 305, 307, 245 Ill. 522.

The term "city courts" in Justices' Code, § 1, limiting the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in counties where city court are established, does not include the county court of Douglas county, and the jurisdiction of justices in that county was not affected by that provision. McDougle-Craig & Co. v. Greenlees, 108 Pac. 827, 82 Kan. 440.

There is no substantial or material difference between the terms "city court" and "municipal court." Miller v. People, 82 N. E. 521, 523, 230 Ill. 65.

CITY DATUM

A "city datum" is a certain monument or object, of a permanent character, which has been adopted by the municipality as a base or starting point for the grades and levels of the municipality. Chicago Consol. Traction Co. v. Village of Oak Park, 80 N. E. 42, 44, 225 Ill. 9.

CITY ENGINEER

Decision, see Decision.

CITY GOVERNMENT

"City government" usually means the mayor, board of aldermen, and common council of a city. Grace v. Board of Health of City of Newton, 135 Mass. 490, 494.

CITY IMPROVEMENT FUND

Code, § 894, authorizes any city to levy an "improvement fund tax" to pay for street improvements. Section 830 provides for payment of street improvements out of the "city improvement fund." Held, that both statutes refer to the same fund, and contracts for paving which provide for payment of difference between amount due for paving and amount raised by special assessments out of the "paving fund" and "general paving fund" refer to the fund specified in the statutes. Corey v. City of Ft. Dodge, 111 N. W. 6, 8, 133 Iowa, 666.

CITY LIMITS

See Within the Limits.

CITY LOT

One town or city lot, see One Lot.

Rev. Codes, § 4466, declaring that no lease of any city lot for more than 25 years shall be valid, applies only to city lots as such, and does not affect section 4465, providing that no lease of agricultural lands for a longer period than 10 years shall be valid; the term "city lot" meaning a lot within the limits of a city, regardless of its other characteristics, while the term "agricultural lands" is descriptive of the nature of the land itself, and does not necessarily mean acre property. Lerch v. Missoula Brick & Tile Co., 123 Pac. 25, 28, 45 Mont. 314.

CITY OFFICER

See, also, Municipal Officer.

Assembly

A member of a municipal assembly is a city officer. State v. Kelly, 77 S. W. 996, 997, 103 Mo. App. 711.

Board of health

The secretary of a city board of health is an "officer," within the act for the incorporation of cities, approved March 14, 1867 (Laws 1867, c. 15, § 52), declaring that no "city officer" shall be in any manner interested in any contract with the city, and a contract made in violation thereof to be void, and hence a contract, between a city and the secretary of the board, whereby the secretary is to care for smallpox patients, is void, unless such an emergency exists that it would be manifestly unjust to delay action in order to comply with the strict requirements of the statute. City of Greenfield v. Black, 82 N. E. 797, 798, 42 Ind. App. 645.

Election commissioner

The office of election commissioner of St. Louis being created by act of the Legislature, the incumbents being appointees of the Governor, and their functions applying to all elections (Rev. St. 1899, § 7223), such a commissioner is not a "city officer," so as to prevent the corporation of which he is president making a contract with the city, under City Charter, art. 4, § 10, providing that city officers shall not be interested in a contract with the city. State v. Meier, 69 S. W. 668, 669, 96 Mo. App. 160.

Improvement board

Ordinances authorizing the president of the improvement board and the city comptroller each to "designate an assistant, clerk or other subordinate" to do clerical work, do not create new offices as authorized by St. Louis City Charter, art. 4, § 45; the appointees not being "city officers," but clerks or assistants to the officer appointing them. State ex rel. Skrainka Const. Co. v. Reber, 126 S. W. 397, 398, 226 Mo. 229.

Justice of the peace

By Sess. Laws 1901, p. 109, c. 107, providing that precinct officers are one justice of the peace and one constable, and that cities of the first class shall not be divided, but shall be deemed one precinct for the purpose of electing a justice and constable, justices of the peace in cities of the first class are precinct officers, and not merely "city officers"; and the fact that the territorial boundaries of their precinct are coextensive with the city does not render them city officers, and, as a class by themselves, subject to special legislation. Love v. Liddle, 72 Pac. 185, 187, 26 Utah, 62.

Marshal

The marshals provided for in each division of the city court of Kansas City, Kan., by Laws 1905, c. 193, are not "city officers," and women are not qualified voters in the election of such officers. Fee v. Richardson, 107 Pac. 789, 790, 82 Kan. 190.

Overseer of poor

The overseer of the poor elected under P. L. 1902, p. 284, § 2, to perform the duties prescribed by section 19 of the act, is a "city officer," within the meaning of section 7 of the act, providing that any city officer may be removed from office by resolution of the council for good cause shown on complaint, notice, and hearing. Barlow v. Atlantic City, 78 Atl. 11, 80 N. J. Law, 510.

Police officer

A janitor of a police station, who was removed by the police commissioners, was not protected from removal by St. 1885, c. 266, § 5, providing that officers and boards of the city of Boston may remove their subordinates "for such cause as they may deem sufficient and shall assign in their order for removal," since the police commissioners were not "officers" and did not constitute a "board of the city of Boston," but were appointed by and were responsible to the Governor of the commonwealth. Sims v. Police Com'r for City of Boston, 79 N. E. 824, 825, 193 Mass. 547 (citing Commonwealth v. Plaisted, 19 N. E. 224, 148 Mass. 375, 383, et seq., 2 L. R. A. 142, 12 Am. St. Rep. 566; Phillips v. City of Boston, 23 N. E. 202, 150 Mass. 491, 494).

A policeman is not strictly a state officer, nor is he a "municipal officer" or servant of a city in which his duties are to be performed, and is therefore not within Const. art. 16, § 6, limiting the terms of office of municipal officers to two years. The term "municipal officer," as used in Const. art. 16, § 6, limiting the terms of office thereof to two years, means "city officers"; the word "municipal" having its origin in the idea of a free town or city, and in its popular use is applied to cities, though in its general meaning it embodies the idea of local self-government, as distinguished from centralized government. "Municipal" may either refer to a town or a city. State v. Edwards, 99 Pac. 940, 941, 946, 38 Mont. 250 (quoting and adopting definition in 5 Words and Phrases Judicially Defined, p. 4618.)

CITY PROPERTY

It is sometimes difficult to determine whether property is "city property" and as such taxable for local improvements, or whether it is rural, and the fact that land within city limits is altogether used for agricultural purposes does not exempt it from assessment. Duker v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. (Ky.) 74 S. W. 744, 745 (citing Smith, Mun. Corp. § 1236; Barber Asphalt Co. v. Garr [Ky.] 73 S. W. 1106).

The words "city property," in Portland City Charter, providing that the "city council shall have the custody and management of all city property," etc., include all property to which the city has title, and not simply what is taken or purchased for municipal purposes. Libby v. City of Portland, 74 Atl. 805, 807, 105 Me. 370, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 141, 18 Ann. Cas. 547.

CITY PURPOSE

The construction of a bridge across the Mississippi river for rail and general travel is a legitimate public "city purpose," and a proper public improvement, though a portion thereof be beyond the city's corporate limits. Haeussler v. St. Louis, 103 S. W. 1034, 1040, 205 Mo. 656.

The establishment and maintenance of a fountain, at the intersection of two principal and much traveled streets, for quenching the thirst of animals using the streets, is a "city purpose," and a water company, under a contract with the city which requires it to furnish water to the extent of 12,000,000 gallons every six months free of charge for city purposes, cannot collect from said city for water supplied to such fountain. Water Supply Co. of Albuquerque v. City of Albuquerque (N. M.) 128 Pac. 77, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 439.

The construction of a subway is a "city purpose," within Const. art. 8, § 10, which prohibits the incurring of indebtedness by a city, except for a city purpose. Admiral Realty Co. v. City of New York, 99 N. E. 241, 245, 206 N. Y. 110.

CITY RAILWAY

"When the broad term 'city railway' is used, the term must be taken to mean only what is essential to the definition of the term, and no particular motive power is essential. Whenever a statute specifies the motive power to be used, the expression of that power may be construed to exclude any other. When no kind of motive power is mentioned, it should be taken to indicate that the Legislature means a city railway, however propelled, whether by powers then familiar or those they know not of; in fact any kind of power which the ingenuity of man may contrive that does not constitute an additional burden upon the highway, or an injury and annoyance to the public." Howley v. Central Valley R. Co., 62 Atl. 109, 112, 213 Pa. 36, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 138, 5 Ann. Cas. 51 (quoting and adopting definition in Wilmington City Ry. Co. v. Wilmington & B. S. Ry. Co., 46 Atl. 12, 8 Del. Ch. 468, and citing Halsey v. Rapid Transit St. Ry. Co., 20 Atl. 859, 47 N. J. Eq. 380).

"When the broad term 'city railway' is used, the term must be taken to mean only what is essential to the definition of the term, and obviously no particular motive power is essential. Whenever a statute specifies the motive power to be used, the expression of the power must be construed to exclude any other. * * * When no kind of motive power is mentioned, it should be taken to indicate that the Legislature means what it says—a 'city railway,' however propelled, whether by powers then familiar or those they know not of; in fact, any kind of power which the ingenuity of man may contrive that does not constitute an additional burden on the highway or injury or annoyance to the public." Bubenzer v. Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. (Del.) 61 Atl. 270, 273 (quoting Wilmington City Ry. Co. v. Wilmington & B. S. Ry. Co., 46 Atl. 12, 8 Del. Ch. 468).

CITY RECORDER'S COURT

As inferior court, see Inferior Court.

CITY TREASURY

There is in Brooklyn no such precise thing as a "city treasury," and this term, used in a section of the city charter, must be taken as used to describe money that is raised, received, and expended by the municipal corporation. Public school moneys are properly thus described. Farrell v. Board of Education of City of New York, 98 N. Y. Supp. 1046, 1047, 113 App. Div. 405.

CIVIL

CIVIL ACTION—CASE—SUIT—ETC.

See, also, Cause (In Practice); Cause of Action; Suit; Suit of Civil Nature.

A "civil action" is defined as a proceeding in a court by one party against another for the enforcement or protection of a private right or the redress of a private wrong. Thrift v. Thrift, 75 Atl. 484, 485, 30 R. I. 357 (quoting 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1183).

The term "civil actions" as used in the practice act includes actions for equitable or legal relief, or both. Luddington v. Merrill, 71 Atl. 504, 81 Conn. 400.

"Every action for the enforcement or protection of private rights or the redress or prevention of private wrongs is a 'civil action.'" Harrigan v. Gilbert, 99 N. W. 909, 951, 121 Wis. 127.

A "civil action" is one brought to recover some civil right or to redress some wrong not a crime or a misdemeanor; and at common law is an action to recover private or civil rights or compensation for their infraction. Gruetter v. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co., 181 Fed. 248, 251.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 818, providing that a change of venue may be awarded in any civil suit to any court of record, the term "civil suit" refers to legal proceedings by which the rights and remedies of private individuals are enforced or protected, and authorizes a change of venue in proceedings under an assignment for benefit of creditors. In re Heath's Assignment, 117 S. W. 125, 126, 136 Mo. App. 347.

A "civil case" is a suit at law to redress the violation of some contract, or to repair some injury to property or to the person or personal rights of individuals; the term "civil case" is frequently used in statutes synonymously with civil action or civil cause. Under Const. art. 14, §§ 1-3, providing that county officers shall be paid salaries, and providing for fees to be collected by the sheriff, and that in addition to the salary of the sheriff he shall receive from the party for whom the services are rendered in civil cases such fees as may be prescribed by law, and under Rev. St. 1899, §§ 1112, 1113, 1232, fixing the salaries of sheriffs, and declaring that the sheriff in addition to his salary shall receive from the party for whom the service is rendered in civil cases stated fees, and under Laws 1901, c. 79, providing for an inspection of horses and making the sheriff of each county an inspector, and providing for a fee pro rata on all horses inspected, services of a sheriff as inspector are not rendered in "civil cases," and he is not entitled to the fees collected. Messenger v. Board of Com'rs, 117 Pac. 126, 130, 19 Wyo. 309.

Actions for fines, forfeitures, or penalties.

— Where a statute or ordinance imposes a penalty, unless special modes are prescribed, the sums must be collected by an action at law. Such action is a "civil action." People ex rel. Kane v. Sloan, 90 N. Y. Supp. 762, 764, 98 App. Div. 450.

An action to recover a penalty for violation of a city ordinance is a "civil suit" and not a criminal proceeding. The constitutional right to trial by jury does not apply to such action. City of Chicago v. Knobel, 83 N. E. 459, 460, 232 Ill. 112.

An action of debt to recover a penalty given by statute is a "civil action." United States v. Southern Pac. Co., 162 Fed. 412, 413.

An action against a foreign corporation to recover a penalty for violation of a statute requiring the corporation to file a copy of its articles of incorporation as a condition precedent to the transaction of business within the state is a "civil suit" and not a "criminal prosecution" within the meaning of the Constitution and laws of the state. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Andrews, 154 Fed. 95, 98 (citing St. Louis, A. & T. Ry. Co. v. State, 19 S. W. 572, 56 Ark. 166; Kansas City, S. & M. R. Co. v. State, 37 S. W. 1047, 63 Ark. 134; St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. State, 60 S. W. 654, 68 Ark. 561; Choctaw, O. & G. Ry. Co. v. State, 87 S. W. 631, 75 Ark. 369).

An action by the United States against a railroad company for the penalty imposed for a violation of act June 29, 1906, c. 3594, § 1, relative to the carriage of live stock, and known as the "28-hour law," is a "civil cause," with all the incidents of a civil suit. United States v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 173 Fed. 764, 766, 98 C. C. A. 110.

An action by the United States to recover from a carrier the penalty prescribed for violations of safety appliance acts (Act March 2, 1893, c. 196, 27 Stat. 531, Act April 1, 1896, c. 87, 29 Stat. 85, and Act March 2, 1903, c. 976, 32 Stat. 943) is a "civil," and not a "criminal," action. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co. v. United States, 31 Sup. Ct. 612, 617, 220 U. S. 559, 55 L. Ed. 582.

An action for the penalty imposed by Code 1906, § 5004, imposing a penalty for the violation of the anti-trust law, is a "civil" and not a "criminal" action, within Const. 1890, § 147, providing that no judgment in a civil cause shall be reversed for want of jurisdiction, from error as to whether the case was in equity or in law, and a decree of the chancery court for a penalty will not be reversed on the ground alone that the action therefor was one at law; the term "civil cause" comprehending every conceivable cause of action, legal or equitable, except such as are criminal, where the judgment against defendant may be a fine or imprisonment, or both, and, in case of fine alone, imprisonment until payment. Grenada Lumber Co. v. State, 54 South. 8, 10, 98 Miss. 536; Dukate v. Adams, 58 South. 475, 476, 101 Miss. 433.

The qualifying term "civil" comprehends every conceivable cause of action, whether legal or equitable, except such as are criminal in the sense that the judgment against the defendant may be a fine or imprisonment, or both, and in case of fine alone imprisonment until payment, and, although a suit is in fact one to punish an offense against public justice, it may be a "civil cause," and within its definition a suit in chancery to recover penalties provided by Laws 1910, c. 134, for the illegal sale of liquor, is a "civil cause." State v. Marshall, 56 South. 792, 796, 100 Miss. 626.

Within the act creating the Newark district court and giving it jurisdiction of suits of a civil nature at law, in which the debt or other matter in dispute does not exceed $200, only private suits for private wrongs are of a "civil nature," and private suits for public wrongs or public suits for public wrongs are not suits of a civil nature. An action by a landlord for a statutory penalty imposed on a tenant holding over is a private suit for a private wrong, and within the jurisdiction of the Newark district court. Tims v. Spragg, 23 Atl. 213, 214, 58 N. J. Law, 273 (citing Koch v. Vanderhoof, 9 Atl. 771, 49 N. J. Law, 619).

In determining whether a suit to enforce a penalty provided by a state statute is one "of a civil nature" which is removable under section 2, Act Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, 25 Stat. 434, correcting the enrollment of Act March 3, 1887, c. 373, 24 Stat. 552, and amending Act March 3, 1875, c. 187, 18 Stat. 470, the question is not whether the state statute is to be considered as remedial or penal for the purpose of the application of the rule of strict construction, but whether the action brought to enforce the penalty provided by the statute is essentially civil in its nature, as distinct from one which is criminal, or quasi criminal. Gruetter v. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co., 181 Fed. 248, 251.

A penal action is a "civil suit" brought for the recovery of a statutory forfeiture, when inflicted as a punishment for an offense against the public. State ex rel. McNamee v. Stobie, 92 S. W. 191, 212, 194 Mo. 14.

"A penal action is a 'civil action' and must be brought as directed in the statute creating the same, or in accordance with the manner prescribed in the Code of Civil Procedure." Johnson v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 52 S. E. 644, 646, 73 S. C. 36.

Adjudications of insanity

An insanity inquiry under Rev. St. 1909, § 474, involves no questions of public policy, but constitutes a civil case within Const. art. 2, § 28, as amended November 6, 1900, providing that the right to trial by jury as heretofore enjoyed shall remain inviolate and that in a trial by jury in all civil cases in courts of record three-fourths of the members of the jury concurring may render a verdict. State ex rel. Peper v. Holtcamp, 138 S. W. 521, 522, 235 Mo. 232.

Application for liquor license

An application for a liquor license is a "judicial proceeding," a "civil action." Scanlon v. Deuel, 94 N. E. 561, 562, 176 Ind. 208; Binzen v. Same, 94 N. E. 563, 176 Ind. 702; Bryan v. De Moss, 73 N. E. 156, 157, 34 Ind. App. 473.

The phrase "civil suit," in Rev. St. 1899, § 818, providing that a change of venue may be awarded in any "civil suit" for causes enumerated, refers to the legal proceedings by which the rights and remedies of private individuals are enforced or protected, in distinction to the words "criminal case," which refer to public wrongs and their punishment, and includes certiorari to review proceedings of the county court resulting in the granting to one of a dramshop license, since the proceeding involves the right of the licensee to sell liquor as a dramshop keeper, which is a private right. State ex rel. Bixman v. Denton, 107 S. W. 446, 448, 128 Mo. App. 304.

Attachment proceeding

An action which has for its purpose the subjection of property to the payment of a debt, and is commenced by attachment for that purpose, is a "civil action," and must be brought "in the county where the defendant resides or may be found." First Nat. Bank of Hennessey v. Hesser, 77 Pac. 86, 40, 14 Okl. 115.

what it says—a 'city railway,' however propelled, whether by powers then familiar or those they know not of; in fact, any kind of power which the ingenuity of man may contrive that does not constitute an additional burden on the highway or injury or annoyance to the public." Bubbenzer v. Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. (Del.) 61 Atl. 270, 273 (quoting Wilmington City Ry. Co. v. Wilmington & B. S. Ry. Co., 46 Atl. 12, 8 Del. Ch. 468).

CITY RECORDER'S COURT

As inferior court, see Inferior Court.

CITY TREASURY

There is in Brooklyn no such precise thing as a "city treasury," and this term, used in a section of the city charter, must be taken as used to describe money that is raised, received, and expended by the municipal corporation. Public school moneys are properly thus described. Farrell v. Board of Education of City of New York, 98 N. Y. Supp. 1046, 1047, 113 App. Div. 405.

CIVIL

CIVIL ACTION—CASE—SUIT—ETC.

See, also, Cause (In Practice); Cause of Action; Suit; Suit of Civil Nature.

A "civil action" is defined as a proceeding in a court by one party against another for the enforcement or protection of a private right or the redress of a private wrong. Thrift v. Thrift, 75 Atl. 484, 485, 30 R. I. 357 (quoting 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1183).

The term "civil actions" as used in the practice act includes actions for equitable or legal relief, or both. Luddington v. Merrill, 71 Atl. 504, 81 Conn. 400.

"Every action for the enforcement or protection of private rights or the redress or prevention of private wrongs is a 'civil action.'" Harrigan v. Gilbert, 99 N. W. 909, 951, 121 Wis. 127.

A "civil action" is one brought to recover some civil right or to redress some wrong not a crime or a misdemeanor; and at common law is an action to recover private or civil rights or compensation for their infraction. Gruetter v. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co., 181 Fed. 248, 251.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 818, providing that a change of venue may be awarded in any civil suit to any court of record, the term "civil suit" refers to legal proceedings by which the rights and remedies of private individuals are enforced or protected, and authorizes a change of venue in proceedings under an assignment for benefit of creditors. In re Heath's Assignment, 117 S. W. 125, 126, 136 Mo. App. 347.

A "civil case" is a suit at law to redress the violation of some contract, or to repair some injury to property or to the person or personal rights of individuals; the term "civil case" is frequently used in statutes synonymously with civil action or civil cause. Under Const. art. 14, §§ 1-3, providing that county officers shall be paid salaries, and providing for fees to be collected by the sheriff, and that in addition to the salary of the sheriff he shall receive from the party for whom the services are rendered in civil cases such fees as may be prescribed by law, and under Rev. St. 1899, §§ 1112, 1113, 1232, fixing the salaries of sheriffs, and declaring that the sheriff in addition to his salary shall receive from the party for whom the service is rendered in civil cases stated fees, and under Laws 1901, c. 79, providing for an inspection of horses and making the sheriff of each county an inspector, and providing for a fee pro rata on all horses inspected, services of a sheriff as inspector are not rendered in "civil cases," and he is not entitled to the fees collected. Messenger v. Board of Com'rs, 117 Pac. 126, 130, 19 Wyo. 309.

Actions for fines, forfeitures, or penalties.

— Where a statute or ordinance imposes a penalty, unless special modes are prescribed, the sums must be collected by an action at law. Such action is a "civil action." People ex rel. Kane v. Sloan, 90 N. Y. Supp. 762, 764, 98 App. Div. 450.

An action to recover a penalty for violation of a city ordinance is a "civil suit" and not a criminal proceeding. The constitutional right to trial by jury does not apply to such action. City of Chicago v. Knobel, 83 N. E. 459, 460, 232 Ill. 112.

An action of debt to recover a penalty given by statute is a "civil action." United States v. Southern Pac. Co., 162 Fed. 412, 413.

An action against a foreign corporation to recover a penalty for violation of a statute requiring the corporation to file a copy of its articles of incorporation as a condition precedent to the transaction of business within the state is a "civil suit" and not a "criminal prosecution," within the meaning of the Constitution and laws of the state. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Andrews, 154 Fed. 95, 98 (citing St. Louis, A. & T. Ry. Co. v. State, 19 S. W. 572, 56 Ark. 166; Kansas City, S. & M. R. Co. v. State, 37 S. W. 1047, 63 Ark. 134; St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. State, 60 S. W. 654, 68 Ark. 561; Choctaw, O. & G. Ry. Co. v. State, 87 S. W. 631, 75 Ark. 369).

An action by the United States against a railroad company for the penalty imposed for a violation of act June 29, 1906, c. 3594, § 1, relative to the carriage of live stock, and known as the "28-hour law," is a "civil cause," with all the incidents of a civil suit. United States v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 173 Fed. 764, 766, 98 C. C. A. 110.

An action by the United States to recover from a carrier the penalty prescribed for violations of safety appliance acts (Act March 2, 1893, c. 196, 27 Stat. 531, Act April 1, 1896, c. 87, 29 Stat. 85, and Act March 2, 1903, c. 976, 32 Stat. 943) is a "civil," and not a "criminal," action. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co. v. United States, 31 Sup. Ct. 612, 617, 220 U. S. 559, 55 L. Ed. 582.

An action for the penalty imposed by Code 1906, § 5004, imposing a penalty for the violation of the anti-trust law, is a "civil" and not a "criminal" action, within Const. 1890, § 147, providing that no judgment in a civil cause shall be reversed for want of jurisdiction, from error as to whether the case was in equity or in law, and a decree of the chancery court for a penalty will not be reversed on the ground alone that the action therefor was one at law; the term "civil cause" comprehending every conceivable cause of action, legal or equitable, except such as are criminal, where the judgment against defendant may be a fine or imprisonment, or both, and, in case of fine alone, imprisonment until payment. Grenada Lumber Co. v. State, 54 South. 8, 10, 98 Miss. 536; Dukate v. Adams, 58 South. 475, 476, 101 Miss. 433.

The qualifying term "civil" comprehends every conceivable cause of action, whether legal or equitable, except such as are criminal in the sense that the judgment against the defendant may be a fine or imprisonment, or both, and in case of fine alone imprisonment until payment, and, although a suit is in fact one to punish an offense against public justice, it may be a "civil cause," and within its definition a suit in chancery to recover penalties provided by Laws 1910, c. 134, for the illegal sale of liquor, is a "civil cause." State v. Marshall, 56 South. 792, 796, 100 Miss. 626.

Within the act creating the Newark district court and giving it jurisdiction of suits of a civil nature at law, in which the debt or other matter in dispute does not exceed $200, only private suits for private wrongs are of a "civil nature," and private suits for public wrongs or public suits for public wrongs are not suits of a civil nature. An action by a landlord for a statutory penalty imposed on a tenant holding over is a private suit for a private wrong, and within the jurisdiction of the Newark district court. Tims v. Spragg, 23 Atl. 213, 214, 58 N. J. Law, 273 (citing Koch v. Vanderhoof, 9 Atl. 771, 49 N. J. Law, 619).

In determining whether a suit to enforce a penalty provided by a state statute is one "of a civil nature" which is removable under section 2, Act Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, 25 Stat. 434, correcting the enrollment of Act March 3, 1887, c. 373, 24 Stat. 552, and amending Act March 3, 1876, c. 187, 18 Stat. 470, the question is not whether the state statute is to be considered as remedial or penal for the purpose of the application of the rule of strict construction, but whether the action brought to enforce the penalty provided by the statute is essentially civil in its nature, as distinct from one which is criminal, or quasi criminal. Gruetter v. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co., 181 Fed. 248, 251.

A penal action is a "civil suit" brought for the recovery of a statutory forfeiture, when inflicted as a punishment for an offense against the public. State ex rel. McNamee v. Stobie, 92 S. W. 191, 212, 194 Mo. 14.

"A penal action is a 'civil action' and must be brought as directed in the statute creating the same, or in accordance with the manner prescribed in the Code of Civil Procedure." Johnson v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 52 S. E. 644, 646, 73 S. C. 36.

Adjudications of insanity

An insanity inquiry under Rev. St. 1909, § 474, involves no questions of public policy, but constitutes a civil case within Const. art. 2, § 28, as amended November 6, 1900, providing that the right to trial by jury as heretofore enjoyed shall remain inviolate and that in a trial by jury in all civil cases in courts of record three-fourths of the members of the jury concurring may render a verdict. State ex rel. Peper v. Holtcamp, 188 S. W. 521, 522, 235 Mo. 232.

Application for liquor license

An application for a liquor license is a "judicial proceeding," a "civil action." Scanlon v. Deuel, 94 N. E. 561, 562, 176 Ind. 208; Binzen v. Same, 94 N. E. 563, 176 Ind. 702; Bryan v. De Moss, 78 N. E. 156, 157, 34 Ind. App. 473.

The phrase "civil suit," in Rev. St. 1899, § 818, providing that a change of venue may be awarded in any "civil suit" for causes enumerated, refers to the legal proceedings by which the rights and remedies of private individuals are enforced or protected, in distinction to the words "criminal case," which refer to public wrongs and their punishment, and includes certiorari to review proceedings of the county court resulting in the granting to one of a dramshop license, since the proceeding involves the right of the licensee to sell liquor as a dramshop keeper, which is a private right. State ex rel. Bixman v. Denton, 107 S. W. 446, 448, 128 Mo. App. 304.

Attachment proceeding

An action which has for its purpose the subjection of property to the payment of a debt, and is commenced by attachment for that purpose, is a "civil action," and must be brought "in the county where the defendant resides or may be found." First Nat. Bank of Hennessey v. Hesser, 77 Pac. 86, 40, 14 Okl. 115.

Bankruptcy proceedings

"A bankruptcy proceeding cannot be said to be an ordinary 'civil suit.' It is sui generis, and it is far-reaching and drastic in its effects. Whether accompanied by actual seizure of the bankrupt's property or not, it places an embargo on his right to dispose of his property and of his business generally. An action for malicious prosecution will lie for the institution and prosecution of a proceeding in bankruptcy without probable cause and with a malicious intent, although not accompanied by any actual seizure of the alleged bankrupt's property. Wilkinson v. Goodfellow-Brooks Shoe Co., 141 Fed. 218, 219, 220.

Bastardy proceeding

A bastardy proceeding is neither a "civil" nor "criminal" action, strictly speaking, but is a mere statutory proceeding designed primarily to enable the injured female to recover, of the person who in the eye of the law, has committed a grievous injury to her, compensation therefor. Meyer v. Meyer, 102 N. W. 52, 55, 123 Wis. 538.

A bastardy proceeding is "civil" and not "criminal" in its nature, and is intended merely for the enforcement of a police regulation. State v. Addington, 57 S. E. 398, 399, 143 N. C. 683, 11 Ann. Cas. 314 (citing State v. Liles, 47 S. E. 750, 134 N. C. 735).

A bastardy proceeding is a "civil action" for the enforcement of a police regulation, so far as it is necessary for the purpose of securing an allowance to the woman and to relieve the county from the burden of supporting the child. State v. Currie (N. C.) 76 S. E. 694, 695.

A proceeding in bastardy to compel the father or mother of a bastard child to give bond to indemnify the county from the subsequent maintenance of such child is a "civil proceeding," and not a "criminal prosecution." State v. Liles, 47 S. E. 750, 751, 134 N. C. 735.

A statute which provides that no person shall be excluded from being a witness in any "civil suit" by reason of his interest embraces a bastardy process, so as to allow defendant to testify. Murray v. Joyce, 44 Me. 342, 348 (citing Wilbur v. Crane, 30 Mass. [13 Pick.] 284).

Claim against receivers

"It has long been familiar that the 'civil action' of the Code includes all such proceedings as, prior to its enactment, were regarded as either actions at law or suits in equity, and rights of action since authorized by statute, unless the authorizing statute itself defined a mode of enforcing the right at variance from the procedure prescribed by the Code." An action brought by leave of court against a receiver for allowance of a claim to be paid in due course of administration is a "civil action." Webb v. Stasel, 88 N. E. 143, 144, 80 Ohio St. 122.

Claim for damages for flowage

A "claim for damages for flowage" of land by a milldam, under the mill acts, is not a "civil suit," within the meaning of Const. art. 1, § 20, declaring that in civil suits and in controversies concerning property the party shall have a right to a trial by jury, except in cases where it has heretofore been otherwise practiced. Ingram v. Maine Water Co., 57 Atl. 893, 894, 98 Me. 566.

Criminal proceedings distinguished

"Though the term 'civil causes' is often descriptively applied, in contradistinction to 'criminal causes'; yet it is not uncommon to apply it likewise in contradistinction to causes of maritime and admiralty jurisdiction." Per Wilson, J., dissenting. Wiscart v. Dauchy, 3 U. S. (3 Dall.) 325, 1 L. Ed. 619.

The word "civil" means relating to rights and remedies sought by action or suit. A "civil" remedy is the right of action given to a person injured, as opposed to a criminal prosecution. "Civil" suit, a suit for a private claim or injury. The word "civil" is used, in contradistinction to "criminal" to indicate the private rights and remedies of men as members of the community in contrast to those which are public and related to the government. Thus we speak of "civil" process and "criminal" process, "civil" jurisdiction and "criminal" jurisdiction; at common law, an action which has for its object the recovery of private or civil rights or compensation for their infraction. A proceeding under Rev. St. 1899, §§ 8195-8276, for the incorporation of a drainage district, is a "civil" suit within the meaning of Rev. St. 1899, § 818, providing that a change of venue may be awarded in "civil" suits. State ex rel. Kochtitzky v. Riley, 101 S. W. 567, 568, 203 Mo. 175, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 900 (quoting and adopting Webster's Dict.: 1 Bouv. Law Dict. [Rawle's Revision] p. 329).

Const. art. 14, § 1, provides that all county officers shall be paid salaries to be fixed by the Legislature. Section 2 provides for fees to be collected by the sheriff and an accounting therefor, and that, in addition to the salary of the sheriff, he shall be entitled to receive from the party for whom the services are rendered in "civil cases" such fees as may be prescribed by law. By section 3, the salaries of county officers are to be fixed by law within stated maximum limits. Rev. St. 1899, § 1112, fixed the salaries of sheriffs, and by section 1113 declared that the sheriff in addition to his salary might receive from the party for whom the service is rendered in civil cases certain stated fees. By section 1232, county officers receiving money for any county were required to pay the same into the county treasury. Laws 1901, c. 79, § 1, provided for an inspection of horses about to be transported or driven out of the state.

Section 3 made the sheriff of each county an inspector, and required that he keep a record of inspections and file certain reports. Section 8 provided for a fee of 15 cents per head on all horses inspected, in full compensation for all inspection. Held, in an action by a sheriff to recover inspection fees paid into the county treasury pending a judicial determination, that the word "case" was to be construed as synonymous with "cause," "suit," "action," a "contested question" before a court of justice; that the term "civil cases," as used in the Constitution, was in contradistinction to criminal cases, and was to be broadly construed as inclusive of all cases not criminal, and that it was used as meaning a legal proceeding of some nature for the protection of a private right or the redress of a private wrong; and that the services of the sheriff as inspector were not rendered in civil cases, and hence that he was not entitled to the fees collected. Messenger v. Board of Com'rs of Converse County, 117 Pac. 126, 130, 19 Wyo. 309.

The distinction between a "civil proceeding" and a "criminal proceeding" is not whether the crown or the sovereign is a party, but whether the real end or object of the proceeding is punishment or reparation. Code 1904, p. 1045, § 2071, declares any one who fishes in the waters on another's land guilty of a trespass, and provides that on conviction he shall be fined. Section 2073, p. 1046, provides that the offender shall be carried before a justice, who shall try the case, and that, if judgment be rendered against the offender, it shall be for the forfeitures and costs, and if he does not satisfy the judgment the justice shall commit him to jail for one month, unless satisfaction be made. Section 2070b, cl. 8, p. 1044, provides that all penalties imposed or collected under the provisions of the chapter of which the above sections are a part shall be paid to the commonwealth. Section 3879, p. 2061, declares offenses which are not felonies to be misdemeanors. Held, that sections 2071 and 2073 create a criminal offense of the misdemeanor class and prescribe a criminal proceeding for their violation, and consequently an appeal from a judgment of conviction lies to the circuit court under Code 1904, pp. 2152, 2154, §§ 4106, 4107, providing for appeals to the circuit court from judgments of conviction in criminal cases before justices, although the fine imposed is less than $10, so that no appeal would lie to the circuit court under section 2947, p. 1562, providing for appeals in civil cases. Jernigan v. Commonwealth, 52 S. E. 361, 362, 104 Va. 850.

Contempt proceedings

A proceeding to punish for "contempt" has the characteristics of a criminal case, and is not a "civil action" within Code Civ. Proc. § 615, relative to the change of the place of trial of civil actions. State ex rel.

Boston & M. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co. v. Clancy, 76 Pac. 10, 11, 30 Mont. 193.

A proceeding to protect the rights of the opposite party, brought under St. 1898, § 3477, subd. 3, authorizing proceedings to punish for contempt for violating a lawful order, is a "civil proceeding," while a proceeding under section 2565 et seq., authorizing courts to punish as for criminal contempt persons guilty of specified acts, brought in the name of the state, to punish an act as a criminal contempt, is a criminal proceeding, and the form of a proceeding to punish for contempt for violating an order of the court determines whether it is a civil or a criminal proceeding. Vilter Mfg. Co. v. Humphrey, 112 N. W. 1095, 1096, 132 Wis. 587, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 591.

Deportation proceeding

Alien Chinese persons not of the exempt classes having no right to be or remain in the United States, a deportation proceeding is a "civil proceeding," not involving punishment for a crime, the imposition of a fine, or the enforcement of a "penalty," so that defendant may not refuse to become a witness against himself. United States v. Tom Wah, 160 Fed. 207, 211, 212 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5272).

Divorce proceeding

An action for divorce is a "civil action," not embraced within actions ex contractu or actions ex delicto, though partaking of features characteristic of both, and the nature of the action is controlled by the nature of marriage, which creates a civil status. Cohen v. Cohen (Del.) 84 Atl. 122; New Jersey Soc. for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals v. Russ, 83 Atl. 961, 962, 83 N. J. Law, 450.

"Because marriage is declared to be a civil contract, it does not follow that a suit for divorce should be considered in the light of a 'civil action' merely. It is a civil action, in so far as the divorce act in itself fails to prescribe rules of procedure. If the divorce act is to be made effective, resort must be had to the Civil Code, but in so far only as recourse must be had to the rules of civil procedure is it a civil action. As the marriage relation is a public concern, so divorce is a public concern." On the trial of an action for divorce, where defendant does not appear, the trial judge has the right, and it is his duty as representing the state, to elicit facts as to matrimonial offenses committed by plaintiff, and grant or withhold the decree accordingly. Elkenbury v. Burns, 70 N. E. 837, 838, 33 Ind. App. 69.

Under Court and Practice Act, § 481, now Gen. Laws 1909, c. 298, § 8, permitting any party to a civil action heard by the superior court without a jury, aggrieved by the decision of the court upon any issue of fact or matter of law, to except thereto, exceptions lie to the decision of the superior court granting a divorce, though not to the final decree entered six months thereafter; a divorce proceeding being a "civil action" within the statute to that extent. Thrift v. Thrift, 75 Atl. 484, 485, 30 R. I. 357.

Drainage proceedings

The words "civil case" and "civil suit" refer to the legal means by which the rights and remedies of private individuals are enforced or protected, in contradistinction to the words "criminal case," which refer to public wrongs and their punishment. A proceeding under Rev. St. 1899, §§ 8195-8276, for the incorporation of a drainage district, is a "civil suit," within section 818, providing that a change of venue may be awarded in civil suits. State ex rel. Kochtitzky v. Riley, 101 S. W. 567, 569, 203 Mo. 175, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 900.

Election contests

"Civil actions" do not include "election contests," which in the ordinary acceptation are special proceedings. Sumpter v. Duffie, 97 S. W. 435, 436, 80 Ark. 369.

An "election contest" is not a "civil case," within City Court Act, Laws 1901, p. 136, § 1, giving city courts concurrent jurisdiction with circuit courts in all civil cases. Brueggemann v. Young, 70 N. E. 292, 293, 208 Ill. 181.

A "contested election" is a "civil suit" brought to recover and enforce a civil right in controversy between contestant and contestee, and the rules of pleading and practice in civil suits are applicable to such contests, except when otherwise provided by the statute authorizing the proceedings. Nelson v. Sneed, 83 S. W. 786, 788, 112 Tenn. 36 (citing Boring v. Griffith, 1 Heisk. [48 Tenn.] 456; Blackburn v. Vick, 2 Heisk. [49 Tenn.] 379; State v. McConnell, 3 Lea [71 Tenn.] 335; State ex rel. Anderson v. Gossett, 9 Lea [77 Tenn.] 645; Moore v. Sharp, 38 S. W. 411, 98 Tenn. 68; Jones v. Glidewell, 13 S. W. 723, 53 Ark. 161, 7 L. R. A. 835).

Forcible entry and detainer proceedings

Proceedings in forcible entry and detainer are not "civil cases," within the purview of Const. art. 6, § 17, which provides that "appeals to the district courts from the judgments of county courts shall be allowed in all criminal cases, on application of the defendant, and in all civil cases, on application of either party, and in such other cases as may be provided by law." The statutory summary proceeding in forcible entry and detainer comes rather under the "other cases," referred to in the section quoted, than under the head of "civil cases," as the latter phrase is used therein. It is true the proceeding is a civil one, in the sense that it is not criminal, although to some extent criminal in form. Proceedings in forcible entry and detainer are intended to provide a speedy and more or less summary remedy, and belong in a class apart with other special and summary proceedings. Adkins v. Andrews, 96 N. W. 228, 1 Neb. (Unof.) 810.

Habeas corpus proceedings

A proceeding in habeas corpus is in its nature "civil." In re Jewett, 77 Pac. 567, 569, 69 Kan. 830.

Habeas corpus proceedings are "civil" and not "criminal." Winnovich v. Emery, 93 Pac. 988, 989, 33 Utah, 345.

A habeas corpus proceeding is a "civil proceeding," and an order for the discharge of the prisoner therein is appealable. Garfinkle v. Sullivan, 80 Pac. 188, 189, 37 Wash. 650.

The term "civil action" includes a proceeding in habeas corpus to determine the legality of an imprisonment or to determine the custody of an infant. Martin v. District Court of Second Judicial Dist., 86 Pac. 82, 83, 37 Colo. 110.

Mandamus proceedings

Mandamus proceedings are "civil actions," within Pub. Acts 1905, No. 309, providing for changes of venue in such actions. Woodworth v. Old Second Nat. Bank, 107 N. W. 905, 144 Mich. 338, 8 Ann. Cas. 310.

A proceeding in mandamus is a "civil proceeding," which may be in the name of the state at the relation of an individual as plaintiff. Rader v. Board of Education of Reaver Dist., 50 S. E. 240, 242, 57 W. Va. 220.

"Statutes everywhere seem to recognize the present proceeding by mandamus as a 'civil action,' with the relator as the plaintiff and the respondent as the defendant." State ex rel. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Board of Com'rs of Jefferson County, 11 Kan. 67, 68, 69.

Motions

The term "civil proceeding or process," as employed in Rev. St. c. 84, § 1, providing that any justice of the Supreme Judicial or either superior court may order notice concerning any civil proceeding in or out of term time, directing how it shall be given, and such order, when made in vacation, shall be indorsed on the process, is a generic term for writs of the class called judicial, and does not embrace mere motions in a pending cause. Mitchell v. Emmons, 71 Atl. 321, 324, 104 Me. 76.

Naturalization proceedings

A motion to vacate an order granting citizenship is not a suit in equity, either in form or substance, where no complaint or other pleading invoking the jurisdiction of the court to act against the defendant in the matter was ever filed, while under Code Civ. Proc. § 405, a "civil action" can only be instituted by the filing of a complaint.

Tinn v. United States District Attorney, 84 Pac. 152, 153, 148 Cal. 773, 118 Am. St. Rep. 354.

As penal action

See Penal Action.

Probate proceedings

A proceeding in the probate court to establish a will does not come within the category of a "civil action," but is a special proceeding, though the latter is not defined in the statute. Lanning v. Gay, 78 Pac. 810, 70 Kan. 353.

An application to the clerk of the superior court to remove an administrator, as authorized by Code, § 1521, is neither a "civil action" nor a "special proceeding," within Code Civ. Proc., for the purpose of litigating rights and liabilities of adverse parties, but is a mere application for the exercise of a statutory power to protect the estate. In re Battle's Estate, 74 S. E. 23, 24, 158 N. C. 388.

Civ. Code Prac. 1869, § 2, divides remedies in civil cases into actions and special proceedings. Section 3 defines a "civil action" as an ordinary proceeding in a court of justice by one party against another to enforce a private right, or redress or prevent a private wrong, and declares that it may also be brought to recover a penalty or forfeiture. Section 4 declares that every other remedy in a civil case is a special proceeding. Kirby's Dig. § 6038, provides that a civil action is commenced by filing a complaint and causing a summons to issue. Held, that the matter of confirming accounts of guardians, or administrators or executors, is not a civil action, but a special proceeding. Nelson v. Cowling, 116 S. W. 590, 893, 89 Ark. 334.

The term "civil causes," as used in Comp. Laws 1909, § 3989, which provides that in the trial of such causes in the county court the pleadings and practice shall be the same as that of the district court, does not include matters arising in the exercise of the probate jurisdiction of the county court. There is a distinction between "civil causes" and cases arising under the probate jurisdiction of the county court under the classification of sections 15 and 16 of article 7 of the Constitution, providing for appeals from the county court to the Supreme Court and to the district court. Welch v. Barnett, 125 Pac. 472, 474, 34 Okl. 166; Stevens v. Myers, 126 Pac. 29, 62 Or. 372.

Proceedings before board

A proceeding before the railroad commissioners is not a suit or "civil cause," for those words include only actions in a court of justice, or which may come before such court by appeal, and such as are required to be commenced before other tribunals as a condition precedent to giving a court jurisdiction. They do not include proceedings before a board whose functions are administrative or ministerial merely, nor before one whose decision is final. City of Burlington v. Burlington Traction Co., 41 Atl. 514, 515, 70 Vt. 491.

Proceedings in error

Although a proceeding in error is not a "civil action," the identity of the action is not lost in the proceeding in error. Sterwerf v. Smith, 75 N. E. 944, 73 Ohio St. 62.

Proceeding on appeal

A proceeding on appeal from an order of a village board granting or refusing a license to sell intoxicating liquors is not a "civil case," within the meaning of Const. art. 1, § 24, and a final order in such a proceeding is not reviewable on appeal. Halverstadt v. Berger, 100 N. W. 934, 72 Neb. 462.

The phrase "process in civil actions" in Gen. St. 1902, § 566, providing that process in civil actions brought to the superior court must be made returnable to the next return day, or to the next but one, to which it can be made returnable, includes an appeal from the probate court to the superior court. Appeal of Campbell, 56 Atl. 554, 555, 76 Conn. 284.

A petition, under Rev. St. c. 65, § 30, for leave to enter and prosecute an appeal from a decree of the probate court, is a "civil proceeding" within chapter 84, § 1, providing that any justice of the Supreme Judicial Court, or of either of the superior courts may order notice concerning any civil proceedings in or out of term time, and notice thereon may be ordered by a justice in vacation. Sproul v. Randell, 78 Atl. 450, 451, 107 Me. 274.

Proceedings to assess damages for establishment of highway

The board of supervisors of a county, in making an order for allowance of damages for a public highway, is a tribunal, and the proceedings for its establishment a "civil case," within the meaning of the rule of practice of the circuit court providing that, "in appeals from justices' courts or other inferior tribunals, in civil cases, the appellant shall cause the case to be docketed," etc. Scott v. Lasell, 82 N. W. 822, 324, 71 Iowa, 180.

Proceedings to destroy liquor

Proceedings under an act providing for the condemnation and summary destruction of liquor illegally kept for sale are "civil" in their nature and not "criminal." Kirkland v. State, 78 S. W. 770, 72 Ark. 171, 65 L. R. A. 76, 105 Am. St. Rep. 25, 2 Ann. Cas. 242.

Proceedings to expel or exclude aliens

A proceeding under our law to expel or exclude aliens is a "civil proceeding." United States v. Moy Yu, 126 Fed. 226, 227.

A proceeding for the deportation of a Chinese laborer not having a certificate entitling him to residence required by the Chinese exclusion act is a "civil proceeding," and hence it is competent for the government to swear such person as a witness against himself. Low Foon Yin v. United States Immigration Com'r, 145 Fed. 791, 793, 76 C. C. A. 355.

Proceedings to remove officer

It is questionable whether a proceeding against a public officer for his removal from office on charges of misconduct is a "civil cause," within the meaning of Rev. Laws, c. 173, § 108, giving a right to take exceptions. Dow v. Casey, 79 N. E. 810, 811, 194 Mass. 48.

A proceeding to remove a public officer under Sess. Laws 1907-08, p. 611, c. 69, art. 3, § 23, providing that for the purpose of such removal a petition may be filed in the district court in the name of the state, or on relation of any citizen, upon the recommendation of the grand jury, or on relation of the county commissioners, or an attorney appointed by the Governor, and that a summons shall be issued and proceedings had as in other civil cases, is a "civil action." State ex rel. Smith v. Brown, 103 Pac. 762, 764, 24 Okl. 433.

Prosecution for violation of ordinance

A prosecution for the violation of a municipal ordinance designed for the preservation of the public peace, the security of the person or property, or the protection of public morals, is not "a civil action," but is a quasi criminal proceeding. Bray v. State, 37 South. 250, 253, 140 Ala. 172.

The great weight of authority in the United States is to the effect that all prosecutions for the violation of ordinances are "civil suits." A prosecution for being drunk and disorderly, in violation of an ordinance of an incorporated town, is a "civil proceeding." Fortune v. Incorporated Town of Wilburton, 82 S. W. 738, 5 Ind. T. 251, 5 Ann. Cas. 287.

Quo warranto proceedings

An information in the nature of a quo warranto is a "civil remedy," when used for the protection of private rights. People v. Healy, 82 N. E. 599, 602, 230 Ill. 280, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 603.

Under Code 1896, § 3428, "quo warranto" is a "civil action," and the complaint must allege the act or omission complained of concisely and clearly, and if faulty in that respect it is demurrable. State ex rel. Goodgame v. Matthews, 45 South. 307, 153 Ala. 648.

An information at the instance of the Attorney General in the nature of quo warranto, to forfeit the licenses of a foreign corporation and the charter of domestic corporations for misuser, is a "civil proceeding."

State ex inf. Hadley v. Standard Oil Co., 116 S. W. 902, 1007, 218 Mo. 1.

Quo warranto is a "civil action" to redress a public wrong or enforce a public right. State ex rel. Attorney General v. Norcross, 112 N. W. 40, 43, 132 Wis. 534, 122 Am. St. Rep. 998.

An information in the nature of quo warranto was originally criminal in form and purpose; the object of the proceeding being not merely to oust, but to fine, the usurper. In the progress of time the fine fell to a nominal amount and its imposition was finally discontinued in England, though the practice still prevails in some of the American states. Therefore, through a gradual process of evolution, the procedure by information became essentially civil in character. State ex rel. Jackson v. Anheuser-Busch Brewing Ass'n, 90 Pac. 777, 778, 76 Kan. 184.

Quo warranto for the possession of an office against an intruder is a "civil action" within Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 249, and hence within the jurisdiction of the Vigo superior court, created by the act of 1881 (Acts 1881, c. 19), giving the court concurrent jurisdiction with the circuit court in civil cases. State ex rel. Gleason v. Gerdink, 90 N. E. 70, 173 Ind. 245.

Scire facias

A scire facias on a forfeited recognizance given in a criminal prosecution is a "civil suit for recovery of money due upon contract," and hence an appeal in such proceeding, where the amount involved was only $200, should be taken to the Appellate Court. People v. Rubright, 89 N. E. 713, 241 Ill. 600.

Seizures for violation of law

A proceeding by the state, before a justice of the peace, for the seizure and destruction of liquor alleged to be kept in a prohibited district for sale, as authorized by Act Feb. 13, 1899, is a "civil proceeding," and the state is entitled to appeal from an adverse judgment, under Kirby's Dig. § 4665, authorizing any person aggrieved by a justice's judgment to appeal therefrom. White v. State, 98 S. W. 377, 80 Ark. 598.

A proceeding authorized by Liquor Tax Law (Laws 1896, c. 112) § 31c, added by Laws 1908, c. 350, for the forfeiture of liquors kept for an illegal use, is a proceeding in rem against specific property, and is a "civil" and not a "criminal" proceeding as defined by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 3335-3337, so that the court may direct a verdict in a proper case. Clement v. Two Barrels of Whisky & Divers Other Liquors, 120 N. Y. Supp. 1044, 1048, 136 App. Div. 291.

Suits in equity

Suits in chancery, wherein the statute provides the issues made may, be tried by a jury, in which the verdicts rendered have the force and effect of the verdict of a jury in an action at law, are "civil proceedings" within the meaning of those words as employed in the statute in relation to the verdicts of juries in civil cases, being the act which provides for the submission of special questions of fact to be answered by juries. Bird v. Bird, 75 N. E. 760, 761, 218 Ill. 158.

Suit to recover for improvements

An action under Rev. St. 1899, § 3072, providing that, if a judgment of dispossession shall be given in an action for the recovery of real estate against a person in possession, such person may recover compensation for improvements made by him in good faith prior to notice of adverse title, is a "civil action," within section 1547, providing that in all civil actions the party prevailing shall recover costs, and hence the title of a purchaser at an execution sale of the property for costs of an action for improvements is superior to the title of one purchasing the property on foreclosure of a trust deed executed by the unsuccessful defendant while the action for improvements was pending. Tice v. Hamilton, 87 S. W. 497-499, 188 Mo. 298.

Tax proceedings

A petition for abatement of taxes is a "civil cause," within Pub. St. 1901, c. 225, § 1, in which petitioner may take the deposition of witnesses for use at the trial. Boston & M. R. R. v. State, 77 Atl. 996, 75 N. H. 513, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 539, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 382.

A request by state authorities to the probate court for an order for the payment of an inheritance tax in excess of the amount chargeable against an estate or an appeal by the Auditor General from an order of the probate court fixing the inheritance tax is a "civil proceeding," within Comp. Laws, § 11-277, providing that the people in civil proceedings instituted by a proper officer shall be liable for costs to the same extent as individuals instituting such proceedings, and the estate successfully resisting the claim of the state authorities is entitled to costs. In re Fox's Estate, 127 N. W. 668, 162 Mich. 531.

CIVIL AND CRIMINAL MATTERS

Under Const. art. 7, § 8, providing that the circuit courts shall have original jurisdiction in all matters, civil and criminal, not hereinafter prohibited by law, a bastardy proceeding, while neither strictly a criminal or civil action, is comprehended in the combination of the terms, "civil and criminal matters." Goyke v. State, 117 N. W. 1027, 1028, 136 Wis. 557.

CIVIL BODIES POLITIC

Incorporated religious societies are "civil bodies politic," and are amenable to the ordinary courts and governed by the statutes under which they are organized, so far as statutory regulations are prescribed. Klix v. Polish Roman Catholic St. Stanislaus Parish, 118 S. W. 1171, 1174, 137 Mo. App. 347.

CIVIL CASE

CIVIL CAUSE

CIVIL CONSPIRACY

"Any combination, no matter how lawful in its origin nor how praiseworthy in its objects, which turns aside for a moment from its legitimate portents and agrees to a course of conduct for the sole purpose of inflicting injury upon a third person, becomes at that moment a 'civil conspiracy,' and all damages sustained may be recovered." Hence, if a plumbers' union and a gas fitters' union assess a fine against a master plumber for breach of his agreement to employ members of a gas fitters' union to do certain work, or demand that sum to reimburse the union for investigating his contract to determine whether he was violating his agreement, the unions are guilty of a "civil conspiracy" and any payment made may be recovered. Burke v. Fay, 107 S. W. 408, 409, 128 Mo. App. 690 (quoting and adopting the definition in 1 Eddy, Combinations).

CIVIL CONTEMPT

A "civil contempt" consists in failing to do something ordered by the court for the benefit of the opposing party. Ex parte Wolters (Tex.) 144 S. W. 531, 587; Smythe v. Smythe, 114 Pac. 257, 259, 28 Okl. 266.

A "civil contempt" is the disobedience of some order or command of a court, entered in a civil cause. Fiedler v. Bambrick Bros. Const. Co., 142 S. W. 1111, 1113, 162 Mo. App. 528.

A "civil contempt" is one affecting only the rights of parties litigant. In re Rice, 181 Fed. 217, 220.

"Civil contempt" consists of matters arising in a proceeding and tending to impede or prejudice the rights and remedies of a party. Franzone v. Tumminelli, 123 N. Y. Supp. 455, 457, 67 Misc. Rep. 549.

Contempts are of two kinds, civil and criminal; a contempt being "civil" where it is instituted by a private individual for the purpose of enforcing some order made for his benefit, the punishment in such case not being, as in case of a criminal contempt, to protect the majesty of the law, but to coerce the performance of a civil act. Flathers v. State, 125 Pac. 902, 908, 7 Okl. Cr. 668.

A person who fails or refuses to do something which he has been ordered to do, or does something that he has been ordered not to do, for the benefit of the opposite party to a cause, is guilty of a "civil contempt," and the object of the punishment is to coerce the performance of an act remedial in its nature. Ex parte Clark, 106 S. W. 990, 996, 208 Mo. 121, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 389.

"Civil contempt" consists in failing to do something ordered to be done by a court in a civil action for the benefit of the opposing party; but failure to file an answer in a case at law, within the time allowed by law or order of court, is not a contempt of court, and an order prescribing a limit within which a defendant may file an answer is not an order requiring an answer to be filed, and is not for the benefit of the opposite party, but merely fixes the time within which the defendant may at his option prepare and file an answer if he desires, and his failure to act within the time given cannot hinder the other party or concern the court or be in contempt of its authority, but affects only the interests of the defendant. Rooker v. Bruce, 85 N. E. 351, 353, 171 Ind. 86.

"A 'civil contempt' is one in which the conduct constituting the contempt is directed against some civil right of the opposing party, as where an injunction is disregarded, or some act required by the court for the benefit of the other party should be neglected. In cases of contempt of this sort the proceeding for its punishment is at the instance of the party interested, and is civil in its character." Warner v. Martin, 52 S. E. 446, 447, 124 Ga. 387, 4 Ann. Cas. 180 (quoting and adopting definition in Welch v. Barber, 52 Conn. 147, 52 Am. Rep. 567).

"'Civil contempts' are those quasi contempts which consist in failure to do something which the contemnor is ordered by the court to do for the benefit or advantage of another party to the proceeding before the court." French v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 97 S. W. 427, 429, 30 Ky. Law Rep. 98 (quoting Rap. Contempt, § 21, as quoted and approved in Wages v. Commonwealth, 13 Ky. Law Rep. 925).

Criminal contempt distinguished

Quasi criminal contempt distinguished, see Quasi Criminal Contempt.

Contempts are either civil or criminal; "civil contempt" embracing the failure of one to do something under order of court for the benefit of a party litigant. Gordon v. Commonwealth, 133 S. W. 206, 208, 141 Ky. 461.

Contempts are of two classes: Criminal contempts, prosecuted to preserve the power of courts and to punish the offender; and "civil contempts," prosecuted to preserve and enforce the rights of private parties and compel obedience to orders and decrees to enforce the rights and administer remedies which the court has found private parties entitled to. Merchants' Stock & Grain Co. v. Board of Trade of City of Chicago, 187 Fed. 398, 402, 109 C. C. A. 230.

Contempt proceedings are of two classes: Those prosecuted to preserve the power and vindicate the dignity of the courts by punishing the contemnor, and those prosecuted to compel observance and redress the violation of orders or decrees made in behalf of a party to an action pending before the court. The former are punitive and essentially criminal in their nature, and the government, the courts, and the people are interested in their prosecution. The latter are civil, remedial, and coercive in their nature, and the parties chiefly interested in their conduct and prosecution are the individuals whose private rights and remedies they are necessary to redress. Christensen Engineering Co. v. Westinghouse Air Brake Co., 135 Fed. 774, 779, 68 C. C. A. 476.

Willful disobedience is a criminal contempt, while a mere disobedience by which the right of a party to an action is defeated or hindered may be a "civil contempt." In re Westminster Realty Corp., 108 N. Y. Supp. 551, 553, 123 App. Div. 797 (citing People v. Dwyer, 90 N. Y. 406, and Code Civ. Proc. §§ 8, 14).

Contempts of court are generally classified as either civil or criminal; the former consisting in a disobedience of some judicial order made in the interest of another party to a proceeding, and the latter of acts disrespectful to the court or obstructive of the administration of justice or calculated to bring the court into disrepute. Ex parte Gudenoge, 100 Pac. 39, 43, 2 Okl. Cr. 110.

Willful disobedience of an order of court in a civil action is not a criminal contempt; in such case the punishment is only ordered for the purpose of enforcing the order. Flathers v. State, 125 Pac. 902, 903, 7 Okl. Cr. 668.

A "criminal contempt" proceeding is one prosecuted to preserve the power and vindicate the dignity of the courts and to punish for disobedience of their orders; while "civil contempt" is one instituted to preserve and enforce the rights of private parties to suits, and to compel obedience to orders and decrees made to enforce the rights and administer the remedies to which the court has found them to be entitled. The President has no power to relieve from either fine or imprisonment imposed in proceedings for civil contempt. Heinze v. Butte & B. Consol. Min. Co., 129 Fed. 283, 284, 63 C. C. A. 388 (quoting and adopting definition in Re Nevitt, 117 Fed. 448, 54 C. C. A. 622).

There is a difference between a quasi criminal contempt and a "civil contempt." A judgment for criminal contempt is not only unnecessary, but positively unwarranted, unless there has been a willful disobedience of the court's order. A party may be guilty of both a criminal contempt and a civil contempt, or may be guilty of the one and not the other. A criminal contempt, actual or constructive, or, as Blackstone says, "direct or circumstantial," partakes of the quality of an offense against the state, whereas a civil contempt under the statute is such disobedience of an order of a court of competent jurisdiction, entered for the benefit or advantage of a party to a civil action, as works a loss or injury to the litigant. The one is quasi criminal and the other is a civil wrong; the one is absolved by a fine payable to the state or imprisonment, and the other by reparation to the other party litigant. Under Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5807, providing that, if any loss or injury to a party in an action prejudicial to his rights therein have been caused by the "contempt," the court may give judgment that the party aggrieved recover of the defendant a sum sufficient to indemnify him, it is not necessary that the contempt be a criminal contempt, for which a fine could be adjudged. State ex rel. Nicomen Boom Co. v. North Shore Boom & Driving Co., 107 Pac. 196, 198, 55 Wash. 1.

Contempts are divided into criminal and civil contempts, yet the power of the court in each rests on its right to protect its dignity and to demand obedience to its decrees. A "civil contempt" consists in failing to do something ordered to be done by a court in a civil action for the benefit of the opposing party therein. Disobedience of an order to turn over property to a receiver appointed by the court is what is denominated a "civil contempt," and the consensus of authority is that the court, having made an order within its power, has the right to commit the violator until he complies with the order. Ex parte Dickens, 50 South. 219, 220, 222, 162 Ala. 272 (citing 9 Cyc. p. 6).

Violation of injunction

"Civil contempts" are those quasi contempts which consist in failing to do something which the contemnor is ordered by the court to do for the benefit or advantage of another party to the proceeding before the court. To this class of contempts belong such acts as the disobedience of an injunction issued at the suit of a private party." Ex parte Hedden, 90 Pac. 737, 744, 29 Nev. 352, 13 Ann. Cas. 1173 (quoting definition in Rap. Contempt, § 21).

CIVIL CONTRACT

Marriage as, see Marriage.

CIVIL CORPORATIONS

"Civil corporations" are of different grades or classes, but in essence and nature they must all be regarded as public. A board of education is a quasi public corporation existing only under statute having only the powers given under statute, and such implied powers as are absolutely necessary to execute such express powers. It cannot engage in business or make contracts outside its functions touching education. Herald v. Board of Education, 65 S. E. 103, 104, 65 W. Va. 765, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 588 (citing 1 Dillon, Mun. Corp. §§ 24, 25; Shinn v. Board of Education, 20 S. E. 604, 29 W. Va. 498; Honaker v. Board of Education of Pocatalico Dist., 24 S. E. 544, 42 W. Va. 170, 32 L. R. A. 413, 57 Am. St. Rep. 847).

CIVIL COURT

The word "civil," as used in the phrase "civil courts," when used in contradistinction to military courts, includes the criminal courts. Kirkman v. McClaughry, 152 Fed. 255, 258.

Owing to the distribution of jurisdiction into civil and criminal cases, the courts having jurisdiction of criminal cases were designated as "criminal courts" and those having jurisdiction of civil cases became known as "civil courts." State ex rel. Board of Education of St. Louis v. Nast, 108 S. W. 563, 566, 209 Mo. 708.

CIVIL DEATH

A person sentenced to the penitentiary for life is "civilly dead." Manley v. Mayer, 75 Pac. 550, 556, 68 Kan. 377, 1 Ann. Cas. 825 (citing Ashmore v. McDonnell [Kan.] 16 Pac. 687).

St. 1893, § 2578, providing that a person sentenced to imprisonment for life, is thereby deemed "civilly dead," has no application to the right of such person to testify, but applies to other civil rights. One who is "civilly dead" may testify; section 4209 providing that no person shall be disqualified as a witness by reason of conviction for crime, but such notice may be shown to affect his credibility. Martin v. Territory, 78 Pac. 83, 89, 14 Okl. 598.

CIVIL DISTRICTS

"Civil districts" in Const. art. 6, § 15, providing that the different counties shall be laid off, as the General Assembly may direct, into "civil districts" of convenient size, so that the whole number in each county shall not be more than 25, or 4 for every 100 square miles, and that there shall be two justices of the peace and one constable elected in each district by the qualified voters therein, etc., are but territorial subdivisions of counties. Their chief use is in regulating the number of justices of the peace allowed counties and in holding elections, and such districts cannot be clothed with corporate life, nor vested with legislative power, or other governmental function. Acts 1903, p. 1220, c. 424, abolishing certain districts of Knox county and redistricting the county, is not invalid, notwithstanding the districts as laid off are disproportionate in area, wealth, and population, and of shape inconvenient to their inhabitants, since the power to create the districts is vested in the legislative department, and its action in such respect is conclusive. Maxey v. Powers, 101 S. W. 181, 185, 117 Tenn. 381.

CIVIL LIBERTY

There is no doubt that the words "life, liberty, and property," as used in both the fifth and fourteenth amendments of the United States Constitution, were used as representative terms. Of these words "liberty" is undoubtedly the most comprehensive. When the term "civil liberty" is used, there is now always meant a high degree of mutually guaranteed protection against interference with the interests and rights held dear and important by large classes of civilized men, or by all the members of a state, together with an effectual share in the making and administration of the laws as the best apparatus to secure that protection, and constituting the most dignified government of men who are conscious of their rights and of the destiny of humanity. We understand, by "civil liberty," not only the absence of individual restraint, but liberty within the social system and political organism—a combination of principles and laws which acknowledge, protect, and favor the dignity of man. We come thus to the conclusion that liberty, applied to political man, practically means in the main protection or checks against undue interference, whether this be from individuals, from masses, or from government. The highest amount of liberty comes to signify the safest guarantees of undisturbed legitimate action, and the most efficient checks against undue interference. McKinster v. Sager, 72 N. E. 854, 857, 163 Ind. 671, 68 L. R. A. 273, 106 Am. St. Rep. 268 (quoting and adopting definition in Leiber, Civil Liberty and Self-Government [Woolsey's 3d Ed.] 24, 40).

CIVIL MARITIME CASE

A "civil maritime case" is "one arising on the sea or from some act or contract concerning the commerce and navigation thereof." A civil case arising where the sea ebbs and flows, even though within the body of a county, is a case of admiralty or maritime jurisdiction within the federal Constitution. Case v. Woolley, 36 Ky. (6 Dana) 17, 20, 32 Am. Dec. 54 (citing and adopting De Lovio v. Boit, 2 Gall. 398, 7 Fed. Cas. 418; Plummer v. Webb, 4 Mason, 380, 19 Fed. Cas. 891; Drinkwater v. Spartan, 5 Amer. Jur. 26, 7 Fed. Cas. 1085; The Thomas Jefferson, 23 U. S. [10 Wheat.] 426, 6 L. Ed. 358; and Peyroux v. Howard, 32 U. S. [7 Pet.] 324, 8 L. Ed. 700).

CIVIL NATURE

See Suit of Civil Nature.

CIVIL OBLIGATION

A "civil obligation" is a legal tie which gives the party with whom it is contracted the right of enforcing its performance by law. In relation to their origin "civil obligations" are of two kinds, such as are created by operation of law, and such as arise from the consent of the parties who are bound by them and which are called contracts or conventional obligations. Morgan's Louisiana & T. R. & S. S. Co. v. Stewart, 44 South. 138, 143, 119 La. 392.

CIVIL OFFICE

"Salary" like an oath of office, is an incident to office merely, and not a necessary element in the determination of its character. The fact that there is no salary or emolument affixed to an office does not make it any the less a "civil office." In re Members of Legislature, 39 South. 63, 64, 49 Fla. 269 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 4924).

The office of justice of the peace is a "civil office under the state" within Const. art. 6, subd. Elections, § 4, providing that every person holding any civil office under the state shall, unless removed according to law, exercise the duties of the office until his successor is duly qualified, the office being provided for by the Constitution and general laws, and being connected with the state judicial department, the justices being granted concurrent jurisdiction with the district court in civil actions involving $200 and jurisdiction in misdemeanor cases by Const. art. 5, § 22, and hence a justice is entitled to hold office until his successor qualifies. Balantyne v. Bower, 99 Pac. 869, 871, 17 Wyo. 356, 17 Ann. Cas. 82.

CIVIL OFFICER

"Civil officers" embrace only those officers in whom the portion of the sovereignty is vested and in whom the enforcement of the municipal regulations or the control of the general interests of society is confided. It is not such officers as canal commissioners." The term does not include commissioners to make a survey, to superintend the erection of a statehouse, to fund a city debt, or to liquidate a financial institution. Benedict v. City of New Orleans, 39 South. 792, 800, 115 La. 645 (citing United States ex rel. Noyes v. Hatch [Wis.] 1 Pin. 182; 2 Burns, § 21; Abbott's Law Dict.; Butler v. Regents of the University, 32 Wis. 124; Bunn v. People ex rel. Laffin, 45 Ill. 397; People ex rel. Carlton v. Middleton, 28 Cal. 608; Andrews v. Saucier, 13 La. Ann. 301; Conrey v. Copland, 4 La. Ann. 307).

Aldermen and councilmen

Aldermen and common councilmen of a city are "civil officers," within Const. art. 2, § 2, conferring the right to vote for such officers on registry voters. In re The Newport Charter, 14 R. I. 655, 659.

Attorney at law

A practicing attorney is not a "civil officer," within Ky. St. § 2248, rendering such officers incompetent to serve as grand jurors.

Shaw v. United States, 180 Fed. 848, 351, 103 C. C. A. 494.

Board of control

Members of a board of control created by law, who are charged with the duty of locating and continuously and permanently controlling and managing state institutions of learning, whose terms of office are definitely fixed, with provision for removal and appointment by the Governor to fill vacancies on such board, the office being continuous and permanent and remaining to be filled, though the incumbents may die or resign, are "civil officers," under the Constitution of Florida. The fact that there is no salary or emolument affixed to such office does not make it any the less a civil office, since salary or emolument, like an oath of office, is an incident to office merely, and not a necessary element in the determination of its character. In re Members of Legislature, 39 South. 63, 64, 49 Fla. 269 (citing 6 Words and Phrases Judicially Defined, p. 4924 et seq., and citations; People ex rel. Welker v. Bledsoe, 68 N. C. 457; McCornick v. Thatcher, 30 Pac. 1091, 8 Utah, 294, 17 L. R. A. 243).

Convict guard

While a state convict guard is a "civil officer," and may carry a pistol in the discharge of his duties, he cannot carry it when not in the discharge of his duties. Veal v. State, 125 S. W. 919, 920, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 340.

Justice of the peace

The phrase "civil office under the state," within Const. art. 6, subd. Elections, § 4, providing that every person holding a civil office under the state or any municipality therein shall, unless removed according to law, exercise the duties of such office until his successor is duly qualified, import an office in which is reposed some portion of the sovereign power of the state, having some connection with the legislative, judicial, or executive department of the government. The office of justice of the peace comes within this class. Ballantyne v. Bower, 99 Pac. 869, 871, 17 Wyo. 358, 17 Ann. Cas. 82 (citing Attorney General ex rel. Moreland v. Common Council of City of Detroit, 70 N. W. 450, 112 Mich. 145, 37 L. R. A. 211; Montgomery v. State, 18 South. 157, 107 Ala. 372; Shelby v. Alcorn, 36 Miss. 273, 72 Am. Dec. 169; People v. Leonard, 14 Pac. 853, 73 Cal. 230; Barnhill v. Thompson, 29 S. E. 720, 122 N. C. 493; State ex rel. Olson v. Scott, 117 N. W. 1044, 105 Minn. 513).

Mail carrier

A rural mail carrier, though an officer, is not a "civil officer," within Pen. Code 1911, art. 476, permitting a "revenue or other civil officer" engaged in the discharge of official duty to carry a weapon, because under the doctrine of ejusdem generis the quoted words apply only to a revenue officer, not civil, or other officer of the same character. Lattimore v. State (Tex.) 145 S. W. 588, 590.

A United States "mail carrier * * * is a private agent of the contractor for carrying the mail" (and in some cases the contractor himself), and is not embraced within the term "civil officers of the United States," as used in Code 1883, § 1005, excepting such officers from the prohibition against carrying concealed weapons. State v. Boone, 44 S. E. 595, 132 N. C. 1107 (quoting and adopting Mechem, Pub. Off. § 41).

School officers

Members of a city school committee are "civil officers." In re Election of School Committee of City of Woonsocket, 72 Atl. 417, 28 R. I. 629.

CIVIL PROCEEDINGS

See Civil Action—Case—Suit—Etc.

CIVIL PROCESS

The term "civil proceeding" or "process," as used in the statute relating to the ordering of notices in vacation, is a generic term for writs of the class called judicial. Mitchell v. Emmons, 71 Atl. 321, 324, 104 Me. 76.

Rev. Laws Mass. c. 25, § 88, requiring constables to give bond as a condition of serving "civil process," does not include the summoning of jurors, and the fact that a constable who served a summons on a juror in a prosecution for murder had not given the required bond is not a ground for challenge for cause. Commonwealth v. Tucker, 76 N. E. 127, 129, 189 Mass. 457, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1056.

The warrant in bastardy proceedings commanding an arrest is a "civil process." Town of Hamden v. Collins, 82 Atl. 636, 638, 85 Conn. 327.

CIVIL REMEDY

See Civil Action—Case—Suit—Etc.

CIVIL RIGHTS

As privilege, see Privilege.

"A 'civil right' is a right accorded to every member of a district, community, or nation." Winnett v. Adams, 99 N. W. 681, 684, 71 Neb. 817 (quoting Anderson, Law Dict.).

"Civil rights" are such as belong to any citizen, or, in a wider sense, to every inhabitant of the country, and are not connected with the organization or administration of government, and include the rights of property, marriage, jury trial, etc. Friendly v. Olcott, 123 Pac. 53, 56, 61 Or. 580.

"The right to become the nominee of a political party, whether national or state, and as such nominee to receive the votes of the qualified electors voting to fill such office, is a purely 'political right,' as contradistinguished from 'civil or property right,'" and equity has no jurisdiction to enjoin officers of a state, acting under state statute, from issuing a certificate of nomination to a candidate for representative in Congress, as its jurisdiction extends only to relief of "civil rights." "Civil rights are those which have no relation to the establishment, support, or management of the government. They consist in the power of acquiring and enjoying property, or exercising the paternal and marital powers, and the like. It will be observed that every one, unless deprived of them by sentence of civil death, is in the enjoyment of civil rights, which is not the case with political rights; for an alien, for example, has no political, although in full enjoyment of civil, rights." Anthony v. Burrow, 129 Fed. 783, 789 (quoting and adopting definitions in Re Sawyer, 8 Sup. Ct. 482, 124 U. S. 200, 31 L. Ed. 402; 2 Bouv. Law Dict. 597).

Under Const. art. 6, § 3, which provides that persons convicted of infamous crime, unless restored to their civil rights, shall be excluded from the elective franchise, an information charging that accused, in registering to vote, falsely swore that he had not lost his civil rights by being convicted of an infamous crime, whereas he had been convicted in another state of the infamous crime of breaking jail before conviction, does not state an offense; the right to vote being "political" and not "civil." State v. Collins, 124 Pac. 908, 904, 69 Wash. 268.

CIVIL SERVICE

See State Civil Service; Under the Civil Service Rules.

"'Civil service,' in its enlarged sense, means all service rendered to and paid for by the state or nation, or by political subdivisions thereof, other than pertaining to naval or military affairs." Though Const. art. 16, § 30, declares that the duration of all offices not fixed by this Constitution shall never exceed two years, it is presumed that this definition of the phrase "civil service" was in the mind of the Legislature when it enacted a city charter placing the police and fire departments under a civil service commission, and providing that the appointees thereof shall hold their positions during good behavior, rather than that a life tenure of office was contemplated, so in the reading of the constitutional provisions into the charter provision, the words "civil service" will remain unchanged, and be given the definition quoted. Callaghan v. McGown (Tex.) 90 S. W. 319, 322 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1200; Hope v. City of New Orleans, 30 South. 842, 106 La. 345).

CIVIL SUIT

See Civil Action—Case—Suit—Etc.

CIVIL TERM

St. 1909, § 965 (Russell's St. § 2812), providing for criminal terms of the circuit court of a county, and for civil terms thereof, divides the circuit court of the county into criminal and civil terms, and while the one circuit judge of the judicial district embracing the county presides at both the criminal and civil terms, he is without jurisdiction to try a criminal case at a civil term or to try a civil action at a criminal term, the words "criminal term" applying to a term of court at which indictments are found and returned, and at which persons are tried for crimes and other penal offenses, and the words "civil term" applying to a term at which civil business is disposed of, and controversies cognizable at law or in equity are litigated. Smedley v. Commonwealth, 127 S. W. 485, 488.

CIVIL WAR

Insurrection against a government may or may not culminate in an organized rebellion, but a civil war always begins by insurrection against the lawful authority of the government. A "civil war" is never solemnly declared, but becomes such by the number, power, and organization of the persons who originate and carry it on. When the parties in rebellion occupy and hold in a hostile manner a portion of territory, have declared their independence, cast off their allegiance, organized armies, and commenced hostilities against their former sovereign, the world acknowledges them as belligerents, and the contest as a war. The test of the existence of a civil war is when the regular course of justice is interrupted by revolt, rebellion, or insurrection, so that the courts of justice cannot be kept open. The hostile opposition which continued in the Philippine Islands after the treaty of Paris was in the nature of a civil war, beginning by insurrection, and courts will take judicial notice of its existence. La Rue v. Kansas Mut. Life Ins. Co., 75 Pac. 494, 496, 68 Kan. 539 (quoting and adopting definition given in Prize Cases, 67 U. S. [2 Black] 635, 666-668, 17 L. Ed. 459).

Specially claimed, see Specially Set Up.

A "claim" is a demand made of a right or supposed right, calling on another for something due or supposed to be due. It implies that the right is a dispute, and is suggestive of debate, contention, and of something left for future determination. Gordon Bros. v. Wageman, 108 N. W. 1067, 1069, 77 Neb. 185.

Among other definitions of the word "claim," the Standard Dictionary gives the following: "To hold to be true against implied denial or doubt; affirm; assert." Pollock Min. & Mill. Co. v. Davenport, 78 Pac. 768, 81 Mont. 452.

"The words 'to claim' are sometimes incorrectly used as synonymous with 'to think,' or 'to insist.' Their proper meaning is 'to challenge as a right,' or 'to demand as due.'" Hill v. Henry, 57 Atl. 554, 555, 66 N. J. Eq. 150.

A "claim" is, not only legally speaking, but in ordinary parlance, clearly distinguishable from a "grant" or a "title." A "claim" is defined in the Century Dictionary as "the thing claimed or demanded; specifically, a piece of public land which a squatter or settler marks out for himself with the intention of purchasing it when the government offers it for sale; as, 'he staked out a claim.'" "A 'grant,' on the contrary, has a distinctly broader meaning. It implies an acquired right, and is described by Mr. Bouvier as applicable to the conveyance of incorporeal rights. But, in the larger sense the term comprehends anything that is granted or passed from one to another, and is applied to every species of property. It therefore necessarily implies a 'title' or vested right in the grantee from the grantor, or has a much more pregnant signification than a claim." Corkran Oil & Development Co. v. Arnaudet, 35 South. 747, 754, 111 La. 568.

A "claim" in a juridical sense is a demand of some matter as of right, made by one person upon another to do or forbear to do some act or thing as a matter of duty. Vandalia R. Co. v. Stephens, 78 N. E. 1053, 39 Ind. App. 11.

A "claim" is a somewhat anomalous statutory procedure. To interpose a claim is permissive, not compulsory. A person may claim, or may let the property go to sale and take other legal action afterward. It has sometimes been analogized to a legal suit to recover the property levied on, and sometimes to an equitable proceeding to recover the property or to enjoin the sale. At any rate, it is a statutory proceeding by the claimant, who may intervene and seek to prevent the sale from taking place, on the ground that the property is his, and not subject. Walden v. Walden, 57 S. E. 328, 325, 128 Ga. 126.

As amount demanded or recoverable

A partial estimate by the city engineer of Omaha on a paving contract, and reported by him to the board of public works and the city council for allowance, is a "claim" against the city within the meaning of section 33 of the charter, allowing an appeal by taxpayer from an allowance of such claim. Lobeck v. State, 101 N. W. 247, 249, 72 Neb. 595.

Rev. Laws 1905, § 620, provides that no action shall be maintained against the county upon any claim, except county orders, when the only relief demanded is a judgment for money, until such claims have been duly presented to the board, and it shall have failed to act upon such claim within the time fixed by law, and unless the board shall give its consent to the institution of such action. Held, that the section does not apply to the final payment due a contractor in drainage proceedings; the certificate of final completion of the contract issued by the engineer, and which the board may approve or disapprove, not being a "claim," within the statute. Merz v. Wright County, 131 N. W. 635, 637, 114 Minn. 448.

The word "claims," in Mills' Ann. St. § 801, providing that all "claims" against a county shall be presented to the county commissioners before any action shall be maintained thereon, refers to "claims" originating in contract, express or implied, between claimant and the county, and a claim by a county treasurer for the difference between his salary as fixed by Laws 1891, p. 307, and as reduced by Sess. Laws 1899, p. 331, based on the ground that the latter act is unconstitutional, is a contractual claim, and may not be put in suit without first presenting the same to the commissioners for audit and allowance. Gregg v. Board of Com'rs of Lake County, 76 Pac. 376, 378, 32 Colo. 357.

As assertion or pretension

The word "claim," used either colloquially or definitely, means the assertion of a right, and, where the court stated that it was about to give instructions based on this claim of the defendant that he acted in self-defense, it refers to the assertion by the defendant that the killing was excusable, because committed by him in the exercise of the right of self-defense. People v. Glover, 74 Pac. 745, 747; 141 Cal. 233.

"The word 'claim,' as used in the statute governing appeals from actions of county boards, is used in the sense of an assertion or a pretension." Sheldon v. Gage County Society of Agriculture, 98 N. W. 1045, 71 Neb. 411.

In view of the fact that Burns' Ann. St. 1908, §§ 6002, 6008, providing for the filing and allowance of claims against counties, contemplate that the claim and the "verification" thereof are separate instruments, and in view of the meaning of "claim," which is the assertion of a liability, to the one making it, to do a service or pay a sum, and of the term "verified," which, as applied to pleadings and statements of claims filed with municipal officers, etc., means an affidavit "attached to" such statement of claim as to the truth of the matter stated therein, the verification of a claim filed against a county for work done is not a part of the statement of claim, but a distinct instrument, and hence need not be alleged in the affidavit, together with the claim, in a prosecution for presenting a fraudulent claim to a county for work done, in order to admit the claim itself in evidence, as matters not forming a part of an instrument need not be set out in the affidavit as a part thereof, in order to prevent a variance. Bader v. State, 94 N. E. 1009, 1012, 176 Ind. 268.

"One meaning of the verb 'claim' is to assert; to maintain; to hold or maintain as a fact or as true." Hence an allegation that petitioner "claims" that he notified another that he would not indemnify him against loss, etc., sufficiently alleges that petitioner gave such notice to such other person. Collins v. Farley, 66 Atl. 713, 714, 80 Vt. 144.

As cause of action or defense

The word "claim," as used in Laws 1895, c. 95, § 1, which authorizes one having a claim against the state to sue thereon, is synonymous with "cause of action." Rid-doch v. State, 123 Pac. 450, 451, 68 Wash. 329, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 251.

Code Civ. Proc. §§ 146-150, authorizing amendments which do not change the "claim" or defense, the limit of the power of amendment is only exceeded by a departure from the subject of the action. Wolfinger v. Thomas, 115 N. W. 100, 103, 22 S. D. 57, 133 Am. St. Rep. 900 (citing Post v. Campbell, 85 N. W. 1032, 110 Wis. 378).

A mechanic's lien under a contract made by a testator in his lifetime which was performed wholly or in part after his death cannot be enforced unless presentation of the claim to the executor is both pleaded and proved, in view of Rem. & Bal. Code, § 1479, providing that no holder of a claim against an estate shall maintain an action thereon unless the claim shall be first presented to the executor or administrator, the word "claim" being synonymous with "cause of action." F. T. Crowe & Co. v. Adkinson Const. Co., 121 Pac. 841, 842, 67 Wash. 420.

"Demand" or "claim" is properly used in reference to a cause of action. Injury to land, in that a county unlawfully entered thereon and constructed a road, is a "claim" or "demand," within a statute requiring all claims and demands against a county to be presented to the county commissioners before the action shall be maintainable thereon. Henry v. Board of Coun- ty Com'rs of San Miguel County, 92 Pac. 697, 41 Colo. 267.

The fact that a state is not subject to an action on behalf of a citizen does not establish that he has no "claim" against the state for injuries to his property from a public improvement, or that no liability exists from the state to him; it only shows that he cannot enforce his claim and make the state answer in a court of law, and not that there is no liability and no claim, but only that there is no remedy. Coster & Pruyn v. Mayor, etc., of City of Albany, 43 N. Y. 399, 407.

Rem. & Bal. Code Wash. § 1470, providing that every executor and administrator shall immediately after his appointment cause to be published in some paper printed in his county a notice requiring creditors to present claims within a year after the date of notice, and section 1472, declaring that if a claim is not presented within such year it shall be barred, apply to mere personal claims against the estate of a deceased guardian; the word "claim" being synonymous with "cause of action." Newberry v. Wilkinson, 190 Fed. 62, 66, 67.

Whether plaintiff, in an action against a county, asserts a right of action for money had and received for money borrowed illegally by county officers, but used for specified legitimate current expenses, or whether he alleges an implied contract to repay him money so received and used, in either case it is a "claim" against the county, within Civ. Code 1910, § 411, requiring presentation of claims against counties within 12 months after they accrue. Butts County v. Wright, 71 S. E. 1046, 1047, 136 Ga. 697.

The word "claim," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 531, which provides that the court may upon notice direct a bill of particulars of the claim of either party to be delivered to the adverse party, includes not only matters which are effective only as a defense, but matters set forth in an answer by way of counterclaim. Otto Huber Brewery v. Sieke, 131 N. Y. Supp. 271, 272, 146 App. Div. 467.

An answer setting out counterclaims, without demanding affirmative relief, alleges items which defendant must prove affirmatively in reduction of plaintiff's recovery; and the items constitute a "claim," within Code Civ. Proc. § 531, authorizing the court to order a bill of particulars of a claim of either party. McCool v. Merrill-Ruckgaber Co., 129 N. Y. Supp. 377, 378.

The word "claim," as used in Code Civ. Proc. 1893, § 139, providing that the court may, before or after judgment, in furtherance of justice and on such terms as may be proper, amend any pleading, etc., when such amendment does not change substantially the claim or defense, means the plaintiff's right of action appearing by the pleading. Smock v. Carter, 50 Pac. 262, 263, 6 Okl. 300.

The word "claim," in a motion by plaintiff for a bill of particulars of the claim of defendant, includes the defense and counter-claim set forth by defendant. Posner v. Rosenberg, 133 N. Y. Supp. 702, 703, 149 App. Div. 270.

A mechanic's lien under a contract made by a testator in his lifetime which was performed wholly or in part after his death cannot be enforced unless presentation of the claim to the executor is both pleaded and proved, in view of Rem. & Bal. Code, § 1479, providing that no holder of a claim against an estate shall maintain an action thereon unless the claim shall be first presented to the executor or administrator, the word "claim" being synonymous with "cause of action." F. T. Crowe & Co. v. Adkinson Const. Co., 121 Pac. 841, 842, 67 Wash. 420.

Claims ex delicto

The word "claims," in Comp. St. 1909, c. 14, art. 1, § 80, requiring claims to be presented to the city council for allowance before suit, applies only to claims arising on contracts, not for personal injury caused by the negligence of a city. Bayard v. City of Franklin, 127 N. W. 113, 87 Neb. 57.

The word "claims," within the statute requiring all claims against the county to be filed with the county clerk, referred only to those claims originating in contract, express or implied, between the claimant and the county, and not to claims for damages for torts committed. Gregg v. Board of Com'rs of Lake County, 76 Pac. 376, 378, 32 Colo. 357.

A claim against a city by a property owner for damages to his premises resulting from the overflowing of a sewer is now within the charter of second-class cities (Laws 1895, c. 182), known as the "White Charter," requiring all "claims" against the city for damages to property alleged to have been caused by negligence of the city or its officers to be presented to the common council. Ahrens v. City of Rochester, 90 N. Y. Supp. 744, 745, 97 App. Div. 480.

The words "claim or demand," in a city charter providing "that no action shall be maintained by any person against the city * * * upon any claim or demand until such person shall have first presented his claim or demand to the common council for allowance," etc., apply to claims or demands arising out of a tort. Bradley v. City of Eau Claire, 14 N. W. 10, 11, 56 Wis. 168.

Amsterdam City Charter (Laws 1885, c. 131) § 31, requires that all "claims" against the city be presented to the council for audit, and also requires presentation of claims for injuries arising out of defective highways within a stated time, and declares that no action shall be commenced thereon until three months after the presentation of the claim. Held, that the three months required to elapse after presentation of the claim before suit can be brought thereon refers only to claims for injuries arising out of defective highways, and does not relate to a claim of a county against the city for relief furnished to a pauper having a residence in the city. Onondaga County v. City of Amsterdam, 124 N. Y. Supp. 558, 561, 139 App. Div. 877.

Rev. Codes, § 2268, requiring an itemized statement of a "claim" against a village, duly verified by the claimant's oath, to be presented to the village authorities before suit commenced, does not apply to a claim for an injury because of a defective sidewalk or street. Miller v. Village of Mullan, 104 Pac. 660, 665, 17 Idaho, 28, 19 Ann. Cas. 1107.

Under a statute providing that all claims against a city for damages or injury arising from the defective condition of any street or bridge, or from the negligence of the city authorities in respect thereto, shall within 90 days after the happening of the injury or damage, be presented to the city in writing, signed by the claimant, describing the time, place, cause, and extent of the damage or injury, and that no action shall be maintained against city unless it appears that the "claim" on which it was based was presented to the council, and that the council did not within 90 days thereafter audit and allow the same, the mere fact that a claimant for damages for injuries resulting from the defective condition of a bridge demands a less sum than he is entitled to recover does not, on rejection of his claim, preclude him from recovering by action his actual damages, though they exceed the amount of his claim on file. Mackay v. Salt Lake City, 81 Pac. 81, 82, 83, 29 Utah, 247, 4 Ann. Cas. 824 (citing definition in Noble v. City of Portsmouth, 30 Atl. 419, 67 N. H. 183).

Debt synonymous

See Debt.

Demand distinguished

The words "demand" and "claim" are often interchangeable, and are taken as synonymous. But "demand" is not used in its broadest sense, as equivalent with "claim," in Greater New York Charter (Laws 1901, c. 466) § 101, providing that interest shall cease to run on sums awarded as damages six months after the date of the confirmation of the report, unless within that time demand therefor be made on the comptroller. It refers to a request made by the payee for money which has theretofore been legally determined as then payable to him, and which is specifically held for payment to him by the city. In re City of New York, 86 N. Y. Supp. 1085, 1038, 91 App. Div. 532.

A "demand" is a peremptory claim to a thing of right. It differs from a claim, in that it presupposes that there is no defense or doubt about the question of right. "Demand" will not admit of delay, while "claim" implies that the right is or may be doubtful, and that negotiations shall be had to determine the same. A statement by an owner of land to the adjacent owner, after the parties had agreed on a boundary line, that he was not satisfied and would like to have the thing settled peaceably, is not a "demand" for any part of the land in dispute, essential to the maintenance of ejectment therefor. Welborn v. Kimmerling, 89 N. E. 517, 520, 46 Ind. App. 98.

The terms "claims" and "demands" in P. S. 2814, providing for the appointment of commissioners to receive and adjust claims and demands of persons against a decedent, mean the same. Batchelder v. White Adm'rs, 71 Atl. 1111, 1112, 82 Vt. 132.

The word "demand" in Code, §§ 1308, 1309, making all credits taxable, and defining "credit" as including every claim or demand due, or to become due, for money, labor, or other valuable thing, and all money or property of any kind secured by deed or otherwise, is more comprehensive than the word "debt," which imports a sum of money owing on a contract express or implied, and embraces rightful claims whether founded on a contract, tort, or a superior right of property, and is a word of wider significance than any other except "claim," which means a demand of some matter as of right by one person on another to do or to forbear to do some act or thing as a matter of duty (citing 2 Words and Phrases, 1202, 1978). Under Code, §§ 1308, 1309, a claim on a fire policy for a loss occurring December 23d, which depends for its validity on whether there has been any breach of the conditions of the policy on the part of insured and on his making proofs of loss, is taxable, though the amount of damages had not been ascertained on January 1st following, but ascertained at the time of assessing, and though the insurer had the option to rebuild, since the value of the claim must be estimated by the assessor who is not limited to conditions known on January 1st, but who may use such information as may be available at the time of assessing, and since the claim of insured on insurer, even though there be an election to rebuild, is for property due on contract or a claim due or to become due for money, labor, or other valuable thing. Tally v. Brown, 125 N. W. 248, 249, 250, 146 Iowa, 360, 140 Am. St. Rep. 282.

The word "claim" is comprehensive. It is in a just, juridical sense a demand of some matter of right made by one person upon another, to do, or to forbear to do, some act or thing as a matter of duty. The term "demand," according to Lord Coke, is the largest word in law, except "claim," and a release of all demands discharges all sorts of actions, rights, titles, conditions before and after breach, executions, appeals, rents of all kinds, covenants, annuities, contracts, recognizances, statutes, commons, etc. Code Civ. Proc. § 3162, as amended by Laws 1897, p. 245, provides that the parties or assignees of parties to an action or proceeding against an executor or administrator on a claim or demand against the estate of a deceased person shall not be competent witnesses as to any matter of fact occurring before the death of such person. Held, that the complainant in a suit to enforce a trust in a mining claim against the executors of complainant's alleged co-owner was incompetent to testify to matters occurring before the death of the latter and to conversations as to such claim, and to declarations of decedent that plaintiff was one of the grantees in the patent. Delmoe v. Long, 88 Pac. 778, 781, 35 Mont. 139 (quoting and adopting definition in Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 41 U. S. [16 Pet.] 615, 10 L. Ed. 1000, and Anderson's Law Dict., and citing Bacon's Abridgment, title "Release," 283, and Vedder v. Vedder, [N. Y.] 1 Denio, 258).

The word "claim," as used in Rev. St. §§ 894, 1077, giving county commissioners power to pass on claims of the auditor for services and claims other than those of the auditor, naturally imports a matter of charge which is based on some statute, or grows out of the performance of some authorized contract, wherein the inquiry of the commissioners as to the auditor is confined to whether or not the services were rendered, and to other claims to determine the amount due, as contrasted with a mere demand unsupported by law. Jones v. Commissioners of Lucas County, 48 N. E. 882, 886, 57 Ohio St. 189, 63 Am. St. Rep. 710.

As equitable claim

Prior to the filing of an involuntary bankruptcy petition the bankrupt made an assignment of his claim on insurance policies constituting his sole assets, and the assignee rendered valuable services in attempting to collect the claims. On a trustee in bankruptcy being appointed, the assignee turned over to him the policies, with all proofs and claims, subject to a lien for allowances for the expenses incurred, and the trustee in bankruptcy subsequently settled the claims with the insurance companies. The claim of the assignee for expenses and services was an equitable claim, allowable by way of deduction from the fund realized for the benefit of creditors, to the extent of beneficial expenditure and service, and was not a "claim against the bankrupt," under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 57, 30 Stat. 560, 561. In re Levitt, 126 Fed. 889, 891.

Incumbrances on land

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 57, 30 Stat. 560, provides that claims which have been allowed may at any time before the estate is closed be reconsidered for cause; and, whenever a claim on which a dividend has been paid shall have been reconsidered and rejected in whole or in part, the trustee may recover from the creditor the amount of the dividends received on the claim if rejected in whole, or the proportionate part thereof if rejected in part. Held, that the word "claim" as so used did not include fixed liens on the real estate of the bankrupt, nor did the word "dividends" apply to payments thereon, and hence payment of such lien claim by the bankrupt's trustee pending a writ of error to review the judgment enforcing a lien was not merely tentative so as to entitle the trustee to continue to prosecute the proceeding in error after such payment. Hawthorne v. Hendrie & Bolthoff Mfg. & Supply Co., 116 Pac. 122, 124, 50 Colo. 342.

Judgment distinguished

See Judgment.

As liability

Testator bequeathed all his property to executors, in trust to accumulate rents and profits until the remarriage or death of the widow, and not to dispose of the same until the happening of either of such events, "except as hereinafter provided." By the second clause he directed payment of all claims and demands on or against his estate, and then a division of rents and profits among his wife and children. By the sixth clause he conferred power on the executors to pay all incumbrances, "claims and demands" against his estate, to raise money thereon and execute conveyances necessary in their judgment for the best interests of the estate, and to sell at either public or private sale. Held, that the term "claims and demands," as so used, included a liability to repair tenement buildings belonging to the estate in accordance with directions of the tenement house department, and that the executors, therefore, having no available funds to make such repairs, had power to sell the property before the repairs were made by the department, at its expense, for the benefit of the estate. Hess v. Hess, 117 N. Y. Supp. 555, 558, 132 App. Div. 749.

As lien

See Lien.

Money in bank

"Accounts," "claims," and "debts" belonging to a mercantile business are not ordinarily used to embrace money in bank, but to designate the accounts, claims, and debts against customers. Wyatt v. Norris, 66 S. E. 1016, 66 W. Va. 667.

Mortgage

Under a mortgage in the form of an absolute deed, reciting that the deed is subject to the claim of the Anglo-Californian Bank, Limited, the term "claim" is broad enough to include a mortgage. Anglo-Californian Bank v. Field, 80 Pac. 1080-1083, 146 Cal. 644.

As offer to vote

In Const. 1776, art. 4, providing that all inhabitants of full age who, among other qualifications, have resided within the county in which they claim a vote for twelve months shall be entitled to vote, etc., the phrase "claim a vote" means a lawful claim to vote at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. Carpenter v. Cornish, 83 Atl. 31, 32, 83 N. J. Law, 254.

As owns or claims to own

An award of referees that plaintiff should pay to an administrator for the "claim" of the estate in one yoke of oxen, was a finding that the oxen belonged to plaintiff and that he owed the estate on account thereof. Scott v. Perley, 98 Mass. 511, 514.

The word "claim" is a broad and comprehensive term, and includes title and ownership to real property when used in relation thereto. Sherman v. Sherman, 122 N. W. 439, 443, 23 S. D. 486.

Under Rev. St. 1895, arts. 2967, 2968, declaring that all property of the husband "owned or claimed" by him before marriage, and that "acquired" afterwards by gift, devise, or descent, shall be his separate property, and all property "acquired" by the husband or wife during the marriage, except that "acquired" by gift, devise, or descent, shall be the common property of the husband and wife, ownership resting in adverse possession for 10 years, existing in part before marriage and in part after marriage, is community property; the word "acquired" denoting all property coming to husband or wife during coverture by title, other than by gift, devise, or descent; and the word "claim," when applied to land, importing a legal or equitable right to the land; and the words "owned or claimed" signifying a legal or equitable ownership or legal or equitable right to demand the land. Sauvage v. Wauhatch (Tex.) 143 S. W. 259, 263.

In common speech a person "claims" the land to which he has title, meaning by his claim of title to declare ownership, and such an expression, used in a pleading, means an assertion of title, and is equivalent to an allegation that the plaintiff has title to the land. Dugas v. Hammond, 60 S. E. 268, 269, 130 Ga. 87 (citing Stand. Dic.; Marshall v. Shafter, 32 Cal. 176).

The words "claim to * * * property" as used in section 8 of the judiciary act (Act March 3, 1875, c. 137, 18 Stat. 472 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 513]), authorizing suits to enforce such claims to be brought in the district where the property is situated, relate only to claims made to the property in the nature of an assertion of ownership or proprietary interest or other direct right or claim to the property itself, and do not include a suit which merely seeks to enforce a restriction which the law imposes upon the owner of the property in reference to its proper use to avoid injury to other property, as one to abate or enjoin a nuisance. Ladew v. Tennessee Copper Co., 179 Fed. 245, 250.

As personal property

See Personal Property.

To public land

The word "claim," as used in the act of 1887 (24 Stat. 505) giving a federal circuit court jurisdiction to hear and determine certain claims against the United States, includes a claim by a purchaser or his assignee of timber land under the act of 1878 (20 Stat. 89) to have a patent issue for the same. Jones v. United States, 35 Fed. 561, 565.

Unsurveyed land within the primary limits of the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company by Act July 2, 1864 (13 Stat. 365, c. 217), as fixed by the definite location of the road, but which at the time of the filing of the map of such location was actually occupied by a settler, who had made improvements thereon with the bona fide intention of acquiring title thereto under the homestead law when it should be surveyed, was subject to a "claim or right" within the meaning of the act, and did not pass under the grant. Trodick v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 164 Fed. 913, 915, 90 C. C. A. 653.

Continuous occupation of public land, with a bona fide intention to acquire the homestead laws as soon as it should be surveyed, constitutes, when begun prior to the definite location by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company of its route, a "claim" upon the land, within the meaning of Act Cong. July 2, 1864, c. 217 (13 Stat. 365) § 3, restricting the grant in aid of such railroad to such odd-numbered sections within specified general limits as were free from pre-emption or "other claims or rights" at the date of definite location, and authorizing the company to select other lands in lieu of any found at that date to be "occupied by homestead settlers." Nelson v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 23 Sup. Ct. 302, 308, 188 U. S. 108, 47 L. Ed. 406.

In various uses

The words "claim" and "location" in mining law are used interchangeably. Del Monte Min. & Mill. Co. v. Last Chance Min. & Mill. Co., 18 Sup. Ct. 895, 902, 171 U. S. 55, 18 Sup. Ct. 895, 43 L. Ed. 72.

The word "claim," in Code 1907, § 7342, is used in its popular sense, signifying a right to claim; a just title to something in the possession or at the disposal of another. Steele v. State, 48 South. 673, 674, 159 Ala. 9.

The word "claim" in a building contract between the state and a contractor, which provides that if at any time there should be evidence of any lien or claim for which, if established, the owner might become liable and which is chargeable to the contractor, the owner may retain out of any payment due or thereafter to become due an amount sufficient to indemnify against such lien or claim, is not synonymous with "lien," and a laborer or materialman may have a claim and yet be entitled to no lien to secure the payment thereof, but the state may not withhold payments from the contractor and pay the same to laborers and materialmen unless it has become directly responsible to the laborers and materialmen by contract, express or implied. Rathbun v. State, 97 Pac. 335, 337, 15 Idaho, 273.

The word "claim" as used in Gen. St. 1889, par. 1676, providing that no claim shall be allowed against the county unless presented within two years, includes a claim for compensation for land appropriated for public highways. Herdman v. Board of Com'rs of Woodson County, 50 Pac. 946, 6 Kan. App. 513.

In determining priorities of appropriation under the act of 1895, the transcript of posted and recorded notices transmitted by the county clerk to the state board of irrigation constitute the "claims" for adjudication. Enterprise Irrigation Dist. v. Tri-State Land Co., 138 N. W. 171, 180, 92 Neb. 121.

A. transferred bonds, notes, mortgages, stocks, and other securities, including a number of shares of preferred stocks, with the following words: "I warrant the amount to be due in each case as set forth, on the 1st day of October inst., and each claim and demand good and collectible." Held, that the words "claim and demand" did not bring dividends not yet declared into the guaranty. Dana v. Conant, 30 Vt. 246, 253.

Decedent executed a demand note to defendant, agreeing that the proceeds of certain policies of life insurance, which he had deposited with defendant as collateral to secure the note, should be applied to the payment thereof, and that, if he should come under any other liability or enter into any other agreement with defendant while it was the holder of such obligation, then any excess of collaterals should be applied to such other note or claim, and, in case of any exchange of the collaterals, the provisions of the note should extend to the new collaterals. Decedent thereafter executed a new note to defendant's cashier for a debt owing to defendant, which note was, in fact, for defendant's benefit. When decedent died, he was also a member of a firm which was indebted to defendant for insurance premiums collected and unpaid. At this time all but $181.50 of the original debt had been paid, for which amount a renewal note had been given which was due and unpaid. Held, that the words "liability," "agreement" and "claim," used in the collateral agreement were sufficient to cover every conceivable obligation, and that the surplus due on the policies was therefore liable, not only for the balance of the original debt, but also for the note made payable to defendant's cashier, and for the firm's liability for the unpaid premiums. Norfleet v.

Pamlico Insurance & Banking Co., 76 S. E. 937, 939, 190 N. C. 327.

A suit in a state court by the receiver of an insolvent corporation against another corporation to set aside a conveyance of property then held by the defendant on the ground of fraud is essentially one in rem, and creates an equitable lien on the property, and on the bankruptcy of the defendant does not come within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 11a, 30 Stat. 549, which authorizes a court of bankruptcy to stay a pending suit against a bankrupt upon a "claim from which a discharge would be a release," and the court, having no power to compel the complainant in such suit to submit his claim to its jurisdiction, has no power, under Rev. St. § 720, to stay the suit. In re United Wireless Telegraph Co., 192 Fed. 238, 239.

A suit to enjoin the enforcement of a municipal ordinance regulating telephone rates is not one in which the Constitution or law of a state is "claimed" to violate the federal Constitution, within the meaning of Act March 3, 1891, c. 517, § 5, 26 Stat. 827, governing direct review in the federal Supreme Court of decrees of Circuit or District Courts, where the first and only reference to the federal Constitution is in the opinion of the circuit judge, on final hearing, holding that the rates are confiscatory and destructive of the telephone company's rights under that Constitution; the case as made by the bill being that the ordinance was passed without legislative authority, and its further allegations as to the confiscatory character of the ordinance being referable only, if consistency with its other provisions is to be observed, to the state Constitution, which would be violated if such allegations were true. City of Memphis v. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co., 31 Sup. Ct. 115, 117, 218 U. S. 624, 54 L. Ed. 1185.

A suit by a nonresident owner of lands within the territorial jurisdiction of the federal Circuit Court for the Eastern District of Tennessee for protection against injury from a discharge of deleterious fumes and gases from the works of a New Jersey corporation situated within the district does not present a "claim to real property within the district," within the meaning of Act March 3, 1875, c. 137, § 8, 18 Stat. 472 providing for bringing in absent defendants in local actions, so as to confer jurisdiction upon that court over the New Jersey corporation which refuses to appear voluntarily in the suit as a defendant. Wetmore v. Tennessee Copper Co., 31 Sup. Ct. 84, 85, 218 U. S. 369, 54 L. Ed. 1078; Ladew v. Tennessee Copper Co., 31 Sup. Ct. 81, 84, 218 U. S. 357, 54 L. Ed. 1069.

CLAIM AGAINST DECEASED

A third party's claim against an administrator and the heirs of an estate for money paid the administrator under a mutual mistake is not a "claim against the deceased," within the meaning of Pub. St. 1901, c. 191, § 4, specifying the time within which a suit must be begun against an administrator for any cause of action against the deceased. Redington Hub Co. v. Putnam, 82 Atl. 715, 716, 76 N. H. 386.

St. 1898, § 2932, provides that, in an action prosecuted by an administrator, costs shall be chargeable only against the estate, unless the court shall direct the same to be paid by the plaintiff personally for mismanagement or bad faith; and section 3752 declares that, if the assets received by an executor or administrator which can be appropriated to the payment of debts shall not be sufficient, he shall, "after paying necessary expenses of administration, pay the debts against the estate in the order therein prescribed." Held, that where an administrator was authorized by the county court to bring suit for the collection of assets alleged to belong to the estate, as provided by sections 3811, 3813, and he was beaten therein, without mismanagement, the costs were not a "claim against decedent" within section 3838, providing for the adjustment of such claims, but were payable from the assets of her estate. Ferguson v. Woods, 102 N. W. 1094, 1095, 124 Wis. 544.

CLAIM AGAINST ESTATE

See, also, Demand against Estate.

The word "claim," in Code, § 3279, providing the amount allowed on any claim which it becomes necessary to satisfy in disregard of or in opposition to a will must be taken ratably from the interests of heirs, devisees, and legatees, is used in its broadest sense as an assertion of any right against the estate, and the widow's right to a distributive share constitutes a claim such as is contemplated by the statute. Dillavou v. Dillavou, 104 N. W. 432, 433; Id., 106 N. W. 949, 950, 130 Iowa, 405.

Code Civ. Proc. § 2718, authorizing reference of certain "claims against a decedent's estate," is limited to claims which existed against the intestate, and does not authorize a reference of claims for funeral expenses. Genet v. Willock, 87 N. Y. Supp. 938, 939, 93 App. Div. 588.

The word "claim," in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 57n, refers to the substance of the obligation rather than to any mere attribute of it. Claims proved against the estate of a bankrupt, which from their nature are entitled to priority under a state statute, may be allowed such priority, though not claimed until more than one year after the date of the adjudication, when the question of distribution of estates first arises. In re Ashland Steel Co., 168 Fed. 679, 681, 94 C. C. A. 165.

A demand for the whole or a part of the estate is not a "claim" against it, within Rev. Laws 1905, §§ 3730, 3734. A "claim against the estate" of a decedent, within Rev. Laws 1905, §§ 3730, 3734, 3872, is a demand of a pecuniary nature which could have been enforced against decedent in his lifetime. In re Brust's Estate, 127 N. W. 11, 13, 111 Minn. 352, 20 Ann. Cas. 852.

A demand for rescission of the sale of a stallion and return of the purchase notes is not a "claim" within Prob. Code, §§ 178, 180, requiring a claim against a decedent's estate to be presented to the personal representatives before suit thereon, but such sections have reference only to demands enforceable against decedent by a personal action for the recovery of money only. Kline v. Gingery, 124 N. W. 958, 959, 25 S. D. 16.

A demand made through an attorney or agent upon an administrator for possession of the property of the estate which he represents, or a request made by an attorney of the judge of the probate court that he be notified if any further proceedings are to be taken in the estate, is not an appearance or "claim" within the purview and meaning of section 5715 of the Revised Codes, sufficient to stop the running of the statute limiting the time within which such claim of the right of succession shall be made by a nonresident alien. Connolly v. Reed, 125 Pac. 213, 217, 22 Idaho, 29.

Where a person claims ownership and right of possession, and an administrator denies the allegations of the complaint, claiming the property as that of the estate, the action or trial of property is not for a "claim or demand" against the estate, within the meaning of Code, § 5957, subdiv. 3, relating to the competency of witnesses in actions for claim or demand against the estate of a decedent. Cunningham v. Stoner, 79 Pac. 228, 231, 10 Idaho, 549.

Where an administrator sued for a portion of a mining claim, because a deed by the intestate under which defendants claimed was so indefinite as to be inoperative, defendant's claim under the deed was not a "claim or demand against intestate's estate," so as to render them incompetent to testify as to matters occurring prior to his death. Collins v. McKay, 92 Pac. 295, 297, 36 Mont. 123, 122 Am. St. Rep. 334.

"Claim," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, subd. 3, which makes persons in whose behalf an action or proceeding is prosecuted against an executor or administrator upon a "claim or demand against the estate of a deceased person" incompetent as witnesses as to any fact occurring before death of such person has the same meaning as when used in the Code provisions for the settlement of decedent's estates, where it is used synonymously with "demand," and "has reference to such debts or demands against the decedent as might have been enforced against him in his lifetime by personal actions for the recovery of money and upon which only a money judgment would have been rendered. It does not include a family allowance. In re McCausland's Estate, 52 Cal. 568, 576 (quoting and adopting definition in Fallon v. Butler, 21 Cal. 32, 81 Am. Dec. 140).

An order of a court of bankruptcy allowing expenses incurred by a bankrupt's trustee for counsel fees is not one allowing a "debt or claim" against the estate, within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 25a, 80 Stat. 553, and appealable thereunder, but is an administrative order over which the Circuit Court of Appeals is given jurisdiction to superintend and revise by section 24b, and such mode of review is exclusive: W. J. Davidson & Co. v. Friedman, 140 Fed. 853, 72 C. C. A. 553.

Rem. & Bal. Code Wash. § 1470, provides for the publication of notice to creditors by every executor or administrator, and requires presentation of claims within a year of the date of the notice, and section 1472 declares that, if a claim is not presented within such time, it shall be barred. Held, that the word "claim," as so used, included the right of a ward, after he became of age, to recover against the estate of his deceased guardian for a devastavit, and that, in the absence of fraud or equitable considerations, his failure to present the claim to the administrator of the guardian's estate constituted a bar to his right to sue either the estate of the deceased guardian or his surety. Newberry v. Wilkinson, 199 Fed. 673, 682, 118 C. C. A. 111.

A "debt against an estate" ordinarily contemplates a debt owed by the deceased, but a "claim against an estate" is not so restricted, and within a refunding bond given by an heir may include funeral expenses, current taxes, etc., and the lawful expenses of administration, including a commission for the administrator. Callaway v. Title, Guaranty & Trust Co., 111 S. W. 905, 906, 132 Mo. App. 466.

Debts payable in the future are "claims against an estate" on assignment for the benefit of creditors, as are also damages for breach of contract prior to the assignment. In re Chestnut St. Trust & Saving Fund Co.'s Assigned Estate, 66 Atl. 332, 333, 217 Pa. 151, 118 Am. St. Rep. 909.

Expenses accruing after the death of decedent and in connection with the administration of his estate are "claims against the estate," within Mills' Ann. St. § 4870, dividing demands against the estates of decedents into four classes, and providing that one class shall include the expenses of administration and settlement of the estate. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. People, 98 Pac. 828, 834, 44 Colo. 557.

CLAIM AGAINST LAND

"Charge" is defined in Bouvier's Law Dictionary as "a lien, incumbrance, or claim which is to be satisfied out of the specific thing or proceeds thereof to which it applies." Under Code 1904, c. 16, § 83, providing that proceedings to enforce any charge or lien on lands shall be instituted in the county where such lands lie etc., the word "charge" means a lien, incumbrance, or claim which is to be satisfied out of the specific thing or proceeds thereof to which it applies, and a bill to set aside a conveyance as in fraud of creditors is a "claim" to be satisfied out of the land or the proceeds thereof. Abramson v. Horner, 80 Atl. 907, 912, 115 Md. 232.

CLAIM AND DELIVERY

"In 'claim and delivery,' the purpose is to obtain possession of the property with damages for its detention. The value to be found by the jury which the plaintiff may recover, in case a redelivery cannot be had, is the market value at the time the taking occurred or the wrongful detention began. Osmer v. Furey, 81 Pac. 345, 348, 32 Mont. 581.

An action of "claim and delivery" is primarily an action for possession, and general allegations of ownership or right of possession are sufficient. Summerville v. Stockton Milling Co., 76 Pac. 243, 250, 142 Cal. 529.

The statutory action of "claim and delivery" (B. & C. Comp. § 284) for the recovery of possession of specific personal property is substantially the ancient remedy of "replevin." Freeman v. Trummer, 91 Pac. 1077, 1079, 50 Or. 287.

The Code action of "claim and delivery" requires that the particular description of the property claimed and also the separate value of each article be stated, for the purpose of enabling the court to render judgment in case the defendant fails to deliver the property. The action takes the place, and has in it all the elements, of detinue, replevin, and trover. If a party in possession has converted the property, and no longer has it in his possession, he is liable for the value thereof. American-German Nat. Bank v. Gray & Dudley Hardware Co., 110 S. W. 393, 398, 129 Ky. 105.

An action of "claim and delivery" by a chattel mortgagee, under a mortgage providing that on the happening of a contingency the mortgagee might take possession of the property, using all necessary force to do so, looked merely to the recovery of possession of the property, and in no sense could be termed an action for the recovery of the secured debt, and hence could not be held non-maintainable on the ground that the debt was due and foreclosure afforded a more speedy remedy for collection of the debt. Casaday v. Lindstrom, 75 Pac. 225, 227, 44 Or. 309.

"In action of 'claim and delivery' the primary relief sought is the recovery of the possession of personal property; but, if that cannot be secured, the alternative relief to which the plaintiff is entitled is the value of the goods or chattels taken or withheld, or of his special property therein. Casto v. Murray, 81 Pac. 883, 886, 47 Or. 57.

CLAIM ARISING ON CONTRACT

A petition for the reformation of a contract with the federal government and for damages for breach thereof as reformed is within the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims under Act Cong. March 3, 1887, defining the jurisdiction of the court as 'extending to all "claims founded on any contract" with the federal government or for damages in cases not sounding in tort, etc. A claim for money upon a contract which would be like a right of action at common law, but for the need of help from equity to establish the contract seems to fall within the words of the statute in their obvious, literal sense. United States v. Milliken Imprinting Co., 26 Sup. Ct. 572, 573, 202 U. S. 168, 50 L. Ed. 980 (citing District of Columbia v. Barnes, 25 Sup. Ct. 401, 197 U. S. 146, 150, 152, 49 L. Ed. 699, 701; South Boston Iron Works v. United States, 34 Ct. Cl. 174, 200).

Plaintiff purchased from defendant's testator property by warranty deed. After paying the taxes on the property due before the testator's death, he sued defendants for the amount of the taxes so paid. Held, the claim arose from a breach of a covenant in a deed, and was a claim arising on contract within Rev. St. 1898, § 3351, providing that "all claims arising upon contracts * * * must be presented within the time limited in the notice" given by the executor or administrator to creditors of the estate. Clayton v. Dinwoodey, 93 Pac. 723, 725, 33 Utah, 251, 14 Ann. Cas. 926.

A claim by a county against the state for the support of orphans is a "claim on contract," as used in Act Feb. 28, 1893, p. 57, c. 65, providing that all persons having claims on contract against the state, not allowed by the state board of examiners, may sue thereon within two years after the accrual of the cause of action. San Luis Obispo County v. Gage, 73 Pac. 174, 177, 139 Cal. 398.

CLAIM CHECK

The "claim check" system, employed by a railway terminal company and a cab company, was operated by passengers calling for the cab company to transfer their trunks from their homes to the station; the cab company calling for the trunk, placing one of its checks thereon, and giving to the proposed passenger duplicate check. The trunk was then conveyed to the baggage room of the terminal company, and upon presentation of the claim check by the passenger, accompanied by a railroad ticket, a railroad check was issued. Such system was not of itself unlawful, but it was unlawful for the terminal company to give the exclusive privilege of using such system to a particular cab company, or to give such cab company the exclusive right to use parts of its baggage room while refusing to permit passengers or other transfer companies to place trunks in the baggage room until a railroad ticket was obtained by the passenger. Hart v. Atlanta Terminal Co., 58 S. E. 452, 457, 128 Ga. 754.

CLAIM FOR DAMAGES

There is a clear distinction between a notice of negligence and a "claim for damages." A mere notice to a telegraph company that its employes have been negligent in the transmission of a message, together with the circumstances of the negligence, is not a presentment of a claim for damages based on such negligence, within the contract for the transmission of the message, providing that the company shall not be liable for damages where the claim is not presented within a specified time, etc. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Moxley, 98 S. W. 112, 113, 80 Ark. 554.

CLAIM FOR LABOR OR MATERIAL

Claims for patterns made for the contractor from which to make castings required for the vessel, for towing in the delivery of materials, for wharfage paid in connection with such delivery, and by a local transfer company for hauling materials, are all "claims for labor or material," within the meaning of the statute, and recoverable on the bond; but advances of freight made to common carriers by such transfer company are not so recoverable. Title Guaranty & Trust Co. v. Puget Sound Engine Works, 163 Fed. 168, 179, 89-C. C. A. 618.

CLAIM FOR LOSSES

Under a statute providing that "net assets" means the funds of an insurance company available for the payment of its obligations in the commonwealth after deducting therefrom losses and "claims for losses," an insurance company whose assets exceed by about $30,000 its liabilities, not including claims against it aggregating $300,000, based on policy holders disputing the validity of settlements for losses, is insolvent, and the insurance commissioner may apply for a receiver and enjoin the company from carrying on further business as authorized by the statute; the phrase "claims for losses" including all pending claims, whether finally adjudged valid or invalid. Cutting v. American Ins. Co., 83 N. E. 396, 397, 197 Mass. 131.

CLAIM LIQUIDATED BY JUDGMENT

A creditor whose debt was paid within four months prior to bankruptcy, but from whom the amount was recovered by the trustee by suit as a preference, is one holding a "claim liquidated by judgment" within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 57n, 30 Stat. 561, and he may prove it within 60 days thereafter, though over a year after the adjudication. In re Coventry Evans Furniture Co., 171 Fed. 673, 674.

CLAIM OF OWNERSHIP

A conveyance of land by the adverse occupant is evidence of "claim of ownership" for the foundation of an adverse title. Suit v. Republic Iron & Steel Co., 55 South. 639, 172 Ala. 101.

Civ. Code 1897, § 3899, provides that any person desiring to subdivide his lands into lots shall cause the same to be surveyed; and section 3900 declares that a plat certified by the surveyor shall be filed in the office of the judge of probate in the county where the lands are situated, and shall be recorded in a suitable book, and certified copies may be used in evidence with like effect as in the case of deeds. Held that, where a prior occupant of certain land in controversy filed a plat thereof under such sections, the plat was evidence of a "claim of ownership" on his part in support of a claim of title by adverse possession. Suit v. Republic Iron & Steel Co., 55 South. 639, 172 Ala. 101.

An instruction that unless the jury believed that plaintiff, or his vendors, under whom he claims, owned or held the land in controversy in actual adverse possession, continuously, to a well-defined, marked boundary line, for 15 years prior to the alleged trespass, they should find for the defendants, is not fatally defective, because it does not state that plaintiff must have claimed, as well as held, such possession, although it is usual to use the word "claimed" in an instruction of such character. Vincent v. Willis (Ky.) 82 S. W. 583, 584.

The word "claim," as used in Revenue Act (Stat. 1861, p. 421) § 5, which declares that the term "real estate," whenever used in the act, shall include the ownership of, or "claim" to, or possession of, or right of possession to, any land, means something more than a mere assertion by the party assessed that he owns, or is entitled to possess, the lands described in the list; while the word carries with it the idea of such assertion it involves also the idea of an actual possession of the land claimed, and hence a "claim and possession" is assessable. People v. Frisbie, 31 Cal. 146, 148.

CLAIM OF RIGHT

The statute, declaring that land must be held under a "claim of right" inconsistent with and hostile to the claim of another, refers to a claim of the possessor when he is holding only for himself, and a claim to satisfy the statute may be only such as is involved in a mere maintenance of possession of and the exercise of dominion over the land, provided there is present the attitude of hostility and exclusiveness towards the true owner; but the facts must give rise to the inference of a claim or an attitude of that character where there is no color or claim of title. Smith v. Jones, 132 S. W. 469, 471, 103 Tex. 632, 81 L. R. A. (N. S.) 153.

The "claim of a right under an authority exercised under the United States," within the meaning of Rev. St. U. S. § 709, defining the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States over state courts, is presented by a contention that a Montana statute was authorized by Enabling Act Feb. 22, 1889 (25 Stat. 676, c. 180), and was therefore valid, even if repugnant to the Constitution of that state. State of Montana v. Rice, 27 Sup. Ct. 281, 283, 204 U. S. 291, 51 L. Ed. 490.

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 3349, defining adverse possession as the actual and visible appropriation of the land, commenced and continued under a "claim of right" inconsistent with and hostile to the claim of another, a person who enters upon land with knowledge that he has no title and that another has, but with the intention to occupy it in hostility to all the world, and who does so occupy it openly and visibly, is in adverse possession. Link v. Bland, 95 S. W. 1110, 1111, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 519.

It is not necessary that a claimant of land and those through whom he claims ever made oral declaration of such "claim of right." It may be inferred from the manner of the occupancy. The same, as well as all other essential elements of adverse possession, may be shown by positive acts of ownership inconsistent with the title and possession of the true owner of the land in controversy, such as erecting, repairing, and occupying buildings on the land, leasing the same, and collecting the rents, selling and conveying, or offering to sell and convey. The rule has been stated that unexplained occupancy continued for 20 years raises the presumption that such occupancy is under "claim of right" and adverse. Rennert v. Shirk, 72 N. E. 546, 547, 549, 163 Ind. 542.

The term "claim of right," as applied to adverse possession, is not synonymous with the word "notice." Swope v. Ward, 84 S. W. 895, 897, 185 Mo. 316 (citing Whitaker v. Whitaker, 58 S. W. 5, 157 Mo. 342).

CLAIM OF TITLE

The actual possession and improvement of premises as owner are accustomed to possess and improve their estate, without any payment of rent, recognition of title in another, or disavowal of a title in himself, will, in the absence of all other evidence, be sufficient to raise a presumption of his title and holding as absolute owner, and unless rebutted by other evidence will establish the fact of "claim of title." Rennert v. Shirk, 72 N. E. 546, 548, 163 Ind. 542 (quoting and adopting definition in Dyre v. Eldridge, 36 N. E. 522, 136 Ind. 659; La Frombois v. Jackson ex dem. Smith, 8 Cow. [N. Y.] 588, 603, 18 Am. Dec. 463).

As color of title

The term "color of title" is not synonymous with "claim of title"; but, to constitute color of title, there must be a paper title to give color to the adverse possession, whereas a claim of title may be constituted wholly by parol. Barrett v. Brewer, 69 S. E. 614, 615, 153 N. C. 547, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 403.

While "color of title" is appearance of title, which in reality is not title, "claim of title" is entering and occupying by one with intent to hold land as his own against the world, irrespective of color of right or title as a foundation for his claim; the two terms being distinct but supplementary to each other, in that while "color of title," without claim, is of little effect, "claim of title," without color, may ripen into title to land actually occupied, while with color it may ripen into title not only to land actually occupied, but by a legal fiction may extend to all land described in the color of title, if that actually occupied be part of it. Crowder v. Doe ex dem. Tennessee Coal, Iron & Ry. Co., 50 South. 230, 232, 162 Ala. 151, 186 Am. St. Rep. 17.

CLAIM ON FORFEITED RECOGNIZ- ANCE

As penalty, see Penalty.

CLAIM PROVABLE IN INSOLVENCY

Under Pub. St. 1882, c. 157, § 26, defining "claims provable in insolvency" as debts due and payable from the debtor at the time of the first publication of the notice of issuing the warrant, and debts at that time absolutely due, though not payable, a claim against a surety on an administrator's bond under Pub. St. 1882, c. 143, § 10, on account of a judgment recovered against the administrator for a debt due from the estate, was not a provable debt, when at the time of the first publication of the warrant the demand required by the section had not been made on the administrator. McIntire v. Cottrell, 69 N. E. 1091, 185 Mass. 178.

CLAIM TO REAL ESTATE

The words "setting up claim thereto," in Ky. St. 1903, § 11, providing that any person having both the legal title and possession of land may prosecute a suit in equity against any person setting up claim thereto, means title or right that is hostile to the plaintiff's claim. Brown v. Ward (Ky.) 105 S. W. 964, 965 (quoting Campbell v. Disney, 18 S. W. 1027, 93 Ky. 41).

CLAIM UPON LAND

Tax liens held by the state are not interests in and claims upon the land on which they are a lien, within the meaning of Laws 1903, c. 234, § 6, relating to the registration of land titles. National Bond & Security Co. v. Daskam, 97 N. W. 458, 91 Minn. 81.

CLAIM UPON TREASURY

"Claims upon the treasury" mean claims which the state is or may be under legal obligations to pay, such as the salaries of its officers and employes, the cost of erecting buildings, and the expense attendant upon the maintenance of its prisons, asylums, schools, and other institutions. Lancaster County v. State, 104 N. W. 187, 188, 74 Neb. 211, 13 Ann. Cas. 88 (quoting and adopting definition in State ex rel. Sayre v. Moore, 59 N. W. 755, 40 Neb. 854, 25 L. R. A. 774).

CLAIMANT

See Bona Fide Claimant; Lien Claimant; Successful Claimant.

The term "claimant under color of title," in Const. art. 13 (Code 1906, p. lxxxiv), relating to the transfer of title of land forfeited to the state, is the status of one who relies on the doctrine of adverse possession, however defective his color of title may be, so long as his claim is not predicated on fraud or breach of trust. State v. West Branch Lumber Co., 63 S. E. 372, 381, 64 W. Va. 673.

In condemnation proceedings

Under a statute relative to condemnation proceedings, providing that all persons claiming an interest in the property may appear and defend their interest, the term "claimants" embraces any person who has an interest in the land, and whose rights would be affected by its condemnation. Brigham City v. Chase, 85 Pac. 436, 438, 30 Utah, 410.

Under Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5644 providing that persons and corporations claiming money paid into court in condemnation proceedings may apply to the court therefor, and the court may order payment to the claimant, or require an action to be brought to determine conflicting claims, a mortgagee, a lien claimant, and a municipality, having a claim on an assessment for street paving, were "claimants" against the money paid into court by the railway company in the condemnation suit. North Coast Ry. Co. v. Hess, 105 Pac. 853, 855, 56 Wash. 335.

CLAMP

A "clamp" is an instrument of wood, metal, or other rigid material, used to hold anything, or to hold or fasten two or more things together by pressure, so as to keep them in the same relative position. American Can Co. v. Hickmott Asparagus Canning Co., 142 Fed. 141, 145, 73 C. C. A. 359 (citing Cent. Dict.).

CLANDESTINE

An indictment for smuggling, charging that defendant did "bring into the country clandestinely" certain dutiable goods, was synonymous with the provision of Rev. St. §

2865, making it an offense to "clandestinely introduce" dutiable goods into the country with intent to avoid payment of duty. Rogers v. United States, 180 Fed. 54, 58, 103 C. C. A. 408, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 264.

A fraudulent entry of merchandise at the custom house cannot be classified as "smuggling," nor brought within the words "clandestinely introduce," in Rev. St. § 2865, making it criminal to smuggle or clandestinely introduce merchandise into the United States. United States v. 646 Half-Boxes of Figs, 164 Fed. 778, 780.

CLASS

See Gift to a Class; Second Class.

"A 'class' is a number of persons or things ranked together for some common purpose (Bouv. Law Dict.), and when a legacy is to a class, all those will take who are embraced in the class at the time the legacy takes effect in point of enjoyment." Davis v. Sanders, 51 S. E. 298, 299, 123 Ga. 177 (quoting and adopting definition in Mitchell v. Mitchell, 47 Atl. 325, 78 Conn. 308).

The use of the word "class" in Const. 1890, § 193, partially abrogating the fellow servant rule as to employes of "any railroad corporation," and providing that the Legislature may extend the remedies herein provided for to any other class of employes, clearly indicates that it was not the purpose of such section to extend its provisions to all employes of all persons or corporations. Bradford Const. Co. v. Heflin, 42 South. 174, 178, 88 Miss. 314, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1040, 8 Ann. Cas. 1077.

A life insurance company, issuing contracts providing for a special income in consideration of insured rendering on request services for the company, and providing for the creation by the company of a dividend fund for the class holding such policies, etc., does not violate Code 1907, § 4579, prohibiting an insurance company from giving any particular policy holder of the same class any advantage in the dividends or other benefits to accrue thereon, etc.; the word "class" qualifying "policy holder," and meaning the holders of like contracts. Julian v. Guarantee Life Ins. Co., 49 South. 234, 236, 159 Ala. 533.

A gift to a "class" is a gift of an aggregate sum to a body of persons uncertain in number at the time of the gift, to be ascertained at a future time, who are all to take in equal or in some other definite proportions; the share of each being dependent for its amount upon the ultimate number. Herzog v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 69 N. E. 283, 286, 177 N. Y. 86, 67 L. R. A. 146.

Where a testator, having sisters and children of deceased sisters, gave the balance of his estate to his lawful heirs, to be divided equally among them, the term "lawful heirs" constituted a single "class," so that the distribution must be per capita, and not per stirpes. In re Griswold, 86 N. Y. Supp. 250, 252, 42 Misc. Rep. 230.

A devise to two persons, naming them, "with whom I live, and whom I regard and treat as my adopted daughters," is not a devise to a "class," entitling one to the entire devise on the death of the other before the death of the testator. In re Hittell's Estate, 75 Pac. 53, 54, 141 Cal. 432.

The word "class," as used by the courts in declaring that, on appeal in any suit of any "class" over which justices are given jurisdiction, an amendment may be made in the circuit court to cure an omission of a jurisdictional fact, means those cases which the statute has marked out and given justices of the peace jurisdiction over. When a suit is commenced before a justice, which does not for any reason come within the standards set up by statute, it is not in the class of cases over which justices have jurisdiction. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Foskett-Kessner Feed Co., 73 S. W. 364, 365, 100 Mo. App. 316.

CLASS LEGISLATION

See, also, General Law; Special Law.

"Class legislation" is that which discriminates against some and favors others of the same station; hence a statute requiring the vaccination of school children is not class legislation, within Const. U. S. Amend. 14. French v. Davidson, 77 Pac. 663, 664, 143 Cal. 658 [citing Barbier v. Connolly, 5 Sup. Ct. 357, 118 U. S. 27, 28 L. Ed. 923].

Act Ala. March 9, 1901 (Acts 1900-01, p. 2685), regulating the business of money brokers, and providing that all persons engaged in loaning money on security of bills of sale, etc., shall express in the instrument securing such loan the rate of interest, the date of the loan, the fact that the instrument is taken for a loan of money, a minute description of the property, and within five days shall file the instrument for record in the office of the probate judge, and that contracts for the loan of money made in violation of the act shall be void, was a valid exercise of the state's police power, and was not unconstitutional for inequality, although its provisions do not apply to the business of banking and loans when the amount exceeds $75. The court said: "Perfection is no more to be exacted in legislation than in other human work. The motives and interests animating men, and the economic, industrial, social, and moral conditions which affect the welfare of society, are almost infinite in number and character, so that it is impossible in practice, without creating evil and injustice, to apply the same unbending rule to all of these varying situations in dealing with concrete human affairs. Legislative power, therefore, must frequently indulge in marked differences between persons and things in its attempts to remedy particular evils. Neither the state nor the federal Constitution exacts perfect equality in the apportionment of the burdens which the state finds it necessary to impose upon men to advance the public weal. Mere want of equality in the burdens imposed, or varying rules for the conduct of different persons, even in relation to the same general subject-matter, will not avail to overthrow a statute, if the differences it makes are not merely arbitrary. If its distinctions are based upon some just reason, and it does not attempt, under the guise of regulating an evil, to deprive of liberty or property without due process, or unjustly to confer special or exclusive privileges upon one class at the expense of others, or to put burdens and penalties upon such persons beyond the extent to which their conduct and relations to an evil fairly subject them, in view of the principle upon which the regulations are rested, the statute is not objectionable on constitutional grounds." In re Home Discount Co., 147 Fed. 538, 545 (citing Commonwealth v. Danziger, 57 N. E. 461, 176 Mass. 290; Dorman v. State, 34 Ala. 216; Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. May, 24 Sup. Ct. 638, 194 U. S. 267, 48 L. Ed. 971; Fidelity Mut. Life Ass'n v. Mettler, 22 Sup. Ct. 662, 185 U. S. 308, 46 L. Ed. 922; Davis v. State, 68 Ala. 58, 44 Am. Rep. 128; Holden v. Hardy, 18 Sup. Ct. 383, 169 U. S. 391, 42 L. Ed. 780).

An ordinance making it unlawful for the proprietor of a place where intoxicating liquors are sold to permit any person or persons other than himself and family to enter such room and place where the liquors are sold during the hours when the sale is prohibited is equally applicable to all dealers in intoxicating liquors, whether at wholesale or retail, and is not "class legislation" within the well-defined meaning of that term. In enacting police regulation, if the classification therein made is usual, practical, and reasonable, that is sufficient. State v. Calloway, 84 Pac. 27, 31, 11 Idaho, 719, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 109, 114 Am. St. Rep. 285.

The fourteenth amendment to the federal Constitution does not prohibit legislation which is limited either in the objects to which it is directed or by the territory within which it is to operate. It merely requires that all persons subjected to such legislation shall be treated alike, under like conditions and circumstances, both in the privileges conferred and in the liabilities imposed. Class legislation, discriminating against some and favoring others is prohibited; but legislation which, in carrying out a public purpose, is limited in its application, if within the sphere of its operation, and which affects alike all persons similarly situated, is not within the amendment. The Ohio statute, in so far as it enacts that every person, firm, or corporation desiring to engage in fishing in the waters of Lake Erie and the estuaries and bays thereof within the state, shall make application to the commissioners of fish and game and obtain a license so to do, and for such license shall pay a certain fee, is neither a violation of the fourteenth amendment to the federal Constitution nor repugnant to the state Constitution. State v. Hanlon, 82 N. E. 662, 665, 77 Ohio St. 19, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 539, 122 Am. St. Rep. 472.

In the exercise of the police power in establishing a day of rest, a large discretion must be allowed to the Legislature in determining what kind of labor or business should be prohibited, and what are and what are not works of necessity or charity; and unless the classification is manifestly purely arbitrary, and not founded on any substantial distinction or natural reason, the courts have no right to interfere with the exercise of legislative discretion, and the courts cannot hold such legislation unconstitutional, as being class legislation. Laws 1903, c. 362, prohibiting the keeping open of butcher shops for the sale of meats on Sunday, etc., is not "class legislation," within Const. art. 4, §§ 33, 34, prohibiting class legislation. State ex rel. Hoffman v. Justus, 98 N. W. 325, 326, 91 Minn. 447, 64 L. R. A. 510, 103 Am. St. Rep. 521, 1 Ann. Cas. 91 (citing State v. Petit, 74 Minn. 376, 77 N. W. 225).

Legislation which affects one class and not another, but which affects all members of the same class alike, is not unconstitutional as "class legislation." Laws 1903, p. 162, relating to the operation and speed of automobiles on the highways of the state, fixing the amount of license, and prescribing a penalty for violating the same, is not "class legislation," as discriminating against certain users of the highway. State v. Swagerty, 102 S. W. 483, 485, 203 Mo. 517, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 601, 120 Am. St. Rep. 671, 11 Ann. Cas. 725 (quoting and adopting the definition to Barbier v. Connolly, 5 Sup. Ct. 357, 113 U. S. 32, 28 L. Ed. 923).

CLASS SUIT

A "class suit" is one in which one or more members of a numerous class, having a common interest, sue in behalf of themselves and all other members of that class. Such suits are sometimes called "creditors' suits" and sometimes "stockholders' suits." Seminole Securities Co. v. Southern Life Ins. Co., 182 Fed. 85, 96.

CLASSES OF STATE LANDS

The "classes of state lands" referred to in the revenue law, providing that the comptroller shall annually certify lands sold or patented by the United States, together with the various classes of state lands sold during the year, to the assessors of the counties in which such lands may be situated, includes lands the title to which had matured in the state by tax sale and which had been sold during the year. State ex rel. Sunday v. Richards, 39 South. 152, 153, 50 Fla. 284.

CLASSIFICATION

See Governed by Illinois Classification; Unclassified Service; Value or Classification.

There can be no proper "classification" of cities and counties for the purpose of legislation except by population. That is not classification which merely designates one county of the commonwealth, and contains no provision by which any other county may, by reason of its increase of population, come within the class. A statute providing for the consolidation of any two contiguous cities situated in the same county in the commonwealth is local legislation, and obnoxious to the Constitution, where the commonwealth contains only two such cities. Sample v. City of Pittsburgh, 62 Atl. 201, 203, 212 Pa. 533.

The "classification of property" for purposes of taxation, when upheld as not violative of the constitutional provision, is always coupled with the proviso, "if all of the same class are taxed alike." A provision of a city charter directing that all debts due a person, including all notes, mortgages, trust deeds, and all solvent credits, secured or unsecured, shall be assessed and listed for taxation at the fair and full worth, and then exempting notes representing purchase price of property, was not a "classification of property" within the true meaning of the word. Adams v. Kuykendall, 35 South. 830, 833, 83 Miss. 571.

CLASSIFIED LIST

Municipal Code 1902, § 151 (96 Ohio Laws, p. 71), provides that police departments in cities shall be maintained under the merit system; and section 149 (page 70) relates to the composition of the police department, and provides that the chief of police shall be appointed from the classified list of such department. Section 153 provides that the directors of public safety shall classify the service in the police department, and sections 153, 156, 158, and 164 (pages 71, 72, 74) provide the procedure in preparing such classification and for the preparation of a register for each class of position in the classified service of the city. Held, that the words "classified list," in section 149, relate to the register prescribed by section 164. State v. Wyman, 72 N. E. 457, 459, 71 Ohio St. 1.

CLAUSE

See Commercial Clause; Enacting Clause; Iron Safe Clause; Open Mortgage Clause; Saving Clause; Spendthrift Clause.

Residuary Clause, see Residuary.

CLAY

As mineral, see Mineral.

Plastilina, or modeling clay, an article not containing clay, is not dutiable as "clay," either directly or by similitude, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 93, 30 Stat. 156, but as an "unenumerated manufacture," under section 6, 30 Stat. 205. Bancel v. United States, 176 Fed. 132.

CLEAN

The term "clean" may be applied to a great variety of merchandise, and its scope and meaning are within the comprehension of any one. "Clean busheling scrap," in a contract of sale of iron scrap, does not relate to the particular grade but to the quality of the bunch sold, considered in its entirety. Lichtenstein v. Rabolinsky, 90 N. Y. Supp. 247, 250, 98 App. Div. 518.

Under charter authority to pass ordinances for the government of the city relative to cleaning sidewalks, a city can require owners, etc., of property abutting on streets, etc., within four hours of daylight after snow has ceased falling, to cause the snow to be removed from sidewalks adjoining such property. State v. McCrillis, 66 Atl. 301, 302, 28 R. I. 165, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 635, 13 Ann. Cas. 701.

CLEAN HANDS

See Unclean Hands.

The maxim, "He who comes into equity must come with clean hands," expresses rather a principal of inaction than of action, and means that equity refuses to lend its aid to one seeking its active interposition who has been guilty of unlawful or inequitable conduct in the matter in relation to which he seeks relief. Danciger v. Stone, 187 Fed. 853, 858.

The maxim, "He who comes into equity must come with clean hands," is synonymous with "Who does inequity shall not have equity," and "they must come with clean hands, with a conscionable regard for the rights of others, ready to do equity on their part, and seeking only equity at the hands of the court." Little v. Cunningham, 92 S. W. 734, 736, 116 Mo. App. 545.

The equitable maxim, that "he who comes into equity must come with clean hands," does not reach a case where the cause of action is meritorious, and where, subsequent to suit brought, the complainant has been guilty of reprehensible conduct, but which does not go to the cause of action. Chute v. Wisconsin Chemical Co., 185 Fed. 115, 118.

The maxim, "One who comes into equity must come with 'clean hands,'" is based upon conscience and good faith, and the bad faith or the unconscionable conduct that will justify the application of this maxim must be based upon the actual knowledge or willful fraud. The fraud of an agent, that is by mere imputation chargeable upon a complainant, will not render the hands of the latter unclean within the meaning of this maxim. "Unclean hands," within the meaning of the maxim of equity, is a figurative description of a class of suitors to whom a court of equity as a court of conscience will not even listen, because the conduct of such suitors is itself unconscionable in the moral sense that imports actual knowledge. Vulcan Detinning Co. v. American Can Co., 67 Atl. 339, 341, 72 N. J. Eq. 387, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 102 (citing American Ass'n v. Innis, 60 S. W. 388, 109 Ky. 595).

It is a fundamental principle of equity that he who seeks equity must do equity, and he who comes into equity must come with "clean hands." As is stated in 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. (2d Ed.) §§ 397, 399: "Whenever a party, who as actor seeks to set the judicial machinery in motion and obtain some remedy, has violated conscience, or good faith, or other equitable principle, in his prior conduct, then the doors of the court will be shut against him in limine; the court will refuse to interfere on his behalf, to acknowledge his right, or to award him any remedy." Ashe-Carson Co. v. Bonifay, 41 South. 818, 819, 147 Ala. 376.

The principle, applicable to all classes of actions, that every suitor who seeks redress at the hands of a court should come unfettered and unsullied by faults and wrongs of his own commission against the contending party, has become aphorized in the law as "clean hands." It is plainly and palpably violated and infringed whenever a litigant who prays a divorce has been guilty of any act which under the statute would furnish the defendant a cause of action as against him. Cupples v. Cupples, 80 Pac. 1039, 1040, 83 Colo. 449.

CLEAR

See In the Clear; Past and Clear; Three Feet Wide in the Clear.

Know the way to be clear, see Know.

The word "clear" is synonymous with "evident," as used in the constitutional guaranty providing for bail except for capital offenses when proof is evident. The words "clear," "convincing," "satisfactory," and "clear of all reasonable doubt," when used with reference to the measure of proof necessary to show a deed absolute on its face to be a mortgage, all substantially convey the same meaning and require the same degree of proof. Winston v. Burnell, 24 Pac. 477, 478, 44 Kan. 367, 21 Am. St. Rep. 289. The word "evident" means "clear to the vision, especially clear to the understanding, and satisfactory to the judgment. Its synonyms are: 'Manifest'; 'plain'; 'clear'; 'obvious';

'visible'; 'apparent'; 'conclusive'; 'indubitable'; 'palpable'; 'notorious.'" State v. Kauffman, 108 N. W. 246, 20 S. D. 620 (quoting with approval from Webster's Dict.).

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 269, 30 Stat. 172, the provision for "clear" shelled almonds refers to nuts that are practically and substantially free from shells, dust, and dirt, and after being divested of their outer covering are fairly free from that covering. Heide v. United States, 175 Fed. 316, 317.

CLEAR DAYS

"When so many 'clear days' or so many days 'at least' are given to do an act, or 'not less than' so many days must intervene, both the terminal days are excluded." In re Gregg's Estate, 62 Atl. 856, 857, 213 Pa. 260 (quoting and adopting the language of Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 391).

CLEAR EVIDENCE OR PROOF

See, also, Clearly Proven.

That a fact must be shown by "clear and satisfactory" evidence means that the nature of the case demands a closer scrutiny of the evidence than in an ordinary controversy. Peterson v. Bauer's Estate, 111 N. W. 361, 362, 76 Neb. 652.

The term "clear and satisfactory proof," or "clear and convincing proof," as used in instruction in civil actions, does not bear the interpretation of "proof beyond all reasonable doubt." In a case involving false swearing, "clear and satisfactory proof" may be defined to be a preponderance of evidence sufficient to overcome the presumption of innocence of moral turpitude or crime. Virginia Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Hogue, 54 S. E. 8, 11, 105 Va. 355.

The phrase "clear and satisfactory evidence," as used in a statute providing that if any railway company, common carrier, or person affected thereby, shall be dissatisfied with the decisions of the railway commission with reference to any order, such dissatisfied company or person may file a petition in the district court of the county where the cause of action arose, against such commission as defendant, and in all trials under the article, the burden of proof shall rest on the plaintiff, who must show by "clear and satisfactory evidence" that the orders complained of are unreasonable, etc., describes a degree of proof greater than a preponderance of evidence, and such as was necessary in order to establish fraud by that party to an action upon whom the burden of proof rested. The Legislature intended that the words should describe that degree of proof necessary to establish fraud or prove mistake in a written instrument. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Nebraska State Ry. Commission, 124 N. W. 477, 481, 85 Neb. 818, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 444 (citing Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co.

v. State, 100 Pac. 16, 23 Okl. 231, 18 Ann. Cas. 102; Id., 101 Pac. 262, 23 Okl. 510; Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co. v. Railroad Commission of Louisiana, 33 South. 214, 109 La. 247).

Under Laws 1905, p. 549, c. 362, relating to a review of the orders, etc., of the railroad commission, and providing that in all trials the burden of proof shall be upon the plaintiff to show by clear and satisfactory evidence that the order complained of is unlawful or unreasonable, the "clear and satisfactory" proof required by the statute is such proof as is necessary to establish fraud or prove mistake in the execution of a written instrument; but it is not necessary that the orders be confiscatory in character and effect to enable the court to review them, such a construction being negated by Const. art. 7, § 8, giving circuit courts appellate jurisdiction of, and supervisory control over, all inferior courts and tribunals. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co. v. Railroad Commission of Wisconsin, 116 N. W. 905, 912, 136 Wis. 146.

CLEAR OF ALL CHARGES

A grantee under a deed, executed when ground rents were not a distinct object of taxation, who covenanted to pay ground rents "clear of all charges and assessments whatsoever," was bound to pay taxes on the ground rent. Peart v. Phillips (Pa.) 4 Yeates, 386, 387.

CLEAR OPPORTUNITY

In the last clear chance doctrine, that on discovery by defendant of the plaintiff's peril it is his duty to use ordinary care to avoid injuring the plaintiff if defendant has a "clear opportunity to avoid such injury," the words quoted mean such an opportunity as would necessarily be clear and plain to a man of ordinary intelligence and prudence in a given emergency, and if he fails to take advantage thereof he is liable for the injury, providing the other is not negligent after he discovers the danger. Harrington v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 74 Pac. 15, 19, 140 Cal. 514, 63 L. R. A. 238, 98 Am. St. Rep. 85.

CLEAR PREPONDERANCE

The rule requiring a "clear preponderance" of the evidence to warrant a determination contrary to findings by a trial court, requires the preponderance to be so apparent as to manifestly outweigh any probable legitimate influence on the triors of those advantages for discovering the truth which the reviewing tribunal cannot have. Ott v. Boring, 121 N. W. 126, 128, 139 Wis. 403.

CLEAR PROCEEDS

Under Const. art. 9, § 5, appropriating the clear proceeds of all penalties and forfeitures of all fines to the school fund, the "clear proceeds" of a fine includes the total sum, less only the sheriff's fees for collection in case the fine and costs are not collected in full. State v. Maulsby, 51 S. E. 956, 139 N. C. 588.

The "clear proceeds" of fines and penalties, within Const. art. 11, § 8, providing that the clear proceeds of the penalties for funds and of all fines in the several counties for any breach of the penal law or military laws of the state shall belong and be securely invested and sacredly preserved in the several counties as a county public school fund, means the part of the fine or penalty which is given by statute of the state. State ex rel. Rodes v. Warner, 94 S. W. 962, 964, 197 Mo. 650.

CLEAR STOCK

Under a contract for the sale of lumber calling for "clear stock," the term "clear stock" means lumber without knots and nothing more. Herrmann Lumber Co. v. Heidelberg, Wolf & Co., 92 N. Y. Supp. 256, 257, 46 Misc. Rep. 465.

CLEAR VALUE

The terms "actual value," as used in section 29, and "clear value," in section 30, War Revenue Act June 13, 1898, c. 448, 30 Stat. 464, 465, considered, and held to convey the idea of definite or certain value, something in no sense speculative. Lynch v. Union Trust Co. of San Francisco. 164 Fed. 161, 167, 90 C. C. A. 147.

CLEARANCE

"Clearance" means to satisfy the customs, harbor dues, and the like, and obtain from the governmental authority of the port leave to depart. International Mercantile Marine Co. v. Stranahan, 155 Fed. 428, 432.

CLEARING HOUSE CERTIFICATE

As personal property, see Personal Property."

CLEARLY

The word "clearly," in an instruction that, to show fraud, the facts must lead naturally and clearly to the facts sought to be established, and must be inconsistent with any other reasonable or probable theory, will not be interpreted as requiring proof beyond a doubt, where the charge also stated that only a fair preponderance of the evidence was required. Ley v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 94 N. W. 568, 569, 120 Iowa, 203.

CLEARLY APPEAR

The provisions of the amendment to Ohio Rev. St. § 3256, and of section 3300, now sections 8806, 8807, and 8809, Gen. Code, relating to stock purchases and holdings, are clearly cumulative and meet the requirements of section 3269, now section 8733, Gen. Code, reciting that a "special provision shall govern unless it 'clearly appear' that the provisions are cumulative"—the word "clearly" meaning in a clear manner, without obscurity, without entanglement or confusion, without uncertainty; and "cumulative" meaning "additional," that which is superadded to another thing of the same character and not substituted for it. Mannington v. Hocking Valley Ry. Co., 183 Fed. 133, 154.

The words "clearly and manifestly," in Gen. St. 1901, § 7991, providing that any estate or interest in lands or personal estate or other property, acquired by the testator after the making of his will, shall pass thereby in like manner as if held or possessed at the time of the making of the will, if such shall clearly and manifestly appear by the will to have been the intention of the testator, are themselves indefinite, and the statute does no more than require that the will shall disclose an intention that such property shall pass under it. Durboraw v. Durboraw, 72 Pac. 566, 67 Kan. 139.

CLEARLY PROVEN

An instruction that fraud is never presumed and must be "clearly and distinctly proven" is erroneous, as requiring too high a degree of proof under Code Civ. Proc. § 3390, subd. 5, providing that in civil cases the jury shall be instructed that, when the evidence is contradictory, the decision must be made according to a preponderance of the evidence, since such an instruction advises the jury that something more than a bare preponderance of testimony is necessary to be produced by the defendants on the question of fraud. Gehlert v. Quinn, 90 Pac. 168, 170, 35 Mont. 451, 119 Am. St. Rep. 864.

CLEAT

The piece of wood nailed to short cross-pieces or lugs extending through the links of a chain, the apparatus being used to remove refuse falling into a trough at a saw-mill, is called a "cleat"; its function being to strengthen the lugs and at the same time to make them fast in the chain. Ramsey v. Tremont Lumber Co., 46 South. 608, 121 La. 506.

CLERICAL

CLERICAL ERROR

The omission of the word "vexation" in an affidavit of appeal otherwise complying with Rev. St. 1909, § 2040, requiring appellant to file an affidavit stating that the appeal is not made for vexation or delay, is a clerical error, which is a mistake in copying or writing, and the affidavit on an amendment is sufficient to give jurisdiction on appeal in the absence of timely objection. Cassidy v. City of St. Joseph, 152 S. W. 306, 309, 247 Mo. 197.

"A 'clerical error' is an error of a clerk or subordinate officer in transcribing or entering an official proceeding ordered by another." Wetmore, to Use of McKay, v. Kar- rick, 27 Sup. Ct. 434, 438, 205 U. S. 141, 153, 51 L. Ed. 745 (quoting Marsh v. Nichols, S. & Co., 9 Sup. Ct. 163, 171, 128 U. S. 605, 615, 32 L. Ed. 538, 542).

"A 'clerical error' is one made by a clerk in transcribing or otherwise, and, of course, must be apparent on the face of the record, and capable of being corrected by reference to the record only." Trott v. Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co., 39 South. 716, 717, 144 Ala. 383.

The expression "clerical error" implies negligence or carelessness of a clerk, writer, or copyist, and assumes that the mistake, or negligence, or carelessness, is that of one engaged in the subordinate service of transcription, copying, or comparison; labor not requiring original thought. Held that, where a standard article was incorrectly invoiced at an excessive price, this was a clerical error of a kind of which correction is not harmful to the administration of customs laws, and relief from which should be granted. Morimura Bros. v. United States, 160 Fed. 280, 281.

CLERICAL MISPRISION

A "clerical misprision" is either a mistake or a fraud perpetrated by the clerk of court, which is susceptible of demonstration by the face of the record, and relief for actions upon either of these grounds is by statute fixed at five years from time of discovery of the fraud or mistake. Commonwealth v. Caudell, 89 S. W. 535, 536, 121 Ky. 537.

CLERICAL MISTAKE

An importer, in giving the invoice value of his merchandise, stated it in dollars instead of rupees, having mistaken the rupee abbreviation for the dollar mark. Held, that this constituted a "clerical mistake." United States v. Muller, Maclean & Co., 158 Fed. 405, 406, 85 C. C. A. 515.

CLERK

See Auditor's Clerk; Clerk of Court; County Clerks; Ordinary Clerk; Proprietor Clerk; Regular Clerk; Town Clerk.

"The word 'clerk' (known to our forefathers as 'clark') at root denoted a member of the clergy, and the time was when the law and the gospel flowed from the same fountain; judges of court were taken from the ranks of the clergy (1 Bl. p. 17), and the maxim, 'Nullis clericus, nisi causidicus,' was in full vigor of bloom and fruitage. However, in progress of time, clerks and judges became sharply differentiated. A small or great 'court hand' became in vogue as need called. The manifest impossibility of a judge's having charge of and writing the records and issuing the writs became apparent, and the offices of clerks of court were created. In our state a 'clerk' is not a constitutional officer in the sense a sheriff is, but his office is recognized in the Constitution and is provided for by express statute, and may not be dispensed with." State ex rel. Hensen v. Sheppard, 91 S. W. 477, 482, 192 Mo. 497.

In Comp. Laws 1897, § 3031, authorizing admission of books of account in evidence where the party offering them kept no clerk, the word "clerk" implies more than a mere amanuensis. It means one having knowledge of the business, so as to be able of his own knowledge to testify as to it. Radcliffe v. Chaves, 110 Pac. 699, 701, 15 N. M. 258.

The terms "agent," "servant," or "clerk," as used in a statute denouncing embezzlement, contemplate one who has undertaken to transact some business or manage some affair for another, by the authority and on the account of the latter, and to render an account of it, or who is subject to the immediate direction and control of his master, so that a boy employed by the agent of an express company, whose salary was paid by the agent, is not a "servant," "clerk," or "agent" of the company, within the contemplation of the statute. Tipton v. State, 43 South. 684, 686, 53 Fla. 69 (quoting and adopting the definitions in 2 Bishop's New Crim. Law, § 233; 1 Clark's Crim. Law, p. 274).

In considering whether or not a person accused of embezzlement was a "servant," an "agent," or the like, it should be born in mind that in the law of embezzlement there cannot be a "clerk" without an employer, a "servant" without a master, or an "agent" without a principal. The words "clerk" and "servant" imply in some one the power of control. Tipton v. State, 43 South. 684, 686, 53 Fla. 69.

Assistant, deputy, or stenographer

Under Rev. St. 1887, § 4889, providing for service of notice on a clerk, in the absence of an attorney, it may be presumed that a stenographer, who was in charge of an attorney's office, was the "clerk" of the attorney. Peter v. Kalez, 83 Pac. 526, 528, 11 Idaho, 553.

Bank cashier

An assistant cashier of a national bank is a "clerk or agent," within the meaning of Rev. St. § 5209, providing that every president, director, cashier, teller, clerk, or agent of any association, who makes any false entry in any report, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Cochran v. United States, 15 Sup. Ct. 628, 629, 157 U. S. 286, 39 L. Ed. 704.

Bookkeeper

The word "clerk," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 64b (4), 30 Stat. 563, giving priority to debts for wages due to "workmen, clerks, or servants," earned within three months prior to the bankruptcy includes a bookkeeper; and the right of a clerk to priority is not affected by the fact that his employment by the bankrupt was not exclusive, but that he also did work for others. In re Baumbblatt, 156 Fed. 422, 423.

As clerk of court

The court takes judicial notice of the names and signatures of its own officers, and where the officer's signature is followed by the word "Clerk" it will be presumed on appeal that he was clerk of the court in which the case was tried. Cardenas v. State, 124 S. W. 953, 954, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 109.

The word "clerk," when used in the statutes, means clerk of the court in which an action is brought, or is pending, or in which a proceeding is had. McLennan County v. Boggess, 137 S. W. 346, 347, 104 Tex. 311 (quoting 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1226).

The word "clerk," as used in a certificate of acknowledgment, declaring the officer taking the acknowledgment to be "the clerk of Harris county," means that he is the county clerk of that county. Riviere v. Wilkens, 72 S. W. 608, 610, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 454.

Factor distinguished

A "clerk" is defined as "a person in the employ of a merchant, who attends only to a part of his business, while the merchant himself superintends the whole. He differs from a factor in this: That the latter supplies the place of his principal in respect to the property consigned to him. A general name for salesmen, bookkeepers, amanuenses, and other employes of that class; a person employed in an office, public or private, for keeping records or accounts." Cyc. Law Dict. There is therefore a difference between the term "agent," as used in a statute requiring a foreign corporation transacting business in the state to maintain an office where process may be served upon it, and providing for such service by delivering a copy to any officer or agent in charge of such office, or, if there be no office, then to any officer, agent, or employe in any county, etc., and the term "clerk." But when a railroad company leaves only a clerk in charge of its place of business service on such clerk is sufficient. State ex rel. Texas Portland Cement Co. v. Sale, 132 S. W. 1119, 1121, 232 Mo. 166.

CLERK OF CORPORATION

The word "clerk," as used in the statute providing for the service of process on a clerk of a foreign corporation, means some general officer, and not any person who happens to hold a clerk's position with it. Erie R. Co. v. Van Allen, 69 Atl. 484, 485, 76 N. J. Law, 119.

CLERK OF COURT

See, also, Clerk.

The "clerk of the court" is an officer who records the proceedings of the court and has custody of its records. Citizens' State Bank v. Read, 90 N. E. 492, 493, 45 Ind. App. 158.

The clerk of the district court is an "officer of the court," and in order to properly perform the duties devolving upon him by law it is the duty of the judge of the court to recognize him as such officer. Matney v. King, 93 Pac. 737, 745, 20 Okl. 22.

Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 1143, entitling the "clerks of courts" in which fines, etc., are recovered to a commission thereon, does not authorize compensation to justices of the peace for clerical services performed by them in cases in which fines were collected. McLennan County v. Boggess, 137 S. W. 346, 347, 104 Tex. 311.

The offices of county clerk and clerk of the county court are separate and distinct, although by the statute they are filled by the same person. In the different offices he has charge of two different and separate sets of records pertaining to different jurisdictions. Records in the office of the county clerk are not records of the county court, and filing a paper in that office does not make it part of the records of that court. Therefore the filing of the published list of delinquent lands, with the certificate of the publisher, in the "office of the county clerk and ex officio clerk of the county court of said county," is not a compliance with the statute requiring it to be filed as part of the records of the county court. Drennen v. People, 78 N. E. 937, 222 Ill. 592 (citing McChesney v. People ex rel. Kochersperger, 174 Ill. 46, 50 N. E. 1110).

The clerk of the district court of the residence of the seller, such clerk knowing the sureties offered on the bond, is a "clerk of court," within the provision of a contract for the sale of goods that the seller would "send a bond that 'clerk of court' knowing sureties would accept" to a bank in Georgia, to be delivered to the buyer. Equitable Mfg. Co. v. J. B. Davis Co., 60 S. E. 262, 263, 130 Ga. 67.

The "clerk of court" of a county, in the discharge of his duty to draft such orders and writings as may be required of him by the presiding judge, and necessary for the transaction of the business of the court, is a mere ministerial officer, and acts under the direction and supervision of the judge, and when such orders have been approved and signed by the judge it will be presumed that they were done and performed under his direction and sanction. Kinnison v. Carpenter, 72 Ky. (9 Bush) 599, 602.

Under Revenue Law (Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 120) § 186, requiring a certificate of publication of a delinquent tax list to be filed as part of the record of the county court, a filing thereof by the county clerk is not a sufficient compliance with the law, though the offices of the county clerk and clerk of the county court are filled by the same person, and notwithstanding Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 131, § 1, providing that the words "county clerk" shall be held to include "clerk of the county court" and the words "clerk of the county court" to include "county clerk," unless such construction would be inconsistent with the manifest intent of the Legislature or repugnant to the context of the same statute. McCraney v. Glos, 78 N. E. 921, 922, 222 Ill. 628.

St. 1898, c. 548, § 277, expressly provides for the filling of a vacancy in the office of a clerk of the courts by an election "at the next annual election for which precepts can be seasonably issued," and by section 274 (page 630) authority is given to the justices, in case of a vacancy in the office of clerk of the superior court of Suffolk county, "to appoint a clerk," without an express statement of the term for which such appointment may be made. This section also provides for an election to fill the vacancy. St. 1893, p. 1235, c. 417, § 218, provides that if there is a failure at an election to choose a clerk of the courts the Governor shall declare such failure and cause a special election to be held, and that in case of a vacancy in an office of a clerk of the courts some person may be appointed as provided by law to fill such office until a person is duly elected and qualified. Held, that the term "clerk of the courts" in section 218 was intended to include the clerks of the superior court in Suffolk county, so that on the death of one of such clerks for the care of civil business a clerk appointed by a justice for no stated term, which referred to the statute, constituted an appointment only until the next annual election for which precepts could be seasonably issued. Attorney General v. Campbell, 78 N. E. 133, 134, 191 Mass. 497.

Section 15a of chapter 69, Sess. Laws 1910, provides that the clerk of the county court shall receive as full compensation in counties having over 50,000 population not to exceed $125 per month. Section 30 of the same act provides that "the clerk of the district court, the clerk of the superior court, the county clerk, the county treasurer, and the register of deeds shall receive as their full compensation the following salaries: In counties having a population of not to exceed 7,000: The clerk of the district court and register of deeds, per annum, $1,000.00. The county clerk and clerk of the county court, per annum, 1,000.00. The treasurer, per annum, 900.00." Held, that the words "clerk of the county court" were erroneously used, and that the words "clerk of the superior court" should be deemed substituted therefor. Schaffer v. Board of Com'rs of Muskogee County, 124 Pac. 1069, 1070, 33 Okl. 288.

CLERK'S COSTS

Under Acts 1895, c. 145, § 114, providing that clerks of courts, on behalf of the county in which said courts are held, shall tax and charge upon proper books the fees and amounts provided by law, which amounts so taxed shall be designated as "clerk's costs," but shall in no sense belong to the clerk, but to the county, and enumerating items of specific services for which the fees as prescribed are to be taxed and charged, and further providing that for attending court, in person or by deputy, the clerk shall receive, for each daily report of actual attendance, $2, the term "clerk's costs" does not include the per diem allowance for such clerk or deputy. State ex rel. Board of Com'rs of Tippecanoe County v. Flynn, 69 N. E. 159, 167, 161 Ind. 554.

CLEW

"A 'clew,' which if followed up diligently would lead to a discovery, in law is equivalent to a discovery—equivalent to knowledge." German Sav. Bank v. Des Moines Nat. Bank, 98 N. W. 606, 609, 122 Iowa, 737.

CLIENT

"Client," as used in Civ. Code 1895, § 4416, providing that, where an attorney retains money of his client, he is liable to rule as a sheriff is, does not embrace an attorney who employed another to assist him in litigation to which the former was not a party and only interested by reason of his fee being contingent upon winning, and the latter cannot be ruled by the former for refusal to pay over money. Haden v. Lovett, 65 S. E. 853, 854, 133 Ga. 388, 18 Ann. Cas. 114.

A juror is not disqualified on the ground that he is a "client" of an attorney engaged in the cause, within the meaning of Code, § 3888, par. 5, when the litigation in which the relationship of attorney and client had existed is terminated, and the only relationship now existing between the attorney and the juror is that of debtor and creditor. Jones v. Ford, 134 N. W. 569, 672, 154 Iowa, 549, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 777.

CLINCHER TIRE

The fundamental feature of a "clincher tire" is the use of pneumatic pressure to attach the outer cover or "shoe" to the rim. The shoe serves both to protect and to retain the inflated tube on the rim. The inner tube, by its inflation to a high pressure, serves to attach the outer shoe firmly to the rim. The problem of attaching the inflated tube to a wheel rim is solved by making the expansion of the tube which is to be confined the efficient means of securing to the rim the shoe which is to confine the inflated tube. Such a tire does not infringe the Schrader patent, No. 466,577, for improvements in wheel tires, having for its essential feature an internal clamping device for securing a U-shaped tire to the rim of the wheel, whether used as a cushion tire or as including an inflated tube, making it pneumatic. Boston Woven Hose & Rubber Co. v. Pennsylvania Rubber Co., 156 Fed. 787, 788.

CLINICAL

The establishment and maintenance of a hospital to afford "clinical" instruction is not ultra vires of a university authorized to teach medicine. Succession of Hutchinson, 36 South. 639, 656, 112 La. 656.

CLIP HOOKS

"Clip hooks" are "two regular iron hooks having one side flat, suspended (reversed to one another) from a small iron thimble. By overlapping, these two shapes form one complete inclosing hook. These are also known as 'sister hooks.'" Louden Machinery Co. v. Janesville Hay Tool Co., 148 Fed. 686, 693, 78 C. C. A. 548 (quoting and adopting the definition in Patterson's Nautical Encyc. "Clip Hooks").

CLOSE

The New York city charter, vesting the legislative power in the common council, composed of a board of aldermen consisting of one alderman elected from each ward for two years and of a board of assistant aldermen consisting of an assistant alderman from each ward elected for one year, each body exercising its powers in separate sessions, and providing that, if any ordinance or resolution passed shall not be returned by the mayor within 10 days, the same shall become a law as if he had signed it, unless "the close of the session of the common council shall prevent its return," etc., recognizes the continuity of the common council and authorizes the conclusion of business which had its inception in previous sessions or years, and a resolution granting a pier right adopted by the board of aldermen in one year and by the board of assistant aldermen in the following year and approved by the mayor is effective; the word "close" not referring to the adjournment of one of the bodies on a particular day to another specified time, but referring to the end of the year when newly elected members come in. In re City of New York, 87 N. E. 759, 763, 193 N. Y. 503.

As inclosure

See Inclosure.

As interest in soil

A plea in an action of trespass quare clausum fregit that "the 'close' aforesaid, in which the trespass aforesaid is supposed to be committed as set forth in the declaration aforesaid, is, and at the time when the trespass was committed was, the soil and freehold of the city," does not put in issue title to the entire tract described in the declaration, but only the place of the trespass. City of Providence v. Adams, 10 R. I. 184, 187.

The gist of the action of trespass quare clausum fregit is breaking and entering by force and arms the defendant's "close," and the term "close" so used, being technical, signifies an interest in the soil, and not merely a "close" or inclosure, in the common acceptance of the term. Prussner v. Brady, 136 Ill. App. 395, 397 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Chitty, Pleading, 134-136).

CLOSE (verb)

Keep closed, see Keep.

Permit to close a street, see Permission—Permit.

An intention to "settle by the payment of differences," "betting on future prices," or "closing up without delivery by the payment of differences," is equivalent to and means an intention by one who has sold for future delivery to buy on the same board for the same delivery, and to offset the purchase against the sale, and receive or pay the difference. Carson v. Milwaukee Produce Co., 113 N. W. 393, 395, 133 Wis. 85.

Complainant in an application for a patent set out a claim as follows: "A pin or stud, consisting of a single piece of wire pin-pointed at one end and fashioned to form the single shank, b, and loop, a, in combination with a metal cap, A, 'closed' upon the loop in manner substantially as herein described, for the purposes specified." The amended claim was: "A pin or stud consisting of a pin-pointed shank, b, having an angular neck, a, and a closed loop, a, of the form of the metallic cap, made of one continuous piece of wire, in combination with such cap, which is upset or closed over the looped head, substantially as set forth." It was claimed that the word "closed" was used in two different senses in the amended claim, and that, as applied to the loop in the first instance, it meant a closed or shut or fully formed loop, something equivalent to a circle, though not necessarily in that form. The court says: "It seems to me that the contention is correct, and that the word 'closed,' as used, has two different meanings; that as used in the first instance it did not relate to the cap at all, but to the pin-pointed shank having a closed loop for its head, while in its second use it plainly refers to the cap which is to be crimped or closed over such 'looped head.' I regard any other construction as impossible." McGill v. Whitehead & Hoag Co., 137 Fed. 97, 98.

A bargain

According to the settled construction, the employment of a professional broker "to sell" or "close a bargain" concerning real estate, merely authorizes him to find a purchaser at the specified price, and does not authorize him to execute a contract of sale in the name of his principal, or to sign his principal's name to any contract of sale. Lichty v. Daggett, 121 N. W. 862, 867, 23 S. D. 380.

In reference to streets

Under Laws 1895, c. 1006, a street is legally "closed" when the board of estimate and apportionment adopts proper resolutions to that end and the map is filed and commissioners of appraisal appointed; but the actual physical closing is postponed till other access is provided by opening of other streets, or, if no access is provided, till resulting damages have been ascertained and paid abutting owners. In re West 151st St. in City of New York, 117 N. Y. Supp. 841, 843, 132 App. Div. 867.

Neither the failure of county authorities formally to open up streets in a platted addition outside of corporate limits, nor the fact that they have not been used by the public, will make them in law "closed" or unopened streets, within Gen. St. 1901, § 6058, where everything was done at the time the plat was filed necessary to open them for public use. Kiehl v. Jamison, 101 Pac. 632, 633, 79 Kan. 788.

The lawful change of grade of a street is not a "closing up, or use, or obstruction," within the meaning of a statute (Laws 1899, c. 255), imposing liability for consequential damages on municipalities or others who "close up, use, or obstruct" a highway. Smith v. City of Eau Claire, 47 N. W. 830, 831, 78 Wis. 457.

CLOSE CONFINEMENT

"Close confinement" in the penitentiary before execution, substituted for confinement in the county jail by Act N. D. March 9, 1903, claimed to be an ex post facto law, does not mean "solitary confinement," thus increasing the punishment, though solitary confinement may involve "close confinement." Such confinement means only such custody as will safely secure the production of the body of the prisoner on the day ordered. Rooney v. North Dakota, 25 Sup. Ct. 284, 286, 196 U. S. 319, 49 L. Ed. 494, 3 Ann. Cas. 76.

CLOSED CIRCUIT

See Locally Closed Circuit.

CLOSED PRIMARY

The Nebraska primary law provides for what is called the "closed primary." It is supposed that the members of each political party will participate in nominating the candidates of that party, and the voters of one party are not allowed to nominate candidates for another party. State ex rel. Dickinson v. Sheldon, 113 N. W. 802, 803, 80 Neb. 4.

CLOSED SHIPMENT

Where defendant shipped a car of corn to a third person on plaintiff's order, and plaintiff failed to obtain payment before insolvency of the third person, and sued defendant to recover the value of the corn on the ground that defendant should have made the shipment a "closed" one, so that the third person could not have obtained possession of the shipment without first making payment, such manner of making shipments being according to custom, there was no prejudice to plaintiff in permitting defendant to testify that he had frequently made shipments to plaintiff's father-in-law, who was wealthy, and that all the shipments were "open." Smith v. Landa, 101 S. W. 470, 471, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 446.

CLOSED SHOP

A "closed shop" is one that employs union labor only. Irving v. Joint Dist. Council of New York and Vicinity of United Brotherhood of Carpenters, etc., 180 Fed. 896, 899.

The term "open shop" has a distinctive trade meaning, and, in reference to trade matters, means that, in selecting employees, there shall be no discrimination between union and nonunion men. The "open shop" means nonrecognition of unions as such, and excludes the idea of discrimination against men because of their membership in a union. The moment they are discriminated against with reference to their employment, the shop pursuing such policy becomes a "closed shop." Sackett & Wilhelms L. & P. Co. v. National Ass'n of Employing Lithographers, 113 N. Y. Supp. 110, 114, 61 Misc. Rep. 150.

CLOSELY BUILT UP

Under Gen. Laws 1909, c. 86, § 1, defining "closely built up" as territory of a city contiguous to a public highway built up with structures devoted to business, or territory of a city contiguous to a public highway where for not less than a quarter of a mile the dwelling houses average less than 100 feet apart, or territory outside of a city contiguous to a public highway within a distance of one-half a mile of any post office, provided that for a distance of at least one-fourth of a mile within such limits the dwelling houses average less than 100 feet apart, and provided that the officers have placed signs on the highway to slow down, and section 11, fixing the maximum rate of speed of motor vehicles on highways where the territory contiguous is closely built up, etc., territory is considered with reference to its location as within or without the limits of a city, and a territory within a city as devoted or not devoted to business; and where an offense is committed within a city, it is unnecessary to allege and prove the existence of signs within such limits, because the definition of "closely built up" territory outside of a city is inapplicable, and where a highway comes within the statutory definition of "closely built up," whether in the business or residential part of a municipality, an operator of a motor vehicle must reduce the speed to a rate not exceeding 15 miles per hour. State v. Buchanan, 79 Atl. 1114, 1116, 32 R. I. 490.

CLOSING OF POLLS

Election Law (Laws 1896, c. 909) § 3, as amended by Laws 1901, c. 654, provides that the polls shall be opened at 6 o'clock in the forenoon and shall close at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, that the "closing of the polls" shall mean the close of delivery of official ballots to electors, and that electors who have lawfully begun the act of voting before the time fixed for the close of the polls shall be allowed to complete the act. Section 104, subd. 1 (Laws 1896, c. 909), provides that while the polls are open electors may enter within the guard rail at the polling place for the purpose of voting and shall proceed to the inspectors and give their names. Section 106 (page 956) provides that an elector who has received a ballot as provided by section 104 is entitled then and there to vote and shall be deemed to have commenced the act of voting. Held, that the delivery of the ballot to electors is limited to those who enter within the guard rail while the polls are open, and at 5 o'clock the delivery of official ballots to electors must cease, and no elector to whom a ballot has not been delivered before that time can be allowed to vote. Newcomb v. Leary, 112 N. Y. Supp. 667, 668, 128 App. Div. 829.

CLOTHE WITH INDICIA OF OWNERSHIP

An allegation by defendant, in an action to recover possession of a horse, that he is the owner and that plaintiff intrusted the horse to a third person for sale "clothed with the indicia of ownership," is a metaphorical expression of such uncertain meaning that it is the duty of plaintiff's attorney to inform himself by a bill of particulars as to the acts of the plaintiff, or the facts constituting such indicia, if they are not in writing. Adams v. Coe, 119 N. Y. Supp. 1086, 65 Misc. Rep. 517.

CLOUD ON TITLE

A "cloud on a title" is a semblance of title legal or equitable, or a claim of an interest in lands appearing in some legal form, but which is in fact unfounded. Dodsworth v. Dodsworth, 98 N. E. 279, 280, 254 Ill. 49.

"A mere verbal claim of an oral assertion of ownership is not a 'cloud' which can be removed by decree. The remedy in such cases is by an action for damages for slander of title (Civ. Code 1895, § 3833), or by injunction; but in view of the law as codified in Civ. Code 1895, §§ 4892, 4893, the instrument may be canceled, not only when it meets the definition of a technical 'cloud,' but also when it may be vexatiously or injuriously used against the owner, or when it casts suspicion on his title, or when it subjects him to future liability or present annoyance, and the cancellation is necessary to his present protection. Names should be disregarded and relief should be afforded against the harmful effect of the instrument whether it as a matter of strict law would have that effect or not." Weyman v. City of Atlanta, 50 S. E. 492, 493, 122 Ga. 539 (citing Waters v. Lewis, 32 S. E. 854, 106 Ga. 758).

Lis pendens by itself does not constitute a "cloud or incumbrance upon a title," and does not of itself furnish any ground in reason why a purchaser should not be compelled to complete his purchase. Baecht v. Hevesy, 101 N. Y. Supp. 413, 415, 115 App. Div. 509.

A "cloud upon title" is in itself a title or incumbrance, apparently valid, but in fact invalid; something which, nothing else being shown, constitutes an incumbrance upon it, or a defect in it; something that shows prima facie the right of a third person, either to the whole or to some interest in it, or to a lien upon it. McArthur v. Griffith, 61 S. E. 519, 521, 147 N. C. 545.

Where a conveyance of land has been made by deed from the husband to the wife upon a valuable and bona fide consideration, not named in the deed, and the land has been sold under execution against the husband issued in an action brought after the record of the deed of conveyance, such sale is a "cloud upon the title" of the wife, which equity may remove. Pettit v. Coachman, 41 South. 401, 404, 51 Fla. 521.

Where by an order of the superior court it was provided that, if a named person should become the purchaser of designated property at a sale by a receiver, he should be allowed, instead of paying the purchase price into the hands of the receiver, to give bond, "for the forthcoming of the money to meet the order of the court," and he became at such sale the actual purchaser, giving bond as provided, with sureties therein named, and subsequently the court rendered judgment against him for a part of the purchase money, the judgment could not be amended at a subsequent term of the court so as to include the sureties; no suit or other proceeding having been brought for the breach of the bond. Where an execution based upon a certain amended judgment was levied upon certain lands as the property of one of the sureties, and he placed in the hands of the levying officer (the deputy sheriff of the county) an affidavit of illegality setting forth the above-stated facts, but the sheriff proceeded, nevertheless, to advertise and sell at sheriff's sale the property so levied on, and made a sheriff's deed conveying it to the purchaser of said sale, the same was illegal. Such a deed, upon equitable petition duly brought, will be canceled as a "cloud upon the title" of the owner of the land. Giddens v. Alexander, 56 S. E. 1014, 127 Ga. 734 (citing Graham v. Hall, 68 Ga. 334; Wynne v. Lumpkin, 35 Ga. 208).

Where a vendor tendered title under the foreclosure of a first mortgage, leaving outstanding a sheriff's deed to a third person, executed on foreclosure of the second mortgage, such deed, being a claim under judicial sale and not showing its invalidity on its face, or in connection with its first foreclosure, constituted a "cloud," and rendered the vendor's title unmarketable. Stack v. Hickey, 138 N. W. 1011, 1012, 151 Wis. 347.

As requiring evidence to avoid

"'Cloud on title' is something which constitutes an incumbrance upon it, or an apparent defect in it, something which shows prima facie some right of a third party, either to the whole or some interest in it." The true test to determine whether a deed would cast a "cloud on title" is to determine whether "the true owner of the property, in an action of ejectment brought by the adverse party founded upon the deed, be required to offer evidence to defeat a recovery. If such proof would be necessary, the cloud would exist; if the proof would be unnecessary, no shade would be cast by the presence of the deed." Haggart & McMasters v. Chapman & Dewey Land Co., 92 S. W. 792, 77 Ark. 527, 7 Ann. Cas. 333 (quoting and adopting 2 Cooley, Tax'n, 1448; Pixley v. Huggins, 15 Cal. 133).

A "cloud upon title" is a title or incumbrance apparently valid, but in fact and truth invalid. The true test is: If the person claiming under the alleged cloud should bring an action against the true owner, would the owner be required to offer evidence to defeat the action? If so, the cloud exists; if not, there is no cloud. Dailey v. Koepple, 51 South. 348, 350, 164 Ala. 317.

A "cloud on title" is a semblance of a title, legal or equitable, or a claim of an interest, in lands appearing in some legal form, but which is in fact unfounded. It is a title or incumbrance apparently valid, but actually invalid, and exists where the claim of an adverse party to land is valid on the face of the instrument or the proceeding sought to be set aside, and extrinsic facts are required to be established to show its invalidity. Allott v. American Strawboard Co., 86 N. E. 685, 688, 237 Ill. 55.

Instrument defective on face

A "cloud" is the semblance of title, either legal or equitable, or a claim of interest in lands appearing in some legal form, but which in fact is unsound; hence an ordinance and statute, void and unconstitutional on their face, purporting to authorize a condemnation of land, do not constitute a cloud on the title of the land claimed to be subject to condemnation thereunder. Roby v. South Park Com'rs, 74 N. E. 125, 126, 215 Ill. 200.

As voluntary association

The term "club" is defined by Webster as "an association of persons for the promotion of some common object, as literature, science, politics, good fellowship," etc. An agreement which restricts the use of a tract of land bordering on a lake to residence purposes, and which provides that the same shall not be used for "hotel, club, or camping purposes," is violated by the erection thereon of a clubhouse for use in connection with a landing place for boats, and in connection with golf grounds established thereon. Boyden v. Roberts, 111 N. W. 701, 708, 131 Wis. 659.

A "club" is defined to be an association of individuals for pleasure or profit. In Commonwealth v. Pomphret, 137 Mass. 567, 50 Am. Rep. 340, Judge Field said: "The word quoted has no very definite meaning. Clubs are formed for all sorts of purposes, and there is no uniformity in their constitutions and rules. A club is a definite association organized for indefinite existence; not an ephemeral meeting for a particular occasion, to be lost in a crowd at its dissolution." Wright v. City of Macon, 64 S.

E. 808, 810, 5 Ga. App. 750 (citing Martin v. State, 59 Ala. 34; Eichbaum v. Irons [Pa.] 6 Watts & S. 67, 69, 40 Am. Dec. 540).

CO.

"Com." and "Co." are both well understood abbreviations for the word "company," when used as a part of the name of a commercial firm. Where a declaration alleged the making and delivery of a note to, and indorsement by, "S. & Com.," and the evidence showed that it was indorsed by "S. & Co.," there was no variance. *Keith v. To constitute a tract of public land "coal lands of the United States" within the meaning of Rev. St. § 2347 et seq., which can only be acquired by purchase as therein provided, it is not essential that the presence of coal thereon in paying quantity should have been actually demonstrated, but consideration should be given to the proof of which the subject by its nature is susceptible, such as the known presence of coal in surrounding land, the visible exposure of out-crop and the surrounding geological formation, and it is sufficient if the land is generally regarded by the local public as having a special value for its coal contents beyond its value for agricultural or like purposes. *United States v. As mine, see Mine.

See, also, Premises.

In an action under the mining act for the death of an employé by defendant's violation of section 4 in failing to have flanges on the drum of a hoisting engine used in sinking an air shaft, special findings that death was caused during the construction work preparatory to opening a coal mine, and that the shaft was not in use in connection with the mining of coal or for ventilating in coal mine or for an escapement shaft, do not bring defendant's property within section 34, defining "mine" and "coal mine" as all parts of the property of a mining plant which contribute directly or indirectly to the mining of coal, and defining "shaft" as any opening which is or may be used for ventilation or escapement, or for hoisting men in connection with mining, and are therefore so inconsistent with a general verdict for plaintiff that judgment for defendant is proper. Moore v. Dering Coal Co., 89 N. E. 674, 675, 242 Ill. 84.

Defendant mining company maintained a hoisting engine at the top of an incline, which was used for the dumping of rock, dirt, etc., which had been separated from the coal, and later constructed a second incline, over which coal intended for retail trade was hoisted by the other side of the same engine; rock and coal cars being often operated in different directions at the same time. Thereafter another engine was substituted to haul the rock cars, and the old engine was continued to haul the coal cars, which were permitted to descend by gravity. Held, that such hoist, though outside the mine, was a part of defendant's mine, as defined by Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 93, § 34, to include all parts of a mining plant on the surface or underground which contribute under one management to the mining and handling of coal, and was therefore within section 16, subd. "d," making it the duty of the mine manager to see that all dangerous places above and below were properly marked and danger signals displayed wherever required. Spring Valley Coal Co. v. Greig, 80 N. E. 1042, 1044, 226 Ill. 511.

COAL STORES

There is a distinction between "sea stores" and "coal stores" as those terms are used with reference to the navigation laws relating to the transfer of goods from one vessel to another in port, and the transfer of coal, after the arrival of a vessel in a harbor, from one vessel to another of the same line, would be an unlading of the coal. (Dissenting opinion.) United States v. Hawley & Letzenrich, 160 Fed. 734, 736.

COAL-TAR COLOR OR DYE

Bromofluorescic acid is dutiable as a "coal-tar color or dye," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 15, 30 Stat. 152. Kuttruff, Pickhardt & Co. v. United States, 154 Fed. 1004, 83 C. C. A. 679; United States v. Kuttruff, Pickhardt & Co., 147 Fed. 758, 759.

COAL-TAR PREPARATIONS

The term "coal-tar preparations" is more specific than the term "chemical compounds." Lysol, a coal-tar preparation, is dutiable under paragraph 15, Schedule A, § 1, c. 11, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. 152, providing for preparations of "coal tar * * * not medicinal," rather than under paragraph 3, Schedule A, § 1, c. 11, of said act, 30 Stat. 151, covering "chemical compounds." United States v. Lehn, 124 Fed. 87, 89.

COARSE MEAL

In the manufacture of corn meal for culinary purposes, the corn is first kiln-dried, then cracked or ground between rollers, and afterwards bolted. A product made by the same rollers, but set farther apart so as not to crush the grain so finely, and with the corn not kiln-dried and the product not bolted, but merely passed between the rollers and then loaded in the cars, and variously known as "cracked corn," "chop," and "coarse meal," was not in the ordinary acceptance of the term "meal," and was properly distinguished from meal in apportioning cars among shippers. State ex rel. Crandall v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (Neb.) 101 N. W. 23, 24, 72, 542.

COAST

COASTWISE STEAM VESSEL

A duly registered American steamer engaged in making voyages between United States ports on Puget Sound and San Francisco, although in making such voyages she touched at the foreign way port of Victoria, taking on freight and passengers for San Francisco, was a "coastwise steam vessel," within the meaning of Rev. St. § 4444, which exempts such vessels from the operation of state pilotage laws, and a state pilot whose services were refused on her entry into the port of San Francisco, her master and mate being licensed pilots under the laws of the United States, cannot subject her to pilotage fees under Pol. Code Cal. §§ 2466, 2468. The Queen, 184 Fed. 537, 539.

COATED

The provision for "coated wire" in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 137, 30 Stat. 161, is not limited to a process of covering by galvanizing, dipping, or other similar method; and wire, made by inserting an iron wire in a hollow tube of nickel and then drawing the whole wire down until the nickel covering becomes welded to and a part of the iron core, is "coated," within the meaning of the law. Hermann Boker & Co. v. United States, 168 Fed. 464.

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 137, 30 Stat. 161, the provision for wire "coated with * * * metal" includes an article produced by pushing a steel or iron rod through a nickel tube and then wire-drawing the whole, thus bringing it down to the required diameter, and welding the nickel to the core. It makes no difference whether the coating referred to is affixed by welding, dipping, electrolysis, or otherwise. United States v. Hermann Boker & Co., 176 Fed. 730, 731, 100 C. C. A. 276.

Sheets consisting of a plate of iron or steel with a sheet of nickel welded thereto, the material being rolled to the desired thickness after welding, are not sheets "coated with * * * metals," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 132, 30 Stat. 160. Boker v. United States, 180 Fed. 959, 960.

Coca-Cola

"Coca-Cola" is a compound, which among many ingredients contains some of the extract of coca, omitting cocaine, its most characteristic ingredient, and some of the ingredients of the extract of cola, including chiefly caffeine, which, while an important ingredient of the extract of cola, is not characteristic of it in any distinctive sense, but is also found in extracts from coffee beans and tea leaves. Coca-Cola Co. v. Nashville Syrup Co., 200 Fed. 153, 157.

Coccyx

"The 'coccyx' is a little undeveloped tail that does not come through the skin, composed of two or three vertebrae." Lowenthal v. Vicksburg, S. & P. Ry. Co., 42 South. 483, 486, 117 La. 1007.

The "coccyx" is the small bone at the extremity of the backbone, which in early childhood is soft tissue or cartilage, that later ossifies. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Reaume, 107 S. W. 290, 292, 128 Ky. 90.

Coccyx Neuralgia

"Coccyx neuralgia" is an ailment of the coccyx, accompanying an injury or break. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Reaume, 107 S. W. 290, 292, 128 Ky. 90.

Cock

A "stack" of hay is a large pile, gathered after the hay has been seasoned, as distinguished from a "cock" or "shock," which is a small pile, into which the hay is gathered after being mowed, and thus permitted to remain until seasoned. People v. Doyle, 110 Pac. 458, 459, 13 Cal. App. 611.

Cocktail

A Manhattan "cocktail" is generally known as an intoxicating liquor, and no proof of its intoxicating character is necessary. State v. Pigg, 97 Pac. 859, 860, 78 Kan. 618, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 848, 130 Am. St. Rep. 387.

Cocoa

Cocoa Butter

"Cocoa butter" is produced from the beans of the cacao or chocolate tree; the word "cocoa" being a corruption of the word "cacao," while all products made in imitation of cocoa butter and adapted to its use are "cocoa butterine," within Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 11, Schedule G, par. 282, 30 Stat. 172. United States v. Oriental American Co., 129 Fed. 249.

Cocoa Butterine

"Cocoa butterine," as provided for in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 282, 30 Stat. 172, consists of products made in imitation of cocoa butter, and adapted for use as a substitute therefor. United States v. Oriental American Co., 129 Fed. 249.

Refined cocoanut oil is not "cocoa butterine," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 282, 30 Stat. 172. Fuerst Bros. & Co. v. United States, 176 Fed. 95, 96, 100 C. C. A. 25.

Cocoanut Oil

"Cocoanut oil" is made from the fleshy part of the cocoanut, a product of the cocoa palm. United States v. Oriental American Co., 129 Fed. 249.

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 628, 30 Stat. 199, the provision for "cocoanut oil" includes refined as well as unrefined oil and is a more specific term than "cocoa butterine," in section 1, Schedule G, par. 282, 30 Stat. 172. Fuerst Bros. & Co. v. United States, 176 Fed. 95, 100 C. C. A. 25.

Co-conspirator

In an action to recover money and property claimed to have been paid for patent rights, sold plaintiff by several defendants conspiring together to defraud him and induce him to purchase by fraudulent representations, allegations that defendant R. was a "partner" in the unlawful scheme did not allege such a partnership as the statute requires to be denied under oath; the word "partner" as used being synonymous with "co-conspirator." Rushing v. Spreen (Tex.) 142 S. W. 49, 57.
